After the Dukes condemnation, it was thought fit to have something done for averting the Kings minde, from taking thought; and to that end, one George Ferrers a Gentleman of Lincolns Inne, was appointed in the Christmas time, to be Lord of Misrule; who so carried himself, that he gave great delight to many, and some to the King, but not in proportion to his heaviness.

About this time was a call of seven Serjeants at Law, who kept their feast at Grays Inne; of whom, Master Robert Brook Recorder of London, was the first; and the next Master Dyer, who was chosen Speaker the next Parliament.

About this time also, the Lord Paget was committed to the Tower, for what cause is not certain; E and being a Knight of the Order, his Garter was taken from him by Garter King at Arms, upon this pretence, that he was said to be no Gentleman, either by Father or Mother; and the Garter was then bestowed on the Earl of Warwick, the Duke of Northumberlands eldest Son, and the Lord Rich Lord Chancellour, was put off from his Place, and the Seal then delivered to Doctor Thomas Goodrick Bishop of Ely.

About this time also three great Ships were set forth at the Kings charge, for discovery of a passage to the East-Indies by the North Seas; the chief Pilot and director in this Voyage, was one Sebastian Gabato an Englishman, born at Bristol, but the Son of a Genoway: these Ships at the last arrived in the Countrey of Moscovia, but not without losse of their Captain Sir Hugh Willoughby, who being tossed and driven by tempest, was afterward found in his Ship frozen to death, and all his F people.

At this time also the Duke of Suffolke three Daughters, which he had by Frances, Daughter of Charles Brandon and Mary Queen of France, were married at Durham House: the eldest Jane to the Lord Guilford Dudley, fourth Son to the Duke of Northumberland: the second Katherine, to Henry Son and Heir to the Earl of Pembroke; the youngest Mary, being somewhat deformed, to Maistyn Keyes the Kings Gentleman Porter. And then also Katherine the Duke of Northumberlands youngest Daughter to the Lord Hastings, eldest Son of the Earl of Huntington. And now had the Duke of Northumberland gone a great way in his design; it remained to perswade King Edward to exclude his two Sisters from succession in the Crown; for that done, his Daughter in law the Lady Jane, would come to have a right; for as for pretenders out of Scotland, or any other, he made no great G matter. And now to work the King to this perswasion, (being in a languishing sicknesse, not far from death) he inculcates to him, how much it concerned him to have a care of Religion, that it might be preserved in purity, not only in his own life, but as well after his death; which would not be, if his sister the Lady Mary should succeed, and she could not be put by unless her other Sister the Lady Elizabeth were put by also, seeing their rights depended one upon another; but if he pleased to appoint the Lady Jane, the Duke of Suffolke eldest Daughter, and his own next Kinswoman to his Sisters, to be his successor, he might then be sure that the true Religion should be

A be maintained, to Gods great glory, and be a worthy Act of his own religious Providence. This was to strike upon the right string of the young Kings affection, with whom nothing was so dear as preservation of Religion; and thereupon his last Will was appointed to be drawn (contrived chiefly by the Lord chief Justice Mountague, and Secretary Cecil;) by which Will, as far as in him lay, he excluded his two Sisters from the succession; and all other, but the Duke of Suffolk Daughters; and then causing it to be read before his Council, he required them all to assent unto it, and to subscribe their hands; which they all, both Nobility, and Bishops and Judges did; only the Archbishop Cranmer refused at first, Sir James Hales a Judge of the Common Pleas to the last, and with them also Sir John Baker Chancellour of the Exchequer. And now remained nothing for the Duke of Northumberland purpose, but that the King should die; which soon after he did at Greenwich, the sixth of July, in the year 1553. One point of the Dukes policy must not be forgotten, that fearing what troubles the Lady Mary might raise after the Kings decease, if she should be at liberty; he therefore, seeing the King drawing on, used all means possible to get her within his power; to which end Letters are directed to her in the Kings name from the Council, willing her forthwith to repair to the King, as well to be a comfort to him in his sicknesse, as to see all matters well ordered about his person: whereupon, the Lady suspecting nothing, addressed her self with all speed to the journey; till being upon the way, she was advertised of the Dukes design; and then she returned to her House at Hovesden, and so escaped the snare; by whose escape, the whole design of the Duke of Northumberland was disappointed; as soon after will be seen.

His Will drawn to that purpose.

King Edward dies.
The Duke of Northumberland seeks to get the Lady Mary into his hands.

Of his Taxations.

I N no Kings reign was ever more Parliaments for the time, nor fewer Subsidies; the greatest was in his last year, when yet there was but one Subsidie, with two fifteens and tenths granted by the Temporality, and a Subsidie by the Clergy. And indeed to shew how loath this King was to lay Impositions upon his people, this may be a sufficient argument; that though he were much in debt, yet he chose rather to deal with the Foulker in the Low-Countries for money upon loan, at the interest of fourteen pounds for a hundred, for a year. But his ways for raising of money, was by selling of Chancery Lands and Houses, given him by Parliament; and by inquiring after all Church goods, either remaining in Cathedral and Parish-Churches, or embezzelled away, as Jewels, gold and silver Chalice, ready money, Copes, and other Vestments; reserving to every Church one Chalice, and one covering for the Communion Table, the rest to be applied to his benefit. He also raised money by enquiring after offences of Officers in great places; in which inquiry one Beaumont Master of the Rolles, being convinced of many crimes, surrendered all his Offices, Lands and Goods into the Kings hands: also one Whalley, Receiver of Yorkshire, being found a Delinquent, surrendered his Office, and payed a great fine besides; also the Lord Paget, Chancellour of the Dutchie, convinced, that he had sold the Kings Lands and Timber-woods without Commission, and had applied the Kings Fines to his own use; for these and other offences, E surrendered his Office, and was fined at four thousand pounds, which he payed in hand. One thing more was done in his time for raising of money; twenty thousand pounds weight of Bullion, was appointed to be made so much baser, that the King might gain thereby a hundred and forty thousand pounds.

Delinquent Officers fined.

Bullion made baser to raise money.

Of his Laws and Ordinances.

I N his third year a Parliament was holden; wherein one Act was made against spreading of Prophecies, another against unlawful Assemblies. In his fourth year a Parliament was holden, wherein Priests children were made legitimate; and usury for the loan of money was forbidden. In his fifth year, it was ordained that the Laws of England should be admitted in Ireland; and a King at Arms named Ulster, was newly instituted for Ireland; whose Province was all Ireland; and he was the first fourth King of Arms, and first Herald appointed for Ireland. Also in his fifth year, base monies formerly coined, were cried down; so as the shilling went but for nine pence, and shortly but for six pence, the groat but for three pence, and shortly after but for two pence.

Affairs of the Church in his time.

I N the first year of this Kings reign, Injunctions were set forth, for pulling down and removing all Images out of Churches; also certain Homilies were appointed to be made by learned men, to be read in Churches, for the peoples instruction: and at Easter this year, it was ordered, that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper should be ministred to the Lay-people in both kinds; Also Marriage was allowed to Clergy men; Auricular Confession and Prayer for the dead were forbidden: And it is observable, that the very same day that Images were pulled down at London, the great overthrow was given to the Scots at Muskelborough. Also at this time, by the Archbishop Cranmer.

The Book of Common Prayer established.

Cranmers means, divers learned Protestants came over into England, and had here entertainment, as A Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, and Paulus Fagius; of whom Peter Martyr was sent to read a Divinity Lecture in Oxford; Bucer and Fagius in Cambridge. In this Kings fourth year, all Altars in Churches were commanded to be taken down, and Tables placed in their rooms. In his fifth year the Book of Common Prayer was established.

Casualties happening in his time.

A sweating sickness, proper only to the English Nation.

IN his second year, Saint Annes Church within Aldersgate was burnt. In his fifth year, a sweat- B ing sickness infested first Shrewsbury, and then the North parts, and after grew most extreme in London, so as the first week there died eight hundred persons, and was so violent that it took men away in four and twenty hours, sometimes in twelve, and sometime in lesse: amongst other of account that died of this sickness, were the two Sons of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, who died within an hour after one another, in such order that both of them died Dukes. This disease was proper to the English Nation, for it followed the English wheresoever they were in forain parts; but seized upon none of any other Countrey. In this year one Master Arden of Kent, by procurement of his wife was murdered in his own house; being dead, his body was carried out and laid upon the ground, in a Close hard by; where this is memorable, that for two years after, the ground where his body lay, bore no grasse, but represented still as it were a picture of his body, C only in the space between his legs and arms there grew grasse, but where any part of his body touched, none at all. Yet this miraculous accident was not so much for the murder, as for the curses of a widow woman, out of whose hands the said Master Arden had uncharitably bought the said Close, to her undoing. And thus the divine justice even in this world oftentimes works miracles upon offenders, for a merciful warning to men, if they would be so wise to take it. In his sixth year, the third of August at Middleton-stony, eleven miles from Oxford, a woman brought forth a childe which had two perfect bodies from the navil upward, the legges for both the bodies grew out at the midst where the bodies joined, and had but one issue for the excrements of them both: they lived eighteen days, and were women children. This year also were taken at Quinbarow three Dolphins, and at Black-wall six more, the least of which was bigger then D any Horfe.

King to charitable uses.

THIS King gave three houses to the relief of the poor; first for the fatherlesse and beggers children, he gave the late Gray-Fryers in London, which is now called Christs Hospital: then for lame and diseased persons he gave the Hospital of Saint Thomas in Southwark, and Saint Bar-tholomews in West-Smithfield: Thirdly, for riotous and idle persons, he gave his house of Bridewell; and for their maintenance, he took six hundred pounds a year land from the house of the Savoy
(which had been long abused) and bestowed it upon these houses; to which he added four thou- E sand marks a year more. By his example Sir William Chester Alderman of London, and John Calthroppe Draper, at their own costs made the Brickwals and way on the backside that leadeth to the Hospital of Saint Bartholomews, and also covered and valted the Town-Ditch, which before was very noysome. In the second year of this King, Sir John Gresham then Maior of London, founded a free School at Hest in Norfolk; also at his decease he gave to every Ward in London ten pounds, to be distributed amongst the poor, and to Maids marriages two hundred pounds. In his third year, Sir Rowland Hill the then Lord Maior of London, caused to be made a Cawsey commonly called Overlane pavement, in the high way from Stone to Nantwich, in length four miles, for the ease of Horfe and Man. He caused also a Cawsey to be made from Dunburch to Bransen in Warwickshire, more then two miles in length; & gave twenty pounds towards the making of Roitton Bridge F three miles from Coventry. He made likewise the high way to Kilburne neer to London. Also four Bridges, two of them of stone, containing eighteen arches in them both; the one over the River of Severn called Acham Bridge, the other Terne Bridge; and two other of Timber at Stake, where he built also a good part of the Church. A free School likewise he builded at Drayton in Shropshire, with Master and Usher, and gave sufficient stipends to them both. Also he purchased a free Fair to the said Town, with a free Market weekly; and every fourteen days a free Market for Cattel. Besides all this, he gave to the Hospital of Christs Church in London in his life time five hundred pounds, and at his death, a hundred. In this Kings fourth year, Sir Andrew Jud Maior of London, founded a notable free School at Tunbridge in Kent; and gave threestore pounds land a year to the *Skinner*s of London, for which they be bound to pay twenty pounds to the School- G master, and eight pounds to the Usher of his free School at Tunbridge yearly for ever. In his sixth year, Sir George Barnes was Maior of London, gave a Windmil in Finsbury-field to the Haberdashers of London, the profits thereof to be distributed to the poor of that Company; also to Saint Bar-tholomews the little, certain Tenements to the like use.

Of his Personage and Conditions.

C Concerning his personage, it is said, he was in body beautifull, of a sweet aspect, and specially in his eyes, which seemed to have a Starry liveliness and lustre in them. Concerning his conditions, in matter of fact, there is not much to be said; but in matter of disposition and inclination very much, even to admiration. For though his tree was not yet come to the maturity of bearing fruit, yet it was come to the forwardnesse to bear plenty of buds and blossoms. For proof of his mercifull disposition this one example may be sufficient; when one Jean Butcher King Edwards pitifull disposition, was to be burned for blasphemy and heresie, all the Councell could not get him to sign the Warrant, till the Archbishop Cranmer, with much importunity perswaded him, and then he did it, but not without weeping. For his pregnancy of wit, and knowledge in all kindes of learning; we shall need but to hear what Cardan (who coming into England, had often conference with him) reporteth of him: that he was extraordinarily skilfull in Languages, and in the Politicks; well seen in Philosophy and in Divinity, and generally indeed a very Miracle of Art and Nature. His pregnancy of wit, and Learning. He would answer Ambassadors sometimes upon the suddain, either in French or Latine; he knew the state of forain Princes perfectly, and his own more. He could call all Gentlemen of account through his Kingdome by their names; and all this when he had scarce yet attained to the age of fifteen years, and dyed before sixteen; that from hence we may gather, it is a sign C of no long life, when the faculties of the minde are ripe so early.

I N the sixth year of his Reign, which was the year before he dyed, he fell sick of the Measels, and being well recovered of them, he fell soon after into the small Pox, and of them also was so well recovered, that the Summer following he rode a Progresse, with a greater magnificence then ever he had done before; having in his Train no fewer then four thousand Horse. In January following (whether procured by sinister practise, or growing upon him by naturall infirmity) he fell into an indisposition of body, which soon after grew to a Cough of the Lungs. D Whereupon a rumour was spread abroad by some, that a Nosegay had been given him at New-years-tide, which brought him into this slow but deadly Consumption; by others that it was done by a Glyster: however it was, he was brought at last to so great extremity, that his Physicians despaired of his life; and when Physicians could do him no good, a Gentlewoman (thought to be prepared for the purpose) took him in hand, and did him hurt; for with her applications his Legges swelled, his Pulse failed, his skin changed colour, and many other symptoms of approaching death appeared. The hour before his death he was overheard to pray thus by himself, O Lord God, deliver me out of this miserable and wretched life; O Lord thou knowest how happy it were for me to be with thee; yet for thy choicenes sake, if it be thy will, send me life and health, that I may truly serve thee: O Lord God, save thy chosen people of England, and defend this E Realm from Popistry, and maintain thy true Religion, that I and my people may praise thy holy Name, for thy Son Jesus Christs sake. So turning his face and seeing some by him, he said; I thought you had not been so nigh: Yes, said Doctor Owen, we heard you speak to your self; then laid the King, I was praying to God: O, I am faint; Lord have mercy upon me, and receive my spirit; and in so saying gave up the ghost, the sixth day of July, in the year 1553. and in the sixteenth year of his age, when he had reigned six years, five moneths, and nine dayes. It is noted by some, that he dyed the same moneth, and the same day of the moneth, that his Father King Henry the eighth had put Sir Thomas More to death. His body was buried upon the ninth of August in the Chappell of Saint Peters Church in Westminster; and laid neer to the body of F King Henry the seventh his Grandfather. At his Funerall which was on the tenth of August following, his Sister Queen Mary shewed this respect to him, that though Doctor Day a Popish Bishop preached, yet all the Service with a Communion was in English.

Men of Note in his time.

T HIS Kings Reign being short, and having but small Wars, had not many Sword-men famous for any Acts they did; Gown-men there were some, as Edward Hall a Counsellour in the Law, who wrote a notable Chronicle of the union of the two Houses of York and Lancaster; G William Hugh a York-shire-man, who wrote a notable Treatise called, The troubled mans medicine; Thomas Sternbold, born in Southampton, who turned into English Meeter seven and thirty of Davids Psalms.

Against whom the Duke of Northumberland is sent with an Army.

King Edward being dead, the Duke of Northumberland took upon him to sit at the Stern, and ordered all things at his pleasure: so two dayes after, he with others of the Council, sent to the Lord Maior that he with six Aldermen and twelve principal Commons, should repair presently to the Court; to whom when they came, it was secretly signified that King Edward was dead; and that by his last Will, to which all the Nobility and Judges had given assent, he had appointed the Lady Jane, Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, to succeed him; his Letters Patents whereof were shewed them, and thereupon they were required, to take their Oathes of Allegiance to the Lady Jane, and to secure the City in her behalf; which whether dissemblingly, or sincerely; whether for love, or fear, yet they did, and departed. The next day, the Lady Jane in great state was brought to the Tower of London, and there declared Queen; and by edict with the sound of Trumpet proclaimed so through London: at which time for some words seeming to be spoken against it, one Gilbert Pot a Vintners servant, was set in the Pillory, and lost both his ears. Before this time, the Lady Mary having heard of her Brothers death, and of the Duke of Northumberlands designs, removed from Hovesdon, to her Mannour of Kenninghall in Norfolk, and under pretence of fearing infection, (having lately lost one of her household servants of the Plague) in one day she rode forty miles, and from thence afterward to her Castle of Framingham in Suffolk, where taking upon her the name of Queen, there resorted to her the most part of all the Gentlemen both of Norfolk and Suffolk, offering their assistance; but upon condition she would make no alteration in Religion: to which she condescended; and thereupon, soon after came to her, the Earls of Oxford, Bathe, and Sussex, the Lord Wentworth, Thomas Warton, and John Mordant Barons eldest Sons; and of Knights, Cornwallis, Drury, Walgrave, Shelton, Benningfield, Farningham, Suliard, Freston, and many others. The Lady Mary being thus assisted, wrote her Letter signed the ninth of July to the Lords of the Council; wherein she claimed the Crown, as of right belonging to her; and required them to proclaim her Queen of England in the City of London, as they tendred her displeasure. To this Letter of hers the Lords answered, that for what they did, they had good Warrant, not only by King Edwards last Will, but by the Lawes of the land, considering her Mothers divorce, and her own Illegitimation; and therefore required her to submit her self to Queen Jane, being now her Sovereign. This Letter was written from the Tower of London, under the hands of these that follow, Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Ely Chancellour, William Marquesse of Winchester, John Earl of Bedford, Henry Duke of Suffolk, Francis Earl of Shrewsbury, John Duke of Northumberland, William Earl of Pembroke, Thomas Lord Darcey Lord Chamberlain, Cobham, Rich, Huntington, Cheyney, John Gates, William Peter, William Cecil, John Clerk, John Mason, Edward North, and Robert Bowes. The quarrel on both sides being thus begun by Letters, is prosecuted by Arms; and the Lords for their Generall, make choyce of the Duke of Suffolk, as a man most likely to be firm and sure in the employment; but the Queen his Daughter cannot misse his presence; and besides, is not willing to hazard his person; and thereupon, she by intreaties, and the Lords by perswasions, prevail with the Duke of Northumberland to undertake the charge; who before his going, having conference with the Lords, let them know how sensible he was of the double danger he under-went in this enterprize; both in respect of the Lady against whom he went, and in respect of them whom he left behinde him; for if they in his absence should by any accident be drawn to waver in their resolution, they might work their own safety with his destruction, and make themselves seem innocent in his guiltinesse. To which one of the Lords replied and said; Your Grace makes a doubt of that which cannot be, for which of us all can wash his hands clean of this businesse? and therefore it behooves us to be as resolute as your self; and the Earl of Arundell, to testifie his resolution in the matter, said, he was sorry it was not his chance to goe with him, at whose feet he could finde in his heart to spend his blood. So the Duke with the Marquesse of Northampton, the Lord Gray, and divers other of account, on the fourteenth of July set forward on the journey with eight thousand Foot and two thousand Horse; and passing through Shoreditch, the Duke said to the Lord Gray, See how the people presse to see us, but not one of them saith, God speed you. The Duke had every dayes march how far he should goe, appointed him by Commission; which being very slow, whether it were done of purpose, by some that favoured the Lady Marys side, was certainly a great help to her proceedings; for by this means she had the longer time to make her preparations; and indeed in this time two accidents happened, of great benefit to her; one, that Edward Hastings the Earl of Huntingtons Brother, having an Army of four thousand Foot committed to him by the Earl of Northumberland, he now left his party, and went to the Lady Mary: the other, that six great Ships which lay before Tarmouth to intercept the Lady Mary, if she should attempt to fly, now at the perswasion of Master Farningham, came to her aid: Which two revolts so terrified the Londoners, that though Doctor Ridley Bishop of London, on the sixteenth of July, at Pauls Crosse preached a Sermon, wherein he invited the people to stand firm to Queen Jane, whose cause he affirmed to be most iust, yet few or none were perswaded by him; so as the Lords themselves fell off from

- A from the side, who assembling at Baynards Castle, first the Earl of Arundel, then the Earl of Pembroke fell to invectives against the Earl of Northumberland; and then all the Lords joyning in opinion with them, they called for the Maior, and in London Proclaimed the Lady Mary Queen; as likewise the Lord Windsor, Sir Edmund Peckham, Sir Robert Drurie and Sir Edward Hastings did in Buckingham-shire; Sir John Williams of Teme, and Sir Leonard Chamberlain in Oxford-shire, and Sir Thomas Tresham in the County of Northampton. All this came soon to the knowledge of the Duke of Northumberland, being then at Burie; who thereby seeing how the world went, thought it his best course to turn with the stream, and thereupon returning to Cambridge, he took the Maior of the Town with him into the Market-place, and there himself for want of a Herauld, Proclaimed the Lady Mary Queen, and in sign of joy threw up his Cap; which yet served not his turn; for the next morning, Henry Fitz-Allen Earl of Arundell, came into Cambridge from Queen Mary, who entering his Chamber, the Duke at his feet fell on his knees; desiring him for Gods love to consider his case, that had done nothing but by the Warrant of him and the Councell: My Lord (saith the Earl) I am sent hither by the Queen to arrest you; and I (saith the Duke) obey your arrest; yet I beseech your Lordship, to use mercy towards him whose acts have been no other then were enjoined by Commission: You should have thought of that sooner (saith the Earl:) and thereupon committed him to a Guard, and left him to the Queens mercy. Thus ended all this great Dukes designs in his own destruction, and brought him to fall on his knees to them, who had often before bowed their knees to him; and the Earl, who at the Dukes going out could have been contented to spend his blood at his feet, was now contented to be made an instrument of his fall: so sudden are the turns of mens affections, and so unstable is the building upon their asseverations; at least no man must look to have his case be of any weight against him, who hath his own case put in the Ballance. Together with the Duke his three Sons, John, Ambrose, and Henry, the Earl of Huntington, Sir Andrew Dudley, the two Gates, John and Henry, Sir Thomas Palmer and Doctor Sands were conveyed towards London, and brought to the Tower; and the next day the Marquesse of Northampton, the Lord Robert Dudley, and Sir Robert Corbet. Before which time, the Duke of Suffolk entering his Daughters the Lady Janes Chamber, told her, she must now put off her Royall Robes, and be contented with a private life: to which she answered, She would much more willingly put them off, then she had put them on; and would never have done it, but in obedience to him and her Mother. And this was the end of the Lady Janes ten dayes Reign.

But soon after the Lords that sent him, fell off from the side: and proclaimed Queen Mary.

Which the Duke of Northumberland hearing, be also at Cambridge proclaimed Queen Mary. Yet is Arrested by the Earl of Arundell.

And with him divers more.

The Lady Jane hearing hereof, was nothing troubled with it, and thus ended her ten dayes reign.

THE REIGN OF QUEEN MARY.

The Lady Mary having been proclaimed Queen, comes to London, and so to the Tower.

Where she sets divers Lords at liberty.

And restores the Bishops who had been deprived.

The Duke of Northumberland is arraigned.

The Lady Mary having been proclaimed Queen in London and other parts of the Realm; removed from her Castle of Framingham towards London; and being come to Wanstead in Essex, on the thirtieth of July, the Lady Elizabeth her Sister, with a train of a thousand Horse, rode from her place in the Strand to meet her: on the third of August the Queen rode through London to the Tower, where at her entrance were presented to her Thomas Duke of Norfolk, Edward Lord Courtney, Stephen Gardiner, late Bishop of Winchester, and the Dutchesse of Somerset; who all kneeling down, she kissed them, and said, These be my prisoners, and then caused them presently to be set at liberty: the next day she restored the Lord Courtney to the Marquise of Excester; and the same day also she not only restored Stephen Gardiner to his Bishoprick of Winchester, but a few days after made him Chancelour of England; yet this was the man that had subscribed to her Mothers Divorce; and had written Books against the lawfulness of her marriage. The fifth of August, Edmund Bonner late Bishop of London prisoner in the Marshalsey, and Cutbert Tunstall the old Bishop of Durham prisoner in the Kings Bench, had their pardons and were restored to their Sees. Shortly after, all the Bishops which had been deprived in the time of King Edward the sixth, were restored to their Bishopricks, and the new removed, as Ridley was removed from London and Bonner placed, Skrymgeour from Chichester and Day placed, Miles Coverdale from Excester and West placed, John Hooper from Worcester and Heath placed. Also all Beneficed men that were married, or would not renounce their Religion, were put out of their Livings, and other of a contrary opinion put in their rooms.

On the thirteenth of August one Master Bourne a Canon of Pauls Preaching at Pauls Crosse, not only prayed for the dead, but also declared that Doctor Bonner Bishop of London, (late restored, and there in presence) for a Sermon by him made four years before, in the same place, and upon the same Text, had unjustly been cast into the vile prison of the Marshalsey; which Speech so offended some of the Auditory, that they cryed, Pull him down, pull him down; and had certainly done him violence (for a Dagger was thrown at him) if Master Bradford a Protestant Preacher, had not stepped into his place and appeased the tumult, and Master Rogers another Protestant Minister (who were both afterward burnt for Religion) had not shifted away Bourne into Pauls School.

Hitherto Queen Marys reign had been without blood, but now the Cataracts of severity will be opened, that will make it rain blood: for now on the eighteenth of August, John Dudley Duke of Northumberland, William Parre Marquess of Northampton, and John Earl of Warwick, Son and Heir to the Duke, were arraigned at Westminster-hall, before Thomas Duke of Norfolk as high Steward of England; where the Duke of Northumberland, after his Indictment read, required the opinion of the Court in two points; first, whether a man doing any Act by authority of the Princes Counsaile, and by warrant of the great Seal of England, might for any such Act be charged with Treason: secondly, whether any such persons as were equally culpable, and by whose commandments,

A ments he was directed, might be his Judges and passe upon his triall: Whereunto was answered, that concerning the first, the great Seal which he alleadged for his warrant, was not the Seal of the lawfull Queen of the Realm, but of an Usurper, and therefore could be no warrant for him: and as to the second, it was resolved, that if any were as deeply to be touched in the case as himself, yet so long as no Attainder were of record against them, they were persons able in Law to passe upon his triall, and not to be challenged but at the Princes pleasure. After which answers, the Duke used few words, but confessed the Indictment, and accordingly had judgement to die. By whose example the other prisoners arraigned with him, confessed the Indictments, and thereupon had judgement: The nineteenth of August Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John, and Sir Henry Gates Brethren, and Sir Thomas Palmer Knights, were arraigned at Westminster, who B confessing their Indictments, had judgement, which was pronounced by the Marquess of Winchester, Lord high Treasurer, sitting that day as chief Justice. After these condemnations, followed the executions; for on the two and twentieth of August, John Duke of Northumberland And beheaded, was brought to the Tower-hill, and there beheaded; being upon the Scaffold in a Gown of green coloured damask he put it off, and then made a long Speech, wherein he asked the Queen forgiveness, whom he acknowledged to have grievously offended; and then making profession of his Faith, that he dyed a true Catholick (meaning a Papist) he said the Psalms of Miserere and De Profundis, the Pater noster, and six of the first verses of the Psalm In te Domine speravi, ending with this verse, Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit; and this said, he looked about him, as looking for a Pardon, but none coming, he laid his head down upon the block, and at one C blow had it stricken off; his body with the head was buried in the Tower, by the body of Edward late Duke of Somerset, (mortall enemies while they lived, but now lying together as good friends) so as there lieth before the high Altar in Saint Peters Church, two Dukes between two Queens, namely, the Duke of Somerset and the Duke of Northumberland, between Queen Anne and Queen Katherine, all four beheaded. Of what Religion this Duke was may well be doubted, seeing at his death he professed himself a Papist, when lately before he had importuned King Edward to make the Lady Jane his Successour, lest the Papall Religion should be restored; it seems he was not greatly of either but for other ends; a Protestant then when it was to make his Daughter in law Queen; now a Papist, when it was to save his life (for it was thought he had a Pardon promised, if he would recant.) At the same time and place were beheaded Sir John D Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer, who were no such Temporizers, but persisted and died in the Protestant Religion, which they had alwayes professed.

After this, a sprinkling of mercy came from the Queen; for on the third of September the Lord Ferrers of Chartley, the two chief Justices, Sir Roger Cholmley and Montague, Sir John Cheek and others were delivered out of the Tower, whither before they had been committed; but a shewre of severity followed soon after, for on the fifteenth of September Master Latimer and Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury were sent to the Tower, and on the third of November following, the said Archbishop Cranmer, the Lady Jane (late Queen) and the Lord Guilford her Husband, with the Lords Ambrose and Henry, Sons to the late Duke of Northumberland, were all arraigned at the Guild-hall, found guilty, and had judgement to die.

E All this while Queen Mary had contented her self to be Queen by Proclamation; but now that things were something settled, she proceeds to her Coronation: for on the last of September she rode in her Chariot through London towards Westminster in this order; first rode a number of Gentlemen and Knights, then Doctors, then Judges, then Bishops, then Lords, then the Councill, after whom followed the Knights of the Bath, thirteen in number in their Robes, then the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chancellour, and the Marquess of Winchester Lord high Treasurer; next came the Duke of Norfolk, and after him the Earl of Oxford who bore the Sword, then the Maior of London in a Gown of Crimson Velvet, who bore the Scepter of Gold; after came the Queens Chariot, and then followed another Chariot wherein sate the Lady Elizabeth her Sister, and the Lady Anne of Cleve, and then came Ladies and Gentlewomen riding F on Horses, trapped with red Velvet, &c. In this order they came through London to Westminster; where in many places by the way were Pageants and stately Shewes, and many rich Presents given to the Queen. The next day she went by water to the old Palace, and remained there till eleven of the clock, and then went on foot upon blew cloth, being railed on either side to Saint Peters Church, where she was Crowned and Anointed by the Bishop of Winchester, (the two Archbishops being then in the Tower) with all Rites and Ceremonies of old accustomed.

After her Coronation, a generall Pardon was published in her name, but interlaced with so many exceptions of matters and persons, that very few took benefit by it; for after the Pardon published, there were Commissioners assigned, to compound with such persons as were excepted; G from some of whom they took away their Fees and Offices, some they fined, and some they deprived of their estates and livings.

About this time Sir James Hales one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, who in the time of King Edward had refused to sign a writing for disinheriting the Lady Mary, and the Lady Elizabeth; (a fact worthy at least of a kinde of remembrance from the Lady Mary now Queen) yet now, for that at a quarter Sessions in Kent, he gave charge upon the Statutes of King Henry the eighth, and King Edward the sixth, in derogation of the Primacy of the Church of Rome; he was first committed to the Kings Bench, then to the Counter, and lastly to the Fleet; where he grew so troubled in minde, that he attempted with a Pen-knife to kill himself; and being afterward recovered of that hurt, and brought to the Queens presence, who gave him very comfortable words, yet could never come to be quiet in his minde; but in the end, drowned himself in a River not half a mile from his house, the River being so shallow, that he was faine to lie groveling before he could dispatch himself of life.

A Pardon granted but full of exceptions.

Sir James Hales Justice of the Common Pleas drowns himself, and why.

The Lady Jane though condemned is allowed the liberty of the Tower.

And now another sprinkling of mercy came from the Queen; for the Marquess of Northampton; and Sir Henry Gates, lately before condemned to die, were now pardoned and set at liberty. The Lady Jane also was allowed the liberty of the Tower, not without hope of life and liberty altogether, if her father the Duke of Suffolk had not the second time been cause of her destruction.

Upon a conference about Religion the Masse is again restored.

About this time also a Synod was assembled, for consulting about matters of Religion; and the point specially of the Reall presence in the Sacrament. The Prolocutor was Doctor Weston; and of the Protestant side, were John Aylmer and Richard Cheyney, both Bishops afterward in Queen Elizabeths time, also John Philpot, afterward burnt, James Haddon and others. After long Disputation, where reasons were not so much weighed as voices numbred; the Papall side, as having most voices, carryed it; and thereupon was that Religion again restored, and the Masse commanded in all Churches to be celebrated, after the ancient manner.

It was now the year 1553. when Queen Mary was come to the age of seven and thirty years, and therefore high time now to think of marriage, at least if she meant to have issue of her body; but a hard matter it was to finde a Husband in all points fitting for her; yet three at this time (in common fame at least) were taken into consideration: one was the Lord Courtney Marquess of Exeter, a goodly Gentleman, and of Royall blood, but there was an exception against him, because inclining (as was thought) to Lutheranism; another was Cardinall Poole, of a dignity not much inferiour to Kings; and by his Mother descended from Kings; but there was exception against him also, because four and fifty years old, (as old a Batchelour as Queen Mary was a Maid) and so the lesse hope of Issue between them: but the third (if he might be had) was without exception, and this was Philip Prince of Spain, the Emperour Charles his eldest Son, with whom being a Spaniard, she was the fitter matched, as beeing by the Mother a Spaniard her self. And now very opportunely came in the beginning of January Ambassadors into England about it; amongst others the Count of Egmond Admirall of the Low-Countreys, and John of Memorancy Lord of Curriers; whose message was so kindly entertained, that the marriage in short time was absolutely concluded, though it seemed something strange to many, that she should now be the Wife to the Son, who thirty years before should have been Wife to the Father. But so it is, Queens are never old so long as they are within years of bearing Children. And indeed the march was concluded with conditions of far more advantage to Queen Mary, then they were to King Philip, as on the fourteenth of January Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester and Lord Chancellour of England, openly in the Presence Chamber at Westminster, declared to all the Lords and Gentlemen there present: for it was agreed, that after the marriage, King Philip should have the Title of all the Queens Dominions, and be assumed into fellowship of the Government; but yet with reservation to the Queen, of all Priviledges and customes of the Kingdome, and free disposition of all Offices and Honours, as likewise the Queen should be assumed into the fellowship of all the Kings Dominions, and surviving him, should have a Joynture of two hundred thousand pounds a year. Then for the Issue between them; if she had a Son, that he should inherit the Low-Countreys and Burgundy; and King Philips Sonne Charles, which he had by a former Wife, should inherit all his Dominions in Italie and Spain; but if his Son Charles should fail without Issue, then the Son he should have by Queen Mary should inherit his Kingdome of Italie and Spain also. And the like good provision was also made for Daughters. But notwithstanding these great advantages of the match, yet such was the precipitant rashnesse of some, that thinking themselves wiser then the Queen and the Councell, they sought by all means to oppose the match; giving out, that it tended to bring England under the yoke of Spain, and to make the Countrey a slave to strangers. This was the general murmuring of people; but the first that shewed himself in Arms, was Sir Thomas Wyatt of Kent; who having communicated the matter with the Duke of Suffolk the Lady Janes father, with Peter Caroe a Knight of Devonshire, and divers others; intended only to make secret provision, but not to stir till Prince Philip should be come, that so their cause of taking Arms might have the better colour. On the fifteenth of January, Robert Dudley Son to the Duke of Northumberland, was arraigned at the Guild-hall of high Treason, who confessed the indictment, and had judgement given by the Earl of Suffex, to be drawn, hanged, bowelled and quartered.

Yet is opposed by divers, especially Sir Thomas Wyatt of Kent.

The Lord Robert Dudley is arraigned and condemned.

But now in counsels communicated to many, it is a hard matter to have counsell kept, and Sir Peter Caroe finding that their plot was discovered, fled privily into France, where lurking for a time, he was afterward taken at Brussels, and brought Captive into England; as likewise at the same time and place Sir John Cheek King Edwards School-master was taken, who being drawn by terrours to embrace the Papall Religion, with very grief afterward of his error pined away and dyed; Sir Peter Caroe lived many years after and dyed in Ireland; though it be falsely recorded, they were both burnt for Religion, in June of this year. Wyatt hearing of Sir Peter Caroes flight, and that all their purpose was discovered; was driven before his time to enter into Arms, giving out for the cause that it was not to attempt any thing against the Queen, but only to remove ill Counsellours, and chiefly to repell Prince Philip, lest by his marriage the

- A the Kingdome should come in subjection to the Spaniard. With Wyat were joyned Sir Henry Isley, Sir George Harper, Anthony and William Knevet, and divers other Gentlemen of the County; against him were the Lord Aburgavenny, Sir Thomas Cheyney Lord Warden of the Ports, Sir Robert Southwell Sheriffe of Kent, Sir Warram Sentleger, Sir Thomas Kemp, Sir Thomas Moyle, Sir Thomas Finch with divers other; yet all these great men had such doubt of the people, that they durst not proceed but very warily. The five and twentieth of January, news came to London of Wyats rising; against whom was presently sent the Duke of Norfolk, with Sir Henry Feringham Captain of the Guard, Sir Edward Bray, Sir John Fogge, John Covert, Roger Appleton Esquires, and five hundred Souldiers out of London; appointed to go after him, under the leading of Captain Bret. And now see in times of Sedition, how uncertain a thing it is to trust to the
- B people; for before Bret could overtake the Duke, Sir George Harper was secretly got to him, who so perswaded him that he and his five hundred Souldiers left the Duke, and went all to Wyat; which made the Duke and those with him presently to flye, and put such boldnesse into Wyat, that now he marched in great confidence towards London, with so great terrour to all sorts of people, that at Westminster-Hall, the Serjeants and other Lawyers, pleaded in harnessse.
- In the mean time, the Duke of Suffolk was perceived in Warwick-shire, to be raising of Forces in assistance of Wyat; against whom was presently sent the Earl of Huntington, and the Duke finding himself unable to make resistance, having with all his industry gotten together but only fifty men; he betook himself to a Tenant of his, one Underwood, with whom he hoped
- C and had promise to remain undiscovered, till he might have opportunity to escape, as some say, as others, to a Keeper of his Park called Nicholas Lawrence, who kept him in a hollow Oak in the said Park for two or three dayes: but whether Underwood or Lawrence, either out of fear, or out of hope of reward he betrayed him to the Earl, by whom he was taken, and under a strong guard carryed to the Tower. Upon this, Queen Mary her self came into London, where calling the Maior and chief of the City together, she made an Oration, wherein she shewed the insolency of Wyat; who though he pretended but only the crossing of the Marriage; yet was now grown to such presumption, that he required to have the custody of her person; and to have Counsellours retained or removed at his pleasure. And as for her marriage, she there affirmed she had done nothing in it, but by advice of her Councell; and for her self, that she
- D was not so longing for a Husband, but that if it were not more for the good of the Kingdom, then for her own satisfaction, she would never once think of entertaining it. Having by her speech confirmed the minds of the Citizens; Forces are presently raised, and placed about the Bridge, and other fit places of the City. The third of February, Wyat with an Army of three or four thousand, came to London, hoping of present entrance, but finding the Bridge broken, and Souldiers placed to resist him, after two days stay in Southwark he removed to Kingstone, where he found likewise the Bridge broken, yet with great industry suddenly repairing it, he passed over his men, and meant with all speed to get to the Court, before the Queen should have notice of his coming; and had done so indeed, if a mischance, and an error upon that mischance had not hindred him. For being come within six miles of London, the carriage of one of
- E his great Ordinance brake, in mending whereof so much time was spent (and Wyat by no perswasions would go forward without it) that the time was past, in which his friends at London expected his coming; which disappointment made many in those parts to fall off, and being perceived by those about him, many of them also; so as one half of his Army was suddenly gone and left him; amongst other, Sir George Harper, the most intimate of all his Councell, went to the Queen and discovered all his purposes: whereupon the Earle of Pembrook with a Company levied upon the sudden, was sent against him; which made Wyat slack his pace, so as it was noon before he came to the Suburbs of the City; and then placing his Ordinance upon a hill, and leaving there the greatest part of his Army, he only with five Ensigns marched towards Ludgate, and being encountred at Charing-crosse by the Lord Chamberlain and Sir John Gage,
- F after a small fight put them to flight in such sort, that word was carried to the Queen, how neer Wyat approached, and how wonderfully he prevailed all the way he came: with which nothing dismayed; Well then (said she) I will go in person against him my self; and was preparing to do so indeed (so much was her Fathers valour running in her veins;) but it needed not; for by this time Sir Henry Feringham Captain of the Guard, Sir Edward Bray Master of the Ordinance, and Sir Philip Paris, had given him barrail and slain many of his men; and that which was more, coming to Ludgate, he was denied entrance; and then thinking to retire, he heard the Earl of Pembrook with his Forces was behinde at Charing-crosse; so as ne ther able to go forward nor yet backward, he was at a stand and in amazement, and then leaning a while upon a stall by the Bell savage, after a little musing, he returned towards Temple-gate; where Clement the Herald meeting him, fell to perswade him, not to be a cause of more effusion of blood,
- G nor by persisting in obstinacy to exclude all hopes of the Queens mercy. The Souldiers of Wyat were earnest with him to have stood it out; but Wyat as fittly ending, as he had unadvisedly begun, yeelded himself to Sir Maurice Berkeley, and getting up upon his Horse behinde him, in that manner rode to the Court; where he had not the entertainment he expected, for without more ado he was presently sent away to the Tower. The Captain taken, the rest made no resistance, few fled, and of the other many were taken and laid in prison; and this was done the sixth of February. And now consultation was held what Delinquents should be punished; where A the first that was thought on was the Lady Jane, in whom was verified, The Fathers have eaten sowre Grapes, and the Childrens teeth are set on edge: the innocent Lady must suffer for her Fathers fault; for if her Father the Duke of Suffolk had not this second time made shiprack of his loyalty, his Daughter perhaps had never tasted the salt-waters of the Queens displeasure: but now as a rock of offence, she is the first that must be removed; and thereupon is Doctor Fecknam sent to acquaint her, that she must prepare her self to die the next day: which Message was so little unpleasing to her, that she seemed rather to rejoyce at it, as whereby she should at last be set at liberty; and the Doctor being earnest with her to leave her new Religion, and to embrace the old; she answered, She had now no time to think of any thing, but of preparing her self to God by Prayer. Fecknam thinking she had spoken this, to the end she might have some B longer time of life, obtained of the Queen three dayes longer, and then came and told so much to the Lady Jane; whereat she smiling said, You are much deceived if you think I had any desire of longer life; for I assure you, since the time you went from me, my life hath been so tedious to me, that I long for nothing so much as death, and since it is the Queens pleasure, am most willing to undergo it. Before she was brought to Execution, her Husband the Lord Guilford, had made suit, and obtained to see her and have some conference with her; but she refused it, saying, These were rather augmenters of grief, then comforts of death, she made no doubt, but they should shortly meet in a better place, and in a better condition of society: so on the twelfth of February, her Husband the Lord Guilford first, and then she an hour or two after, was beheaded within the Tower; where she acknowledged her self to have deserved death, not for seeking C the Crown, but for not refusing it, being offered; and after prayers to God, unclothing her self, and putting a Handkerchief before her eyes, she laid her head down upon the block, and patiently suffered death, more grievous to the beholders then to her self. This end had the Lady Jane Gray, a Lady of incomparable Piety; and (for her years) of incomparable Learning; for being not past seventeen years of age, she understood perfectly the Greek and Latine Tongues, and was so ready in points of Divinity, as if she knew them by inspiration rather then by instruction; no lesse a miracle in this kinde then King Edward; and therefore no marvel if he appointed her to succeed him in the Kingdome, who in the endowments of minde was so like unto him, that whilst she reigned, it might be thought he continued to reign himself, at least no more differing but only the sex. It may not be forgotten that Judge Morgan, D who at her arraignment gave the sentence against her, shortly after fell mad, and in his raving, cryed continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and so ended his life.

Two dayes after the execution of the Lady Jane, namely the fourteenth and fifteenth of February, twenty pair of Gallowes were set up in divers places of the City, whereon were hanged fifty of Wyats faction; on the eighteenth of February Brut was hanged at Rochester in Chains, Sir Henry Isle, who had been taken in an old freeze Coat and an old pair of hose, with his Brother Thomas Isle and Walter Mansell were hanged at Maidstone, Anthony Knevet and his Brother William, with another of the Mansells, were executed at Severnock; but then on the twentyeth of February a sprinkling of mercy came, for four hundred of Wyats followers, being brought before the Queen with halters about their necks, were all pardoned and set at liberty. But then E severity soon after began again, for on the three and twentieth of February the Lord Henry Gray Duke of Suffolk, and Father to the Lady Jane, who the week before had been arraigned and condemned, was on the Tower-hill beheaded, and on the eleventh of April, in the same place was beheaded (the Author of all this mischief) Wyat himself, whose quarters were set up in divers places of the City, his head upon the Gallowes at Hay-bill, besides Hyde Park. This man, in hope of life, having before accused the Lord Courtney and the Lady Elizabeth the Queens Sister, to be privy to his conspiracy, yet at his death he cleared them, and protested openly, that they were altogether innocent, and never had been acquainted with his proceedings. Yet was this matter so urged against them by Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester and Lord F Chancellour, that both of them in March before had been committed to the Tower, though in May following they were both again released, but yet confined, the Lady Elizabeth to Woodstock, under the custody of Sir Henry Benningfield of Osenborough in the County of Norfolk; the Lord Courtney to Foderingham, under the custody of Sir Thomas Tresham, who after sometime was set at liberty, and going into Italie there dyed. It is memorable, what malice this Bishop Gardiner bore to the Lady Elizabeth, by whose only procurement, not only she was kept in most hard durance, but a Warrant was at last framed under certain Counsellours hands, to put her to death, and had been done, but that Master Bridges Lieutenant of the Tower, pitying her case, went to the Queen to know her pleasure; who utterly denied that she knew any thing of it; by which means her life was preserved. Indeed the Bishop would sometimes say, G how they cut off boughes and branches, but as long as they let the roote remain, all was nothing: and it is not unworthy the remembring what trains were laid to ensnare her. The common net at that time for catching of Protestants, was the Reall Presence, and this net was used to catch her; for being asked one time, what she thought of the words of Christ; This is my body; whether she thought it the true body of Christ, that was in the Sacrament; It is said, that after some pawling, she thus answered:

*Christ was the Word that spake it:
He took the Bread, and brake it:
And what the Word did make it,
That I beleeve, and take it.*

Which though it may seem but a slight expreffion, yet hath it more solidnesse then at first sight appears; at least it served her turn at that time to escape the net, which by direct answer she could not have done.

B

On the seventeenth of February Thomas Lord Gray the Duke of Suffolks Brother was beheaded, the last, and indeed the least in delinquency, that suffered for having any hand in Wyats conspiracy. There remained yet a fagge end, and was indeed but a fagge end, as nothing worth; for on the same day Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, being accused to have been a party in Wyats conspiracy, was at the Guild-hall arraigned before Sir Thomas White Lord Maior, the Earls of Shrewsbury and Derby, Sir Thomas Bromely Lord chief Justice of England, Sir Nicholas Hare Master of the Rolles, Sir Francis Englefield Master of the Wards, Sir Richard Southwell and Sir Edward Walgrave Privy Counsellours, Sir Roger Cholmely, Sir William Portman one of the Justices of the Kings Bench, Sir Edward Sanders one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, Master Stamford and Master Dyer Serjeants at Law, Master Edward Gryffin Attorney Generall, Master Sendall and Peter Titchborne Clerks of the Crown, where the said Master Nicholas Throgmorton so fully and discreetly answered all objections brought against him, that he was found by the Jury, Not guilty: and was clearly acquitted, but the Jury notwithstanding was afterward troubled for acquitting him; and sent prisoners, some of them to the Tower, and some to the Fleet, and afterward fined to pay a thousand Marks a peece at least, and some two thousand pounds, though these sums were afterward something mitigated.

Thomas Lord Gray the Duke of Suffolks brother beheaded:

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton arraigned and by the Jury acquitted.

C

More of Wyats Complices had been taken, arraigned and adjudged to die, but in judgement the Queen remembered mercy, and gave them their Pardons; of which number were Master Radston of Kent, Sir James a Crofts, the Lord John Gray Brother to the Duke of Suffolk, and some others.

Divers of Wyats complices pardoned.

About this time, a little before and after, were advancements in honour, the Lord William Howard, Lord Admirall of England, was created Baron Howard of Effingham, Sir John Williams was created Baron of Tame, Sir Edward North was created Baron of Chantleigh, Sir John Bridges was created Baron Chandos of Sudely, Gerard Fitz Garret Earl of Kildare and Baron of Opbelley, and not long after Sir Anthony Brown Master of the Horse was created Viscount Mountague.

Divers Lord] created.

It is scarce worth remembring, that in the end of this first year of the Queens Reign, one Elizabeth Croft, a Wench of eighteen years old, was by practise put into a Wall, and thereupon called the Spirit in the Wall, who with a whistle made for the purpose, whistled out many seditious words against the Queen, the Prince of Spain, the Masse, Confession, and such other Points; for which she did Penance, standing upon a Scaffold at Pauls Crosse all the Sermon time, where she made open confession of her fault.

The Imposture of Elizabeth Croft, called the Spirit in the Wall.

There had been good store of Lay-mens blood shed already, and now the time is coming to have Clergy-mens shed, and for a preparative to it, on the tenth of April, Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Nicholas Ridley late Bishop of London, and Hugh Latimer late Bishop of Worcester, are conveyed from the Tower to Oxford, there to dispute with Oxford and Cambridge men in points of Religion, but specially of the Eucharist; the Oxford men were Cole, Chadsey, Pye, Harpefield, Smith, and Doctor Weston Prolocutor: the Cambridge men, Young Seaton, Watson, Atkinson, Fecknam and Sedgewick: the Disputation ended, which (we may well think as the matter was carryed) went against the prisoners; on the twentieth of April they were brought again on the Stage; and then demanded, whether they would persist in their opinion, or else recant; and affirming they would persist, they were all three adjudged Hereticks, and condemned to the fire; but their execution we must not look for till a year or two hence; but in the mean time we have John Rogers the first Martyr of these times, burnt at London the fourth of February; after whom the ninth of February, John Hopper late Bishop of Worcester, burnt at Gloucester; after him, Robert Ferrar Bishop of Man, burnt at Carmarden; after him John Bradford, with many others; and then the two famous men Ridley and Latimer, no lesse famous for their constant deaths, then their religious lives, both burnt at Oxford the sixteenth of October.

Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer adjudged Hereticks, and condemned to dye.

The first that suffered for Religion in Queen Marys time.

This rising of Wyat had been a Remora to the Queens marriage, and now to avoid all such obstacles hereafter, the Queen in April called a Parliament; wherein were propounded two things; one for confirmation of the Marriage; the other for restoration of the Popes Primacy. This latter was not assented to, but with great difficulty; for the six years Reign of King Edward had spread a plantation of the Protestant Religion in the hearts of many; but the Proposition for the marriage was assented to readily, but yet with the adding of some conditions, which had not been thought of in the former Articles: First, that King Philip should admit of no Stranger in any Office, but only Natives: Secondly, that he should innovate nothing in the Lawes and Customes of the Kingdome. Thirdly, that he should not carry the Queen out of the Realm, without her consent, nor any of her children without consent of the Councell. Fourthly, that surviving the Queen, he should challenge no right in the Kingdome, but suffer it to descend to the next Heir. Fifthly, that he should carry none of the Jewels of the Realm out of the Kingdom, nor suffer any Ships or Ordinance to be removed out of the Realm: and lastly, that neither directly nor indirectly, he should cause the Realm of England to be intangled with the War between Spain and France.

The conditions of the Queens marriage, with Prince Philip.

The Earl of Bedford is sent into Spain, to fetch over Prince Philip.

The marriage between him and the Queen is solemnized.

Their Style.

A bare and close Court.

Cardinal Pool is sent for by the King and Queen to come into England.

Being come he makes a solemn speech to the Parliament, exhorting them to return to the bosome of the Church.

The Parliament desires Pardon of their former errors.

And thereupon the Cardinal gives the whole Realm Absolution.

The Parliament will not yeeld that King Philip should be Crowned.

The Queen is preached in Churches to be with childe: and prayers made for her safe delivery; but proved no such matter.

All things being thus agreed on, the Earl of Bedford Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Fitz-waters, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen, are sent into Spain to fetch over Prince Philip, who arrived at Southampton the twentieth of July, in the year 1554. and the three and twentieth came to Winchester, where the Queen met him, and the five and twentieth, the marriage between them there was openly solemnized: (the disparity of years, as in Princes, not much regarded, though he were then but seven and twenty years of age, she eight and thirty) at which time the Emperours Ambassadour being present, openly declared; that in consideration of that marriage, the Emperour had given to Prince Philip his Son, the Kingdomes of Naples and Hierusalem; and thereupon (the solemnity of marriage being ended) Garter King of Heralds openly in the Church, in the presence of the King, the Queen, and the Lords both of England and Spain, solemnly proclaimed the title and style of these two Princes, as followeth: Philip and Mary by the grace of God King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Hierusalem, and Ireland, Defenders of the Faith; Princes of Spain, and Sicily, Arch-Dukes of Austria, Dukes of Millain, Burgundy, and Brabant, Counts of Habsburg, Flanders and Tyroll. After this the King and Queen by easie journeys came to Windsor Castle, where the King was install'd Knight of the Garter, and the Earl of Suffex with him: The eleventh of August they removed to Richmond, the seven and twentieth to Suffolk Place in Southwark, and the next day to London (where the stately shews that were made, may well enough be conceived without relating) from hence after four dayes they removed again to Richmond, where all the Lords had leave to depart into their Countreys, and indeed so many departed, that there remained not an English Lord at the Court, but the Bishop of Winchester: from Richmond they removed to Hampton-Court, where the Hall door within the Court was continually kept shut, so as no man might enter unlesse his errand were first known, which might perhaps be the fashion of Spain, but to English-men seemed very strange.

About this time Cardinal Poole, sent for by the King and Queen, came over into England; and had come sooner, but that the Emperour fearing he might prove a corrivall with his Son Philip, had used means to stop his passage, but now that his Sons marriage was past, he was content to let him passe, who though he came from Rome with the great authority of a Legat a Latere, yet he would not but come privately into London, because his Attaindour was yet upon Record; an Act therefore was presently passed to take it off, and to restore him in bloud; for passing of which Act, the King and Queen in person came to the Parliament House; whither a few dayes after, the Cardinal came himself, which was then kept in the great Chamber of Whitehall, because the Queen by reason of sicknesse, was not well able to go abroad; and here the King and Queen sitting under the cloth of Estate, and the Cardinal on their right hand, all the Lords, Knights and Burgesses being present, the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chancellour, made a short speech unto them; signifying the presence of the Lord Cardinal, and that he was sent from the Pope as his Legate a Latere, to do a work tending to the glory of God, and the benefit of them all; which (saith he) you may better hear from his own mouth. Then the Cardinal rose up, and made a long solemn Oration, wherein he first thanked them for his restoring, by which he was enabled to be a member of their society; then exhorting them to return into the bosome of the Church, for which end he was come; not to condemn, but to reconcile; not to compell, but to call and require; and for their first work of reconciliation, requiring them to repeal and abrogate all such Lawes as had formerly been made in derogation of the Catholick Religion. After which Speech, the Parliament going together, drew up a Supplication, which within two dayes after they presented to the King and Queen; wherein they shewed themselves to be very penitent for their former errors, and humbly desired their Majesties to intercede for them to the Lord Cardinal and the See Apostolick, that they might be Pardoned of all they had done amisse, and be received into the bosome of the Church; being themselves most ready to abrogate all Lawes prejudiciall to the See of Rome. This Supplication being delivered to the Cardinal, he then gave them absolution in these words; We, by the Apostolick authority given unto us, by the most Holy Lord Pope Julius the third (Christs Vicegerent on Earth) do absolve and deliver you and every of you, with the whole Realm and Dominions thereof, from all Heresie and Schisme, and from all Judgements, Censures and Pains for that cause incurred; and also We do restore you again to the unity of our Mother the holy Church. The report hereof coming to Rome, was cause that a solemn Procession was made for joy of the conversion of England to the Church of Rome. And now the Queen had a great desire to have King Philip Crowned, but to this the Parliament would by no means assent.

In October this second year of her Reign, a rumour was spread of the Queens being with childe, and so forward that she was quick; and thereupon were Letters sent from the Lords of the Councell, to Bonner Bishop of London, that Prayers of Thanksgiving should be made in all Churches; and the Parliament it self was so credulous, of it, that they entred into consideration of the education of the childe; and made an Act, desiring the King (out of the confidence they had in him) that if the Queen should fail, he would be pleased to take upon him the Rule and Government of the Childe; but after all this, in June following, it came to be known, that it was but a Tympany, or at least the Queen so miscarried, that there came no childe, nor

A the Queen likely ever after to have any. But howsoever in hope of the joy that was expected; in January of this year, divers of the Councill, as the Lord Chancellor, the Bishop of Ely, the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Controllor of the Queens house, Secretary Bourne, and Sir Richard Southwell Master of the Ordinance, were sent to the Tower, to discharge and set at liberty a great part of the Prisoners in the Tower; as namely, the late Duke of Northumberland's Sons, Ambrose, Robert and Henry, also Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir James Croft, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, Sir John Rogers, Sir Nicholas Arnold, Sir George Harper, Sir Edward Warner, Sir William Semlow, Sir Gowen Carow, William Gybbs Esquire, Cutbert Vaughan, and some others.

Divers that were in the Tower condemned, are set at liberty.

About this time one William Fetherstone a Millers Son, of the age of eighteen years, named and bruited himself to be King Edward the sixth; for which being apprehended and examined, B he answered as one lunatick; and thereupon was whipped at a Carts tayl, and banished into the North; but the year after, spreading abroad again, that King Edward was alive, and that he had talked with him, he was arraigned and condemned of Treason, and at Tyburn hanged and quartered.

One Fetherstone a Millers Son takes upon him to be King Edward the sixth.

Is taken and hanged at Tyburn.

In the moneth of March, the Queen was taken with a fit of Devotion, and thereupon called unto her four of her Privy Councill, namely, William Marquesse of Winchester Lord Treasurer, Sir Robert Rochester Controllor, Sir William Peter Secretary, and Sir Francis Englefield Master of the Wards, and signified unto them, that it went against her conscience, to hold the Lands and Possessions as well of Monasteries and Abbeyes as of other Churches, and therefore did freely relinquish them, and leave them to be disposed, as the Pope and the Lord Cardinall should think fit; and thereupon charged them to acquaint the Cardinall with this her purpose. And shortly after in performance hereof, John Fecknam late Dean of Pauls, was made Abbot of Westminster, and had possession delivered him, and with him fourteen Monks received the Habit at the same time: and on the twentieth of November, Sir Thomas was instituted Lord of Saint Johns of Hierusalem, and was put in possession of the Lands belonging unto it. And when it was told her, that this would be a great diminution of the Revenues of her Crown; she answered, she more valued the salvation of her soul, then a thousand Crowns: a most religious speech, and enough, if there were but this, to shew her to be a most pious Prince.

The Queen delivers up all the lands of Monasteries that were in her hands.

The fourth of September this year, King Philip waited on with the Earl of Arundell Lord Steward, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Huntington and others, went over to Callice, and from thence to Brussels in Brabant, to visit the Emperour his Father; who delivering him possession of the Low-Countries, in March following he returned into England; but then on the sixth of July following, by reason of Wars with France, he passed again over to Callice, and so into Flanders, from whence he returned not till eighteen moneths after; which made great muttering amongst the Common people, as though he took any little occasion to be absent, for the little love he bore to the Queen.

King Philip goes into Flanders where he staves eighteen moneths.

In the third year of the Queen dyed Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester at his house in Southwark; of whose death it is memorable, that the same day in which Bishop Ridley and Mallet Latimer suffered at Oxford, he would not go to dinner till four a clock in the afternoon, though the old Duke of Norfolk was come to dine with him; the reason was, because he would first hear of their being burnt, and as soon as word of that was brought him, he presently said, Now let us go to Dinner; where sitting down, and eating merrily, upon a suddain he fell into such extremity, that he was faine to be taken from the Table and carryed to his bed, where he continued fifteen dayes, without voyding any thing either by urine or otherwise, which caused his tongue to swell in his mouth, and so dyed; after whose death, Nicholas Heath Archbishop of York was made Lord Chancellor.

Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester dies a strange death

And now comes the time of Archbishop Crammers execution, who the year before had been condemned and degraded by Commission from the Pope; after which, being by the subtilty of some, put in hope of life, out of frailty he subscribed to a Recantation, which yet did him no good; for whether it were that Cardinall Poole would no longer be kept from being Archbishop, (which he would not be as long as he lived) or that the Queen could not be gotten to forget his being the chief instrument of her Mothers divorce; his execution was resolved to be the fourteenth of February, in the same place at Oxford where Ridley and Latimer five moneths before had been: before the execution Doctor Cole preached, who to make use of Crammers Recantation, told the people, they should do well to hearken to this learned mans confession, who now at his death, and with his death would testify which was the true Religion, never thinking that Crammer would have denied his former Recantation; but Crammer being brought to the stake, (contrary to expectation) acknowledged, that through frailty he had subscribed it, praying God heartily to forgive it; and now for a punishment, that hand which had done it should first suffer, and therewithall thrusting his right hand into the fire, he there held it, till it first, and then his whole body was consumed; onely (which was no small miracle) his heart remained whole and not once touched with the fire. The same year also, no fewer then eighty four of both sexes were burnt for Religion; and it was a cruelty very far extended, that the bones of Bucer and Phagius some time before dead and buried, were taken up and publicly burnt in Cambridge. No sooner was Crammer dead, but the very same day was Cardinall Poole made Archbishop of Canterbury.

Yet is brought to the stake and burnt: where he burns his hand first.

When his whole body was burnt, his heart remained untouched of the fire.

In the fourth year of the Queen, exemplar Justice was done upon a great person; for the Lord Starion, a man much in the Queens favour, as being an earnest Papist, was for a murther com-committed by him arraigned and condemned, and he with four of his servants, carried to Salisbury, was there in the Market-place hanged, having this favour to be hanged in a filken halter, his servants in places neer adjoining to the place where the Murther was committed.

The four and twentieth of April Thomas Stafford second Son to the Lord Stafford, with other, to the number of two and thirty persons (set on by the French King) attempted to raise Sedition against the Queen, for marrying with King Philip, and coming out of France, arrived at Scarborough in Yorkshire, where they took the Castle, but within two days were driven out by the Earl of Westmerland, and then taken and arraigned: the eight and twentieth of May Stafford was beheaded on the Tower-hill, and the next day three of his associates, Strelley, Bradford and Proctor were drawn from the Tower to Tyburn, and there executed. The first of May Thomas Percy was first made Knight, after Lord, and the next day was created Earl of Northumberland, to whom the Queen gave all the lands that had been his Ancestours.

At this time the Queen intangled her self (contrary to her promise) in her Husbands quarrel, sent a defiance to the French King, by Claremus King at Arms; and after on the Munday in the Whitsunweek, by sound of Trumpet, proclaimed open War against him in Cheapside, and other places of the City; and shortly after, caused an Army of a thousand Horse, and four thousand Foot, to be transported over, to the aid of her Husband King Philip, under the leading of the Earl of Pembroke Captain General, Sir Anthony Brown Viscount Montague, Lieutenant General, the Lord Gray of Wilton Lord Marshal, the Earl of Rusland General of the Horse, the Earl of Lincoln Colonel of the Foot, the Lord Robert Dudley Master of the Ordinance, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord De la Ware, the Lord Bray, the Lord Chandours, the Lord Ambrose Dudley, the Lord Henry Dudley, with divers Knights and Gentlemen; who joyning with Kings Philips Forces, they all together set down before Saint Quintins, a Town of the French Kings of great importance. To the rescue whereof, the French King sent an Army, under the leading of the Constable of France, which consisted of nine hundred men at arms, with as many light Horse, eight hundred Reysters, two and twenty Ensignes of Lancequenets, and sixteen Ensignes of French Footmen; their purpose was not to give battel, but to put more succours into the Town; which the Philippians perceiving, encountred them, and in the fight slew John of Burbon Duke of Angbein, the Viscount of Torrain, the Lord of Chadenier, with many Gentlemen of account; they took prisoners the Duke of Memorancy Constable of France, the Duke of Montpensier, Duke Longueville, the Marshal of Saint Andrews, the Lord Lewis Brother to the Duke of Mantova, the Baron of Curton, the Rbinegrave Colonel of the Almaynes, Monsieur d'Obigny, Monsieur de Biron, and many others; and then pursuing the victory, under the government of the Earl of Pembroke, on the seven and twentieth of August they took the Town of Saint Quintins; in the assault whereof, the Lord Henry Dudley, youngest Son to the Duke of Northumberland, was with a piece of great Ordinance slain, and some other of account. The sackage of the Town King Philip gave to the English, as by whose valor chiefly it was won.

The joy was not so great for this winning of Saint Quintins, but there will be greater sorrow presently for other losses. Many of the Garrison of Callice had been drawn from thence, for this service of Saint Quintins, and no new supply sent, which being perceived by the French King, a Plot is laid how to surprize it, which yet was not so secretly carried, but that the Officers of Callice had intelligence thereof; who thereupon signified it to the Councel of England, requiring speedy succours, without which, against so great an Army as was raised against them, they should not be able to hold out. But whether they gave no credit to their relations, or whether they apprehended not the danger so eminent as indeed it was, they neglected to send supplies till it was too late. For the Duke of Guise, with no lesse speed then Policy, took such a course that at one and the same time, he set both upon Newnhambridge and also upon Ricebank, (the two main Skponces for defence of the Town,) and took them both, and then fell presently to batter the Walls of the Castle it self, and that with such violence of great Ordinance, that the noyse was heard to Antwerpe, being a hundred miles off. But having made the walls assailable, the English used this stratagem, they laid trains of Powder to blow them up, when they should offer to enter, but this stratagem succeeded not; for the French in passing the Ditch, had so wet their clothes, that dropping upon the train, the Powder would take no fire, (so all things seemed to concur against the English) and thereupon the Castle was taken also, and with it the Town also had been taken, but that Sir Anthony Ager, with the losse of his own life and his eldest Sons, valiantly defended it, and for that time repelled the French, but their numbers increased so fast upon the Town, that the Lord Wentworth the Deputy, seeing no other way of safety, demanded Parlee, where a composition was made, that the Town should presently be yeilded to the French King, the lives of the Inhabitants only saved, and safe conduct to passe away, saving the Lord Deputy with fifty other, such as the Duke should name. And here to be quit with the English, for their hard usage at Saint Quintins, the Duke caused Proclamation to be made, that all and every person of the Town, should bring their money, jewels and plare, to the value of a groat, and lay it down upon the high Altar of the Church; by which means an inestimable sum of Treasure was there offered, enough to enrich an Army, which had before enriched a Town: and now to make it appear how unable the Town was to hold out against so great an Army, it is said, there were in it but only five hundred souldiers of ordinary, and scarce two hundred more of able fighting men; but of other people, men, women and children four thousand and two hundred, all which were suffered to depart, saving the Lord Wentworth, the Deputy, Sir Ralph Chamberlain Captain of the Castle, John Hurlstone Captain of Ricebruke, Nicholas Alexander Captain of Newnhambridge, Edward Grimston the Controulour, John Rogers

- A Rogers the Surveyour, with others to the number of fifty, who were all carried prisoners into France. And thus Callice, which had been in possession of the English above two hundred years, was won from the English in eight days, which King Edward the third had not won from the French in lesse then a year. The Lord Wintworth was suspected, and in Queen Elizabeths time arraigned for betraying it, but was acquitted by his Peers. Callice thus won, the Duke with his Army marched to Guyfnes, five miles distant, whereof was Captain the Lord Gray of Wilton, who held out the siege and batteries five or six days with so great valour and resolution, that he appeared in nothing inferiour to the Enemy but in multitude, yet at last overlaid with their numbers, and importuned by his souldiers, much against his own will, he made composition, that the Town and Castle should be wholly rendered; himself and all Officers remain prisoners, all other to depart with their Armour and Baggage. The Lord Gray afterward ransomed for four and twenty thousand Crowns. And now the Duke of Guise considering that was Guyfnes would be too costly a Castle to be kept, and too dangerous a neighbour to Callice, if it should be recovered, razed it with the Bulwarks and Fortifications to the ground. Guyfnes thus won, there remained nothing within the English pale, but the little Castle of Hammes, whereof was Captain the Lord Edward Dudley, who considering that though it were naturally strongly situate, as being invironed with Fens and Marshes, yet it had but little helps by Art of Fortifications, and being assured that the Duke of Guise would speedily come upon him, he secretly in the night with all his Garrison, departed into Flanders, so as the Castle was not won, but taken by the Duke of Guise; and with the losse of this Castle, the English lost all their footing in
- C Terra firma, and the Kings of England all the reality of their Title in France, having nothing left but nudum nomen.

Guyfnes also won by the French.

And so the English lost all their footing in France.

The Dauphin of France marries Mary Steward heir of Scotland.

Presently after this, the French King caused the marriage between his eldest Son Francis the Dauphin, and Mary Steward sole heir of James the first King of Scotland to be solemnized: whereupon great wars ensued soon after between England and Scotland.

Queen Mary being infinitely troubled in minde for the losse of Callice, sent presently forth her Admiral the Lord Climon, with a Fleet of more then a hundred sayl, to recover, at least reparation in honour, by doing some exploit upon France, who not finding opportunity to set upon Brest, as he was appointed, fell upon the Town of Canquast, which he took and burnt, and also divers Villages thereabouts, and then returned. In which mean time, many great conflicts having been

- D between King Philip and the King of France; at last, by mediation of the Dutchesse of Lorrain, a Treaty of Peace is agreed on, where all things seemed to be well accorded, but only that King Philip by all means required restitution of Callice, to which by no means the French would assent; but whilest they stood upon these terms, it happened that first the Emperour Charles King Philips Father died, and shortly after Queen Mary, and the day after Cardinal Poole, and shortly after Sir John Baker of Sissingberst in Kent, who had been a Privy Counsellour to Henry the eight, Edward the sixth and Queen Mary. And so our Story hath no further relation to either War or Peace, between the two Kings of France and Spain.

An agreement of Peace between King Philip and the King of France; but only want of restitution of Callice.

Queen Mary dies.

Of her Taxations.

- E SHE began with a rare Example; for in the first year of her Reign, was pardoned by Proclamation, the Subsidie of four shillings the pound of Land, and two shillings the pound of goods, granted in the last Parliament of King Edward the sixth. In her second year in a Parliament then holden, was granted to the King and Queen, a Subsidie of the Laitie, from five pounds to ten pounds, of eight pence in the pound; from ten pounds to twenty pounds, of twelve pence in the pound, and from twenty pounds upwards, sixteen pence in the pound; all Strangers double; and the Clergy six shillings in the pound. If this were all, then upon the matter, in al her time, there came no new charge upon her people; for one Subsidie remitted and one received, made but even.
- F In her last year she borrowed twenty thousand pounds of the City London; and paid twelve pounds a year interest for every hundred pound.

Laws and Ordinances in her time.

- I N her first year, on the the fourth of September, were proclaimed certain new coins of gold and silver, a Sovereign of gold of thirty shillings; the half Sovereign fifteen shillings; an Angel of ten shillings; the half Angel five shillings. Of silver the groat, the half groat and penny; all these Coyns to be currant as before. In her second year, Proclamation was made, forbidding the shooting in Hand-guns and bearing of weapons. The year in which she was married to King Philip, a straight charge was to all Victuallers, Taverners and Alehouse-keepers, that they should sell no meat nor drink nor any kinde of victuals, to any Serving-man whatsoever, unless he brought a testimonial to shew whose servant he was. Also in a Parliament holden this year, amongst other Acts, the Statute Ex Officio and other Laws made for the punishment of Heresies, were revived; but chiefly the Popes Bull of Dispensation of Abbey Land was there confirmed. In her second year, on Michaelmas Even, the Prisoners that lay in the Counter in Breadstreet, were removed to a new Counter made in Woodstreet, of the City purchase and building; the which removing was confirmed by the Common Councel of the City.

New Coyns of Gold and Silver.

Meat and drink forbidden to be sold to any serving-man without a testimonial whom he served.

The Counter in Woodstreet first made a Affairs Prison.

Affairs of the Church in her time.

IN the first year of this Queens reign, all Bishops which had been deprived in the time of King Edward the sixth, were restored to their Bishopricks, and the new removed; also all beneficed men that were married, or would not forsake their opinion, were put out of their Livings; and other of a contrary opinion put in their rooms. Also this year, on the seven and twentieth of August, the Service begun to be sung in Latine in Pauls Church. Also this year the Popes authority was by Act of Parliament restored in England; and the Masse commanded in all Churches to be used. In her second year, the Realm is Absolved, and reconciled to the Church of Rome, by Cardinal Poole; and first Fruits and Tenths are restored to the Clergy: but this was soon revoked, the Council finding the necessity of it for the Queens support. In her fourth year, Monasteries were begun to be reedified; of which number were that of Westminster, that of Sheen and Sion, that of the Black fryers, and the Fryers of Greenwich. Of the number of those that died for Religion in her time, there are recorded five Bishops, one and twenty Divines, and of all sorts of men and women, two hundred threescore and seventeen.

The number of those that died for Religion in Queen Marys time.

Works of Piety done by her or others in her time.

THIS Queen restored a great part of Abbey-lands that were in her possession, and if she had lived longer, very likely she would have restored more. In her first year, Sir Thomas White then Maior, erected a Colledge in Oxford, now called Saint Johns Colledge, before, Bernard Colledge; he also erected Schooles at Bristow and Reading, and gave two thousand pounds to the City of Bristow to purchase Lands, the profits whereof to be employed for the benefit of young Clothiers for ten years, and after that to be employed in like manner, to the benefit of two and twenty other Shires and Cities. In her third year died Sir John Gresham, late Maior of London, who founded a free School at Holt in Norfolk, and gave to every Ward in London ten pounds to be distributed to the poor; also to Maids marriages two hundred pounds. Cutbert Tunstall Bishop of Durham, erected a goodly Library in Cambridge, storing it with many excellent both Printed and Written Books: he also bestowed much upon building at Durham, at Alnewick and at Tunbridge.

Saint Johns Colledge in Oxford founded.

Casualties happening in her time.

IN her first year, on the seven and twentieth of August, the goodliest Ship in England, called The Great Harry, being of the burthen of a thousand Tun, was burnt at Woolwich by negligence of the Mariners. In her second year on the fifteenth of February, appeared in the skie a Rainbow reversed, the bow turned downward and the two ends standing upward: also two Suns shined at one time a good distance asunder, which were taken for ill signes. This year also in the moneth of August, at a place in Suffolk by the Sea side, all of hard stone and pebble, lying between the Towns of Oxford and Alborough, where never grasse grew, nor any earth was ever seen, there chanced suddenly to spring up without any tillage or sowing, so great abundance of Peason, that the Poor gathered above a hundred quarters, yet there remained some ripe, and some blossoming, as many as were before. In her fourth year, hot burning Agues and other strange diseases, took away much people; so as between the twentieth of October and the last of December, there died seven Aldermen, namely, Henry Heardson, Sir Richard Dobbs late Maior, Sir William Laxton late Maior, Sir Henry Hobblesfern late Maior, Sir John Champneys late Maior, Sir John Aleph late Sheriff, and Sir John Gresham late Maior. In her fourth year, before Harvest, Wheat was sold for four Marks the quarter, Malt at four and forty shillings the quarter, and Pease at six and forty shillings eight pence; where after Harvest, Wheat was sold for five shillings the quarter, Malt at six shillings eight pence, Rye at three shillings four pence the quarter. In the Countrey, Wheat was sold for four shillings the quarter, Malt at four shillings eight pence, and in some places a bushel of Rye for a pound of Candles, which was four pence. In her fifth year, within a mile of Nottingham, so marvellous a tempest of thunder happened, that it beat down all the Houses and Churches in two Towns thereabouts, cast the Bells to the outside of the Churchyard, and some webs of lead four hundred foot into the field, written as if it had been leather; the River of Trent running between the two Towns, the water with the mud in the bottom was carried a quarter of a mile, and cast against trees; with the violence whereof the trees were pulled up by the roots, and cast twelve score off; also a childe was taken forth of a mans hand and carried two spears length high, and then let fall two hundred foot off, of which fall it died; five or six men thereabouts were slain; and neither flesh nor skin perished; also there fell some Hail-stones that were fifteen inches about. This year also in Harvest time was a great mortality, and specially of Priests, so as many Churches were unserved, and much corn was lost in the field for want of Workmen; whereupon ensued a great

A great scarcity, so that corn was sold for fourteen shillings a quarter, and Wood sold in London for thirteen shillings a thousand of Billets, and Coals ten pence a sack. Also this year on the last of September, fell so great store of rain, that Westminster Hall was full of water, and Boats were rowed over Westminster Bridge into Kings Street.

Of her Personage and Conditions.

OF her Personage we can make no particular description, only we may say, she was none of the most amiable, but yet without deformity; but of her Conditions we may say, she was not without deformity, and yet was very amiable. If we account her Religion a deformity, yet her constancy and devotion in it, we must need count a beauty: if it were a deformity to promise the Suffolk men, not to alter the Religion which King Edward had established, yet it was certainly a pious dissembling, Cretizare cum Cretensibus; and equivocation (will some say) was there a vertue, where she deceived them into truth, and did them good against their wills. And as for her Sister Elizabeth, if she did not love her, it was but a quality hereditary in her; for their Mothers did not love one another before; and indeed not without some cause in both; for as those upbraided each others marriage, so these, each others birth. We shall not do her right, if we deny her to be of a merciful disposition, seeing oftentimes she pitied the person, where she shed the blood; she could have found in her heart to have spared the Lady Janes life, if Ragion di stato had not been against it, and she did spare her Father the Duke of Suffolks life, till his second offence gave her just provocation. The goodnesse of her nature might be seen in the badnesse of her fortune; who took nothing so much to heart, as unkindenesse of friends; the revolt of Callice, and the absence of King Philip, being the two chief causes that brought her to her end.

Of her Death and Buriall.

THE conceit of her being with childe, had kept Physitians from looking into the state of her body; so as her first distemper at first neglected, brought her by degrees into a Dropick, to which was added a burning Feaver, brought upon her by a double grief; one for the long absence of King Philip (who had now been away a year and a half;) the other, and perhaps the greater, for the losse of Callice; as she forbore not to say to some about her, that if they looked into her Heart, being dead, they should finde Callice there. She began to fall sick in September, and died at her Mannour of Saint James the seventeenth of November, in the year 1558. when she had reigned five years four moneths and eleven days; Lived three and forty years. Her body was interred in a Chappel in the Minster of Saint Peters Church at Westminster, without any Monument or other Remembrance.

OF Men of Valour in her time, there were many, as may be seen in the story of her Reign; but to name some for example, there was William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the chief assistant of King Philip in the winning of Saint Quintins; there was William Lord Gray of Wilton, Captain of Guynes, who though he yeilded the Town, yet more out of tendernesse to his Souldiers, then out of fear of his Enemies, which he would never else have yeilded up; and to speak of one of a meaner rank, there was Sir Anthony Ager, who in defence of the Town of Callice lost his life, but not till he made the Enemy turn their backs and flye. Of learned men also there were many, as John Rogers born in Lancashire, who Translated the Bible into English with Notes; Richard Morison Knight, born in Oxfordshire, who wrote divers Treatises; Robert Record a Doctor of Physick, who wrote a Book of Arithmetick; Cutbert Tunstall, of a Worshipful Family in Lancashire, though base born, whose Ancestour came into England with the Conquerour, as his Barbour, and therefore hath three Combs his Arms; Bishop first of London; and after of Durham, who wrote divers learned Works: Richard Sampson, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, who wrote certain Treatises: Lucas Shepheard born at Colchester in Essex, an English Poet: Jane Dudley, Daughter to Henry Gray Duke of Suffolk, wrote divers excellent Treatises: William Thomas a Welshman, who wrote the History of Italy, and others things: James Brookes and John Stanish, both of them Writers in defence of the Popes Doctrine: William Peryn a black Fryer, who wrote in defence of the Masse, and also divers Sermons: Henry Lord Stafford, Son to Edward Duke of Buckingham, who amongst other things which he wrote, Translated a Book out of Latine into English, intituled Utriusque Potestatis Differentia; which Book (as some think) was first compiled by Edward Fox Bishop of Hereford: John Hopkins who translated divers of Davids Psalms into English Meeter, which are to be found amongst those appointed to be sung in the Church.

ELIZABETH.

QUEEN Mary dying on Thursday the seventeenth of November, in the year 1558. her Sister, the Lady Elizabeth, of the age of five and twenty years, the only surviving childe of King Henry the eighth, by undoubted Right, succeeded her in the Crown; which happening in a time of Parliament; Nicholas Heath Archbishop of Yorke, and Lord Chancellour, sent to the Knights and Burgesses in the Lower House, to repair immediately to the Lords of the Upper House; to whom he signified, That Queen Mary was that morning dead, and therefore required their Assents: to joyn with the Lords in Proclaiming Queen Elizabeth; which accordingly was done, by the sound of Trumper, first at Westminster, and after in the City of London. The Queen was then at Hatfield; from whence on Wednesday the three and twentyeth of November, she removed to the Lord Norths house in the Charter-house, where she stayed till Munday the eight and twentieth of November, and then rode in her Chariot thorow London to the Tower; where she continued till the fifth of December; and then removed to Somerset House in the Strand; from whence she went to her Palace at Westminster; and from thence, on the twelfth of January, to the Tower; and on the fourteenth of January, to Westminster, to her Coronation; where as she went she said this Prayer: O Lord Almighty and everlasting God, I give thee most hearty thanks, that thou hast spared me to this joyfull day; and I acknowledge, that thou hast dealt as wonderfully and as mercifully with me, as thou didst with thy faithfull servant Daniel, whom thou deliverdest out of the Denne, from the cruelty of the raging Lyons; even so was I overwhelmed and onely by thee delivered: To thee therefore onely be thanks, honour and praise for ever. And it is incredible, what Pageants and shewes were made in the City, as she passed. On Sunday the five and twentieth of January, she was Crowned in the Abbey Church at Westminster, by Doctor Oglethorp, Bishop of Carlisle, with all Solemnities and Ceremonies in such case accustomed. At this time, to honour her Coronation, she conferred more Honour, then in all her life after: William Parre degraded by Queen Mary, she made Marquesse of Northampton; Edward Seymour whose Father had been Attainted, she made Earl of Hertford; Thomas Howard, second Son to Thomas Duke of Norfolk, she made Viscount Bindon; Sir Henry Carie her Cousin German, she made Baron of Hunston; and Sir Oliver Saint-John, she made Baron of Bleisbo.

And now the Queen, though she were her self very wise, yet would not trust, (and it was a great point of wisdom that she would not trust) to her own wisdom; and therefore she chose Counsellours to assist her: In which number she took Nicholas Heath Archbishop of York; William Pawlet, Marquesse of Winchester, Lord high Treasurer; Henry Fitz Alan, Earle of Arundel; Francis Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury; Edward Standley, Earle of Derby; William Herbert, Earle of Pembroke; Edward Lord Clinton Lord Admirall; and William Lord Howard of Effingham; Sir Thomas Cheyney; Sir William Peter; Sir Richard Sackville; and Nicholas Wootton, Dean of Canterbury; all which had been Counsellours to Queen Mary, and were of her Religion: but then to make a counterpoise of Counsellours of her own Religion, she joyned with them William Parre, Marquess of Northampton; Francis Russel, Earl of Bedford; Sir Thomas Parry, Sir Edward Rogers, Sir Ambrose Cave, Sir Francis Knolles, and Sir William Cecil, late Secretary to King Edward the sixth; and a little after, Sir Nicholas Bacon, whom she made Keeper of the Great Seal. And having thus provided for her State at home, she seeks correspondence with Princes abroad: To the Emperour Ferdinand, she sent in Embassy Sir Thomas Chaloner; to the King of Spain in the Low-Countries the Lord Cobham; to the Princes of Germany Sir Henry Killigrew; Sir Amygill Waad, to the Duke of Holst; and another Ambassadour to the King of Denmark. There were also Ambassadours sent to the Pope, to the State of Venice, and to the French King; with whom at this time there was a Treaty of Peace holden at Cambray, between the Kingdoms of France, England and Spain; where for England was employed, the Earl of Arundell, Thursby Bishop of Ely; and Doctor Wootton, B Dean of Canterbury; with whom William Lord Howard of Effingham was joyned by a new Commission.

As soon as King Philip heard of the death of his wife Queen Mary, partly out of considerations of State, and partly out of affection of love, he solicited Queen Elizabeth by his Ambassadour, the Earl of Feria, to joyn in Marriage with himself; which was no more for two Sisters to have successively one husband, then was done before, for two Brothers to have successively one wife; and for this he promised to procure a Dispensation from the Pope. To which motion the Queen, though she well knew, that to allow a Dispensation in this case to be sufficient, were to make her own Birth illegitimate; yet to so great a Prince, and who in her Sisters time had done her many favours, she would not return so blunt an Answer; but putting the Ambassadour off for the present in modest terms: She conceived there would be no better way to take him off clean from further suit, then by bringing in an alteration of Religion; which yet she would not doe all at once, and upon the sudden (as knowing the great danger of sudden changes) but by little and little, and by degrees: as at first she permitted only Epistles and Gospels, the Ten Commandments, the Lords Prayer, and the Creed to be read to the people in the English Tongue; in all other matters they were to follow the Roman Rite and Custom, until order could be taken for establishing of Religion by Authority of Parliament; and a severe Proclamation was set forth, prohibiting all Points of Controversie to be medled with: by which means, she both put the Protestants in hope; and put not Papists out of hope. Yet privately she committed the correcting of the Book of Common Prayer, set forth in the English Tongue under King Edward the sixth, to the care and diligence of Doctor Parker, Bill, May, Cox, Grindall, Whitehead, and Pilkington, Divines of great Learning; with whom she joyned Sir Thomas Smith, a learned Knight: but the matter carryed so closely, that it was not communicated to any, but to the Marquess of Northampton, the Earl of Bedford, and Sir William Cecil. The two and twentieth of March, the use of the Lords Supper in both kinde was by Parliament allowed: The four and twentieth of June, the Sacrifice of the Masse was abolished, and the Liturgy in the English Tongue established, though as some say, but with the differences of six voice. In July the Oath of Supremacy was propounded to the Bishops and others: And in August, Images were removed out of Churches, and broken or burnt. By these degrees Religion was changed; and yet the change, to the wonder of the world, bred no disturbance; which if it had been done at once, and on the sudden, would hardly, at least not without dangerous opposition, have been admitted.

The alteration of Religion by Parliament, by the difference only of six voices.

A Conference of Papists and Protestants about matters of Religion.

During this time; a Parliament had been summoned to begin at Westminster, upon the fifteenth of January; and now the Queen, for satisfaction of the people, appointed a Conference to be held, between the Prelates of the Realm, and Protestant Divines now newly returned, who had fled the Realm, in the time of Queen Mary: for the Prelates were chosen John White, Bishop of Winchester; Ralph Bayne, Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield; Thomas Watson, Bishop of Lincoln; Doctor Cole, Dean of Pauls; Doctor Langdell, Arch-deacon of Lewis; Doctor Harpesfield, Arch-deacon of Canterbury; and Doctor Chadsey Archdeacon of Middlesex: For the Protestant side were appointed Doctor Scory, Doctor Cox, Doctor Sands, Doctor Whitehead, Doctor Grindall, Master Horne, Master Guest, Master Elmer, and Master Juell. The place was prepared in Westminster Church; where, besides the Disputants, were present the Lords of the Queens Council, with other of the Nobility; as also many of the Lower House of Parliament. The Articles propounded against the Prelates, and their adherents, were these: First, That it is against the Word of God, and the custome of the ancient Church, to use a Tongue unknown to the people, in common Prayer, and in the Administration of the Sacraments. Secondly, That every Church hath authority to appoint and change Ceremonies, and Ecclesiastical Rites, so they be to edification. Thirdly, That it cannot be proved by the Word of God, that there is in the Masse a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the living and the dead. For the manner of their Conference, it was agreed it should be performed in writing; and that the Bishops should deliver their Reasons in writing, first. The last of March was the first day of their meeting; where contrary to the Order, the Bishops brought nothing in writing; but said, they would deliver their mindes only by Speech: This breaking of Order much displeased the Lords, yet they had it granted. Then rose up Doctor Cole, and made a large Declaration concerning the first Point: when he had ended, the Lords demanded if any of them had more to say; who answered, No: Then the Protestant Party

But broken off, and why,

A Party exhibited a written Book; which was distinctly read by Master Horn. This done, some of the Bishops began to affirm, they had much more to say in the first Article: this again much displeased the Lords: yet this also was granted them, to do at their next meeting on Munday next: but when Munday came, so many other differences arose between them, that the Conference broke off, and nothing was determined. But in the Parliament there was better agreement; for there it was enacted, That Queen Elizabeth was the lawful and undoubted Queen of England; notwithstanding a Law made by her Father King Henry the eighth, that excluded both her and her Sister Mary from the Crown, seeing, though the Law be not repealed, yet it is a Principle in Law, That the Crown once gained, taketh away all defects. Also in this Parliament, First fruits and Tenths were restored to the Crown; and the Title of Supreme Head of the Church of England was confirmed to the Queen, with universal consent, that in the Upper House none opposed these Laws, but only the Earl of Shrewsbury, and Sir Anthony Brown, Viscount Mountague: and in the Lower House, only some few of Papal inclination, murmured, saying, That the Parliament was packt; and that the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Arundell, and Sir William Cecil, for their own ends, had cunningly begged yoyces, to make up their Party.

The Crown once gained taketh away all defects. The title of Supreme Head of the Church is confirmed to the Queen.

The Supremacy thus confirmed to the Queen, the Oath was soon after tendered to the Bishops and others; of whom, as many as refused to take it, were presently deprived of their livings. And that we may see, how inclining the Kingdom at this time was to receive the Protestant Religion; it is said, that in the whole Realm (wherein are reckoned above Nine thousand Spiritual Promotions) there were no more that refused to take the Oath, but only fourscore Parsons, fifty Prebendaries, fifteen Masters of Colledges, twelve Archdeacons, twelve Deans, six Abbots, and fourteen Bishops, (indeed all that were at that time, except Amos Bishop of Landoff) as Nicholas Heath Archbishop of York, Edmund Bonner Bishop of London, Cuthbert Tunstall Bishop of Durham, Thomas Thursby Bishop of Ely, Guilbert Eburn Bishop of Bath and Wells, John Christopherson Bishop of Chichester, John White Bishop of Winchester, Thomas Watson Bishop of Lincoln, Ralph Bayne Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, Owen Ogilborth Bishop of Carlisle, James Turburville Bishop of Exeter, and David Peol Bishop of Peterborough; and with these Doctor Pecknam Abbot of Westminster: All which were at first committed to prison, but soon after delivered to the custody of private friends, excepting those two sawcy Prelates, Lincoln and Winchester, who threatened to excommunicate the Queen. Three only, namely, Cuthbert Scott Bishop of Chester, Richard Pate Bishop of Worcester, and Thomas Goldwell Bishop of Saint Asaph, changed their Religion of their own accord; as also did certain Noble Personages, namely, Henry Lord Morley, Sir Francis Englefield, and Sir Robert Peckham, (who had been Privy Counsellours to Queen Mary) Sir Thomas Shelley, and Sir John Gage.

The Oath of Supremacy readily taken by all, but only some few, and who they were.

In the Sees of the Prelates removed, were placed Protestant Bishops, as Matthew Parker was made Archbishop of Canterbury, (who was consecrated by the Imposition of the hands of three that formerly had been Bishops; namely, William Barlow of Bath and Wells, John Scory of Chichester, and Miles Coverdale of Exeter) and being consecrated himself, he afterward consecrated Edmund Grindall Bishop of London, Richard Cox Bishop of Ely, Edwin Sands Bishop of Worcester, Rowland Merick Bishop of Bangor, Thomas Young Bishop of Saint Davys, Nicholas Bul-
 E lingham Bishop of Lincoln, John Jewell Bishop of Salisbury, Richard Davis Bishop of Saint Asaph, Edward Guest Bishop of Rochester, Gilbert Berkeley Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bentham Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, William Alley Bishop of Exeter, John Parkhurst Bishop of Norwich, Robert Horn Bishop of Winchester, Richard Cheyney Bishop of Gloucester, Edmund Scambler Bishop of Peterborough, William Barlow Bishop of Chichester, John Scory Bishop of Hereford, Young Archbishop of York, James Pilkington Bishop of Durham, John Best Bishop of Carlisle, and William Downham Bishop of Chester.

Papal Bishops removed, and Protestants placed in their rooms.

Whilest these things were done in England, the Treaty of peace at Cambray continued still; F Wherein King Philip stood for the restitution of Callice to the English, as firmly as if it had been his own interest; and without it would agree to no Peace with France; But when by Messages he understood, that his suit for marriage with Queen Elizabeth was rejected; and that the Protestant Religion was established in the Kingdom, he then left Queen Elizabeth, seeing she would not be his, to her self; and though he became not presently a Foe, yet he became presently lesse then a Friend, and forbore to do any more good offices in that business. Queen Elizabeth thus left to her self, agreed with the French King, to conclude her own peace apart; and thereupon, Delegates on both sides were appointed to meet at Cambray: For the Queen of England were Thursby Bishop of Ely, the Lord Williams, the Lord Howard of Effingham, Chamberlain to the Queen, and Doctor Wootton Dean of Canterbury and York: For the King G of France were, Charles Cardinal of Lorraine, the first Peer of France, Annas Duke of Memorancy, James Albon Lord of Saint Andrews, John Morvilliers Bishop of Orleans, and Claude Aubespine Secretary of the Privy Council. The Commissioners meeting, the chief point in difference, was the restitution of Callice; for which the English Commissioners, by the Queens appointment, offered to remit two Millions of Crowns, that by just account were due from France to England; but the Queen was not more desirous to recover Callice, then the French King was to hold it: And thereupon at last, it was concluded, that Callice should remain in possession of the French for the term of eight years; and those expired, it should be delivered to the English, upon forfeiture of five hundred thousands Crowns, for which, hostages were given : A But all this notwithstanding, though the Conditions were sealed and sworn to, and though hostages were assigned to remain in England, till one or other were performed ; yet all was frustrate, and came to nothing.

Henry King of France unfortunately slain running at Tilt.

About this time, Henry King of France married his Daughter Isabel to Philip King of Spain, and his Sister Margaret to Emmanuel Philibert Duke of Savoy ; at the solemnity of which marriages, he would needs be a Tilter himself ; and thereupon commanded the Earl of Montgomery to run against him, who unfortunately breaking his Lance upon the Kings Cuyrasse, a splinter thereof (his Beaver being somewhat open) struck him so deep in the eye, that within few dayes he ended his life : After whose death, Francis his Son at the age of sixteen years, succeeded him B in the Crown, having by the marriage of Queen Mary the Title of Scotland, and upon ground thereof laying claim to the Crown of England also, and giving the Arms of England, as properly belonging to him.

And now begins the game of Faction to be plaid, wherein the whole estate of Queen Elizabeth lies at stake, a game that will hold playing the most part of her Reign, and if not plaid well, will put her in jeopardy of losing all, seeing all about her was against her, Philip King of Spain hath a quarrel to her, for being rejected in his suit ; the King of France hath a quarrel to her in right of his wife, which is now his right ; the Queen of Scots hath a quarrel to her for detaining her Inheritance ; the Pope hath a quarrel to her, for excluding his Authority : the King of Sweden hath a quarrel to her, for slighting his Son in the way of marriage : And all these being against her, C whom hath she on her side, but only her own Subjects, Papists yesterday, and to day Protestants, who being scarce settled in their Religion, how should they be settled in their Loyalty ? And not being Loyal, where can she finde to cast Anchor for her safety ? But it is a true saying, Nullum in abest si sit prudentia ; Wisdom is a supply for all defects : And indeed, the Queen being very wise her self, and having a wise Council about her, she passed all these difficulties, though not without danger, yet with little or no hazard.

It happened (if at least it happened, and were not rather plotted of purpose) that a Reformation of Religion was pretended in Scotland ; but was indeed an incroachment upon the Princes Authority ; for at the preaching of John Knox, and other headstrong Ministers, not onely Images and Altars were cast down and burnt, the Monasteries of Saint Andrews, of Stone, of Stryveling, and of Lynlithew were overthrown ; but it was further put into the heads of the D Nobility, that it pertained to them, of their own Authority, to take away Idolatry, and by force reduce the Prince to the prescript of Laws : Whereupon there was presently a bandying of the Lords of Scotland, against the Queen Dowager, Regent of the Countrey ; and in this case each of them sought for aid ; The Queen Dowager had aid out of France, the Lords of Scotland sent for aid to the Queen of England : But this was matter for consultation ; it seemed a bad Example, for a Prince to give aid to the rebellious Subjects of another Prince. On the other side, it seemed no lesse then impiety, not to give aid to the Protestants of the same Religion ; but most of all it seemed plain madnesse, to suffer adversaries to be so neer neighbours, and let the French nestle in Scotland, who pretend Title to England : upon such considerations, it was resolved to send them aid : and thereupon an Army of six thousand Foot, E and twelve hundred Horse, was sent under the command of the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord Gray of Wilton his Lieutenant General ; Sir James Crofts, Assistant to him ; the Lord Scroop, Lord Marshal ; Sir George Howard, General of the men at Armes ; Sir Henry Percy, General of the Light-horse ; Thomas Huggens Provost Marshall ; Thomas Gower, Master of the Ordinance ; Master William Pelham, Captain of the Pyoners ; and Master Edward Randall, Serjeant Major, and divers others. These coming into Scotland, joyned with the Scottish Lords, and set down before Leith, where passed many small skirmishes, many Batteries, and sometimes Assaults : to whom, after some time, a new supply came of above two thousand Foot ; whereof were Captains, Sir Andrew Corbet, Sir Rowland Standley, Sir Thomas F Hesbith, Sir Arthur Manwaring, Sir Lawrence Smith, and others : yet with this new supply there was little more done then before ; many light skirmishes, many Batteries, and sometimes Assaults ; so long, till at last the young French King, finding these broyls of Scotland to be too furious for him to appease, he sent to the Queen of England, desiring that Commissioners might be sent to reconcile these differences : whereupon were dispatched into Scotland, Sir William Cecil, her principal Secretary, with Doctor Wotton, Dean of Canterbury ; who concluded a Peace between England and France, upon these Conditions, That neither the King of France, nor the Queen of Scotland, should thenceforth use the Arms or Titles of England or Ireland ; And that both the English and the French should depart out of Scotland ; And a general pardon should be enacted by Parliament, for all such as had been actors in those stirs. This Peace was scarce concluded, when Francis the young King of France died, leaving the Crown to his younger Brother Charles, who was guided altogether by the Queen Mother, and molested with the Civil dissensions between the Princes of Guise and Conde ; for whose reconciliation, the Queen sent Sir Henry Sidney Lord President of Wales ; and shortly after an Army, under the leading of the Lord Ambrose Dudley, Earl of Warwick ; who arriving at Newhaven, was received into the Town ; which having kept eleven moneths, he was then constrained, by reason of a Pestilence, to surrender again upon Composition, and so returned. G

- A About this time when the Parliament was upon dissolving, it was agreed upon by the House of Commons, to move the Queen to marry, that she might have Issue to succeed her; to which purpose Thomas Gargrave, Speaker of the House, with some few other chosen men, had access to the Queen, who humbly made the motion to her, as a thing which the Kingdom infinitely desired; seeing they could never hope to have a better Prince, then out of her loyns: Whereunto the Queen answered in effect thus; That she was already married; namely, To the Kingdom of England; and behold (saith she) the Pledge of the Covenant with my Husband; and therewith she held out her finger, and shewed the Ring, wherewith, at the time of her Coronation, she gave her self in Wedlock to the Kingdom: and if (saith she) I keep my self to this husband, and take no other; yet I doubt not but God will send you as good Kings as if they were born of me; forasmuch as we see by daily experience, That the Issue of the best Princes do often degenerate: And for my self, it shall be sufficient that a Marble stone declare, That a Queen having reigned such a time, lived and died a Virgin. Indeed before this time, many Matches had been offered her: First, King Philip: and when he was out of hope of matching with her himself, he then dealt with the Emperor Ferdinand his Uncle, to commend his younger Son Charles, Duke of Austria, to her for a Husband. And when this succeeded not, then John, Duke of Finland, second Son to Gustavus King of Sweden, was sent by his Father, to sollicite for his eldest Brother Ericus; who was honourably received, but the Match rejected. Then Adolphus Duke of Holst, Uncle to Frederick King of Denmark, came into England, upon a great hope of speeding; but the Queen bestowed upon him the Honour of the Garter, and a yearly Pension, but not her self. Then James Earl of Arran, was commended to her by the Protestants of Scotland; but neither the man nor the motion was accepted. Of meaner Fortunes there were some at home that pleased themselves with hope of her Marriage: First Sir William Pickering, a Gentleman of a good House, and a good Estate; but that which most commended him, was his studiousnesse of good letters, and sweet demeanour. Then Henry Earl of Arundel, exceeding rich, but now in his declining age. Then Robert Dudley, youngest Son of the Duke of Northumberland, of an excellent feature of face, and now in the flower of his age: but these might please themselves with their own conceit; but were not considerable in her apprehension: they might receive from her good Testimonies of her Princely favour; but never pledges of Nuptial love.
- B About this time the Earl of Feria (who had married the Daughter of Sir William Dormer) being denied leave of the Queen for some of his Wives friends to live out of England, grew so incensed, that he made means to Pius the fourth, then Pope, to have her excommunicate as an Heretick and Usurper: but the Pope inclining rather to save then to destroy; and knowing that gentle courses prevail more with generous mindes, then roughnesse and violence; in most loving manner wrote unto her, exhorting her to return to the Unity of the Catholick Church; and as it is said, made her great offers, if she would hearken to his counsel; particularly, That he would recal the Sentence pronounced against her Mothers Marriage; confirm the Book of Common Prayer in English; and permit to her people the use of the Sacrament in both Kindes. But Queen Elizabeth neither terrified with the Earl of Feria's practices, nor allured with the Popes great offers, according to her Motto, Semper eadem, persisted constant in her resolution, to maintain that Religion, which in her conscience she was perswaded to be most agreeable to the Word of God, and most consonant to the Primitive Church.
- C Whilst these grounds of troubles are sowing in England, France, and Scotland, it is not likely that Ireland will lie fallow; though indeed it be a Countrey that will bring forth troubles of it self, without sowing: but howsoever to make the more plentiful Harvest of troubles at this time, John O Neal (whose Father King Henry the eighth made Earl of Tyrone) to prevent the punishment of a private Outrage upon a Brother, broke into open Rebellion against the Prince: and though his attempts were maturely made frustrate by timely opposition; yet this was he that in the beginning of the Queens Raig sowed the seeds of that trouble in Ireland; which afterward took so deep root, that till the ending of her Raig it could never thoroughly be rooted out: though this man a year or two after came into England, and casting himself at the Queens feet, acknowledged his fault, and obtained pardon.
- The Treaty of Edenburgh should by promise have been confirmed by Francis the French King while he lived; but he not having done it, Queen Elizabeth requires his Dowager the Queen of Scots to confirm it: but she solicited often to it by Throgmorton the Queens Ligier in France; made always answer, She could not do it without the counsel of her Nobility in Scotland. Whereupon Queen Elizabeth suspecting that this answer was but to hold her in amazement, while some mischief was practising against her, sent Sir Thomas Randall in Scotland, to perswade the Lords there to enter into a League of mutual amity with her, and other Protestant Princess; and further, by no means to permit their Queen, now a widow, to marry again to any sovrain Prince; for which she alleadged many great reasons. In the mean while, the Queen of Scots, purposing to return into Scotland, sent before-hand D^r Oysette a French Lord to intreat Queen Elizabeth, that with her leave, she her self might passe by Sea into Scotland, and D^r Oysette might passe by land. But Queen Elizabeth openly denied both the one and the other, unless she would confirm the Treaty of Edenburgh; saying, It was no reason she should do the Queen of Scots courtesie, if the Queen of Scots would not do her right. of Scots much troubled with this answer, expostulates the matter with her Ligier Throgmorton, and much complains of the unthankfulness: but in the mean time providing shipping, she loosed from Callice; and under covert of a mist, notwithstanding that Ships were laid to intercept her, she arrived safe in Scotland; where she intreated her Subjects in so loving a manner, that she gave great contentment to the whole Kingdom; as well to the Protestant party, as the other: and then sent Letters to Queen Elizabeth, proffering all observance and readinesse to enter League with her; so she might by Authority of Parliament be declared her Successor; which was but her Right. To this Queen Elizabeth answered, That though she would no way derogate from her Right: yet she should be loth to endanger her own security, and as it were to cover her own eyes with a Grave-cloth while she was alive; but fell again to her old Admonition, requiring her to confirm the Treaty of Edenburgh: And now to shew the respect she bore her, when her Unkles the Dukes D' Aumale, D' Albeuse, and other Lords of France that had brought her home, returned through England, she gave them most bountiful and loving entertainment.

These two Queens indeed were both of great Spirits, and both very wise; but there grew such Jealousies of State between them; (the Queen of Scots doubting lest Queen Elizabeth meant to frustrate her Succession; Queen Elizabeth doubting lest the Queen of Scots meant to prevent her Succession) that it kept them more asunder in love, then they were neer in bloud, and was cause of many unkinde passages between them: in all which, though the Queen of Scots were a very neer Match to the Queen of England in the abilities of her minde; yet in the favours of Fortune she was much her inferiour.

But now for all the courtesie which Queen Elizabeth shewed to the Queen of Scots Unkles at their returning through England, yet new practises were again set on foot against her at Rome; the Duke of Guise especially labouring to have her be Excommunicate; but Pope Pius still averse from such roughnesse, meant now to try the Queen another way; and thereupon sent the Abbot Martinengi, and when he might not be admitted to enter England, then caused the Bishop of Viterbo his Nuntio in France, to deal earnestly with the Queens Ligier Throgmorton, that she (as other Princes had done) would send her Orators to the Council of Trent, which he before had called. But the Queen nothing tender in this point, made peremptory answer, That a Popish Assembly she did not acknowledge to be a General Council; nor did think the Pope to have any more Right or power to callit, then any other Bishop. This Answer not only exasperated the Pope, but so alienated also the King of Spain's minde from her, that he was never after so kinde a friend to her as he had been; and none of her Embassadors ever after had any great liking to be employed to him. And now at this time, as the Abbot Martinengi was the last Nuntio that ever was sent from the Pope into England, so Sir Edward Carne, now dying at Rome, was the last Ligier that was ever sent to the Pope from the Kings of England.

And now Queen Elizabeth knowing well that she had drawn many ill willers against her State, she endeavoured to strengthen it by all the means she could devise: She caused many great Ordinance of Brasse and Iron to be cast; She repaired Fortifications in the Borders of Scotland; She encreased the number of her Ships, so as England never had such a Navy before; She provided great store of Armour and Weapons out of Germany; she caused Musters to be held, and youth to be trained in exercises of Artillery; and to please the people (whose love is the greatest strength of all) she gave leave to have Corn and Grain transported; and called in all base Coins and Brasse Money.

It was now the Fifth year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, when divers great persons were called in question: Margaret Countesse of Lenox, Niece to King Henry the eight, by his eldest Sister, and her husband the Earl of Lenox, for having had secret conference by letters with the Queen of Scots, were delivered prisoners to Sir Richard Sackville, Master of the Rolls, and with him kept a while in custody. Also Arthur Poole and his Brother, whose great Grand-father, was George Duke of Clarence, Brother to King Edward the fourth: Antony Fortescue, who had married their Sister, and others were arraigned, for conspiring to withdraw themselves to the Duke of Guise in France; and from thence to return with an Army into Wales; to declare the Queen of Scots, Queen of England; and Arthur Poole Duke of Clarence; which particulars they confessed at the Bar, and were thereupon condemned to die; but had their lives spared, in regard they were of the bloud Royal. Also the Lady Katherine Gray, Daughter to Henry Gray Duke of Suffolk, by the eldest Daughter of Charles Brandon; having formerly been married to the Earl of Pembrooke's eldest Son; and from him soon after lawfully divorced, was some years after found to be with childe by Edward Seymour Earl of Hertford: who being at that time in France, was presently sent for; and being examined before the Archbishop of Canterbury: and affirming they were lawfully married; but not being able within a limited time to produce witnesses of their marriage; they were both committed to the Tower: where she was brought to Bed: and after by the connivence or corruption of their Keepers, being suffered sometimes to come together, she was with childe by him again: which made the Queen more angry then before; so as Sir Edward Warner Lieutenant of the Tower was put out of his place, and the Earl was fined in the Star-chamber five thousand pounds and kept in prison nine years after. Though in pleading of his Case, one John Hales argued; They were lawfull man and wife, by virtue of their own bare consent, without any Ecclesiastical Ceremony. The Lady a few years after, falling through grief into a mortal sicknesse, humbly desired the Queens Pardon, for having married without her knowledge, and commending her children to her clemency, died in the Tower.

A At this time (the King being under Age) dissensions amongst the Peers grew hot in France, of which there were two Factions; Both pretending the cause of Religion: of the One the Duke of Guise, a Papist, was Head; of the other the Prince of Conde, a Protestant: but while Delirant Reges, plebuntur Achivi: while these Princes are at variance, the people suffer for it; and chiefly as being under the weaker protection, the Protestant party: whereupon Queen Elizabeth, having well learned the Lesson: Tum tuu res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet: and fearing lest the flame of their dissension, might kindle a fire within her own Kingdom; sent over Sir Henry Sidney Lord President of Wales into France, to endeavour by all possible means their reconciliation; which when he could not effect, (and perhaps it was never meant he should effect it, but only to see what invitations would be made to the Queen for her assistance) she thereupon, at the moan of

B the afflicted Protestants, sent over an Army of six thousand Souldiers, under the Conduct of the Earl of Warwick, in assistance of the Prince of Conde, and other Protestant Lords, who delivered to him the Town of Newhaven, to hold in the King of France his name, until such time as Calice were restored: But the Prince of Conde marching to joyn with the English Forces, was by the Duke of Guise intercepted and taken prisoner; which had been a great disappointment to the English, but that the Duke of Colen joyned with him, besieged Caen in Normandy, and took it; together with Bayeux, Falaise, and Saint Lo. The French Hostages that were pledges for the payment of five hundred thousand Crowns, if Calice were not restored, were remaining still in England; who perceiving there was like to be War with France, prepared secretly to get away; but being ready to take shipping, were discovered and brought back again.

C In the mean while the Prince of Conde drawn on with a hope, to marry the Queen of Scots, and to have the chief Government in France, during the Kings Minority, concluded a peace with the King, and with the Guises; so as now, all French, as well Protestants as Papists, required to have Newhaven delivered up: But the Earl of Warwick perceiving the fickleness of the French Protestants, first to make suit to draw him into France, and now upon so slight occasion to require him to be gone, he shutteth all French, both Protestants and Papists, out of the Town, and lays hold of their Ships; the French on the other side make ready to set upon the Town, saying, They fought not now for Religion, but for their Countrey; wherefore it was meet that both Protestants and Papists should joyn their Forces, seeing they had already concluded a Peace betwixt themselves.

Newhaven delivered up to the French, with the Queens leave.

D And hereupon the Duke of Memorancy sent a Trumpeter to the Earl of Warwick, commanding him to yeeld the Town; who making answer by Sir Hugh Pawlet, That he would never yeeld it without the Queens leave: he thereupon besieged the Town, and with great violence of Battery, sought to get it by force: Which Queen Elizabeth hearing, she sent a Commission to the Earl of Warwick to yeeld it up, if upon honourable Conditions; which soon after was accordingly done, after the English had held it eleven months; and then the Earl, without any dishonour for yeelding up a Town, which the Pestilence made him no lesse unwilling then unable to hold, he returned into England: but that which was more doleful then the losse of Newhaven, he brought the Pestilence with him into England. The recovery of this Town not only made the French to triumph, but hereupon the Chancellor of France pronounced openly, That by this War, the English had lost all their Right to Calice, and were not to require it any more, seeing it was one of the Conditions, That neither of the Nations should make War upon the other; which was the Point stood upon by the King of France and his Mother, when Queen Elizabeth sent Sir Thomas Smith to demand Calice to be restored.

E At this time there were such crosse designs amongst the Princes of Christendom, that a very good Polititian could hardly understand their aims. The Duke of Guise being slain in the Civil War, the Queen of Scots Dowry was not paid her in France, and the Scots were put off from being the Kings Guard: This exceedingly displeased the Queen of Scots: but then to please her again, and for fear lest hereupon she should apply her self to the friendship of the English, her Uncle the Cardinal of Lorrain solicites her afresh, to marry Charles Duke of Austria; offering her for her Dowry the County of Tyrol. The Queen of Scots, to make use of her Unkles fear, and perhaps to bring Queen Elizabeth into an opinion of depending upon her, acquaints her with this motion, and therein requires her advise. Queen Elizabeth not willing she should marry with any forain Prince, persuades her to take a Husband out of England, and particularly commended to her the Lord Robert Dudley (whose wife a little before had with a fall broke her neck:) promising withal, that if she would marry him, she should then by Authority of Parliament be declared her successor, in case she died without issue. But when her Unkles and the Queen-mother were informed of this motion, they so much disdained the marriage with Dudley, that so she would refuse that Match, and persevere in the Friendship of the French, they offered to pay her the Dowry money, that was behinde, and to restore the Scots to all their former liberties in France. And as for the King of Spain, he had indeed a Ligier Embassadour here in England; but rather by way of complement, and to watch advantages, then for any sincere love; which he began now to withdraw from the English, as suspecting them to intend a Trade to the West Indies.

The Queen of Scots requires Queen Elizabeths advise about her marriage.

Who persuades her to marry the Lord Robert Dudley.

But this motion was scorned by her French friends.

And now the French Protestants may see what they brought upon themselves, by leaving the English at Newhaven, and by trusting to their Countrey-men the French Papists, for their peace was but a snare, and the Marriage of Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Navarre, with Margaret of Valois, the French Kings Sister, was but a bait to entrap them; for upon the confidence of this Marriage, being drawn together into Paris, they were the readier for the slaughter; and a few days after the Marriage, Francis,

At the marriage of the Prince of Navarre, was the great massacre of the Protestants in France.

Marriage, which were all spent in Feasts and Masks, to make them the more secure, upon a Watch-word given, the bloody Faction fell upon the Protestants, and neither spared age, nor sex, nor condition, but without mercy, and sense of humanity, slaughtered as many as they could meet with, to the number of many thousands.

Personages die.

It was now the sixth year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, a year fatal for the death of many great Personages: First dyed William Lord Gray of Wilton, Governour of Berwick, a man famous for his great Services in Warre: then William Lord Paget, a man of as great Services in Peace; who by his great deservings had wrought his advancement to sundry dignities, and honourable places: and though zealous in the Roman Religion, yet held by Queen Elizabeth in great estimation to his dying day: Then Henry Manners Earl of Rutland, descended by his mother from King Edward the fourth: And lastly, Francis the Dutchesse of Suffolk, Daughter to Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, and mother to Queen Jane.

A Peace made with the King of France, and upon what conditions.

And now Queen Elizabeth finding how fickle the French Protestants had carryed themselves towards her, intended to make a Peace; and to that end sent Sir Thomas Smith into France, joyning Throgmorton in Commission with him; and in conclusion a Peace was agreed on; whereof, amongst other Articles, this was one, That the Hostages in England should be freed, upon the payment of six hundred thousand Crowns: and this Peace was ratified by the Oath both of the Queen of England, and the King of France.

About this time the English Merchants were hardly used both in Spain, and in the Netherlands, upon pretence of Civil differences, but indeed out of hatred to the Protestant Religion: whereupon the English removed the seat of their Trading to Embden in Friesland: but Gusman the Spanish Ligier, newly come into England, finding the great damages that the Netherlands sustained by these differences, endeavoured by all means to compose them; and thereupon Viscount Montague, Nicholas Wootton, and Walter Haddon, Master of the Requests, were sent to Bruges in Flanders; who after many interruptions, brought the matter at last to some indifferent agreement.

It was now the seventh year of Queen Elizabeth, when making a Progress, she went to see Cambridge; where after she had viewed the Colledges, and been entertained with Comedies, and Scholasticall Disputations, she made her self a Latine Oration, to the great encouragement of the Scholars, and then returned. Presently after her return, she made the Lord Robert Dudley Master of her Horse, first Baron of Denbigh (giving him Denbigh and all the Lands belonging to it) and then Earl of Leicester, to him, and the Heirs males of his body lawfully begotten: which Honour was conferred upon him with the greatest State and Solemnity that ever was known. And now Leicester, to endear himself to the Queen of Scots, accused Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord Keeper for being privy to the Libell of Hales, who affirmed the right of the Crown to belong to the Family of Suffolk, in case the Queen should die without Issue; and thereupon was Bacon cast into prison; till afterward, upon his purgation, and the mediation of Sir William Cecil, he was set at liberty, and restored to his place.

The Queen of Scots impatient of delay, gets the Lord Darley to come to Scotland.

And now for a while we must cast our eyes upon Scotland, for that was now the Stage where all great businesses of State were acted: Mathew Steward, Earl of Lenox, who had married Margaret Douglas, King Henry the eighth's Niece by his elder Sister, had been kept as an Exile in England now twenty years; him the Queen of Scots invites to come into Scotland, under pretence of restoring to him his ancient Patrimony; but indeed to confer with him about a marriage with his Son the Lord Darley, for being reputed Heir to the Crown of England, next after her self; she thought by matching with his Son, to strengthen her own title, and to prevent the hope of any other. Queen Elizabeth, upon suit made by his wife, gave the Earl leave to go; but soon after, suspecting what the Queen of Scots intent was in sending for him, she, to hinder the proceeding, sent Sir Thomas Randolph to her, to let her know, That if she proceeded in this Match, she would exceedingly wrong her self; for that it was a Match so much disliked by all the English, that she was fain to prorogue the Parliament, lest upon dislike thereof, there should something be enacted against her Right of Succession: But if she would marry the Earl of Leicester, she should then by Parliament be declared her next Heir. Hereupon in the moneth of November, the Earl of Bedford and Sir Thomas Randolph for Queen Elizabeth; the Earl of Murray and Lidington for the Queen of Scots at Berwick, entered into a Treaty concerning the marriage with the Earl of Leicester. The English Commissioners urged the great benefits that by this Match would accrue both to the Queen of Scots her self, and to the whole Kingdome of Scotland: The Scottish on the other side, urged the great disparagement it would be to the Queen of Scots, if refusing the offers made her of divers great Princes, she should match her self with so mean a person as the Earl of Leicester. This matter held long debate, partly for that the English Commissioners were so appointed by Queen Elizabeth; and partly for that the Scottish Commissioners had a good mind to hinder her from marrying at all; and perhaps not the least, for that the Earl of Leicester, being verily perswaded he should at last obtain Queen Elizabeth her self, by secret Letters warned the Earl of Bedford not to urge the marriage with the Queen of Scots too far; and was thought for this cause to favour Darley under hand. The matter being in this manner protracted for two whole years together, the Queen of Scots impatient of longer delay, and being resolved in her minde what she would do, used means that the Lord Darley got leave of Queen Elizabeth to go into Scotland for three moneths only, under colour to be put in possession of his Fathers Lands, (though it be strange, the Queen upon any terms would let him go, if she really

A really intended to hinder the marriage: but such was the destiny, if there were not a plot in it:) and so in February he came to Edenburgh; who being a young man, of not above nineteen years of age, of a comely countenance, and most Princely presence, the Queen of Scots as soon as she saw him, fell in love with him, yet in modesty dissembling it for the present; she thought to get a Dispensation from Rome, because of their nearness in Consanguinity. And now, her inclination being grown so apparent, that there was no concealing it, she sent Lydington to Queen Elizabeth, desiring her consent. But she, through the suggestions of the Earl of Murray, being induced to believe that the Queen of Scots intention was, by this Marriage, to get the Crown of England, and to bring in Popery, entred into consultation with her Privy Councell, what was fit to be done to hinder the Marriage; who all concluded, that these were the best wayes: First, To have a Company of Souldiers levyed for terrour sake, about the Borders towards Scotland; then to commit to prison the Countesse of Lenox, the Lord Darlies Mother; and to recall from Scotland the Earl of Lenox and his Son Darley, upon pain of the losse of all their goods in England: then that the Scots who were known to be averse from the marriage, should be relieved and assisted: and lastly, That Katherine Gray, with the Earl of Hertford, should be received into some grace; about whom only (it was thought) the Queen of Scots was most solicitous, as being her Rivall to the English Crown. Hereupon Sir Nicholas Throgmorton was sent to the Queen of Scots, to counsell her in the Queens name, not to proceed in this Marriage; and to shew her the many inconveniencies that would accrew unto her by it. But she returned answer, That the matter was too far passed to be recalled; and that Queen Elizabeth had no cause to be displeased with it; seeing herein she followed her advise, Not to match with a stranger, but with an English man born. Queen Elizabeth being informed of her answer, calleth home the Earl of Lenox, and the Lord Darley his Son, commanding them upon their Allegiance to return: The Father modestly by Letters excuseth himself; the Son humbly intreateth her not to be a hinderance to his preferment; which he vowes to imploy in her Majesties service to the uttermost of his power. And now, to make him the fitter match for her, the Queen of Scots honoured him first with Knighthood; then with the Dignities of the Lord Armanack, Earl of Rosse, and Duke of Rothsay; which Dukedome by Birth pertaineth to the eldest Sons of the Kings of Scotland. After this, when he had not been above five moneths in Scotland, she married him; and with the consent of most of the Peers, declared him King. At this, the Earl of Murray, and other whom he drew to his party, extremely fretted, and fell to moving of turbulent questions, Whether it were lawfull to admit a Papist King? Whether the Queen of Scots might choose a Husband at her own pleasure? and whether the Peers of the Kingdome might not out of their own Authority, impose one upon her? But howsoever, they raised Arms, and had disturbed the Nuptials, but that the Queen levyed an Army to encounter them; with which she pursued them so closely, that they were faine to flie into England for protection; where Queen Elizabeth made no scruple to receive them, seeing the Queen of Scots had received Turely, Standon, and Walsh, that were fled out of England; but the Earl of Murray especially, who had alwayes been found addicted to the English. Queen Elizabeth perhaps was not much troubled at this Marriage; partly as knowing the milde disposition of the Lord Darley, and how little access of strength it brought to the Queen of Scots; but most of all, as plainly seeing there would troubles arise in Scotland upon it; and the troubles of Scotland would be the quietness of England; which as a good Mother of her Countrey, was the mark she aimed at: yet she made a shew of being offended with it; but rather to conceal her aim, then that she was offended with it indeed.

At first sight she falls in love with him.

And then sends to Queen Elizabeth for her consent to marry him.

Queen Elizabeth opposeth it.

The Queen of Scots makes the Lord Darley Duke of Rothsay, and marries him.

The Earl of Murray raiseth an Army against her.

But being encountered, he flies into England, whom Queen Elizabeth receives.

Queen Elizabeth is moved again to marry Charles the Emperours brother.

Cecile sister of the King of Sweden comes into England of purpose to see the Queen.

Also Mac Carthy a great Potentate of Ireland.

Anno Reg. 8. The Governours of Ireland what titles they had.

At this time the Emperour Maximilian sent to Queen Elizabeth his Ambassadour, Adam Smircote, renewing the former suit for his Brother Charles of Austria; for which Marriage the Earl of Suffex was very earnest; the Earl of Leicester as much against it; so as it grew to a quarrel between them, and the Court was divided into factions about it: but the Queen who never liked the dissensions of her Peers (though it be a rule with some; Divide, and Reign) made them friends, at least in countenance.

F We may now leave Scotland a while, and see the Honour done at this time to Queen Elizabeth, not much inferiour to the Honour done to Solomon by the Queen of Sbeba; for now Cecile, the Sister of Erick King of Sweden, and Wife of Christopher Marquesse of Baden, being great with childe, came from the farthest part of the North (a long Journey) thorow Germany, of purpose to see her, for the great fame she had heard of her Wisdome: At her being here, she was delivered of a childe, to whom, in requitall of her kindenesse, Queen Elizabeth was God-mother, and named him Edwardus Fortunatus; giving to her and her Husband, besides Royall entertainment, a yearly Pension. At this time also, for the great Fame of her wisdom, Donald mac Carti More, a great Potentate of Ireland, came and delivered up into her hands all his most ample Territories; and then receiving them again from her, to hold them to him and his Heirs males lawfully begotten; and for want of such Issue, to remain to the Crown of England. The Queen in requitall invested him with the honour of Earl of Glenkarne, and Baron of Valence; and besides many presents given him, paid the charges of his Journey.

G It was now the eighth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when Sir Nicholas Arnold, a Knight of Glocester-shire, governing Ireland under the title of a Justice, was called home, and Sir Henry Sidney placed in his room. And here by the way it is to be noted, That the Governours of Ireland, after it came under the English, were at first called Justices of Ireland; afterwards, Lieutenants; and their Vice-gerents were called Deputies. Afterwards at the Princes pleasure, sometimes Deputies

est honour, yet in power is in a manner but the same. Sir Henry Sidney at his coming into Ireland, found the Province of Munster in much disorder, by reason of strife between Gerald Earl of Desmond, and Thomas Earl of Ormond: whereupon the Queen sending for the Earl of Desmond into England, ordained a new Government in that Province, appointed a President to administer Justice, together with an Assistant on the Bench; two Lawyers and a Notary: and the first President she made in this place, was Sir William Sentleger.

And now Queen Elizabeth in a Progress went to Oxford; where she took pleasure in viewing the Colledges, in hearing Orationes, in seeing of Comedies, till the Comedy of Palemon and Arcet turned to a Tragedy, for by the fall of a wall, through the multitude of people that B pressed in to see it, three men were slain. At her coming away, she made an Oration in Latine to the Scholars, a sufficient recompence for all the Orationes they had made to her. And this year, was a call of seven new Serjeants at Law, who kept their Feast at Grays Inne in Holborn.

Upon the Queens return from Oxford, the Parliament began, where they presently fell upon the matter of succession, and moving the Queen to marry; in which points some went so far, that they spared not to accuse the Queen, as one carelesse of Posterity; to defame Cecil with libels and reproches, as if he were her Counsellour in this matter; but above all, to curse Doctor Huic her Physitian, who was thought to dissuade her from Marriage, by reason of I know not what womanish insufficiency. At last in the Upper House it was agreed, That Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord C Keeper, their Orator, should in all their names beseech the Queen to marry; and withall, to declare a successour in the Crown, if she should happen to die without issue; for which he gave many reasons, declaring what mischiefs were likely to befall the Kingdom, if she should die before a Successor were designed. But in the Lower House there were some, amongst whom were Bell and Mounson, (two Lawyers of great account) Dutton, Sir Paul Wentworth, and other, who grew to far higher terms, disparaging the Queens Authority, and saying, That Princes were bound to design a Successor; and that in not doing it, the Queen should shew herself no better then a parricide of her Countrey. The Queen was contented to bear with words spoken in Parliament; which spoken out of Parliament, she would never have endured: but not willing to expostulate the matter with the whole number, she commanded that thirty of the Higher House, and as many of the Lower, should appear before her; to whom she delivered her minde to this effect; That she knew what danger hangeth over a Princes head; when a Succes- D sor is once declared; she knew that even children themselves, out of a hastie desire of bearing rule, had taken up Arms against their own Fathers; and how could better conditions be expected from kindred? She had by reading observed, That Successors in a collateral Line, have seldom been declared; and that Lewis of Orleans, and Francis of Angoulême were never declared Successors, and yet obtained the Crown without any noise. Lastly, she said, Though I have been content to let you debate the matter of Succession, yet I advise you to beware, that you be not injurious to your Princes patience. With these and the like reasons she gave so good satisfaction, that they never after troubled her with making any more such motion. And though she consented not in plain terms to declare a Successor, yet soon after she gave some intimation of it; for one E Thornton, a Reader of the Civil Law in London, who in his Lectures, called the Queen of Scots Right in question, was clapped up in prison for his labour.

In the beginning of her ninth year, Charles the ninth King of France, sent his Ambassadour Ramboulet into England to the Queen, with the Robes and Ornaments of the Order of Saint Michael, to bestow upon which two of her Nobility she pleased; and she making choice of the Duke of Norfolk, and the Earl of Leicester, they were by Ramboulet invested with them; an Honour that had never been conferred upon any English but only King Henry the eighth, King Edward the sixth, and Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, though afterward prostituted almost to any, without difference.

And now to return to the affairs of Scotland: The nineteenth of June last past, the Queen of F Scots, in a happy hour, was at Edinburgh Castle delivered of a Son, that was afterward James the sixth of Scotland; and the first Monarch of Great Britain; whereof she presently sent word to Queen Elizabeth by James Melvyn; who thereupon sent Sir Henry Killegrew to congratulate her safe deliverance, and her young Son, with all demonstration of love and amity. But now the love of the Queen of Scots to her Husband the Lord Darley, was not so hot at first, but it was now grown to be as cold; and she had not heaped honours on him so fast before, but now as fast she taketh them off: for where before in all publick Acts, she had used to place her Husbands name first, now she caused it to be placed last, and in the coining of money began to leave it quite out.

This unkindness between them was fomented by one David Rixie an Italian, whom the Queen G had taken into her service, first, as a Musician, and then taking a liking to him, made him her Secretary for the French Tongue; by means whereof he had oftentimes secret conference with her, when the King her Husband might not be admitted. This indignity the King himself, being given to his pleasures of Hunting and Hawking, resented not so much, as some Lords that were his friends, who told him plainly, that it stood not with his Honour to suffer this fellow to live. By whose instigation the King drawn to plot his death; one day, taking with him the Earl of Renven, and other, he rushed into the Queens Chamber at her Supper time, where finding David

- A David Rixie at a Cupboord, tasting some meat that had been taken from the Table, he seized upon him, dragged him forth into an outer Chamber, and there murdered him, the Queen at that time being great with childe, and like by that affright to have miscarried: But the Fact being done, the King came in to her again, assuring her there was no hurt at all intended to her Person. The man that had animated the King to do this fact, was especially the Earl of Murray, of whom it is necessary to say something, because his part will be the greatest of all the Scottish actions of this time. He was the base son of King James the fifth, and so the base Brother of the Queen; made at first Prior of Saint Andrews. But not liking that Religious Title, he affected rather some Temporal Honour; which when the Queen, being then in France, denied him, then in an angry mood he returned into Scotland, where, by the advice of Knox, whom he held for a great Patriarch, he brought the matter so to passe, that in an Assembly of the States, the Religion was altered, and the French were banished out of Scotland. Yet afterward, as soon as the Queen was a Widow, he posted into France, and so insinuated with her; that she created him Earl of Murray, and promoted him to an Honourable Marriage. Being thus exalted, he returned into Scotland; where, for the growth of his ambitious designs, he sowed seeds of Sedition, affirming often, what a misery it was to be under the command of a woman; and that Royalty was not to be tyed to any Stock or Kindred, but to Vertue only, whether the parties were legitimate or no; by this course making way to the Kingdom for himself. To this end, he used all the means he could to keep the Queen from marrying again; which when he could not effect, he then sought ways how to make discord between her and her Husband; for which cause he had caused the King to murder
- C Rixie. Of the foulness of which Fact, when the King after a while grew sensible, he meant to be revenged of Murray, who had counselled him to do it: which Murray understanding, prevented it with causing the like to be done to him, as will presently be seen. For the Queen having been delivered of a Son, and the day appointed for the Christning being come; where the God-fathers were Charles King of France, and Philibert Duke of Savoy; Queen Elizabeth being requested to be God-mother, sent thither the Earl of Bedford as her Deputy, and a Font of Massie Gold for a present in value 1043 l. but gave him expresse Command, That he should not honour Darby with the Title of King. But before a month or two, after the Christning were passed, the King in a stormy and tempestuous night, was strangled in his Bed, and then cast forth into the Garden, and the house immediately blown up with Gun-powder.
- D The rumour of this murder being spread abroad, the common Fame laid it upon Murray and Morton, and their confederates; Murray and Morton upon the Queen: But we must not here give ear to that which Buchanan writes, who to curry favour with the Earl Murray, says most impudent scandals upon the Queen; whereof, before his death, he repented himself extremely. The King thus murdered, and the Queen left alone to her self; she is counselled to marry with some, that might be able to assist her against all her opposites: James Hepburn Earl of Bothwell being then greatly in her favour, and of great eminency for his valour: And though he were the man that had acted the murder, yet is he by Murray and his confederates, commended to the Queen; to which motion, as being destitute of friends, and not knowing whom to trust she at last consents, but upon these conditions, That above all things, respect might be had to her young Son; and that Bothwell might be legally quitted, both from the bond of his former marriage, and also of the Kings murder. Hereupon a course is plotted, by which, Bothwell is called to the Bar; and Morton being his Advocate, by the sentence of the Judges he is clearly acquitted. Upon this he is created Duke of Orkney, and by consent of many of the Nobility, is married to the Queen; which bred a suspicion in many, that the Queen was conscious of the murder, which was the thing that by the marriage they intended: And the suspicion once raised, they seek by all means to increase, that they may have the better colour against her: and so, the very same man who had absolved Bothwell, and consented to the marriage, now takes Arms against her, as a Delinquent in both; force him to flee, and then seize upon the Queen, whom, clad in a very homely garment, they thrust into prison in Loch-lewyn, under the custody of Murray's mother, who had been the Harlot of King James the fifth; but boasting her self to have been his lawful Wife, and her Son, his lawful Issue. Queen Elizabeth having at length notice hereof, sent Sir Nicholas Throgmorton into Scotland, to expostulate with the Confederates, touching this insolent usage of the Queen; and to consult, by what means she might be restored to her liberty. But Throgmorton coming into Scotland, found the Confederates in more insolent terms than had been reported; being divided in opinion, what to do with the Queen, some would have her banished perpetually, into England or France; some would have her questioned before the Judges, committed to perpetual custody: and her Son proclaimed King: others, more inhumane, would have her at once deprived of Princely Authority, of life and all; and this, Knox and some other Ministers thundred out of the Pulpits. Throgmorton on the other side, alledged many passages out of the holy Scriptures, touching Obedience to the higher Powers; maintaining, That the Queen was subject to no Tribunal, but that in Heaven; That no Judge upon Earth might call her in question; That there was no Office nor Jurisdiction in Scotland, which was not derived from her Authority, and revokeable at her pleasure. They again opposed the peculiar Right of the Kingdom of Scotland; and that in extraordinary cases, they were to proceed besides order: taking up Buchannans Arguments; who in those days, by instigation of Murray, wrote that damned Dialogue, De Jure Regni apud Scotos; wherein, against the verity of the Scottish History, he indeavours to prove, That the people have power, both to create, and to depose their King. After all their debating, all that Throgmorton could get of them, was a Writing without any subscription, wherein they protested, A They had shut up the Queen for no other intent, but to keep her apart from Bothwell, whom she loved so desperately, that to enjoy him, she regarded not all their ruines; willing him to rest satisfied with this Answer, till such time as the rest of the Peers met together. And notwithstanding all he could say, they shut up the Queen daily, in more straight custody, though with tears she besought them to deal more mildly with her, and to let her but once have a sight of her Son: which would not be granted her. At last when fair persuasions would not serve to make her freely give over the Kingdom, they threatened to question her openly for incontinent living, for the Kings murder, and for Tyranny, so as through fear of death, they compelled her, unheard, to set her hand to three Instruments; In the first whereof, she gave over her Kingdom to her young Son, at that time scarce thirteen Months old: In the second, she constituted Murray B Viceroy during the minority of her Son: In the third, in case he refused the charge, these Governours were nominated; James Duke of Chastellau Herald, Giles Spike Earl of Argyle, Matthew Earl of Lenox, John Earl of Atholl, James Earl of Morton, Alexander Earl of Glencarn, and John Earl of Mar. And presently she signified to Queen Elizabeth by Throgmorton, that she had made these grants by compulsion through the counsel of Throgmorton, telling her that a grant extorted from one in Prison (which is a just fear) is actually void and of no effect.

Five days after the Queen had made this Resignation, James the sixth, the Queens Son, was Anointed and Crown'd King, John Knox preaching at the same time; but a Protestation was then put in by the Hamiltons, that all this ought to be no prejudice to the Duke of Chastellau Herald in his right of succession against the Family of Lenox; but Queen Elizabeth had forbidden Throgmorton to be at the Action, that she might not seem by the presence of her Ambassador, to approve their proceeding in displacing of the Queen. C

Fifteen days after this transaction, Murray himself returned out of France into Scotland, and within three days went to the Queen with some other of the confederates, who charged her with many crimes, and wished her if she tendered her Life and Honor, to observe these prescriptions: Not to disturb the peace of the Kingdom, nor desire to be at Liberty, not to stir up the Queen of England, or the King of France to molest Scotland with any War, not to think any more of Bothwells love, or meditate revenge upon Bothwells adversaries.

Murray being now proclaimed Regent of Scotland, he bindeth himself under his hand and Seal to do nothing which shall concern War or Peace, the Kings Person or his marriage, or the Liberty D of the Queen, without the consent of the confederates; and then gives Throgmorton warning by Lyddinton, not to make any further intercession for the Queens Liberty, for that he and the rest had rather run any hazard then to suffer it. Soon after he puts to death John Hepburn, Daglish, and others that were Bothwells servants, for having a hand in the murder of the King: But they (which he little expected) when they were at the Gallows, ready to die, protested before God and his holy Angels, that Bothwell had told them, that Morton and Murray were the first authors of the murder. They freed the Queen from all suspicion; like as Bothwell himself being Prisoner in Denmark, both living and dying, often protested with deep asseverations, that the Queen was innocent. And fourteen years after, Morton going to execution, confessed that Bothwell dealt with him to consent to the murder of the King, which, when he refused utterly unlesse the Queen under her hand writing would allow of it; Bothwell made answer, that could not be, but the fact E must be done without her knowledge.

A little before this time, upon one and the same day, died two of the Privy Councel, Sir John Mason Treasurer of the Queens Chamber, a grave and learned man, but a great Usurper and Encroacher upon Ecclesiastical Livings; and Sir Richard Sackville Vice-Treasurer of the Exchequer, a man both prudent and provident, and allied to the Queen by her Mother Anne Bolen. In his room succeeded Walter Mildmay, a man of wisdom and integrity; In Masons Office came Sir Francis Knowls, who married Katherine Carie, the Daughter of Mary Bolen, the Queens Mothers Sister.

It was now the year 1567. and the tenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when the Earl of F Stolberg came into England from the Emperour Maximilian, to treat of the marriage of the Queen with the Archduke Charles, upon which very occasion the Queen a little before had sent the Earl of Sussex to the Emperour, with the Order of the Garter: But in the Treaty of marriage there fell out so many difficulties about Religion, maintenance of the Duke, about the Royal Title, and concerning succession, that after it had been treated of seven whole years together, it came at last to nothing, and the Duke not long after married Mary Daughter to Albert the fifth Duke of Bavaria; yet both he and the Emperour continued ever after a good correspondence with the Queen.

About this time, there came from John Basil Emperour of Russia and Muscovia, Stephen Twerdico, and Theodore Pogorella, with a present of rich Furs of Otter, Miniver, and the like, tendering G all service and obsequiousness to the Queen and the English. The Merchants by vertue of a Grant from Queen Mary, had combined themselves into a Society, which they called the Muscovia Company; and having large Priviledges granted them from the Emperour, went thither with a Navy yearly, making a very gainful Voyage; but then it proved most gainful when for the Queens sake they obtained at the Emperours hands, in the year 1569. That none but the English of that Company, should Traffique in the North-parts of Russia. With these Russian Embassadors there returned into England, Anthony Jenkinson, who in his Travels had made curious Obser-

We have seen before the first Act of the Queen of Scots Tragedy: Now comes in the second, having been eleven Moneths kept a prisoner; at last, by the help of George Douglas, to whose Brother she was committed, she made escape from Loch-levyn, to Hamiltons Castle; where upon the testimonies of Robert Melvyn, and others, in a meeting of a great part of the Nobility, there was drawn a sentence declaratory, That the Grant extorted from the Queen in prison, (which is Iustus metus) was actually void from the beginning. Upon which Declaration, great multitudes flocked to her, so as within a day or two she had gotten an Army of at least fix thousand; but then they joynd battell with Murray, being but raw and unexpert Soldiers, they were soon defeated. In this case, the Queen sought to save her self by flight, journeying in one day threescore miles, and coming at night to the house of Maxwell Lord Heris, from thence she sent John Beton to Queen Elizabeth with a Diamond Ring, which she had formerly received from her, as a Pledge of mutual amity; intimating, that she would come into England, and implore her aid, if her Subjects offered to prosecute her any further. Queen Elizabeth returned answer, that she should expect from her in abundant manner, all loving and friendly offices. But before the Messenger was returned, she, contrary to the advise of her friends, entred into a small Bark, and with the Lords, Heris, and Flemming, and a few others, landed at Wickinton in Cumberland, neer the mouth of the River of Derwent, the seventeenth day of May; and the same wrote Letters to the Queen in French with her own hand, the effect whereof was, That having made an escape from the hands of her insolent and rebellious Subjects, she was now come into England, upon certain hope of her approved clemency; and therefore humbly desiring, she might forthwith be conducted to her presence. Queen Elizabeth sending Letters by Sir Francis Knolles, comforted her, and promised her aid and defence, according to the equity of her cause; but denied her access, for that she was held guilty of many crimes, giving command to have her brought to Carlisle, as a place of better safety. The Queen of Scots receiving this answer, and finding access to the Queen denied her, maketh request again by Letter, that she might have leave both to unfold the injuries she had received, and to answer the crimes objected, in her own presence; humbly intreating her, that either she might be admitted to have conference and assistance, or else have free leave to depart out of England, to gain supply elsewhere, and not be held a prisoner in the Castle at Carlisle; for as much as she came voluntarily into England, relying upon her love so often professed. Upon these Letters, Queen Elizabeth exceedingly commiserated her case, and could have found in her heart to admit her to her presence, but that her Counsellours conceived it to be matter for consultation, what to do in this case. To detain her in England, had many mischiefs attending on it; to send her into France, as many; to send her back into Scotland, many more; so as in conclusion, the most were of opinion, to have her detained, as one taken by right of War, and not to be dismissed, till she had made satisfaction for assuming the Title of England, and for the death of Dearly her Husband, who was born one of the Queens Subjects. In this diversity of opinions, Queen Elizabeth out of her own judgement, sent word by Middelmore, to the Regent of Scotland, that he should come himself in person, or else depute some fit persons to answer the complaints of the Queen of Scots against him and his confederates, and render sufficient reasons wherefore they had deprived her, otherwise she would forthwith dismiss her, and with all the forces she could, settle her in her Kingdom. To this Summons Murray obeys, and comes to York, the place appointed for this Treaty, accompanied with seven more of his intimate friends, who stood Delegates for the Infant King, namely, James Earl of Morton, Adam Bishop of Orkneys, Robert of Dunferm, Patrick Lord of Lyndsey, James Mac-gilly, and Henry Badinary; and with these, Lydington the Secretary, and George Buchanan. And the very same day came thither Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Ratcliff Earl of Sussex, and Sir Ralph

Saclar a Privy Counsellour, appointed Commissioners for Queen Elizabeth. For the Queen of Scots, (who took it hainously, that Queen Elizabeth would not hear the cause her self, but refer her to Subjects, being an absolute Prince, and not tyed to their proceeding;) there appeared John Lesley Bishop of Ross, William Lord Levingston, Robert Lord Boyde, Cawen of Kilwinin, John Gourdon, and James Cockburn. Being met, Lydington, turning himself to the Scots in a wondrous liberty of Speech, gave them this advice, Miturely to consider, what prejudice they should draw upon themselves, by accusing the Queen of Scots, and calling her Reputation in question publicly before the English professed enemies of the Scottish Nation. Likewise, what account they shall be able to give hereof to the King, when he shall grow to riper years, and shall see what an injury this was to the Kingdom, his Mother, and his own Person. Wherefore (said he) it seemeth requisite to forbear this businesse altogether, unlesse the Queen of England will enter into a mutual league of Offence and Defence, against all those, which under this pretence, shall go about to molest us. Upon this Speech of his, The Delegates of the Queen of Scots made Protestation, That although it pleased the Queen of Scots to have the cause between her and her disloyal Subjects, debated before the English, yet she being a free Prince, and obnoxious to no earthly Prince whatsoever, did not thereby yeeld her self subject to the Jurisdiction and command of any person. On the contrary, the English protested, That they did in no wise admit that Protestation, in prejudice to the right which the Kings of England have anciently challenged as superiour Lords of the Kingdom of A Scotland. The day after, the Queen of Scots Delegates set forth at large the injurious dealing of Morton, Murray, Marre, Glencarn, Humes, and others, against the Queen; and how they had compelled her, for fear of death, to resign her Crown; which therefore (they said) was of no force. Murray and his confederates make answer, That they had done nothing, but by consent of the Peers in Parliament; and that in prosecuting of Bathwell the author of the Kings murder, whom the Queen protected; and as for her resignation; that it was voluntarily and freely done. All this the Queen of Scots Delegates answered and confuted, affirming in particular, That where there are one hundred Earls, Bishops and Barons, (more or lesse) that have voices in the Parliament of Scotland, there were not in that tumultuous assembly they speak of, above four Earls, one Bishop, an Abbot or two, and six Barons; wherefore their earnest request was, that the Queen of England would be sensible of these indignities offered her; and take some course for a speedy redresse. After this, some new Commissioners from Queen Elizabeth were added to the former, to some of whom, the Queen of Scots took exception; unlesse the French and Spanish Embassadours might be taken in, and her self admitted into the presence of the Queen and them, publicly to defend her own innocency; and that Murray might be detained and cited, whom she affirmed, she was able to prove to have been the chief Plotter of the murder of her Husband Darley. This was held to be a just demand by the Duke of Norfolk, the Earls of Arundell, Suffex, Leicester, and the Lord Clinton. But Queen Elizabeth waxing somewhat angry, openly said, that the Queen of Scots should never want an Advocate as long as Norfolk lived: It was seen here, which is said, that the heart of the King is inscrutable; for how Queen Elizabeth stood affected in this case of the Queen of Scots, no man could well discern; she detested the insolencie of her Subjects in deposing her, and yet gave no assistance to restore her. After long agitation of this business, and nothing concluded, Murray a little before his return into Scotland, slyly propounded the marriage of the Queen of Scots to the Duke of Norfolk; which he with a modest answer rejected as a thing full of danger. But withall, Murray the more to alienate Queen Elizabeths minde from the Queen of Scots, gave out, that she had passed away to the Duke of Anodyn her Right to the Crown of England, and that the transaction was confirm'd at Rome; he shewed Letters also which the Queen of Scots had written to some friends whom she trusted; wherein she accused the Queen for not dealing with her according to promise, and boasting of succours she expected from some others. This last clause something troubled Queen Elizabeth, neither could she conjecture from whence any such succour should come; seeing both France with the Civil Wars, and the King of Spain in the Low-countries had enough to do at home. But at last it brake out, that one Robert Ridolph a Florentine under the habit of a Merchant in London, was suborned by Pope Pius the fifth, to make a secret commotion of the Papists in England against the Queen, which he performed indeed with a deal of secrecy and much cunning; whereupon the Queen of Scots was removed from Bolton (a Castle of the Lord Scroops) where all the neighbouring people were Papists; to Tutbury more toward the heart of the Countrey, under the custody of George Earl of Shrewsbury.

The Queen of Scots requires to have the French and Spanish Embassadours be added to the Commissioners.

The Protestants persecuted in France by the Guisets, fly into England.

How the War in the Low-countries first began.

About this time the Guisets in France, and the Duke D'Alva in the Low-countries, began to endeavour the utter extirpation of the Protestant Religion. In France the Ministers of the Gospel are commanded within a limited time to depart the Kingdom; when Queen Elizabeth forgetting the sicklenesse of the Protestants at Newhaven, once again takes upon her their protection; supplies them with two hundred thousand Crowns in money, besides Munition in abundance, and with all humanity receives the French that fled into England; the rather, for that they made solemn protestation they took not up Arms against their Prince; but only stood upon their own defence. In the Low-countries likewise, the Duke D'Alva breathing nothing but slaughter and blood, made the Dutch come flocking into England as into a Sanctuary, where with all courtesy they were received.

And here it will be fit to shew how the War in the Low-countries began first, which was thus: F At which time the King of Spain brought in the Spanish Inquisition; a small number of the meaner sort of people, in tumultuous manner, cast the Images out of Churches and brake them in pieces: and although that tumult was soon quieted, yet the King of Spain taking advantage at the rashnesse of a few, to charge the whole Nation with Rebellion, sent amongst them Ferdinando Alvarez, Duke D'Alva, a bloudy and fierce man, who (contrary to the Ordinances and customs of the Countrey) took away all authority from the ordinary Courts of Justice; erected new Consistories; condemned and put to death the Peers, without trial by their lawfull Judges; placed Garrisons of Spaniards throughout all their Cities and Villages, and by force exacted the twentieth part of the Fruits of the Earth, and the tenth of moveables upon every Alienation. At that time a mighty masse of money borrowed from the Genowayes, and other Italian Merchants was sent out of Spain into the Low-countries, there to be employed to interest, which being brought by shipping, was pursued by the French; and forced to fly for succour into the Havens of England, whom the Queen commanded to be succour'd; as conceiving the money to be the King of Spains, as it was given out: But at the same time, Cardinal Odete coming out of France into England, and giving notice to the Queen that the money was not the King of Spains, but belonged to certain Merchants of Genoa, from whence the Duke D'Alva had taken it against their will, with a purpose to employ it to the ruine of the

A the Protestants; and information also being given her by one that had a property in the money that it was so; she determined to put in security, and to borrow the money of the Merchants her self, which is an usual thing with Princes when goods are taken in their Ports; and the King of Spain himself had lately done the like. The Duke D'Alva being informed of this dealing of the Queens by Gerard de Spese the King of Spains Embassador in England, seizeth presently upon all the goods of the English in the Low countries, and kept the men prisoners; The Queen did the like with the Dutch Merchants in England; Letters of Mart were granted on both sides, and this grew to such a quarrel between the Nations, that being nourished with other differences afterward, it brought forth in Eighty Eight, that Spanish Invasion, which is, and will be memorable in all future Ages.

Letters of Mart granted against Spain.

B Upon occasion of this Money detained, certain Peers of England, amongst whom were the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquess of Winchester, the Earls of Arundell, Northumberland, Pembroke, Leicester, and others, accused Sir William Cecil, for sending away money into France, making this their colour, but done indeed out of envying his great favour with the Queen, and suspecting him to incline to the House of Suffolk in the matter of succession. Hereupon they consult secretly how to get him be imprison'd, and Throgmorton (who envied him as much as they) suggesting that if he were once clapp'd up, they might soon find out a way to crush him; But the Queen (by what means it is uncertain) coming to have notice hereof, gave a check to their purpose, and protected Cecil against their combined practises.

Sir William Cecil accused by the Duke of Norfolk and others is protected by the Queen.

C The Earl Murray being returned into Scotland, makes the Lords believe that he desires a meeting at Elenburgh, to consult about restoring the Queen to her Liberty; but as Hamilton Duke of Chastell Herald (appointed Vicegerent of the Kingdom by the Queen) and the Lord Heriot were coming thither, he circumvented them, and before any of the rest came cast them into prison; and forthwith in an open War, oppresseth all her Favourers. It may be thought, the Earl Murray could have been content, the Queen should have been set at liberty; but that he knew, her liberty could not be without his servitude; and Queen Elizabeth perhaps would willingly have had her restored to her Kingdom, but that she doubted, her restoring would indanger her own security: And thus, while they regarded their own ends in the first place, and hers but in the second, she had the fortune to be pitied, but not the happiness to be relieved; and all she could do her self, was but to tie the knot of her bonds the faster; if she could have fate still, they would perhaps have loosened of themselves; but now, the more she stirred, the more she was intrangled.

And now the Destiny of the Duke of Norfolk began to work: It was in every ones mouth, that the Duke should marry the Queen of Scots; and it is true, there had been motions made; but the matter not so forward, as the Voice of the People, which commonly presageth what will follow. It had been motioned to the Duke at York, by the Bishop of Ross; and afterward (in pretence at least) by Murray himself at Hampton-Court; but the Duke, before he would resolve in the matter, deliberated with the Earls of Arundell, Northumberland, Westmerland, Sussex, Pembroke, Southampton, and Leicester himself, who all judged it fit, he should acquaint the Queen with it first, and then leave the matter to her liking. Within a few days, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton meeting the Duke in the Palace at Westminster, advised him, to move the Earl of Leicester himself to embrace the match, seeing he had formerly sued for it: but if he refused it, then at least to take him along with him, for that himself alone would hardly be able to procure the Queens consent. A day or two after, the Earl of Leicester propounded the matter to the Duke, and then communicateth it to the Earls of Arundell, and Pembroke, who thereupon, together with Throgmorton, wrote Letters to the Queen of Scots, commending the Duke of Norfolk to her for a Husband; the Duke himself likewise writeth to her, tending his singular love and respect unto her. Upon this, Articles are drawn, written with Leicesters own hand, and sent to the Queen of Scots; to which if she consented, they then promised to procure, that Queen Elizabeth should give her assent, and that forthwith Articles between them are drawn by Leicester.

F she should be reinvested in her Kingdom, and the Succession of England should be confirmed upon her. We may easily believe, the Queen of Scots was not hardly drawn to give consent to her own desire; but in the mean time, the Duke had imparted to the Lord Lumley the whole proceeding, and had much ado to get the Earl of Leicesters consent, that he might advise of it with some other of his Friends; yet a little after, he opened the matter to Cecil also. The rumour of this marriage was soon come to Queens ears; which the Duke understanding, he dealt earnestly with the Earl of Leicester, to have the matter propounded to the Queen out of hand. Leicester makes delays, and pretends causes to put it off; which Cecil seeing, he adviseth the Duke to go and acquaint the Queen with it himself. This counsel Leicester opposed, promising to open it to the Queen as the went in Progress. At length, Leicester promises to acquaint Queen Elizabeth with the matter, but delays.

G at Farnham, the Duke standing by as the Queen sat at Table, she gave him a tart Admonition, That he were best take heed, upon what Pillow he rested his head. After this, at Titchfield, Leicester fell sick, or at least counterfeited; to whom the Queen coming, and bidding him be of good cheer; he with sighes and tears craved pardon for his fault, and unfolded to her the whole story from the very beginning. Whereupon the Queen called the Duke into the Gallery, reproving him sharply, for going about the Marriage, without acquainting her; and commanding him, upon his Allegiance, to desist. The Duke made her a free and hearty promise of obedience, and spared not to say (as if he little regarded the Queen of Scots) that his

Revenues in England were not much lesse then hers in Scotland; and that when he was at his house A in Norwich, he thought himself in a sort not inferior to some Kings: but notwithstanding, finding the Queens anger by her countenance, and perceiving Leicester to be in a manner quite alienated, and most of the Nobility also, as scarcely saluting him when they met him, he grew extremely dejected, and prepared presently to leave the Court, meaning to stay at Norfolk, till by his friends intercession and his own submissive Letters, the Queens heart might be mollified towards him: Mean while, the Court was suspiciously fearful, lest he should raise Rebellion, and (they say) it was concluded, that if he did so, the Queen of Scots should presently be made away. And now the Duke, who held secret commerce by Letters with the Bishop of Ross, Throgmorton and Leicester (for they were sent to and fro in bottles) being examined touching the marriage of the Queen of Scots, and certain secret conferences with the Bishop B of Ross, confessed most of the Objections, and was thereupon committed to the Tower, under the custody of Sir Henry Nevill; within two days after the Bishop of Ross, likewise is examined, and together with the Florentine Robert Ridolph is delivered to the custody of Sir Francis Walsingham, the Earl of Pembroke is confined to his house, and examined privately; but his confession was not committed to writing; It being his request because he could not write himself. At this time, the rumor of Insurrection in the North, begun in Autumn before, grew very strong, by reason of some frequent meetings of the Earls of Northumberland, Westmerland, and others, who thereupon being upon their Allegiance sent for to repair presently to the Queen, they make delays (for they stayed waiting for supplies, both from the Scots, and from the Duke D'Alva) when the Earl of Northumberland, doubtful what to do, was C frightened of purpose by his servants, telling him, that men in Arms were neer at hand to apprehend him; Who thereupon in a tempestuous night, riseth out of his bed, and in great fear gets into his Park at Topcliffe, and the night following to Branspith to the Earl of Westmerlands house, where a great many were met that were acquainted with the Enterprize: Here they brake forth in an open Rebellion, being pressed forward, by one Nicholas Morton a Romish Priest, sent by the Pope to pronounce Queen Elizabeth an Heretick; and therefore to have utterly lost all Right of Sovereignty: By and by they send forth a writing, wherein they declare that they had taken Arms for no other end, but that the Religion of their fore-fathers might be restored, wicked Counsellors removed from the Queen, the Duke of Norfolk, and others of the loyal Nobility relieved, who were now in disgrace; but towards the Queen, professing D themselves most dutiful Subjects: withall they send Letters to the Papists all the Kingdom over, requiring them to come to their assistance; but they were so far from joyning with them, that many sent both the Letters and the bearers of them to the Queen, and afforded their aids and purposes against them; no lesse then the best Protestants, even the Duke of Norfolk himself was not backward in it. These Rebels go first to Durham, where they tear in pieces all the Bibles and Books of Common Prayer they could find in Churches of the English tongue: when they had been twelve days in Rebellion, they numbred their Army, and could not reckon above six hundred Horse, and four thousand Foot: whereupon being certainly informed, that the Earl of Sussex with seven thousand, and the Earl of Warwick with twelve, were setting out against them, they betook themselves to Rabie, the chief house of the Earl of Westmerland; going E from thence they besieged Bernards Castle, which for lack of provision, was yielded to them. At which time being proclaimed Traitors, and hearing a fresh of the great Forces that were coming against them, the two Earls with a small company, get presently into Scotland, hard by where the Earl of Northumberland hid himself at Harclow, in a poor Cottage, amongst the Graybams (famous Robbers) who afterwards betrayed him to the Earl Murray: Westmerland made a shift to get into the Low-Countries, where he had a slender Pension from the King of Spain, and there lived even to old age. Of the rest, for terrour and examples sake, there were hanged at Durham, threescore and six of the chief; amongst whom, Plointree a noted Priest. At York were executed, Simon Digby, John Fulthrop, Thomas Bishop, Robert Penyman; and at London a few months after, Christopher and Thomas; and some other in other places. After this, the F heads of the Rebels being convict of High Treason, were proscribed; namely, Charles Earl of Westmerland; Thomas Earl of Northumberland; Anne Countesse of Northumberland; Edward Dacres of Morton; John Nevill of Leversege; John Swinborn, Thomas Markensfield, Egremond Ratcliffe, Brother to the Earl of Sussex; Christopher Nevill, Richard Norton, Christopher Marmaduke, Robert and Michael Tempest, George Stafford, and forty others of good account. Out of the ashes of this Rebellion, a new fire was kindled at Naworth in Cumberland, by Leonard Dacres second Son to the Lord Dacres of Gylisland; He was a Party with the Earls in their Rebellion; but they breaking forth sooner then he expected, and he at that time being at the Court, and there admitted to kisse the Queens hand, tendred his service to go against them; and to that purpose, was sent home: but in his Journey (branding himself with a double disloyalty) he consulted with the G Rebels, and encouraged them to go on; and by vertue of Letters of Credence from the Queen, he surpris'd the Castle of Greystock, and other Houses of the Dacres, and gathered together an Army of three thousand men: But being encountred by the Baron of Hunsdon, after a great fight, wherein, though he were crook-backt, he behaved himself valiantly, he was put to flight, and fled into Scotland, from whence soon after, he passed over into the Low-Countries, and in great misery and poverty died at Louvain.

But

A But though the Queen were thus intangled with Rebellions at home, yet she was not carelesse of the afflicted Protestants in France; for she stirred up the Protestant Princes to defend the common Cause; supplied them with money, taking in pawn the Queen of Navar's Jewels; and gave leave to Henry Champenoon to lead into France a Troop of a hundred Horse, Gentlemen all, and Voluntaries; amongst whom were Philip Buisshed, Francis Barkly, and Walter Rawleigh, a very young man, who now began to look into the world. But as the Queen of England assisted the French, so in revenge thereof, the King of France meant to assist the Scots, but that he was taken away by death; being slain by a shot, at the Siege of S. John D' Angelo.

There was at this time a Rebellion in Ireland also, raised by Edmund and Peter, Brothers to Boteler Earl of Ormond; but after many outrages by them committed, the Earl of Ormond first by perswasions, obtained of them to submit themselves; and when notwithstanding they were committed to prison, he then obtained of the Queen they should not be called to the Bar, being exceedingly grieved that any of his Bloud should be attainted of Rebellion. The rest of the Rebels were pursued by Sir Humphrey Gilbert, and soon dispersed.

And now the Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland, when he had brought all things to his hearts desire, and thought himself secure, at Lithquo, riding along the streets, was shot into the belly with a Bullet, beneath the Navill, and there fell down dead. The actor was a Hamilton, who did it upon a private revenge, for that Murray had forced him to part with a piece of Land which he had by his Wife; who thereupon falling Lunatick, he in a great rage committed this slaughter.

C After Murrays death, the Countrey being without a Regent, was cause of many disorders. Tho. Carre, and Walter Scot, two principal men amongst the Scottish Borders, and devoted to the Queen of Scots, made Inrodes into England; wasting all places with fire and Sword, till by Forces sent out of England, under the command of the Earl of Suffex, and the Lord Hunsdon, they were defeated. In whose pursuit, three hundred Villages were fired, and above fifty Holds were overturned. For which service the Earl made many Knights, as Sir William Drury, Sir Thomas Manners, Sir George Carie, Sir Robert Constable and others, and then returned. And now to prevent further disorders, the Lords of Scotland being ready to assemble about the election of a new Regent, they asked Counsel of Queen Elizabeth in the matter; but she making answer she would not meddle in it, because she would not be thought to work any thing prejudicial to the Queen of Scots, whose cause was not yet tryed; they created Matthew Earl of Lenox Regent; which Queen Elizabeth did the better like, as conceiving he could not choose out of natural affection, but have a special care of the young King being his Grand-childe.

Many Princes intreat Queen Elizabeth to set the Queen of Scots at liberty, and her answer.

D But while Queen Elizabeth favoured the Kings party in Scotland, the Earl of Huntley, the Duke of Castile-Herald, and the Earl of Argyle, (the Queen of Scots Lieutenants) imploy the Lord Seton to the Duke D' Alva, requiring him for many great reasons, to vindicate the Queen of Scots liberty, alleaging how acceptable a work it would be to all Christian Princes and to the whole Catholick Church: whereunto the Duke made answer; they should find him ready to the uttermost of his power to satisfie their request. At which time also the French King dealt earnestly with Queen Elizabeth to the same purpose; and the Spanish Embassadour in his Masters name urged it no lesse extremely; but Queen Elizabeth assaulted with all these Importunities, made answer, That as she would omit nothing that might serve for the Reconciling of the Queen of Scots and her Subjects, so she must have leave to provide for her own and her Subjects safety; a thing which Nature, Reason, and her own Honour required at her hands. And now when these Princes prevailed not with Queen Elizabeth to set the Queen of Scots at liberty, out comes Pope Pius Quintus with his Bull Declaratory, which he caused to be fastned in the night time upon the gate of the Bishop of Londons Palace, wherein all her subjects are absolved from their Oath of Allegiance, or any other duty; and all that obey her, accursed with Anathema. He that fastned up the Bull was one John Felton; who never fled for the matter, but as affecting Martyrdom, suffered himself to be apprehended, confessed and justified the fact, and thereupon arraigned, was condemned and hanged near the place where he had fastned the writing.

An. Reg. 12. The Duke of Norfolk upon his penitence is delivered out of the Tower: and Cecil's counsel to him.

F The same day that Felton was arraigned, the Duke of Norfolk seeming now extremely penitent for his fault, and utterly to abhor the marriage, was delivered out of the Tower, and suffered to go to his own House, but yet to be in the custody of Sir Henry Nevill still. Indeed Cecil being a good friend to the Duke, had told the Queen, That the Law of 25. of Edward the third could not take hold upon him: and now being in a kind of liberty, Cecil deals earnestly with him to marry speedily some other; thereby to take away all suspicion in that behalf; yet some again thought that this liberty of the Dukes was granted him on purpose to bring him into greater danger.

G At this time died William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the grand-child of an Earl of Pembroke, yet the Son but of an Esquire, and Grand-father to Philip Earl of Pembroke and Mountgomery now living, who lieth buried in Pauls, under a fair Monument of Marble, with an Inscription testifying his great deservings while he lived.

Many conspiracies were at this time to set the Queen of Scots at liberty; amongst others, there conspired Thomas and Edward Stanley younger Sons of the Earl of Derby, with others; but the matter discovered, they were soon suppressed, and some of them executed. And now the Lords of the Queen of Scots Party continuing to protect the English Rebels, the Earl of Suffex once again, accompanied with the Lord Scroop, entereth Scotland, burneth the Villages all along the Valley of Anandale, and compelleth the Duke of Castile-Herald, and the Earls of Huntley and Argyle, under

Revenues in England were not much lesse then hers in Scotland; and that when he was at his house A in Norwich, he thought himself in a sort not inferior to some Kings: but notwithstanding, finding the Queens anger by her countenance, and perceiving Leicester to be in a manner quite alienated, and most of the Nobility also, as scarcely saluting him when they met him, he grew extremely dejected, and prepared presently to leave the Court, meaning to stay at Norfolk, till by his friends intercession and his own submissive Letters, the Queens heart might be mollified towards him: Mean while, the Court was suspiciously fearful, lest he should raise Rebellion, and (they say) it was concluded, that if he did so, the Queen of Scots should presently be made away. And now the Duke, who held secret commerce by Letters with the Bishop of Ross, Throgmorton and Leicester (for they were sent to and fro in bottles) being examined touching the marriage of the Queen of Scots, and certain secret conferences with the Bishop B of Ross, confessed most of the Objections, and was thereupon committed to the Tower, under the custody of Sir Henry Nevill; within two days after the Bishop of Ross, likewise is examined, and together with the Florentine Robert Ridolph is delivered to the custody of Sir Francis Walsingham, the Earl of Pembroke is confined to his house, and examined privately; but his confession was not committed to writing; It being his request because he could not write himself. At this time, the rumor of Insurrection in the North, begun in Autumn before, grew very strong, by reason of some frequent meetings of the Earls of Northumberland, Westmerland, and others, who thereupon being upon their Allegiance sent for to repair presently to the Queen, they make delays (for they stayed waiting for supplies, both from the Scots, and from the Duke D'Alva) when the Earl of Northumberland, doubtful what to do, was C frightened of purpose by his servants, telling him, that men in Arms were neer at hand to apprehend him; Who thereupon in a tempestuous night, riseth out of his bed, and in great fear gets into his Park at Topcliffe, and the night following to Branspeth to the Earl of Westmerlands house, where a great many were met that were acquainted with the Enterprize: Here they brake forth in an open Rebellion, being pressed forward, by one Nicholas Morton a Romish Priest, sent by the Pope to pronounce Queen Elizabeth an Heretick; and therefore to have utterly lost all Right of Sovereignty: By and by they send forth a writing, wherein they declare that they had taken Arms for no other end, but that the Religion of their fore-fathers might be restored, wicked Counsellors removed from the Queen, the Duke of Norfolk, and others of the loyal Nobility relieved, who were now in disgrace; but towards the Queen, professing D themselves most dutiful Subjects: withall they send Letters to the Papists all the Kingdom over, requiring them to come to their assistance; but they were so far from joyning with them, that many sent both the Letters and the bearers of them to the Queen, and afforded their aids and purposes against them; no lesse then the best Protestants, even the Duke of Norfolk himself was not backward in it. These Rebels go first to Durham, where they tear in pieces all the Bibles and Books of Common Prayer they could find in Churches of the English tongue: when they had been twelve days in Rebellion, they numbred their Army, and could not reckon above six hundred Horse, and four thousand Foot: whereupon being certainly informed, that the Earl of Sussex with seven thousand, and the Earl of Warwick with twelve, were setting out against them, they betook themselves to Rabie, the chief house of the Earl of Westmerland; going E from thence they besieged Bernards Castle, which for lack of provision, was yielded to them. At which time being proclaimed Traitors, and hearing a fresh of the great Forces that were coming against them, the two Earls with a small company, get presently into Scotland, hard by where the Earl of Northumberland hid himself at Harcrow, in a poor Cottage, amongst the Graybams (famous Robbers) who afterwards betrayed him to the Earl Murray: Westmerland made a shift to get into the Low-Countries, where he had a slender Pension from the King of Spain, and there lived even to old age. Of the rest, for terrour and examples sake, there were hanged at Durham, threescore and six of the chief; amongst whom, Ploontree a noted Priest. At York were executed, Simon Digby, John Fulstrop, Thomas Bishop, Robert Pennyman; and at London a few months after, Christopher and Thomas; and some other in other places. After this, the F heads of the Rebels being convict of High Treason, were proscribed; namely, Charles Earl of Westmerland; Thomas Earl of Northumberland; Anne Countesse of Northumberland; Edward Dacres of Morton; John Nevill of Leversege; John Swinborn, Thomas Markensfield, Egremont Kitchiffe, Brother to the Earl of Sussex; Christopher Nevill, Richard Norton, Christopher Marmaduke, Robert and Michael Tempest, George Stafford, and forty others of good account. Propositions made to the Queen of Scots for setting her at liberty.

Queen Elizabeths minde being now in great suspension, by reason of that Bull from Rome, and the late conspiracy in Norfolk, sent Sir William Cecil, and Sir Walter Mildmay to the Queen of Scots, who was then at Chatterworth in Derbyshire, to consult with her by what means the breach in Scotland might best be made up, she re-invested in her former dignity and her Son and Queen Elizabeth might be secured. The Queen of Scots did little deplore her own afflicted condition, putting her self wholly upon the Queens clemency; when the Commissioners made unto her certain Propositions of Agreement: First, That the Treaty of Edenborough should be confirmed: Then, B that she should renounce her Right and Title to England, during Queen Elizabeths life, or any children of her body lawfully begotten: Then, that she should send her Son for a Hostage into England, with other six Hostages; such as the Queen should nominate: Then, that the Castles of Humes and Fass-castle should be held by the English for three years; with some other. To which Propositions the Queen of Scots for the present gave a provident answer; but referred the fuller Answer to the Bishop of Rosher Ambassadour in England, and some other Delegates; who afterwards allowing some of the Propositions, and not allowing others; the Treaty came to nothing, but the matter rested in the state it was before.

But came to nothing.

At this time Philip King of Spain had contracted a marriage with Anne of Austria, Daughter to the Emperour Maximilian, his own Niece by his Sister; who was now setting Sail C from Zealand towards Spain; when Queen Elizabeth, to testifie her love and respect to the House of Austria, sent Sir Charles Howard with the Navy Royal, to conduct her through the British Sea.

And now was the twelfth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign finished; which certain Wizards had made Papists believe should be her last: but contrary, as if it were but her first, a new Custom began, of celebrating the seventeenth day of November (the Anniversary day of her Reign) with ringing of Bells, Tiltings, and Bonfires: which Custom, as it now began, so it was never given over as long as she lived, and is not yet forborn so long after her death.

The Earl of Thowmond intending a rebellion, is strangely discovered.

At this time in Ireland, Connagher O'Brien Earl of Thowmond, not brooking the severe Government of Edward Fitton, President of Connaght, entred into Consultation with some few to raise a new Rebellion; which, being at the point ready to break forth, was strangely discovered: for D the day before they meant to take up Arms, Fitton knowing not at all of the matter, sent the Earl word in friendly manner, that the next day he and a few friends with him, would be his Guests. The Earl convinced by his own conscience, imagined that his Intendments were revealed; that Fitton would come as an enemy, rather than a Guest. Out of which fear, he presently set sail into France; where repenting himself seriously of his fault, he confessed the whole business to Norris, the Queens Embassadour in France; and by his intercession, was afterward pardoned and restored.

A guilty conscience betrays it self.

In January, the thirteenth year of her Reign, Queen Elizabeth in royal pomp entring the City of London, went to see the Burse which Sir Thomas Gresham had lately built for the use of the Merchants; and with sound of Trumpets, and the voyce of a Herald, solemnly named it the E Royal Exchange. A few days after, for his many great services, she made Sir William Cecil Baron Burgley.

Sir William Cecil is made Baron of Burgley.

There were now about the Scottish affairs, in the name of the King of Scots, the Earl Morton, Pernuare Abbot of Dumfermelin, and James Mac-Gray; whom when Queen Elizabeth required to shew more clearly, for what causes they had deposed the Queen; they exhibited a long and tedious Commentary; wherein with a certain insolent liberty, they endeavoured to prove, by the ancient Right of the Kingdom of Scotland, that the people of Scotland were above the King: and urged Calvins Authority also, That Popular Magistrates are constituted for the moderation of the licentiousness of Princes: and that it is lawful for them, both to imprison Kings; and upon just causes, to depose them. This writing the Queen could not read without indignation; but to the F Delegates she gave this Answer; She saw no just cause yet, why they should handle the Queen in such manner; and therefore willed them to think upon some course out of hand, how to allay the dissensions in Scotland. Hereupon in Sir Nicholas Bacons house, Keeper of the Great Seal, a Proposition was made to the Bishop of Rosse, the Bishop of Galloway, and Baron Levingston, Delegates for the Queen of Scots, that for the security of the Kingdom, and the Queen of England; it were requisite, that before the Queen of Scots should be set at liberty, the Duke of Castle-He- rald, the Earl of Huntley and Argyle, the Lord Humes, Heris, and another of the Barons should be delivered for Hostages, and the Castle of Dumbrition and Humes yeelded up into the hands of the English, for three years. But they made answer, that to yeeld up great Personages, and such For- G tifications as were demanded, were nothing else, but to leave the miserable Queen utterly destitute of faithful friends, and naked of all places, fit for guard and defence: yet they offered, to give two Earls and two Barons for Hostages till two years were expired: which not being excepted, they straightway gathered, and spoke it openly; That now they plainly perceived the English meant to keep the Queen of Scots perpetually prisoner, and likewise to break off the Treaty; seeing they rigorously demanded such security as Scotland was not able to make good. And now Queen Elizabeth seeing that nothing could be done, for her own, the King and Queen of Scots safety, unlesse both Factions in Scotland consented; she held it

A fit that the Lords of Scotland should themselves appoint some chosen persons to compound the matter.

While matters in England proceeded in this sort, the Queens party in Scotland was hardly used: Dumbrilton Fryth, the strongest Castle in Scotland was taken: and I. Hamilton Archbishop of Saint Andrews, the Duke of Castle-Heralds Brother, as an accessory to the murder of Darley, was hanged without being arraigned according to Law. In England, the Queen of Scots had all her servants taken from her, except ten only, and a Priest to say Masse: with which indignities the Queen of Scots provoked, causeth a large Commentary of her Counsels, with certain love-letters to the Duke of Norfolk, to be carried to the Pope, and the King of Spain, by Ridolphus; which being brought first to the Duke, Higford (one that waited on the Duke in his bed-chamber) had copied out: but being commanded to burn them, he hid them under a Mat in the Dukes Bed-chamber; and that it (should seem) purposely. Ridolphus to draw on the Duke to be Head of the discontented party in England, aggravated to him the wrongs he had suffered: how against all law he had been kept a long time in prison: and now, to his great disgrace, was not summoned to the Parliament: he exhibited to him a Catalogue of such of the Nobility, who had vowed to assist him: he shewed how the Pope, (so the Catholick Religion might be promoted) would himself undergo all the charge of the War, and had already laid down an hundred thousand Crowns; whereof himself had distributed twelve thousand amongst the English that were fled: he promised, that the King of Spain would send four thousand Horse, and six thousand Foot to his Assistance; to these reasons the Bishop of Rosse added, that it was an easie matter for him to surprise the Queen; whom, when he had in his hands, he might then set the Queen of Scots at liberty, and might easily obtain of Queen Elizabeth, a toleration of Religion. The former Reasons took somewhat with the Duke, but this point of surprising the Queen, he abhorred, as an impious Fact, and therefore rejected as pernicious and dangerous.

Ridolphus incited the Duke of Norfolk to take Arms against Queen Elizabeth, and by what reasons.

In France a little before this, was the marriage solemnized between Charles the ninth King of France, and Elizabeth of Austria Daughter to the Emperor Maximilian; in gratulation whereof Queen Elizabeth sent into France Thomas Lord Buckhurst, who with great magnificence was received, and perhaps the more, in regard of a motion now intended to be made: for the Lord Buckhurst, having in his retinue, one Guydo Cavalcantius a Nobleman of Florence, the Queen mother of France, as being a Florentine her self, had often conference with him, when she would many times say, What a happinesse it would be to both the Kingdoms, if a Match were made between the Queen of England and her Son Henry Duke of Anjou; and at last desired him to commend the motion to the Queen of England, both from her, and from her Son the King of France, as a thing they both exceedingly desired. The Lord Buckhurst returned, having for a present from the King of France a Chain weighing a thousand French Crowns; and Cavalcantius at his return made the motion to the Queen, who seemed not unwilling to hearken to it; for by this Match, there should be added to the Kingdom of England, the wealthy Dukedoms of Anjou, Bourbon, Averno, and in possibility, the Kingdom of France it self. Hereupon a Treaty was held, in which the French propounded three Articles, one concerning the Coronation of the Duke; another, concerning the Joynt Administration of the Kingdom; a third, concerning a Toleration of his Religion: to which it was answered, that the two first Articles might in some sort be composed; but the third, scarce possibly: for though a contrary Religion might be tolerated, between Subjects of the same Kingdom; yet between a wife and her husband, it seemed very incongruous and inconvenient; yet the matter at last came to this conclusion, That if the Duke would afford his presence with the Queen at divine Service, and not refuse to hear and learn the doctrine of the Church of England; he should not be compelled to use the English Rites, but at his pleasure use the Roman; not being expressly against the Word of God. But upon these Punctilios they could not accord: and so the Treaty, after it had continued almost a year, brake utterly off. It was indeed generally thought, that the Match was never really intended on either side, but that they both pretended it, for only their own ends: for the Earl of Leicester (who knew more of the Queens minde then any man,) wrote at this time to Sir Francis Walsingham, the Queens Embassadour in France, that he found the Queens inclination so cold in the matter, that though the point of Religion were fully accorded; yet she would finde one point or other to break it off.

A motion of a match is made between Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Anjou.

The Articles of the match.

But could not be agreed: and so the Treaty brake utterly off.

At this time the continuance of the Duke of Norfolk's affection towards the Queen of Scots, came to be discovered by a packet of Letters, sent by Ridolphus to the Bishop of Rosse, and by Bayliffs confession (who brought the letters) being set upon the Rack: so as the Bishop of Rosse was confined to the Isle of Ely: Thomas Stanley, Sir Thomas Gerrard, and Rolston were cast into the Tower: and Henry Howard, who had an aspiring minde to be Archbishop, was committed to the Archbishop of Canterburies keeping. At the same time the Queen of Scots sent money to her confederates in Scotland; which being by Higford delivered to one Brown to carry and told it was Silver, when he found by the weight that it was Gold, he began to suspect something; and thereupon went and delivered both the money and Letters to the Lords of the Councell. Upon this Higford being examined, confessed the whole matter; and withall gave notice of that Commentary also of the Queen of Scots which is mentioned before. Two days after, the Duke himself being examined, and knowing nothing what his servants had confessed, denied every particular; and thereupon, was brought again to the Tower, by Ralph Sadler, Thomas Smith, Henry Nevill, and Doctor Wilson: And after him Bannewester, who was the Dukes Counsel at Law: The Earls of

He is committed again to the Tower.

Arundell

Arundell and Southampton; the Lord Lumley, the Lord Cobham, Henry Percy, Lowder, Powell, Goodyer, A and others, are committed to prison; who upon hope of pardon, confessed all they knew concerning the matter. When these things, and especially the Commentary, which the Duke thought had been burnt, were shewed him, he then cried out, I am betrayed by my own servants; not having learned to be distrustful, which is the very finew of Wisdom. And then with all submission, he besought the Lords to mediate for him to the Queen; towards whom, he protested he never had the least thought of doing any hurt.

The Civilians deliver their opinions what may be done with an Ambassador, if he prove a practiser against the State.

And now seeing it appeared that the Bishop of Rosse had been the whole contriver of the business, it was deliberated what to do with him, because he was an Ambassador. Hereupon divers Civilians are called; as David Lewis, Valentine Dale, William Drury, William Aubrey, and Henry Jones; of whom these questions were asked: B

First, Whether an Ambassador who raiseth Rebellion against that Prince to whom he is an Ambassador, may enjoy the Privileges of an Ambassador, and is not lyable to punishment?

They answered, That such an Ambassador hath forfeited the Privileges of an Ambassador, and is lyable to punishment.

Secondly, Whether the Minister or Protector of a Prince, who is deposed by publick Authority, and in whose room another is Inaugurated, may enjoy the Privileges of an Ambassador?

They answered, That if such a Prince be lawfully deposed, his Protector cannot challenge the Privileges of an Ambassador, forasmuch as none but absolute Princes, and such as have Right of Majesty, can appoint Ambassadors. C

Thirdly, Whether a Prince who is come into another Princes Countrey, and held in Custody, may have his Protector; and if he shall be held an Ambassador?

They answered, If such a Prince have not lost his Sovereignty, he may have his Protector; but whether that Protector shall be reputed as an Ambassador or no, this dependeth upon the Authority of his Delegation.

Fourthly, Whether if a Prince gave warning to such a Protector, and to his Prince who is under custody, that this Protector shall not from henceforth be accounted for an Ambassador; whether that Protector may by Law challenge the Privilege of an Ambassador?

They answered, A Prince may forbid an Ambassador to enter into his Kingdom, and may command him to depart the Kingdom, if he contain not himself within his due limits; yet in the mean while he is to enjoy the Privileges of an Ambassador. D

What the Bishop of Rosse pleaderth for himself.

Upon these Answers, the Bishop of Rosse is warned by the Lords of the Council, that he shall no longer be esteemed an Ambassador, but be punished as his fault shall deserve. The Bishop alledged for himself, That he had not violated the Right of an Ambassador Via Juris, but Via Facti, (to use his own words) and therefore adviseth them, not to use harder measure to him, then was used to the English Ambassadors, Throgmorton in France, Randall and Tamworth in Scotland; who had raised rebellions there, and were open Abettors of the same; and yet had no greater punishment, then to be gone at a time limited. When they began to urge him what the English had testified against him, he lovingly requested them to give no credit to it; forasmuch as by a received custom, which hath the force of a Law, the Testimony of an English man against a Scot, or of a Scot against an English man, is not to be admitted: but after some other altercations, the Bishop is led away to the Tower, and kept close prisoner. E

Matthew Earl of Lenox Regent of Scotland is murdered.

In his place is set the Earl of Moray, who dyed within thirteen months.

At this very season, Matthew Earl of Lenox, Regent of Scotland, the Kings Grand-father, was by the adverse party set upon at unawares; who having yeilded himself to David Spense of Wormester, (that was then very careful to defend him) together with him, was slain by Bell and Caulder; when with great industry he had governed the Kingdom for his Grand-childe about fourteen moneths. In whose room, John Ereskin, Earl of Marre, by common consent of the Kings Faction, was chosen Regent of Scotland; who being a man of a quiet disposition, through extreme grief of the many troubles he sustained in the place, departed this life when he had governed thirteen F moneths.

To be reconciled to the See of Rome, made Treason.

And now a Parliament was held at Westminster; wherein, besides a Law for preventing of the treacherous endeavours of seditious subjects, another Law was made, That if any one during the Queens life, by Books written or printed, shall expressly affirm, That any is, or ought to be the Heir or Successor of the Queen (besides the natural Off-spring of her Body) or shall to that purpose publish, print, or disperse any Book or Schedules; he, and his favourers, shall for the first offence suffer a years imprisonment, and the losse of one half of his goods: and if they offend again, they shall be in a Premunire. A Law also was made, by which to be reconciled to the See of Rome, was made Treason; and it was pronounced against the Queen of Scots, That if she offended again against the Laws of England, it might be lawful to question her, as the wife of a Peer of the Kingdom of England. But here the Queen interposed her Authority, and would not suffer it to be enacted. About this time, in May, a solemn Tilting was performed at Westminster; where the Challengers were Edward Earl of Oxford, Charles Howard, Sir Henry Lee, and Christopher Hatton Esquire; who all did valiantly, but the Earl of Oxford best.

John Story Dr. of the Laws executed for Treason, and why.

Assoon as the Parliament was dissolved, a Consultation was held, Whether John Story, Doctor of the Laws, the Duke D'Alva's Searcher (who sometime before, was by a wile brought into England) being an English man born; and having in Brabant consulted with a forain Prince, about the

A the invading of England, were to be held guilty of high Treason? It was resolved affirmatively: whereupon he is called to the Bar, and indicted of Treason; That he had consulted with one Presball a Conjuror, to make away the Queen; That he cursed her daily, when he said Grace at Table; That he shewed a way to the Secretary of Duke D'Alva how to invade England, &c. Where he affirming, that the Judges had no power to meddle with him, for that he belonged not to the Queen of England, but was the King of *Spain*s sworn subject; is nevertheless condemned by the Form of Nihil dicit (forasmuch as no man can renounce the Country wherein he was born, nor abjure his Prince at his own pleasure) and finally executed after the manner of Traytors.

B Ireland at this time was indifferent quiet; for Sir John Perot, President of Munster, had brought James Fitz Morris to submit himself, and crave pardon. Sidney the Lord Deputy returned into England, and Sir William Fitz Williams, who had married his Sister, succeeded in his room.

It was now the fifteenth yeeare of Queen Elizabeths Reign; when Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, on the sixteenth day of January, was brought to his Trial at Westminster-hall; where sate as Commissioners, George Talbot, Earl of Shrewbury (made High Steward of England for that day) Renold Gray, Earl of Kent; Thomas Ratcliff, Earl of Suffex; Henry Hastings, Earl of Huntington; Francis Russell, Earl of Bedford; Henry Herbert, Earl of Pembroke; Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford; Ambrose Dudley, Earl of Warwick; Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; Walter Devereux, Viscount of Hierford; Edward Lord Clinton, Admiral; William Lord Howard of Effingham, Chamberlain; William Cecil, Lord Burley, Secretary; Arthur, Lord Gray of Wilton; James Blunt, Lord Mountjoy; William Lord Sands; Thomas Lord Wentworth; William Lord Borough; Lewis Lord Mordant; John Pawlit, Lord St. John of Basing; Robert Lord Rich; Roger Lord North; Edmund Bruges, Lord Chandos; Oliver Lord St. John of Blesbo; Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst; and William West, Lord de la Ware.

C After silence bidden, Sir Owen Hopton, Lieutenant of Tower, is commanded to bring the Duke to the Bar; and then the Clerk of the Crown said, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, late of Keningale, in the County of Norfolk, Hold up thy hand; which done, the Clerk with a loud voice readeth the crimes laid to his charge: That in the eleventh year of the Queens reign, he had trayterously consulted to make her away, and to bring in forain Forces for invading the Kingdom: Also, That he dealt with the Queen of Scots concerning Marriage, contrary to his promise made to the Queen under his hand-writing: Also, That he relieved with money, the Earls of Northumberland and Westmerland, that had stirred up Rebellion against the Queen: Also, That in the thirteenth year of the Queens Reign, he implored Auxiliary Forces of Pope Pius the fifth, the Queens professed enemy, of the King of Spain, and the Duke D'Alva, for the freeing of the Queen of Scots; and restoring of the Popish Religion: And lastly, That he sent supply to the Lord Herle, and other the Queens enemies in Scotland. These Indictments being read, the Clerk demanded of the Duke, if he were guilty of these crimes, or not? Here the Duke requested he might be allowed to have Counsel. But Catiline, chief Justice, made answer, That it was not lawful. Yet (saith the Duke) I have heard that Humphrey Stafford, in the Reign of King Henry the seventh, in a Cause of Treason, had one assigned to plead for him. To which Dyer chief Justice of the Commons-Pleas, made answer, That Stafford had Counsel assigned him concerning the Right of Sanctuary, from whence he was taken by force; but in the Inditement of Treason he pleaded his own cause. After this, the Duke yeelding to be tryed by the Peers; first Barham, Serjeant at Law; then Gerrard the Queens Attorney; and lastly, Bromley, the Queens Solicitor, enforced the crimes objected against him: to all which the Duke made colourable answers; but most of them being proved by sufficient testimony, he asked upon occasion, Whether the Subjects of another Prince, who is confederate, and in league with the Queen, are to be accounted enemies? to which Catiline answered, They were; and that the Queen of England might wage war with any Duke of France, and yet hold firm peace with the French King. When it grew towards night, the Lord High Steward demanded of the Duke if he had any more to say for himself: who answered;

E I rely upon the equity of the Laws. After this, the Lords withdrawing a while, and then returning, the Lord Steward beginning at the lowermost, asked them, My Lord de la Ware, Is Thomas Duk of Norfolk guilty of these crimes of High Treason, for which he is called in question? He rising up, and laying his hand upon his breast, answered, Guilty: in like manner they answered all. After this, the Lord Steward with tears in his his eyes pronounced sentence in form as is used. A few days after were Barnes and Mather executed, who conspired with one Herle, to make away certain of the Counsellors, and to free the Duke; but Herle revealed the businesse presently, to whom Barnes (when he saw his Accuser brought forth) smilingly said, Herle thou wert but one hour before me; else I had been in thy place for the accuser, and thou in my room to be hanged: at the same time with them was hanged also Henry Relf, for counterfeiting the Queens hand. But though the Duke were now condemned, yet the Queen was so tender of his

F G case, that it was four monerhs after before he was executed, at last on the second of June at eight of the clock in the morning, he was brought to the Scaffold upon the Tower-Hill, and there beheaded.

The Duke of Norfolk is brought to his Tryall, and condemned.

No Counsel to be allowed in case of Treason.

The Duke is beheaded.

At this time and upon this occasion, a Parliament was Assembled, wherein amongst other Laws, it was Enacted, That if any man shall go about to free any person imprisoned by the Queens expresse Commandement; for Treason or suspicion of Treason, and not yet Arraigned, he shall lose all his goods for his life time; and be imprisoned during the Queens pleasure; if the said person person have been arraigned, the Rescuer shall forfeit his life; if condemned, he shall be guilty of A Rebellion.

Walter D. Devereux is created Earl of Essex, and by what right.

The L. Clinton is made Earl of Lincoln, Henry Compton, Henry Chyney, & Henry Norris are made Barons by Summons.

Q. Elizabeth sends the Lord de la Ware and others, to the Q. to charge her with many crimes, and what she answered.

How the Dutch got possession of their Sea Towns.

A League concluded between Queen Elizabeth and the King of France.

Great preparation for the marriage of Henry King of Navarre with the French Kings Sister. At which marriage was the cruel massacre of Protestants at Paris, and throughout all the Cities of France.

The King of France, by this shedding of blood, falls himself into a bloody Flix, and in grievous torments ends his life.

In the time of this Parliament, the Queen created Walter Devereux Earl of Essex, being before but Viscount Hereford; because he was descended by his Great-grand-mother from the Bourchiers; and made the Lord Clinton (who had large Revenues in Lincolnshire) Earl of Lincoln; Also she called forth John Pawlet of Basing, the Marquess of Winchesters Son, Henry Compton, Henry Chyney, and Henry Norris for Barons by Summons.

Within ten days after the Dukes death, William Lord De la Ware, Sir Ralph Sadler, Thomas Wilson Doctor of the Laws, and Thomas Bromley the Queens Solicitor, were sent to the Queen of Scots, to expostulate with her; That she had usurped the Title and Arms of the Kingdom of England, and had not renounced the same, according to the agreement of the Treaty at Edenburgh; B That she had endeavoured the marriage of the Duke of Norfolk, without acquainting the Queen, and had used all forcible means to free him out of prison; had raised the Rebellion in the North, had relieved the Rebels both in Scotland & in the Low-Countries; had implored Aids from the Pope, the King of Spain and others; had conspired with certain of the English, to free her out of Prison, and declare her Queen of England; Lastly, that she had procured the Popes Bull against the Queen, and suffered her self to be publicly named the Queen of England in Forain Countries: All which accusations she either absolutely denied, or else fairly extenuated: and though (as she said) she were a free Queen, and not subject to any creature; yet she was content, and requested, that she might make her personal answer at the next Parliament.

About this time, the King of Spain by his Embassadour here, complained to the Queen, that the C Rebels of the Netherlands were harboured and entertained in England, contrary to the Articles of the League; whereupon the Queen set forth a severe Proclamation, That all the Dutch, who could any ways be suspected of Rebellion, should presently depart the Realm, which yet turned little to D'Alva's, or the King of Spain's benefit: For hereupon Count Vander-Mark, and other Dutch going out of England surprised the Brill first, then Flushing, and afterwards drew other Towns to revolt, and in a short time excluded the Duke D'Alva in a manner from the Sea. And this error, to suffer the Protestant party to get possession of the Sea-towns, hath been the cause they have been able to hold out, even all this long time, against the King of Spain. And now many military men having little to do at home, got them into the Netherlands, some to Duke D'Alva; but the far greater number to the Prince of Orange: The first of whom was Thomas Morgan, D who carryed three hundred English to Flushing; then followed by his procurement nine Companies more under the conduct of Humphry Gilbert; and afterward it became the Nursery of all our English Souldiers.

At this time Charles the French King setting his mind wholly (at least seeming so) upon the Low-Country War, concluded a peace and entred into a league with Queen Elizabeth; which was to remain firm, not only during their two lives, but between their successors also, if the successor signifie to the survivor within a year that he accepteth it, otherwise to be at liberty. It was likewise agreed, what aid by Sea or Land they should each of them afford to other upon occasion. And for ratification of this League, Edward Clinton Earl of Lincoln and Admiral of England was sent into France, with whom went the Lord D'Arcy, Rich, Talbot, Sands, and others. The French E King likewise sent the Duke of Memorancy, and Paul Foix into England with a great train; that the Queen in the presence of them, and the Embassador in Ordinary might swear to the league, which she did at Westminster, the seventeenth of May, in the year 1572. The day after she made Memorancy Knight of the Garter.

Memorancy whilst he tarried in England, made intercession in his Kings name, that what favour could be without danger, might be shewed to the Queen of Scots; and then made much ado again about the marriage with the Duke of Anjou; but being hopelesse to make conclusion thereof, by reason of the diversity of Religion, he returned into France; for now was great provision making ready for the marriage, between Henry King of Navarre, and the Lady Margaret the French Kings Sister; to which solemnity with notable dissimulation, the Queen of Navarre and the chief F of all the Protestants were allured, being born in hand that there should be a renovation of love, and a perpetual peace established. The Earl of Leicester likewise, and the Lord Burleigh were invited out of England, and out of Germany, the Sons of the Prince Elector Palatine, under colour of honour, but indeed, that they might be intrapped, and they, and together with them the Protestant Religion at one blow, if not clean cut off, yet receive a deadly wound: For the marriage being celebrated, there presently followed that cruel Massacre at Paris, and the terrible slaughter of the Protestants throughout all the Cities of France; but to set a shew of equity upon the Fact, Edicts and and Proclamations were presently set forth, that the Protestants had plotted a wicked conspiracy against the King, the Queen Mother, the Brethren, the King of Navarre, and the Princes of the blood Royal; and to keep the thing in memory, Coyn was presently stamped, G upon the one side whereof was the Kings Picture with this Inscription, Virtus in Rebelles, on the other side, Pietas excitavit iustitiam; But the King of France, notwithstanding all the shew he made of Piety, escaped not the Divine revenge, for before the year came about, he fell sick of a bloody Flix, and afterwards with long and grievous torments ended his life.

A little before this, Mote Fenell Embassadour to the King of France, being in England, by virtue of an order from the Queen Mother of France, propoundeth to Queen Elizabeth at Kenilworth (two days before the Massacre in that Kingdom) the marriage of her youngest Son Francis Duke

A Duke of Alanson (for the Queen Mother had been told by some cunning men, that all her sons should be Kings, and she knew no way for it but this.) But Queen Elizabeth, by reason of the disparity of age, modestly excused her self, (for he was scarce seventeen years old, and she was now past eight and thirty) yet she promised to consider of it, and Alanson did not leave to prosecute the suit.

At this time, Thomas Percy Earl of Northumberland, who first rebelled, and afterwards fled into Scotland, was for a sum of money delivered by the Earl of Morton, to the Lord Hunsdon Governour of Berwick; and a while after was beheaded at York. And now as these two great Personages, the Duke of Norfolk, and the Earl of Northumberland were taken away by a violent death; so three other great Personages were at this time taken away by a natural death: First William

B Paulet, who from a private man came by degrees to be Marquess of Winchester: lived to the age of within three years of a hundred, and could reckon a hundred and three of his children, and his childrens issue, after he had held the place of Lord Treasurer of England above twenty years; in whose room succeeded Sir William Cecil, Lord Burleigh: Then died Edmund Earl of Darby, famous as well for his Hospitality and good house-keeping, as for his skill in Surgery and Bone-setting; Then died Sir William Peter, who being descended from an honest stock at Exeter in Devonshire, was Privy Counsellor and Secretary to King Henry the Eighth, King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth; who planted himself in Essex, where he purchased great possessions; whose Son John was by King James made Barron of Writtle in that Countrey.

And now Queen Elizabeth having formerly borrowed money of her Subjects, she thankfully repaid it, which won her no lesse love, then if she had given it, and more love she gained also at this time by two Proclamations, by one of which, she commanded Noble men to observe the Law of keeping retainers; by the other, she restrained Informers, who under colour of spying out Crown-land concealed by private persons, sacrilegiously seized upon the Lands of Parish-Churches, and Alms-houses piously endowed by the Queens Ancestors. And more Love and Honour also she gained at this time by two acts of Justice; the one that she satisfied the English Merchants out of the goods which were detained belonging to the Dutch, and restored the rest to the Duke D' Alva, and made a full transaction with the Merchants of Genova for the money intercepted; the other, that she freed England at this time of the debts which her Father and her Brother had run into in forain parts, and were increased by yearly interest, and caused the obligations of the City of London, which had so often been renewed to be given in, to the great rejoycing of Citizens.

The Spanish affairs growing now very turbulent in the Netherlands, Flushing lost, the Towns of Holland revolted, and the Spanish Navy vanquished by the Zealanders, Duke D' Alva against his will, began to shew more kindnesse towards the English, so as in the moneth of January, the trade which in Anno 1568. had been forbidden, was now allowed again between the Dutch and the English for two years; but those two years expired, the English removed their trading to the confederate States.

The last year in the moneth of November, a Daughter was born to the French King, to whom he requested Queen Elizabeth to be God-mother, who thereupon sent William Somerset Earl of Worcester into France with a Font of massy Gold to stand as her Deputy at the Christning. Hereupon, and for that the Queen promised to observe the League strictly, the French King and the Queen Mother began to affect her more and more, and the Duke D' Alanson wrote sundry Love-letters to her, and the French King and his Mother interceding for the marriage with all earnestnesse. It is true, the Queen conceived divers reasons, why it was fit for her to marry; but the Courtiers for their own ends dissuaded her as much from it: at last the Queen Mother of France was wonderful importunate, that her Son Alanson might have leave to come and see her: whereunto, being wearied with continual Letters and Messages, she gave her consent; but upon condition, that he should not take it for any disgrace to him, if he returned without obtaining his suit: But as soon as Queen Elizabeth had notice, that his Brother Henry was elected King of Poland, and that the King of F France was very sick, she gave intimation to Alanson, by Edward Horsey Governour of the Isle of Wight, that he should not make too much haste into England; but should first procure a peace by some means or other in France, and declare by some notable argument, his good will towards the Protestants, thereby to be the more welcome Guest into England. Hereupon a peace was concluded in France, and in certain places the Protestants were allowed to exercise their Religion: and then again the French King and the Queen Mother, used all their endeavour to have the marriage go forward (for they were very desirous that Alanson who was of a crooked and perverse disposition, and prone to raise tumults) might be removed out of France; and withall, they requested of Queen Elizabeth, that if the Duke of Anjou took his voyage into Poland by Sea; he might have publick caution to sail through the British Ocean. To this last request she not only consented with all alacrity, but also made offer of a Fleet to conduct him thither. In the mean while, Alanson fell sick of the Meazles, which his Mother signified to Queen Elizabeth by Count Rbets, excusing him thereupon for not coming into England as he had determined. The Count found the Queen at Canterbury, where she gave him Royal entertainment: and Matthew Parker Archbishop of Canterbury, Royal entertainment to them both.

All this while since the death of the Earl of Marre, there had been no Regent in Scotland, but now by the procurement of Queen Elizabeth chiefly, James Dowglas Earl of Morton, is made Regent; who, when his Authority in a Parliamentary Assembly was established, Enacted many profitable fitable Laws for the defence of Religion against Papists and Hereticks, in the name of the King: A But the protection and keeping of the Kings Person, he confirmed to Alexander Erskine Earl of Marre (to whom the custody of the Kings in their tender years, by special privilege belongeth) though he were himself in his Minority: Upon these conditions, That no Papists, nor factious persons should be admitted to his presence: An Earl should come with only two servants attending him: A Baron, with only one: All other, single: and every one unarmed. The French King in the meantime, sent his Embassadour Mounfier Vyriar, to corrupt the Earls of Arbott and Huntley with large promises, to oppose the Regent: Queen Elizabeth as much laboured to defend him: but though by the Ministry of Killingrew, she had drawn James Hamilton Duke of Castle-Herald, and George Gourdon Earl of Huntley, and the most eminent of that Faction, upon indifferent conditions, to acknowledge the Regent, yet William Kircald, Lord Graunge, (whom Murray when he was Regent, had made Governour of Edenburgh Castle) the Lord Humes, Lydington, the Bishop of Dunkeld and others, would by no means admit of the Regents Government, but held that Castle, and fortified it in the Queen of Scots name, having Lydington for their Counsellour herein, and trusting to the natural strength of the place, and to the Duke D'Alva's and the French Kings promises, to send them supplies both of men and money. Now when these persons could by no means be drawn to accept of conditions of peace, and to deliver up the Castle to the Regent, Queen Elizabeth (who could in no case indure the French in Scotland) suffered her self at length to be intreated by the Regent, to send Forces, Guns and Ammunition, for assaulking the Castle, upon certain conditions, whereof one was, that ten Hostages should be sent into England, to be security for returning the men and Munition, unlesse by the common hazard of War they should chance to miscarry. The conditions being agreed on; William Drury Marshal of the Garrison at Barwick, with some great Ordinance and fifteen hundred Souldiers (amongst whom were some Noble Volunteers, George Carie, Henry Carie, Thomas Cecil, Henry Lee, William Knolles, Sutton, Cotton, Kelway, William Killingrew, and others, entred into Scotland, and besieged the Castle, which after three and thirty days siege, was delivered up to the Regent for the Kings use, with all the persons that were in it; amongst whom Kircald Lord Grange, and James his Brother, Mujman and Cook Goldsmiths (who had counterfeited Coyn in the Castle) were hanged; although to redeem Granges life, a hundred of the Family of the Kircalds, offered themselves to be in perpetual servitude to the Regent, besides an annual Pension of three thousand Marks; and twenty thousand pounds of Scottish money in present; and to put in caution, that from thenceforth he should continue in duty and homage to the King; but it would not be accepted. H and the rest were spared, through Queen Elizabeths merciful intercession; Lydington was sent to Leith, where he died, and was suspected to be poisoned: A man of the greatest understanding in the Scottish Nation, and of an excellent wit, but very variable; for which; George Buchanan called him the Chamæleon.

And now from this time Scotland began to breath, after long Civil Wars, and as well the Captains of both parties, as the Souldiers betook themselves into Swedeland, France and the Low-Countries, where they valorously behaved themselves, and won great commendation. As for John Lesse Bishop of Rosse he was now set at liberty, but commanded to depart presently out of England, and being beyond the Sea, he continued still to sollicite his Mistress the Queen of Scots cause, with the Emperour, the Pope, the French King, and the German Princes of the Popish Religion; who all led him on with fair promises, but performed nothing: For indeed he in whom he had greatest confidence, which was the Duke D'Alva, was at that time called away, partly out of Jealousie of State, as being thought to grow too great, and partly out of opinion, that by his cruelty he made the people to revolt; and therefore in his place was sent Ludovicus Zuinga, a man of great Nobility in Spain, but of a more peaceable disposition then D'Alva; and now this man did all good Offices to win Queen Elizabeth to him, and minding his own affairs only, would not intermeddle with the Scottish or English matters.

About this time a frantick opinion was held by one Peter Bouchet a Gentleman of the Middle Temple, that it was lawful to kill them that opposed the truth of the Gospel; and so far was he possessed with this opinion; that he assaulted the famous Seaman Captain Hawkins, and wounded him with a Dagger; taking him for Hatton, who at that time was in great favour with the Queen, and of her Privy Council, whom he had been informed to be a great Adversary to Innovations. The Queen grew so angry hereat, that she commanded Martial Law should be executed upon him presently, till her Council advised her that Martial Law was not to be used, but in the Field, and in turbulent times, but at home and in time of Peace, there must be Legal proceedings: Hereupon Bouchet was sent to the Tower, where taking a brand out of the fire, he struck it into the brains of one of his keepers named Hugh Longworth and killed him; for which fact, he was condemned of murther, had his right hand cut off, and nailed to the Gallows, and then himself hanged.

After the violent death of this Varlet, we may speak of the natural death of two great persons; First, William Lord Howard of Effingham, Son of that warlike Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, by his second Wife Agnes Tilney. This William was made a Baron by Queen Mary, and Lord High Admiral of England, and by Queen Elizabeth Lord Chamberlain, till such time that being taken with age, he yielded up that place to the Earl of Suffex, and was then made Keeper of the Privy Seal, which is the fourth degree of honour in England. His Son Charles succeeded him in the Dignity of his Barony, who was after made Lord Chamberlain to the Queen,

A Queen, and then Lord High Admiral of England. A while after him dyed Reginald Gray Earl of Kent, whom the Queen a year before of a private man had made Earl of Kent, when as that Title, from the death of Richard Gray Earl of Kent, who had waisted his Patrimony, and was elder Brother to this mans Grand-father, had lien asleep for fifty years together.

Reginald Gray of a private man made Earl of Kent.

At this time many particular Rebellions were in Ireland; The O-Conors and O-Moors took Arms, and committed many outrages: In Munster James Fitz-Morris, and Fitz-Edmund did the like; but by the industry of Sir John Perrot, President of Munster, were suppressed. In Ulster, Bryan Mac Phelym burnt Knockfergus, and many other joyned in Rebellion with him. Against these, Walter Devereux, (whom the Queen had lately created Earl of Essex) desired leave to goe; which Sir William Fitz-Williams Deputy of Ireland opposed, as fearing that the glory of so great an Earl would eclipse his light. But for this, the Queen findes a remedy, by appointing Essex, to take a Patent of the Deputy, whereby to be made Governour of Ulster. But this remedy for Fitz-Williams, might have made a sore in the minde of Essex; (to receive his Authority from his inferiour) but that the noblenesse of his minde, made him more to regard the vertue, then the glory. And so, in the end of August, he landed at Knockfergus, having with him the Lords Darcy and Rich, and Sir Henry Knowles and his four Brothers, Michael and John Carver, Henry, William, and John Norris: At his landing Bryan Mac Phelym welcomed him, rendering unto him all manner of dutifullnesse and service; but presently after, falls from him, and joyns with Turlough Leynigh. After this revolt, the Earl of Essex finding many difficulties in the businesse, and himself not well provided of skilful Souldiers, makes suit to the Queen for leave to come home; which the Earl of Leicester, (who liked his room better then his company) opposed; till after expence of a years time, and much treasure, he at last obtained leave, and returned home.

Many Rebellions are in Ireland.

Walter Devereux Earl of Essex is made Governour of Ulster, by a Patent from the Deputy.

The next year, being 1574. and the seventeenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, the Duke of Alanson grew more importunate in his suit, then at any time before; so he obtained of the Queen, to come into England, any time before the twentieth of May; and this she the rather did, because she perceived him now to be really bent against the Guyes her sworn Enemies. But before this Answer was brought him, Valentine Dale Doctor of the Civill Law, the Queens Embassadour in France, gave intimation to the Queen, That Alanson and Navarre were in restraint; and committed to Keepers: For the Guyes had suggested, that Alanson held intimate friendship with Admiral Colin, the chief Leader of the Protestants in France; and indeed, Alanson being examined, freely confessed, that he had now for a good while desired the marriage of the Queen of England; and conceiving that good correspondence with Colin might be useful to him to that end, he had thereupon had conference with him thereabout, and concerning the Low-Country War. In the mean time Thomas Wilkes, Dales Secretary, got cunningly to Alanson, and in the Queens name, made promise both to him, and to Navarre, that she would omit no opportunity of procuring their enlargement. For which, the subtle Queen Mother so complained of him to Queen Elizabeth, that he was faine to go into France, and there to crave pardon for his fault. But Navarre, not unmindeful of this kindenesse in Wilkes, when about five and twenty years after, being King of France, he saw him in Normandy, he Knighted him. Hereupon the Queen sent Thomas Randall into France, to the Queen Mother, that if it were possible, he might gain Reconciliation for Alanson her Son, and for the King of Navarre. But before he was landed in France, Charles the then French King dyed, whose Funeral Rites were solemnly performed in Saint Pauls Church in London.

An. Reg. 17. The Duke of Alanson continues his suite to Queen Elizabeth.

Charles the French King dies,

As soon as Henry the third, King of France, was come from Poland, Roger Lord North was sent into France, to congratulate his return, and his happy Inauguration into the Kingdom; who thereupon, together with the Queen-Mother, did forthwith send their joyat Letters into England, strongly soliciting the businesse of Marriage, between Alanson and the Queen. In the mean time notwithstanding they used all possible devises, (and left no means unsought) to get the young King of Scotland to be sent into France; and to deprive Morton who was the Regent, of his Authority; whereof the Queen of Scots also was very desirous; she being perswaded, that if her Son were once gotten safely into France, she and the Catholics in England should be more mildly used. At which time, an aspersion was cast upon the Queen of Scots, as if she had made the match between Charles Uncle to the Queen of Scots (who had lately the Earldom of Lenox confirmed to him by Parliament) and Elizabeth Cavendish the Countesse of Shrewsburie's Daughter by a former Husband; upon which ground, both their Mothers and some others also were kept in Prison for a time; and being doubted whereunto this marriage should tend, Henry Earl of Huntington, President of the Council in the North, is authorized with secret Instructions to examine it. It will be fit here to say something of this place of Government in the North; which from small beginnings, is now become so eminent as it is at this day, whereof this was the Original. When as in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, after that the Rebellion in the Northern parts, about the subversion of Abbies was quieted, the Duke of Norfolk tarried in those quarters, and many complaints of injuries done were tendered unto him, whereof some he composed himself, and others he commended under his Seal to men of wisdom to determine: Hereof when King Henry heard, he sent down a peculiar Seal to be used in these cases, and calling home the Duke, committed the same to Tunstall Bishop of Durham, and constituted Assistants with Authority to hear and determine the complaints of the poor, and he was the

An. Reg. 18. It was now the year One thousand five hundred seventy five, and the eighteenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when Henry the third King of France being returned from Poland, and Crowned at Rheims, was careful to have the League of Blois confirmed; which, in the year 1572. had been concluded between his Brother Charles and the most Illustrious Queen Elizabeth; Now therefore he confirmed it with His own Subscription, and delivered it to Dale the Queens Legier, as the Queen likewise ratified it at Saint James neer Westminster. But a little after he demanded by Letters, whether the mutual defence against all persons mentioned in the League, was intended to comprehend the case of Religion also? Whereunto she answering, that it did comprehend it: he thereupon hearing this from the Queen, began presently to prepare War against the Protestants, and Alanson being drawn to the Adverse party, there was no speech of the marriage for a long time. B

In the Netherlands at this time, Lodovick Zuinga, who was successor unto Duke D'Alva, was wholly bent to recover the Command of the Seas, which D'Alva had neglected, but not being sufficiently provided of a Navy, he sent Boischoitt into England, that with the Queens leave, he might take up Ships and Mariners to go against the Hollanders and Zelanders, but this she would not grant: Then he made suit, that the Queen would please not to take it in evill part, if the banished persons of the English in the Low-Countries served the King of Spain in a Sea-fight against the Hollanders; and that they might have free access to the Ports of England, to buy provision for ready money; but this she would not grant C neither: Then he made request, that the Dutch, who were Rebels against the King of Spain, might be put out of England; but neither would she grant this, as being an Action void of Humanity, and against the Laws of Hospitality; yet because she would not be thought to violate the old Burgundian Law, she commanded by Proclamation, that the Ships of the Dutch which were made ready, should not go forth of the Haven; nor yet the Dutch, who had taken up Arms against the King of Spain, enter into the Ports of England, and by name, the Prince of Orange, and Fifty other the prime of that Faction; and this she did the more willingly, because Zuinga at the intercession of Wilson the English Embassadour, had removed the Earl of Westmerland, and other English Fugitives out of the Dominions of the King of Spain, and had also dissolved the English Seminary at Doway; though in stead thereof, the Guises through the procurement of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, set up another Seminary at Rheims. D

The English Seminary at Doway is dissolved, and another set up at Rheims.

The States of the Low-countries make choice of Q. Elizabeth to be their Protector, and why.

And at this time the Prince of Orange, perceiving his Forces but small, and thinking himself too weak for the King of Spain, and little hope of aid from England, he entred into Consultation with the Confederate States, to whose protection they were best and in the most security to betake themselves: The Princes of Germany they knew were not all of one minde, parted from money very hardly, and did not every way, nor would not by any means possible accord and concur with them in their Religion; and therefore they were not so fit. Then, the French they saw, were intangled in a Civil a War, and so had enough of their own to do; besides the old grudges and heart-burnings that were between the French and Dutch; and therefore neither were they so fit. There remained then the English, as fittest of any (if it might be obtained) seeing they were Neighbours, of the same Religion, and of a Language not much different, strong in shipping, and rich in Merchandize. Hereupon (considering the commodiousnesse of the English Nation) they send into England, Phillip Marnixie of Saint Aldegonde, Janus Dowsa, William Nyvell, and Doctor Melsen; who in an honourable Ambassage, offer the Countries of Holland and Zealand to be possessed or protected by the Queen, forasmuch as she was descended from the Princes of Holland, by Philippa Wife of Edward the third, Daughter of William of Bavaria, Count of Hanonia and Holland; by whose other Sister, the hereditary Right of those Province came to the King of Spain. To this offer, the Queen takes time to answer; and at last, having maturely F advised of the matter, her Answer was this, That as yet she conceived not how with safety of her honour, and an upright conscience, she could receive those Provinces into her Protection, much lesse assume them into her possession; but promised, she would deal earnestly with the King of Spain, that a well conditioned Peace might be concluded. Presently upon this, Zuinga, Governour of the Low-countries dyed; after whose death, the States of Brabant, Flanders, and the other Provinces, took upon them the ancient Administration, and Authority in the Common-wealth; which the King of Spain was fain to confirm to them, till such time as John of Austria were come, whom he determined to make Governour there. In the mean time, Queen Elizabeth in behalf of the King of Spain, sent William Davyson in Ambassage to those Princes, to exhort them to be peaceable and quiet, which yet, by reason the G Spanish Souldiers were so outrageous, little prevailed.

The Queens Answer to their offer.

In England all was calm and quiet for all this year, onely a difference fell out between Sir John Forster, Governour of Berwick, and John Cormiehill, Keeper of Liddesdale in Scotland: In composing whereof, the Regent of Scotland, having given Queen Elizabeth some discontentment, was fain to come unarmed before the Earl of Huntington, appointed the Legate for England, at Bonderod, and so the matter was taken up, and the Regent ever after continued constant in observing the Queen, and to his great commendation,

A dation, restrained the Free-booters of the Borders, to the great good of both Kingdomes.

This year there dyed in Scotland, James Hamilton Duke of Castle-Herald, and Earl of Arran, who was great Grand-child to James the second, King of Scots, by his Daughter, appointed Tutor to Mary, Queen of Scots, and designed Heir and Governour of the Kingdom, during her minority.

At this time the Earl of Essex is come into Ireland again, where having done good services, and being in the midst of Victory, he was on a suddain commanded to resign his Authority in Ulster: and as though he were an ordinary Commander, is set over three hundred Souldiers: which disgrace was wrought by his adversaries in Court, to the continual perplexing of his milde spirit. B And now is Sir Henry Sidney the third time sent Deputy into Ireland; who going into Ulster, there came to him and submitted themselves Mac Mahon, Mac Guyre, Torlogh Leynigh, the O-Conors and O-Moors, the Earl of Desmond, and the rebellious Sons of the Earl of Clanriccard, all whom he received into favour, and with great commendation administred the Province.

The Earl of Essex going into Ireland again, is disgraced with being made an ordinary commander.

At this time the Spaniard in the Low-Countries began to deal roughly with the people, and harried the Inhabitants with all manner of spoil and injury; Antwerp, the most famous Town of Traffick in all Europe, was miserably pillaged, the English Merchants houses rifled, insomuch that the States were enforced to take up Arms, and Messengers were sent to all neighbouring Princes; and to Queen Elizabeth was sent Monsieur Aubigny, both to shew her upon how necessary and just causes they had taken up Arms, and also to borrow of her a great sum of money, the better to enable them to resist the Spaniard. C But she being certainly informed, That they first sued to the French King for help, denyeth the request, yet promiseth to intercede earnestly with the King of Spain for peace. And in that employment, she addressed into Spain, John Smith, couzen german to King Edward the sixth, a man of Spanish behaviour, and well known to the King of Spain, who was liberally received by the King; and with such wisdom retorted the contumelious speech of Gaspar Quiroga Archbishop of Toledo and the Spanish Inquisitors, who would not admit in the Queens Title, the Attribute of Defender of the Faith; that he had gained great thanks from the King of Spain himself, who requested him not to speak of it to the Queen, and gave severe command, that the Title should be admitted.

And now by this time was John of Austria come into the Low-Countries with a large Commission: D for he was the Natural Son of the Emperour Charles the fifth, to whom the Queen sent Edward Horsey, Governour of the Isle of Wight, to congratulate his coming thither, and to offer help, if the States called the French into the Netherlands; yet at the same time, Swevingham being exceeding importunate on the States behalf, she sent them twenty thousand pounds of English money; (so well she could play her game of both hands) upon condition they should neither change their Prince nor their Religion, nor take the French into the Low-countries, nor refuse a Peace, if John of Austria should condescend to indifferent Conditions; but if he embraced a Peace, then the money should be paid back to the Spanish Souldiers, who were ready to mutiny for lack of pay. So careful she was to retain these declining Provinces in obedience to the King of Spain.

E At this time a Voyage was undertaken, to try if there could be found any Sea upon the North part of America, leading to the wealthy coast of Catbaia, whereby in one commerce might be joyned the riches of both the East and West parts of the world, in which voyage was employed Martyn Forbisher, who set sail from Harwich the eighteenth of June, and the ninth of August, entred into that Bay, or Sea, but could passe no further for Snow and Ice. The like expedition was taken in hand, two years after, with no better successe.

About this time dyed the Emperour Maximilian, a Prince that deserved well of Queen Elizabeth and the English, who thereupon sent Sir Philip Sidney to his Son Rodolphus King of the Romans, to condole his Fathers death, and congratulate his succession: as likewise to do the like, for the decease of the Count Electour Palatine, named Frederick the third, with his surviving Son.

F And now Walter Devereux Earl of Essex, who out of Leicesters envy, had been recalled out of Ireland, was out of Leicesters fear, (as being threatned by him) sent back again into Ireland, but with the empty title of Earl Marshal of Ireland; with the grief whereof, he fell into a bloudy Flux, and in most grievous torments ended his life: When he had first desired the standers by to admonish his Son (scarce ten years old at that time) to have always before his eyes, the six and thirtieth year of his age, as the utmost term of his life, which neither himself, nor his Father before him could out-go, and the the Son indeed attained not to it, as shall hereafter be declared. He was inspected to be poysoned, but Sir Henry Sidney, Deputy of Ireland, after diligent search made, wrote to the Lords of the Council, That the Earl often said, It was familiar to him upon any great discontentment to fall into a Flux, and for his part, he had no suspicion of his being poysoned: yet was this suspicion encreased; for that presently after his death, the Earl of Leicester with a great sum of money and large promises, putting away Dowlas Sheffeld, by whom he had a Son, openly married Essex his widow. For although it was given out, that he was privately married to her, yet Sir Francis Knolles her Father, who was well acquainted with Leicesters roving loves, would not believe it, unlesse he himself were present at the marriage, and had it testified by a publick Notary. At this time also dyed Sir Anthony Cook, of Gyddy-Hall in Essex, who had been School-master to King Edward the sixth, and and was no lesse School-maſter to his own Daughters, whom he made ſkilful in the Greek and A Latine Tongues; married all to men of great Honour; one to Sir William Cecil, Lord Treasurer of England; a ſecond to Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; a third to Sir Thomas Hobby, who dyed Embaſſadour in France; a fourth to Sir Ralph Lowley; and the fifth to Sir Henry Killigrew.

At this time, the Sons of the Earl of Clamricard, who ſcarce two moneths before had obtained pardon for their Rebellion, fell into Rebellion again; but were by the Deputy ſoon ſuppreſt; and William Drury newly made Preſident of Munſter, reduced the whole Province to good Order, except only the County of Kerry, whither a number of Vagabonds were gotten, truſting to the Immunities of the place. For King Edward the third made Kerry a County Palatine, and granted to the Earls of Deſmond all the Royal Liberties which the King of England had in that County, excepting Wreckby Fyre, Foreſhall, and Treasure Trouve. The Governour notwithstanding, who wiſely judged that theſe Liberties were granted for the better preſervation of Juſtice, and not for maintenance of outrageous malefactours, entred into it, and violently put to flight and vanquiſhed the miſchievous crew, which the Earl of Deſmond had placed there in ambuſh. The Earl in the mean while made great complaints of Drury to the Deputy; and particularly, of the Tax which they call Ceaſſe, which is an exaction of proviſion of Victuals at a certain rate, for the Deputies Family; and the Souldiers in Garrifon. This Tax, not he only, but in Lemſter alſo many Lords reſuſed to pay, alleading that it was not to be exacted but by Parliament; but the matter being examined in England, it appeared by the Records of the Kingdom, That this Tax was anciently impoſed; and that a certain Right of Maſteſty, a Prerogative Royal, which is not ſubjected to Laws, yet not contrary to them neither, as the wiſe Civilians have obſerved. Yet the Queen commanded to uſe a moderation in exactions of this nature, ſaying, She would have her ſubjects ſhorn, but not devoured.

It was now the year 1577, and the twentieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when John of Austria, pretending to Queen Elizabeth nothing but Peace, yet is found to deal ſecretly with the Pope, to deprive her of her Kingdom, and himſelf to marry the Queen of Scots, and invade England: of which his praſtiſes the Prince of Orange gives Queen Elizabeth the firſt Intelligence. Whereupon (finding his deep diſſembling) ſhe enters into a League with the States, for mutual defence both at Sea and Land, upon certain Conditions; but having concluded it (becauſe ſhe would not have it wrongfully interpreted, as though ſhe meant to foſter a Rebellion in the Netherlands) ſhe ſent Thomas Wilkes to the King of Spain with theſe Informations, That ſhe had always endeavoured to keep the Low-Countries in obedience to the King of Spain; had perſwaded (even with threatnings) the Prince of Orange to accept of Peace; but withall, if the King of Spain would have his Subjects obedient to him, ſhe then requeſts him to reſtore their privileges, and to remove John of Austria from the Government, who not only was her deadly enemy, but laboured by all means to bring the Netherlands into utter ſervitude. If this be granted by the King of Spain, ſhe then faithfully promiſeth, That if the States perform not their Allegiance to him, as by their Promiſe to her they are engaged to do, ſhe will utterly forſake them, and bend her ſelf with all her Forces to compel them. While Wilkes in Spain unfoldeth theſe matters, John of Austria ſendeth to Queen Elizabeth, in moſt grievous manner accuſing the States for diſobedience and making a large declaration of the cauſes for which he had taken up Arms again. Thus Queen Elizabeth (like a fortunate Princeſſe) ſate as an Honourable Arbitreſſe between the Spaniſh, the French, and the States; inſomuch that it was not untrue which one wrote, That France and Spain were Ballances in the Scale of Europe; and England the Beam to turn them either way; for they ſtill got the better, to whom ſhe adhered.

About this time, when the Judges ſate at the Aſſizes in Oxford, and one Rowland Jenkes a Book-ſeller was queſtioned for ſpeaking opprobrious words againſt the Queen, ſuddenly they were ſurpriſed with a peſtilent ſavour; whether riſing from the noyſome ſmell of the priſoners, or from the damp of the ground, is uncertain, but all that were there preſent, almoſt every one, within forty hours dyed, except Women and children; and the Contagion went no further. There dyed Robert Bell, Lord chief Baron Robert D' Oylie, Sir William Babington, D' Oyle Sheriff of Oxfordſhire, Harcourt, Weyman, Phetiplace, the moſt noted men in this Tract; Barham the famous Lawyer; almoſt all the Jurours, and three hundred other, more or leſſe.

This year the title of the Lord Latimer, (which had flouriſhed in the Family of the Nevills ever ſince the days of King Henry the ſixth) was extinct in John Nevill, who dyed without iſſue male, and left a fair eſtate to four Daughters, whereof the eldeſt married Henry Earl of Northumberland, the ſecond Thomas Cecil, who was afterward Earl of Exceſter; the third, Sir William Cornwallis; and the fourth, Sir John Daverſe.

In Ireland the O-Moores and O-Connors, and others, whoſe Anceſtours the Earl of Suffex in Queen Maries days, had for their rebellion deprived of their Patrimony in Leyſe and Ophallie, did now break forth into a new Rebellion, under the conduct of Rorie Oge, that is, Raderick the younger: ſet on fire the Village of Naſſe, aſſault Lochlin; from whence being driven back by the valour of George Carew the Governour, he was afterward ſlain.

Out of England at this time there went into the Low-countries, John North, the Lord Norths eldeſt ſon; John Norriu, ſecond Son to the Lord Norris, Henry Cavendiſh, and Thomas Morgan Colonels, with many voluntaries, to learn Military experience. Thither alſo came Casimire the Elector Palatine's Son, with an Army of German Horſe and Foot, at the Queens charges: upon theſe Engliſh Volunteers go into the Low-countries, and do valiantly.

A Don John, assisted by the Prince of Parma, Mondragon, and other the best Commanders of Spain, confident of victory, flyeth furiously, before they expected him, yet after a long fight, was forced to retreat; but then turning again, and thinking to break through the Hedges, and brakes where the English and Scottish Voluntaries had placed themselves, was again repulsed; for the English and Scottish were so hot upon the matter, that casting away their garments, by reason of the hot weather, they fought in their shirts, which they made fast about them. In this battel Norris fought most valiantly, and had three Horses slain under him, as also Stuard the Scot, Bingham, and William Markham.

Now for comfort to the afflicted Provinces, there came at that time into the Netherlands, the Count Swarzenberg from the Emperor, Monfieur Belieure from the French King, and from the Queen
B of England, the Lord Cobham and Walsingham, with Commission to procure conditions of Peace, but returned without doing any thing, for that Don John refused to admit the Protestant Religion, and the Prince of Orange refused to return into Holland.

About this time Egremond Ratcliffe, Son to Henry Earl of Suffex, by his second wife, who had been a prime man in the rebellion of the North, and served now under Don John, was accused by the English fugitives, that he was sent under hand to kill Don John; which (whether true or false) he was thereupon taken and put to death. The Spaniards have affirmed, That Ratcliffe at his last end, confessed voluntarily, That he was freed out of the Tower of London, and moved by Walsingham's large promises to do this Fact; but the English that were present at his death, deny that he confessed any such thing, though the English Rebels did all they could to wrest this confession
C from him.

Egremond Ratcliffe is put to death in Flanders, and why:

At this very time, Don John, in the flower of his age, died of the Pestilence, or (as some say) of grief, as being neglected by the King of Spain his Brother; a man of an insatiable Ambition, who aimed first at the Kingdom of Tuniz, and after, of England; and who, without the privity of the French King, or King of Spain, had made a league with the Gaisers, for the defence of both Crowns.

John D' Au-Asia dyeth.

Alanson although very busie about the Belgick War, yet now began again to pursue the Marriage with Queen Elizabeth; for renewing of which suit, first was Bachervyle sent to the Queen; and soon after Ramboulet, from the French King; and within a moneth after that, Simier, a neat Courtier, and exquisitely learned in the Art of Love, accompanied with a great number of the French Nobility; whom the Queen at Richmond entertained in such loving manner, that Leicester began to rage, as if his hopes were now quite blasted. Certainly a little before, when Ashley, a Lady of the Queens Bed-chamber, mentioned the Earl of Leicester to her for a Husband, she with an angry countenance, replied, Dost thou think me so unlike my self, and so forgetful of Majesty, as to prefer my servant, whom I my self have advanced, before the greatest Princes of the Christian World?

The Duke D' Alanson solicits his suite with the Queen atreth.

But it is now time to return to the Scottish Affairs. The Earl of Morton, Regent of Scotland, though a man of great wisdom and valour, yet was now so overcome with covetousnesse, that he grew universally hated; and thereupon, with the joynt consent of the Nobility, the Administration of the Common-wealth was translated to the King, though he was yet but E twelve years old, and twelve of the chief Lords were appointed to attend him in Council, three of them by course for three moneths; amongst whom, the Earl of Morton for one, that they might not seem to cast him quite off. The King having taken upon him the Administration, sent presently the Earl of Dumferlin to Queen Elizabeth, acknowledging her great deserts towards him, and requesting to have the Treaty of Edenburgh, agreed on in the year 1559, to be confirmed, for the more happy restraining the robbers about the borders; and withall, That his ancient Patrimony in England; namely, the Lands granted to his Grand-father Matthew, Earl of Lenox, and the Countesse his Grand-mother, might be delivered into his hands who was the next Heir. The Queen readily promised the former demands, but stuck a little at the last, concerning the Patrimony; For she would not grant, That Arbella, the Daughter of F Charles the King of Scots Unkle, born in England, was the next Heir to the Lands in England; neither would she grant the Ambassadors proof out of History, That the Kings of Scots, born in Scotland, did anciently (without question) hold the Earldom of Huntington by Right of Inheritance. Yet she commanded a Sequestration to be made of the Revenues of those Lands; by Burleigh Master of the Wards; and willeth the King, That out of the goods of the Earl of Lenox in Scotland, satisfaction might be made to his Grand-mothers Creditors here. For she took it in ill part, that the King had recalled the Infeoffment of the Earldom of Lenox (made to his Unkle Charles and his Heirs) after the death of Charles, to the prejudice (as was suggested to her) of Arbella; although indeed, it be a Priviledge of the Kings of Scotland, That they may recall Donations made in their minority.

The Earl of Morton Regent of Scotland, is removed, and the King though but twelve years old is admitted to govern.

G The Earl of Morton in the mean while, not enduring the disgrace to be outed of his Regency, regarded not the Prescript Form of Government lately set down, but drew the Administration of all matters to himself, and kept the King in his own power; at the Castle of Sterling, admitting none to his presence, but whom he pleased. At this presumption, the Lords growing angry, made the Earl of Atboll their Captain, and in the Kings name levied a great Army, and were ready to encounter Morton; but by the Intercession of Robert Bowes, the English Ambassadour, they were stayed from fighting; and Morton presently betook himself home, and the Earl of Atboll soon after dyed, not without suspicion of being poysoned.

The King of Spain and the Pope conspire against Queen Elizabeth.

Thomas Stukeley is by the Pope honoured with the greatest dignities, and sent into Ireland. But diverted by the King of Portugal, is slain in Africa.

Alexander Farnese Prince of Parma is made Governour of the Netherlands.

Alanson comes privately into England, and hath secret conference with the Queen. Burleigh and others are enjoined to consult of the marriage Covenants. The title of Lord D^r Aubigny from whence it came.

Esme Steward made first Duke of Lenox.

At this time the King of Spain, and Pope Gregory the thirteenth held secret Consultation, to A invade at once both England and Ireland, and to work the absolute ruine of Queen Elizabeth; The Pope to gain the Kingdom of Ireland for his Son James Buon of Campagno, whom he had made Marquess of Vincola: The King of Spain secretly to relieve the Irish Rebels, as Queen Elizabeth did the Dutch, while friendship in words was upheld on both sides: and being known, That the greatest strength of England consisted in the Navy Royal, and Merchants Ships, it was advised, that the Italian and Dutch Merchants should hire these Ships for long Voyages; to the end that while they were absent, the Queens Navy might be surprised with a greater Fleet: and at that time Thomas Stukeley, an English iugitive, should joyn himself to the Irish Rebels with new Forces. For he making great boast, and promising the Kingdom of Ireland to the Popes Bastard Son, had had so insinuated himself into grace with the ambitious old man, that he adorned him with the B Titles of Marquess of Lemster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount Morogh, and Baron of Rosse (the principal dignities of Ireland) and made him Commander over eight hundred Italian Souldiers, to be employed in the Irish War. With which Forces Stukeley setting sail from Civita Vecchia, arrived at length in Portingal, where he and his Forces were by the divine Providence diverted another way. For Sebastian King of Portingal (to whom the chief Command in this Expedition against England was assigned) being first to dispatch a War in Africa, in aid of Mahomet Abdall, Son to the King of Fesse, perswaded Stukeley to go along with him into Mauritania, together with his Italian Souldiers, and then afterward they would go together against Ireland: To this motion Stukeley soon agreed, and therein agreed with his destiny; for in that memorable Battel where three Kings were slain, both he and Sebastian lost their lives.

At this time Sir Henry Sidney (who had been Deputy of Ireland at several times eleven years) delivered up his Deputy-ship to Sir William Drury, President of Munster: Such a Deputy, for good Government, that if any have equalled him, none have exceeded him.

It was now the year 1579, and the two and twentieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when John Casimire, Son of Frederick the third, Count Palatine of the Rhine, came into England; where, after he had been entertained with Tiltings and Jests, made Knight of the Garter (the Queen tying the Garter about his leg) and rewarded with a yearly pension, he returned. And now was Alexander Farnese, Prince of Parma, made Governour of the Netherlands by the King of Spain, and Queen Elizabeth supplied the States with a great sum of mony; for which William Davison brought into England the ancient precious Habiliments of the Family of Burgundy, and their Costly Vessels, D laid to pawn by Matthew of Austria and the States.

Simier in the mean time here in England, ceaseth not by all amorous devises to perswade the Queen to marry Alanson; wherein he drew her so far, that the Earl of Leicester gave out, he crept into the Queens affection by Love-potions and unlawful Arts: and Simier on the other side endeavoured by all means to cast down Leicester, discovering his marriage with the Earl of Essex widow: whereat the Queen grew so angry, that she confined him to the Castle at Greenwich, and had meant to have him committed to the Tower, but that the Earl of Suffex (though his greatest Adversary) dissuaded her: telling her that none ought to be molested for contracting lawful Matrimonie. But Leicester notwithstanding was so provoked for his confining, that he was bent to revenge it, and if it be true, as some said, he had suborned one Tinder a Yeoman of the Guard to murder Simier. E Sure it is the Queen by Proclamation commanded that no person should offer injury to the Embassadour or any of his servants. At which time it fell out that as the Queen, together with Simier, the Earl of Lincoln, and Hatton Vice-Chamberlain were rowed in a barge to Greenwich, a young man shooting off a Harquebus out of a boat, shot one of the rowers in the Queens Barge through the arm with a bullet, who was presently taken and led to the Gallows, but upon solemn Protestation, that he did it unwillingly, and out of no malicious intent, he was let go and pardoned. Some would have perswaded the Queen that he was purposely suborned to shoot either her or the French Embassadour: but she was so far from suspecting her subjects, that she would often say, She would not believe any thing against them which a mother would not believe against her children.

After a few days Alanson himself came privately into England with only one or two attendants, and came to the Queen at Greenwich, at a time when she thought not of it; they had secret conference together, all parties being sent away: after which, being seen of very few, he returned home; but within a moneth or two after the Queen enjoined the Lord Burleigh Treasurer, the Earl of Suffex, Leicester, Hatton and Walsingham, seriously to weigh both the dangers, and the commodities likely to arise from the marriage with him, and to consult with Simier concerning the marriage Covenants.

As in England there was some fear of this Frenchman: so in Scotland at this time of another Frenchman, called Esme Steward, Lord of Aubigny, who came now into Scotland to visit the King his cousin. He was the Son of John Steward Brother to Matthew Steward Earl of Lenox the Kings G Grand-father, and had denomination from Aubigny in France, which title Charles the seventh King of France had anciently conferred upon John Steward of the Family of Lenox, who being Countable of the Scottish Army in France, vanquished the English in one battail, and was slain by them in another: and from that time the title belonged to the younger-descent of that house. This Esme Steward, the King embraced with exceeding great love, made him Lord Chamberlain of Scotland, and Captain of the Castle of Dumbarton, and created him first Earl and then Duke of Lenox. The fear from this man was; because he was devoted to the Guises and the Popish religion; and

A and that which encreased the fear from this man, because he applyed himself to Mortons adversaries: and mediated to have Thomias Carre Lord of Fernsburch called home, who of all men was most addicted to the Queen of Scots.

About this time Queen Elizabeth, at the request of William Harbouzne an English man, procured a grant from the Turkish Emperour for the English Merchants to exercise free traffick in all places of his Dominions, as well as Venetians, Polanders, and other neighbouring Nations; whereupon they set up first the Company of Turkie Merchants; managing a most gainful Trade at Constantinople, Alexandria, Egypt, Aleppo, Cyprus, and other parts of Asia, bringing home Spices, Perfumes, unwrought Silks, Tapistrie, Indico, Corrants, and the like.

The Turkie Merchants when set up.

This year dyed Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; but who by vertue of an Act of Parliament, always exercised the Jurisdiction of Lord Chancellor; a very fat man, but singularly wise, and a chief prop of the Queens Privy Council: In whose place succeeded Sir Thomas Bromley, the Queens Solicitor, with the Title of Lord Chancellor England.

In Ireland at this time, in the Province of Munster James Fitz Morris kindled a new fire of Rebellion; for after his former submission upon his knees, vowing all Obedience to the Queen, he stole away into France, and promised the French King, if he would lend him assistance, to make him King of Ireland. But being by him slighted, he went into Spain, and made the like offer to the King there. The King of Spain sent him to the Pope, from whom (by means of Nicholas Sanders, an English Priest, and Alan an Irish man, both Doctors of Divinity) he obtained a little money, a Legats Authority for Sanders, a consecrated Banner, and Letters of Commendation to the Catholick King. And returning from Spain with those Divines, three Ships, and a few men, he landed at Smerwick Kerry, a demy Island in the West part of Ireland, about the first day of July; where (the place being first of all consecrated by the Priests) he built a Fort, and brought the Ships close under it; but these were presently set upon and carried away, by Thomas Courtney, and thereby the Spaniards deprived of their opportunity of coming thither by Sea. But now John and James, Brothers to the Earl of Desmond, gathering together a small number of Irish, joyn themselves presently with their kinsman Fitz Morris. Yet the Spaniards seeing that but a very few Irish, and those unarmed, came unto them, began to distrust the estate they were in, and to cry out, That they were undone; whom Fitz Morris heartened the best he could, telling them that Supplies were presently to come. And going himself to get more company, he passed through the Land of his Cousin William a Burgh, who though he had been a Rebel before, yet was now grown loyal, so as there fell out a skirmish between them; in which Fitz Morris being stricken through with a Pike, and shot into the head with a leaden bullet, died in the place, and most of his Company with him; but withall, two of William Burghs Sons were in that skirmish slain also; when the Queen, to comfort him for the losse of his Sons, adorned him with the Dignity of Baron of Castle Connell, and rewarded him with a yearly Pension besides: which favours so overwhelmed him with joy, that he lived but a short while after. And now Sir William Drury the Deputy growing very sick, appointed Sir Nicholas Malby then Governour of Connaght to be President of Munster, and General of the Army; at which time, the Earl of Desmond, who had all this while made a shew of Loyalty, breaks openly out into Rebellion; when now Drury the Deputy dying at Waterford, by his death Malbys Authority ceasing, Sir William Pelham is by the Council chosen Justice of Ireland, with the Authority of Vice-roy, until such time as a Deputy were appointed, and the Earl of Ormond is made President of Munster. Pelham goeth into Munster, and sendeth for the Earl of Desmond, who refusing to come, is thereupon proclaimed Traytor, and an enemy to the State; and this being published, the Justice committed the following the War to the Earl of Ormond, who slaying most of the Spaniards, and adherents to Desmond, compelleth him to send his Wife to the Justice, to beg his pardon.

Fitz Morris raiseth a Rebellion in Ireland, but is by William a Burgh encountered and slain.

The Lord Justice Pelham now certified, that Arthur Lord Gray was landed with authority to be Deputy of Ireland, at Munster delivereth the Army to George Bourcquier the Son of John, second Earl of Bathe, of that name, and himself returneth to Dublin, to deliver up the Province to his Successor. The Lord Gray at his landing, before he received the Sword, hearing where the Rebels had their Randevouz, marched towards them, who presently betake themselves to Glandilough, a grassie Valley, and beset thick with Trees, where they who dwell neer, scarce know the winding out; yet the Deputy (taking one Cosbie an old man, well acquainted with the place, to be his leader) entred into it, where he lost divers of his men, namely, Peter Carew the younger, George Moore, Audley and Cosbie himself that was his Leader.

The Earl of Desmond rebels, Sir William Pelham is made Justice of Ireland.

A short time after, there landed at Smerwick in Kerry under the command of San Joseph an Italian, about seven hundred Italian Souldiers, who fortifie the place, and name it Fort del Or: Whereupon the Deputy sent a Trumpeter to the Fort to demand who they were, what they had to do in Ireland, and who sent them; withall commanding them to depart immediately. But they replied, That some of them were sent from his Holiness, other from the Catholick King, upon whom the Pope had bestowed the Kingdom of Ireland, for that Queen Elizabeth (by reason of heresie) hath forfeited the Right unto her; and therefore what they had gotten, they would maintain. Upon this the Deputy prepares for battery, let flies his Ordnance four days together; in which time the Spaniards once or twice make Sallies out, to their own losse much, but not an English man slain, but only John Cheek, a courageous young Gentleman, Son to Sir John Cheek, a learned Knight. And now San Joseph, who commanded the Fort, a white-liver'd Souldier, terrified with the continual Battery, and having no hope of relief, either from the King of Spain, or Desmond (contrary to the will of all his Souldiers) he set up a white Flag, and A desired Parlee, but Parlee was denied, because he had combined with Rebels, with whom it is not lawful to hold Parlee. Then he demanded that his Company might passe away with their Bagge, but neither would this be granted. Then he required that some of the chieffer sort might have leave to depart; but neither could this be obtained. At last, when they could prevail in nothing, they hanged out the white Flag again, and submitted themselves absolutely, without any condition, to the Deputies mercy, who presently consulteth how to deal with them, and this was the Case; Their number was well-near as great as the English; there was present fear of danger from the Rebels; and the English were so destitute of meat and apparel, that they were ready to mutiny, unlesse they might have the spoil granted them; and besides, there were no ships to send them away if they were spared: For these Reasons it was concluded (the Deputy B gain-saying, and letting tears fall) That only the Leaders should be saved, the rest slain, and all the Irish hanged up; which was presently put in execution, to the great disliking of the Queen, who detested the slaughter of such as yeelded themselves, and would not accept of any excuses or allegations.

And yet more cruelty then this was at that time committed in the Netherlands; for John Norris, and Oliver Temple, English Commanders, together with some Companies of Dutch, setting out early one morning, took Mechlyn a wealthy Town of Brabant, at an assault with Ladders; where they promiscuously murdered both Citizens and religious persons, offering violence even upon the dead, taking away Grave-stones, which were sent into England to be sold. C

About this time certain English Priests, who were fled into the Netherlands, in the year 1568.
by the procurement of William Allen, an Oxford Scholar, joyned themselves to study at Dorray, where they entred into a Collegiate Form of Government; to whom the Pope allowed a yearly Pension. But tumults arising in the Low-countries, and the English Fugitives being commanded by the King of Spains Deputy to depart from thence, other the like Colleges, for the training up of the English youth, were erected, one at Rheims by the Guises, and another at Rome by Pope Gregory the thirteenth, which always afforded new supplies of Priests for England, when the old failed, who should spread abroad the seeds of the Romish Religion here amongst us; from whence those Colleges had the name of Seminaries, and they called Seminary-Priests D who were trained up in them. In these Seminaries, amongst other Disputations, it was concluded, That the Pope hath such fulnesse of Power, by divine Right, over the whole Christian world, both in Ecclesiastical and Secular matters, that by vertue thereof, it is lawful for him to excommunicate Kings, absolve their subjects from their Oath of Allegiance, and deprive them of their Kingdoms. From these Seminaries at this time, there came two into England, Robert Parsons, and Edmund Campian, both of them English men, and Jesuites. Parsons was born in Somerset-shire, a fierce and rough conditioned fellow; Campian was a Londoner, of a milder disposition. They had been both brought up in Oxford; Campian a Fellow of S. Johns College, and had been Proctor in the year 1569; and when he was made Deacon, counterfeited himself to be a Protestant, till such time as he slipped out of England. Parsons was of Baylioll College, where he made open profession of the Protestant Religion, till for dishonest E carriage, he was expelled the House, and then fled to the Popish Party. Both these came privily into England, in the disguise one while of Souldiers, another while of Noble-men; sometimes like English Ministers, and sometimes in the habit of Apparitors. Parsons, who was made the Superior, brake forth into such open words amongst the Papists, about deposing the Queen, that some of themselves had a purpose to complain of him to the Magistrates.
Campian, though something more moderate, yet in a Writing provoked the English Ministers to a dispute; and published in Latine an elegant Book of his ten Reasons, in maintenance of of the Doctrine of the Romish Church; as Parsons in like manner, set forth another violent Pamphlet against Clark, who had written modestly against Campians Provocation. But Doctor Whitaker soundly confuted Campian, who being after a year apprehended, and put upon the Rack, F was afterward brought out to a Disputation; where he scarcely made good the great fame that went of him.

In this year was the return of Captain Drake from his incredible Voyage round about the World (which Magellan had before attempted, but died in the Voyage) whereof to relate all particular accidents, would require a large Volume: It may suffice in this place, to deliver some special passages. He was born of mean parentage in Devonshire, yet had a great man (Francis Russel, after Earl of Bedford) to be his God-father. His father, in King Henry the eight's time, being persecuted for a Protestant, changed his Soyl, and lived close in Kent. King Henry being dead, he got a place amongst the Mariners of the Queens Navy, to read Prayers, and afterward bound his son Francis to a Ship-Master, who in a Ship which went to and fro upon the Coast with Commo- G dities, one while to Zealand, another while to France, training him up to pains and skill at Sea; and afterward dying, took such a liking to him, that he bequeathed his Barque to him by his Will:
This Barque Drake sold, and then in the year 1567. went with Sir John Hawkins into America; in which Voyage he unfortunately lost all he had. Five years after, having gotten again a good sum of money by Trading and Piracy, (which the Preacher of his Ship told him was lawful) he bought a Ship of War, and two small Vessels with which he set Sail again for America, where his first Prize was great store of Gold and Silver, carried over the Mountains upon Mules;
whereof

A whereof the Gold he brought to his Ships, but left the Silver, hiding it under ground : After this, he fired a great place of Traffique, called, The Crosse, at the River Chiruge, when roaming to and fro upon the Mountains, he espied the South Sea ; where falling upon his knees, he craved assistance of Almighty God, to finde out that passage, which he reserveth for another Voyage ; and for the present, having gotten much riches, he returned home. Afterwards, in the year 1577: the thirteenth day of November, with five Ships, and Sea-men to the number 163, he set sail from Plimmouth, for the Southern Sea, and within five and twenty days, came to Cantyne, a Cape in Barbary, and then sailed along by the Isle of Fogo, which sends forth flames of Sulphur ; and being now under the Line, he let every one in his Ships blood. The sixteenth of April, entering into the mouth of the Plate, they espied a world of Sea-Calves ; in which place John Doughty, the

B next to Drake in Authority, was called in question for raising Sedition in the Navy, who being found guilty, was beheaded. Some report, That Drake had charge given him from the Earl of Leicester, to make away Doughty upon some pretence or other, for that he had said, that the Earl of Essex was craftily made away by Leicester : The twentieth of August, two of his Ships he turneth off, and with other three came to the Sea, which they call, The Strait of Magellan. The Sixth of September, entering into the wide Southern Ocean, which they call, The Pacificque Sea, he found it out of measure troublous, so that his Ships were here by Tempests dispersed ; in one of which, John Winter was Master, who returned back into England ; Drake himself, with only one Ship, coasted along the Shore, till he came to the Isle Moueba, from whence loosing, he lighted upon a fellow fishing in a little Boat, who shewed him where a Spanish Ship laden with Treasure

Doughty beheaded by Drake.

C lay ; Drake making towards it, the Spaniards thought him to be their own Countreyman, and thereupon invited him to come on ; but he getting a boord presently shut the Spaniards (being not above eight persons) under hatches, and took the Ship, in which was four hundred pound weight of gold. At Taurapasa, going again to shoar, he found a Spaniard sleeping by the Sea-side, who had lying by him twenty bars of massie Silver to the value of four thousand Duckats, which he bid his followers take amongst them, the Spaniard still sleeping. After this, going into the Port of Africa, he found there three Vessels without any Mariners in them ; wherein, besides other wares, were seven and fifty silver bricks, each of which weighed twenty pound ; From hence, Tyding it to Lime, he found twelve Ships in one Road, and in them great store of Silks, and a Chest full of money coined, but not so much as a Ship-boy aboard ; (such security there was in that Coast :) Then putting to Sea with those Ships, he followed the rich Ship called the Cacofoga ; and by the way met with a small Ship, without Ordinance or other Arms, out of which he took fourscore pound weight of Gold, a golden Crucifix, and some Emraulds of a fingers length. The first day of March, he overtook the Cacofoga, set upon her, and took her ; and in her, besides jewels, fourscore pound weight of Gold, thirteen Chests of Silver ready coyned, and as much Silver as would Ballast a Ship. And now thinking he had gained wealth enough, he resolved to return home ; and so on the third of Novemb. 1580. he landed at Plimmouth, having sayled round about the World, in the space of three years ; to the great admiration of all that know what compasse the world is of.

How he gained his great Treasure.

The Queen welcomed him home, but made a sequestration of the goods, that they might be ready if the King of Spain required them ; and commanded the Ship to be drawn on shoar near Desford for a monument (where the carkasse of it is yet to be seen) and her self feasted in it, at which time she Knighted Captain Drake. But Bernardine Mendoza, the King of Spains Embassadour in England, began to rage ; and earnestly demanded Restitution of the Goods, and complained, that the English sailed upon the Indian Sea. To whom it was answered ; That the goods were sequestred, and ready to make the King of Spain satisfaction, although the Queen had expended against the Rebels, whom the Spaniard had excited in England and Ireland, more money then that which Drake brought home. And as for sayling on the Indian Sea, that it was as lawful for the Queens subjects as his, seeing the Sea and the Air are common for all to use. Norwithstanding, to Pedro Sebur, the King of Spain's Agent in this businesse, a great sum of money was repaid, which was not restored to them to whom it belonged, but employed to the Spaniards Wars in the Low-Countryes, as was known after, when it was too late.

But at this time, when Jackman and Pett, two skilful Pilots, were sent forth with two Ships by the Londoners, to finde out a shorter cut to the East-Indies, by the North-West passage ; they had not the like Success ; for a few Leagues beyond the Isles of Vaygato, they met with such uncertain Tydes, so many Shallows, and such Mountains of Ice, that they could go no further, and had much ado to return home.

About this time, Henry Fitz Allen, Earl of Arundel died, in whom the Surname of a most Noble Family ended, which had flourished in this Honour for above three hundred years, from Richard Fitz Alan ; who being descended from the Albanets (ancient Earls of Arundel and Sussex, in the G Reign of King Edward the first) obtained the Title of Earl, by reason of the possession of Arundel Castle, without Creation. He had three Daughters by his Wife Katherine, Daughter to Thomas Grays, Marquess of Dorset, all whom he out-lived ; Henry, a young man of great hope, who dyed at Brussels ; Joan, Wife to the Lord Lumley ; and Mary, who being married to Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, brought forth Philip, in her Right, Earl of Arundel.

Henry Fitz Allen Earl of Arundel dies, in whom ended the Surname of that Noble Family.

In Ireland, Arthur Lord Gray the Deputy, going against the O Connors, who raised stirs in Opbalie, putteth to death Hugh O Moley, quieteth all that Quarter, even the Families of the Mogbigans, and the Title of O Charles, and in the very beginning suppresseth a conspiracy which was breaking forth, by putting that honour.

The possession of Arundel Castle gives the Title of that honour.

to death the Lord Nogent; who being confident in his own innocency, when the Deputy promised A to save his life, if he would but confesse himself guilty, chose rather to die and be held guiltlesse, then to live in infamy, by betraying his own Innocency. With whose death the Queen was extremely displeased, as by which she was made a Patronesse of cruelty, to her great dishonour. But the Deputy knew with what kinde of people he dealt, and by this example of severity, brought Turlough Leymigh to accept conditions of Peace; and the O'Brians, and Cavenaghs (Rebellious Families in Leinster) humbly to crave Peace also, and to offer Hostages.

The Earl of Morton is beheaded, as necessary to the murder of the Kings Father.

In Scotland at this time, great jealousie was had of Lenox, Lord of Aubigny, left, being in so great favour with the King, he should allure him to marry into France, and bring into Scotland the Popish Religion. Whereupon (although he purged himself by letters to Queen Elizabeth, and profered himself to be a Protestant) yet many courses were taken to sequester him from the B King; but so far from taking effect, that on the contrary, the Earl of Morton (who among all other was most addicted to the English) was soon after accused of Treason by the Earl of Arran, and cast into prison; and not long after (notwithstanding all the means the Queen could use to save him) was beheaded, as convicted to be accessory to the murder of the Kings Father. Whereupon the Earl of Angus, and other, who laboured for Morton, fled straightways into England.

But is afterward vanquished, wounded, and a great number of his men slain.

In these Dutch wars the English learn to be Drunkards.

The King of Spain seizeth upon the Kingdom of Portingal, and putteth Don Antonio to flight.

In the Low-Countries about this time, the Count Rheinberg proceeded victoriously for the King of Spain, and beleaguer'd Stenwick in Freezland; against whom the States sent Norris General of the Field, who put the Rheinburghs Company to the worst, and raised the Siege: but afterward joyning Battel with Verduge the Spaniard at Northone, even when the Victory was almost gotten C (Roger Williams having put the enemies to flight) the Fortune of the War turned, Norris is vanquished, wounded, and a great number of his men slain; amongst whom were Cotton, Fitz Williams, and Bishop, stout Commanders. Here it must not be omitted, That the English (who of all the dwellers in the Northern parts of the World, were hitherto the least Drinkers, and deserved praise for their sobriety) in these Dutch Wars learned to be Drunkards; and brought the vice so far to over-spread the Kingdom, that Laws were fain to be enacted for representing it.

Whom Queen Elizabeth received, and relieved.

But now whilst the States and the King of Spain contend about a few Towns in the Low-Countries, he seizeth upon the whole Kingdom of Portingal. For the last year, Henry, King of Portingal dying, many Competitors challenge the Kingdom; as the Duke of Savoy, the Prince of D Parma's Son, Katherine Bracant, and the Queen of France. But Philip King of Spain, the Son of Henries eldest Sister, putting the case to his Divines and Lawyers, and adjuring them to pronounce to whom of right it belonged, they pronounced, For him: whereupon he sent Duke D'Alva, who put to flight Antonio, whom the people had elected King, and within seventy days subdued all Portingal. The Queen of France angry hereat, and enviously beholding the King of Spain's Dominions thus enlarged (being now Master of Portingal, the East-Indies and many Islands besides) adviseth, amongst other Princes, Queen Elizabeth, to bethink themselves in time, of restraining his so excessive Dominions. Whereupon the Queen received Don Antonio, and lovingly relieved him, which she thought might be done without any breach of the League with Spain, seeing Don Antonio was descended of English blood, and of the House of Lancaster; and that no Caution was in the League, That the Portuger should not be admitted into England. E

And Articles of the Marriage are agreed on.

And now the Queen-Mother of France, and the King her Son, more eagerly then ever, pursue the Match with Alanson, now Duke of Anjou; for the transacting whereof, they sent in Ambassage into England, Francis Bourbon, Prince of Dauphine, Arthur Cosse, Marshal of France, and many other honourable Personages, who were entertained with great respect (a House being purposely built at Westminster for that use, royally furnished; Tiltings and Jufts proclaimed, by Philip Earl of Arundel, Frederick Baron of Windfor, Sir Philip Sidney, and Sir Fulk Grevill, against all comers. The Delegates that were to confer with the French concerning the marriage, were Sir William Cecil, Lord Treasurer; Edward Earl of Lincoln, Lord Admiral; Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; F Sir Christopher Hatton, and Sir Francis Walsingham, Secretary; by whom, Covenants of Marriage were at length agreed on; First, that the Duke of Anjou, and the Queen of England, within six weeks after the ratification of the Articles, should contract Matrimony, and the rest, most of them such as were before agreed on, in the Marriage between Queen Mary and King Philip, chiefly consisting in conferring Honour upon the Duke, but Power upon the Queen. It was also agreed, That all particulars should be ratified within two Moneths, by the faithful Promise and Oath of the French King, for him and his Heirs, and a Reservation also was added apart, with the Hands and Seals of every one of the Delegates, That Queen Elizabeth is not bound to finish the Marriage, until she and the Duke have given each other satisfaction in some Particulars, and have certified the French King of the same within six weeks. Before those six weeks were expired, G Simier, Secretary to the Council, is sent into France, to require the King of France his Confirmation: The King will not hear him, but presseth to have the Marriage accomplished, as it was contracted, and that nothing else was to be done. Simier on the other side, sheweth by the Articles, That a League offensive and defensive must first be concluded: This the French King disclaimeth: Whereupon Walsingham is presently sent to compose this difference, who jointly with Henry Cobham, the Ambassadour in ordinary, and Simier, alledgeth to the French King these Particul. rs, That Queen Elizabeth for no other reason was willing to marry, but for ^A for the satisfaction of her people; and seeing many Impediments were come in the way since the first Treaty, namely the Civil War in France, and the Dukes engagement in a War with Spain, which makes the wisest of her Subjects now to be against the Match: This hath made her to deter the accomplishment of it, although her affection be still constant toward the Duke. For this cause the Queen would have no further Treaty to be held, till the French Duke be freed from the Spanish war, and a League of mutual offence and defence be agreed on. The French King willingly accepted of the League defensive; but of the offensive he would hear no speech, till the marriage were finished.

Not long after, the French Duke himself came into England, having with good successe raised the Siege of Cambray; he was here received with as great humanity as he could wish, and nothing omitted, whereby he might judge himself to be truly welcome: Insomuch that in November, when the Anniversary of the Queens Inauguration came to be solemnized, the Queen (while they were in Love conference) drew a Ring off from her finger, and put it upon his, upon some private conditions. The standers by imagined, that by this Ceremony the marriage was confirmed between them; and Aldegonde Governour of Antwerp being there, presently dispatched messengers into the Low-Countries, to give notice of it; and thereupon Bonfires were made, and all shews of rejoycing. But the Earl of Leicester (who privily plotted to crosse the Match) Hatton the Vice-chamberlain, and Secretary Walsingham, fret and are enraged, as if the Kingdom, the Queen and Religion, were now utterly overthrown. The Maids of Honour, and Ladies that were familiar with the Queen, made grievous lamentation, and so terrified and daunted her, that she could take no rest that night. The next day, she calleth to her the French Duke, and causing all company to go aside, they privately entertain a long discourse. At length the Duke returning to his lodging, cast the Ring away from him, and after a while takes it up again, terribly exclaiming against the levity and inconsistency of Women.

The Queen at this time was much troubled at a Book lately put forth, with this Title, The Gulph wherein England will be swallowed, by the French Marriage: whereof, conceiving that some Puritan was the Author, it made her highly displeased with the Puritans: whereupon within a few days, John Stubbes of Lincolns-Inne, a zealous Professor, and the Author of this Book, (whose sister, Thomas Cartwright, the Father of the Puritans, had married) William Page that dispersed the copies, and Singleton the Printer, were apprehended, against whom Sentence was pronounced, That their Right hand should be cut off, by virtue of a Law made in the Reign of Philip and Mary, against the Authors and dispersers of Seditious Writings, (though the chief Lawyers and Judges of the Kingdom could not agree concerning the force of that Statute) Hereupon Stubbes and Page were brought to the Scaffold, made of purpose, in the Market place at Westminster, and their right hands with a Butchers knife and a mallet cut off by the wrist; the Printer was pardoned. At that time, Stubbs when his right hand was cut off, uncovered his head with the left, and cried out, God save the Queen, to the great amazement of all the beholders.

At this time the Queen, upon importunate suit of her Councel, gave way, that Edmund Campian, Ralph Sherwin, and Alexander Bryant, Priests, should be called to the Bar, who being accused by virtue of a Law made in the five and twentieth year of King Edward the third, to have plotted the ruine of the Queen and Kingdom; to be adhering to the Pope, the Queens enemy, and coming into England, to raise Forces against the State, were then condemned of High-treason, and accordingly executed. Campian after he was convicted, being demanded; First, whether Queen Elizabeth were a lawful Queen? would make no answer; afterward, Whether he would stand for the Queen, or for the Pope, if he should send an Army against the Queen; he plainly professed, That he would be of the Popes side, and witnessed so much under his hand. After this some other Papists upon the like occasion were also put to death, which the Queen rather necessarily, then willingly assented to, as being unwilling to force the conscience of any. These, and the like exorbitances of Papists, were cause, that new and strict Laws were enacted against them the Parliament following, which began the next January.

^F The French Duke after three moneths abode in England, took his Journey in February, into the Low-Countries, whom the Queen her self brought on his way as far as Canterbury; and then commanded the Earl of Leicester, the Lord Charles Howard, Hunsdon, Willoughby, Windsor, Sheffield, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Francis Russel, Sir George Bourcier, and some other prime Knights to accompany him to Antwerp, where he is made Duke of Brabant, Limbourg, and Lorrain; for the Dutch had long before removed the King of Spains Government, and quitted the people from their oath of Allegiance, that it might be in their power to choose any other Prince. Here the Duke of Ajou gave free leave to exercise the Roman Religion, to as many as would swear Fealty to him, and abjure the King of Spains authority: but after all, having spent a great masse of money, with which he was supplied from England; and observing that only vain and empty titles were conferred upon him, while the States held all the Dominion in their own hands, he rashly enterprized an assault upon Antwerp, and some other Towns, and shortly departed without any great matter performed.

At this time Queen Elizabeth, as well to get her some friends, as she had procured her self many enemies; received into the Order of the Garter, Frederick the second King of Denmark; to whom she employed Sir Peregrine Bertie (whom she had lately made Lord Willoughby of Eresby) to invest him.

The Duke of Ajou comes himself into England.

And in a private conference with the Queen, she draws a Ring off from her finger and put it upon his.

The English Lords and Ladies, imagining the marriage to be confirmed, fret exceedingly.

The next day she calleth the French Duke to her, and after a long discourse, made him exclaim against the Inconstancy of women; Stubbes and Page have their Right hands cut off for writing a seditious Book against the marriage.

Campian, Sherwin and Bryant Priests are executed.

The Duke of Ajou goes out of England, whom the Queen brought on his way as far as Canterbury.

Sir Peregrine Bertie made Lord Willoughby of Eresby.

But now to prevent the Duke of Guyse design in Scotland, which was to make use of the Duke of Lenox favour with the King, to withdraw his affection from the English: William Reuben, whom the King had lately made Earl of Gowry, endeavoured with others, by all means to remove Lenox, and the Earl of Arran from the King; and so, while Lenox was gone from Perth, (where the King at that time was) to Edinburgh, and Arran was also absent on a journey: the Earls Gowry, Marre, Lindsey, and other, taking the opportunity, invited the King to the Castle of Reuben, and there detained him, not permitting him to walk abroad: All his trusty servants they removed from about him, Arran they cast in Prison, enforced the King to call home the Earl of Angus, and to send away Lenox into France, who being a man of a soft and gentle disposition, for the Kings safety readily consented; and not content with all this, they compelled the King by his Letters to Queen Elizabeth, to approve and allow of this his thralldom. The Queen of Scots in the mean while, bewailing her own hard fortune, and the distresse of the King her Son, layeth open the same in a large Letter, written to the Queen in French: With which Letter, Queen Elizabeth being somewhat affected, sent unto her Robert Beal Clerk of the Council, to expostulate with her concerning the querulous writing, and joyntly with the Earl of Shrewsbury, to treat of the setting her at liberty. And indeed serious consultations was held at the Councell Table about it, and the most were of opinion, that upon certain conditions she should have her liberty; but the Scottish of the English faction opposing it, nothing was effected.

Soon after this, the King sent Colonel William Steward, and John Colvill to Queen Elizabeth, profering all manner of respect and observance, and requesting her advice for quieting the tumults in Scotland, and also for his contracting of marriage. At which time, news was brought, that the Duke of Lenox was dead in France, who departing this life at Paris, even at the very point of death, as often times before, made open profession of the Protestant Religion; thereby confuting those who had maliciously traduced him for a Papist. After whose death, when the surprisers of the King were lift up in their own conceits, as thinking they had him safe enough; He on a sudden, (though scarce eighteen years of age) with some few others, conveyed himself to the Castle of S. Andrews, to whom the Nobility presently repaired, bringing Armed Bands with them, as fearing some danger might befall him. Afterwards, in fair words he advised some of his surprizers to go from the Court, for avoiding of tumult, and promising them pardon, if they would crave it. But Gowry only asked pardon, and submitted himself, using this distinction, That he had not offended in matter, but in form only; and then the King sent for the Earl of Arran to the Court, and respected him as his intimate friend, imploying him to compose the differences amongst the Nobility, and to purge the Kingdom and his own Court from civil dissensions.

Walsingham is sent to the K. of Scots, to ad-

heed of evil Counsellours: and the Kings
Answer.

While he is sedulous in these cares, comes Sir Francis Walsingham from Queen Elizabeth, to advise him not to be led away by evil Counsellors to the destruction of both Kingdoms. He findeth the King accompanied with the flower of the Nobility, and beholdeth another manner of Majesty then he looked for in Scotland: Having Audience given him, he put the King in minde, of what the Queen out of Ilocrates, in private Letters had formerly admonished him: That a Prince must be such a lover of Truth, that more credit may be given to his bare word, then to anothers oath; and in many words advised him, to beware now in his youth of evil Counsellours, and always to be like himself. The King answered, that he was an absolute Prince, and would not that others should appoint him Counsellours whom he liked not; but that he had long since devoted the first-fruits of his amity to the Queen of England, his dear Sister, and doth now willingly make profer of the same. Walsingham now dealt with him further; not to lay to the Queens charge what broyls had lately fallen out in Scotland; sheweth, how beneficial to him, and to both Kingdoms Amity had been hitherto, and would be in time to come also, so it were not neglected; and that the same might the better be confirmed, if the variance between the Nobility were laid asleep, by a Law of Oblivion enacted in Parliament, the Peers which now were removed from the Court called back again, Religion looked into, and a firm League concluded between both Kingdoms. The King made answer, that he gladly embraced Amity with England, and that he would constantly defend the Religion already established: Afterward he lovingly dismissed Walsingham, though he held him no good friend to him and his Mother; and carefully looking to matters with understanding, even above his years, proposed and profered reconciliation to those that had surprized him, if within a limited time they asked pardon; which they were so far from doing, that they entred into new consultations to surprize him again; whereupon they are commanded within a set time to leave the Kingdom, of which number, Marre, Glames, Paslet, and some other, betook themselves into Ireland; Boyde, Zester Weeme, Lochevin, into the Low-countrie; Dumfermilin into France; the Earl of Angus is confined to his Earldom, Gowry only to his own ruine stayeth behinde after the limited time, hatching new devises.

About this time happened a difference, and thereupon a War, between the Emperours of Muscovia, and the King of Sweden; when John King of Sweden, doubting himself to be no fit Match for the Emperour, sent a Royal Ambassage to Queen Elizabeth, requesting her to intercede for him to the Emperour; which she did without delay, and by her Ambassadour drew the Muscovian to a Peace upon reasonable Conditions. But the Muscovian shortly after dying, and Theodorm his Successor granting free Traffique to Merchants of all Nations that would come thither; the Queen importuned him to admit of none but English Merchants, requiring him to confirm

A confirm the Priviledges which his Father had granted them : Whereto, by way of Answer, he demanded Free Trading for all the English, saying, It was not fit that a small Company should exercise a Monopoly, and all other be restrained : But as for Customs, he promised to take lesse by one half of that Company, then of any other, because they first opened the way thither.

The next Summer, Albertus Alasco, a Palatine of Poland, of a comely personage, and great learning, came into England to see the Queen, who was nobly entertained, both by her, and the Nobility, as also by the Scholars of Oxford, with learned Orations, and other Recreations : but having into tarried here four Months, and run into much debt, he secretly withdrew himself & departed. This man I saw my self afterward in Crakow, very bare, though it was reported of him, That he had in a Dowry with a Wife, fifty Castles of great value : but what Myne can bear the charges of prodigality ?

This year proved fatal to divers great men ; for there dyed this year, first Thomas Ratcliffe, the third Earl of Suffex of this Family ; a man of great spirit, and great faithfulness to his Country. There dyed also Henry Wriothesley Earl of Southampton ; one exceedingly devoted to the Romish Religion, and a great favourer of the Queen of Scots, which cost him Queen Elizabeths displeasure, and imprisonment besides. There dyed also Sir Humphrey Gilbert, who was cast away at Sea, in his return from the North part of America, whither he lately sayled with five Ships, having fold his Patrimony, in hope to plant a Colony there. There dyed also Edmund Grindall, Archbishop of Canterbury, being blinde through age, a grave and pious Prelate, who stood highly in the Queens favour for a long time, till he lost it at last, by favouring (as was said) the Puritans Conventions, but the true cause indeed was, for disallowing the Marriage of Julio an Italian Physician, with another man Wife, against the Earl of Leicester pleasure. Grindall dying, John Whitgift succeeded in the See of Canterbury, being translated thither from the See of Worcester.

At this time, certain Popish Books written against the Queen, and Princes Excommunicate, withdrew divers from their Allegiance, and particularly, so intoxicated one Somerville, an English Gentleman, that he went privately to the Court, and breathing out nothing but bloud and death against all Protestants, set upon one or two by the way with his drawn sword. Being apprehended, he stuck not to say, That he would murder the Queen with his own hands. Hereupon he, and upon his intimation, Edward Arden his father-in-law (a man of an ancient House in Warwickshire) Ardens wife, their daughter, Somervilles wife, and Hall a Priest, were brought to the Bar, and all condemned ; Somerville as principal, the rest as accessaries. Three days after, Somerville was found strangled in the Prison ; Arden was executed and quartered ; the women and the Priests were spared. Many pitied the old Gentleman Arden, as misled by the Priest, and as it was generally believed) brought to his end through the envy of Leicester, whom he used to call Whore-master, Up-start, and many such opprobrious names.

In the Netherlands, the English Garrison at Alost in Flanders being neglected, the Governour Pigot, and the other Captains, for want of pay, upon Composition, yielded up the Town to the Spaniard, and then fearing disgrace at home, joyned themselves to the Prince of Parma ; at whose hands finding themselves slighted, by degrees they stole all away, and came all to unlucky ends.

In Ireland the famous Rebel, Gyralt Fitz Gyralt, the eleventh Earl of Desmond of this Family, having a long time in lurking places escaped the English, was now by a common Souldier found out in a poor Cottage, and slain. His head was sent into England, and set upon London Bridge. This end had this great Lord, descended from Maurice, the Son of Gyralt of Windfore, an English man, famous amongst those who first set upon Ireland, in the year 1170. He possessed whole Countries, together with the County Palatine of Kerry, and had of his own Name and Race, at least five hundred Gentlemen at his Command. All whom, and his own life also, he lost within the space of three years, very few of the House being left alive. And this dysaster he fell into, by proving Trayterous to his Prince, at the instigation of certain Popish Priests. Of whom, the chief was one Nicholas Sanders an English man, who at the same time dyed miserably of Famine, being starved to death, when as being forsaken, and running mad upon his ill success, he roamed up and down the Mountains and Groves, finding nothing to sustain him. In his Scrip were found certain Orations and Letters, written to hearten the Rebels, and promising large rewards from the Pope and King of Spain. Upon the Rebels ill success, James Fitz Eustace, Viscount Baltinglas fled into Spain, where he pined away with grief. He out of zeal to the Roman Religion, a little before he had taken up Arms with the Rebels, and exhorting the Earl of Ormond his neighbour, to do the like, (who drew his Linage from St. Thomas of Canterbury) he used these words to perswade him, That if Saint Thomas of Canterbury had not died for the Church of Rome, thou hadst never been Earl of Ormond ; for King Henry the second, to expiate the murder of Thomas Becket, gave large lands in Ormond to his Predecessors.

The beginning of the next Spring, certain Scots, together with Gowry, plotted again to surprize the King, pretending only a care of Religion, and to remove ill Counsellors from him : but the King having intelligence of their practise, used means by Colonel Steward, to have Gowry taken and cast into prison : whereupon Marre, Glames, Angus, and other of the confederates fled into England, and beseech the Queen to commiserate their estate, who had incurred the Kings

Whether a Secretary of State may not transact a business of State, without special Commission from the Prince.

The Earl Gowry is arraigned, condemned and beheaded.

Many practises are plotted against Queen Elizabeth in behalf of the Queen of Scots.

Sir William Wade sent into Spain, being not admitted to have Audience of the King, comes away without doing his message.

Sir William Wade is sent to the Queen of Scots to treat with her about some conditions for setting her at liberty.

displeasure, to do her and the Kingdom of England service. The King on the other side, accu- A seth them to the Queen of hainous crimes, and requires to have them delivered up into his hands. But Secretary Walsingham, who bore great good will to these men, sent Letters with a Command, That they should be safely admitted into Lindisferne, otherwise called, The holy Island; where Hunsdon being Governor there, and greatly addicted to the King of Scots, resisted Walsingham's Command, alleading he could not satisfy the Secretary in this point, unless the Queen gave expresse Command. Hereupon grew a Dispute, Whether a Secretary of State might not transact a business of State, without special Commission from the Prince. How this Case was determined, is uncertain; but sure it is, the Scots came not thither, though some favour they had shewed them here in England. In the mean time, Gowry was tryed by his Peers, at Sterlyn; where, being accused of many Treasons, though he gave colourable answers to them all, yet was B found guilty, condemned, and beheaded; whose head his servants sewing to his body, committed to the Grave.

About this time were practises plotted against Queen Elizabeth, in behalf of the Queen of Scots, chiefly by Francis Throgmorton, eldest Son of John Throgmorton, Justice of Chester, who came to be suspected, by reason of Letters sent to the Queen of Scots which were intercepted. Upon his apprehension, Thomas Lord Paget, and Charles Arundel, privately stole away into France, grievously complaining against Leicester and Walsingham, for alienating the Queen from them, and using such wiles, that scarce any man was able to live in safety. Henry Earl of Northumberland, and Philip Earl of Arundel, were confined to their houses, his wife committed to the custody of Sir Thomas Shirley, William Howard, the Earls Brother, and Henry Howard their Uncle, Brother to the Duke of Norfolk, were examined about Letters from the Queen of Scots, and many C
Stratagems were set on foot, dangerous to some particular persons, but necessary (as should seem) for the Queens security. Certain it is, That now the malice of the Papists against the Queen, brake forth more violently then ever before; for in printed Books they stirred up the Queens own servants to attempt the like upon her, that Judith did on Olophernes. The Author of these Books could not be found, but the suspicion lay upon one Gregory Martin sometime of Oxford; and Carter a Stationer, who printed the Books, suffered for it. And whereas the Papists every where traduced the Queen for cruelty, she desirous always to leave a blessed remembrance behinde her, grew extremely offended with the Commissioners for Popish causes, taxing them of too much cruelty: insomuch that they were fain, in a printed Declaration, to clear themselves; protesting; That they questioned no man for his Religion, but only for dangerous attempts against the Queen and State; and that Campion himself was never so racked, but that he could presently walk up and down. But all this gave not the Queen satisfaction, but she commanded the Commissioners to forbear tortures, and the Judges other punishments; and not long after, when seventy Priests were taken, and some of them condemned, and the rest in danger of the Law, she caused them all to be shipped away, and sent out of England: The chief of whom were Gaspard Heywood, the great Epigrammatist's Son, the first Jesuite that ever set foot in England; James Bosgrave, John Hart, and Edmund Riston.

At this time Mendoza the Spanish Ambassadour, was thrust out of England, for joyning with Throgmorton in his Treason against the Queen; whereupon Sir William Wade was sent to the King of Spain, to satisfy him how ill Mendoza had discharged the Office of an Ambassadour here in England; who, when the King admitted him not to his Presence, but in a slighting manner, putting him off to his Counsellors; Wade taking it in great disdain, boldly said, That it was a declared Custom amongst Princes (though in heat of War) to give Ambassadours audience, and thereupon stoutly refused to declare his Ambassage, and so returned into England unheard. The greatest matters laid to Mendoza's charge, were gotten out of Throgmorton's Confession; for when he was in danger to be apprehended, he sent to Mendoza a box of Writings; and when his Chests were searched, there were found two Scrowls, one with the names of the Ports of England, and in the other the names of the Nobility and Gentry in England, that favoured the Romish Religion. These, when Throgmorton saw brought forth, he said they were F counterfeited, and stood to it upon the very Rack; but being brought to the Rack the second time, he then confessed all, That Morgan by Letters out of France, had given him information, that the Catholick Princes had decreed to invade England, and with the help of the Duke of Guise, to free the Queen of Scots; and that nothing was now wanting, but money and aid in England; and that for procuring of this, Charles Paget, under the counterfeit name of Mope, was sent into Suffex, where the Duke of Guise intended to land; and that he had imparted all this matter to Mendoza, and intimated the names of the Ports, and of the Noblemen that should assist. But being arraigned at the Guild-hall, he denied all this again, saying, He had spoken so, because he would not be Racked again. Yet being condemned to die, he flying to the Queens mercy, confessed in a manner all he had before related; and then at the Gallows went about to deny it again. So false G to it self is the minde of man when it is divided between hope and fear, and lies under the burden of a guilty conscience.

Sir William Wade being returned from Spain, was employed to the Queen of Scots, about a Treaty begun two years before: To whom the distressed Queen sincerely professed, That she devoted her service and her self to the Queen of England; and made solemn promise, That if the former Treaty might go on, she would mediate with the King her Son, to receive into favour the Earl of Angus, and the other Scottish Lords, and would charge the Bishops of Resse and Glasco, her

A her Agents in France, to have no further to do with the English Fugitives. These things Queen Elizabeth heard gladly, and thereupon sent Beal to the Queen of Scots, who joyntly with the Earl of Shrewsbury should signifie unto her, That if she continued still in the same minde, as she had delivered to Wade; Sir Walter Mildmay should come out of hand to her, and treat concerning her liberty: but withall she commanded Mildmay and Beale to dive into her as well as they could, to know what practises the Duke of Guyse had on foot. To that which she had spoken to Sir William Wade, the Queen of Scots made a wary answer; but to that concerning the Duke of Guyse, she plainly confesseth; That being sickly her self, and weak of body, she had committed her self and her Son, to the Protection of the Duke of Guyse, her dear Cousen, of whose intendments she knoweth nothing; nor if she did, would she disclose them, unlesse she might be sure of her own liberty. Lastly, she requesteth, That being a free and an absolute Prince, she may not be worse handled, then Queen Elizabeth her self was, when she was a Subject, and kept in prison by her Sister. These things had a hearing, but no feeling, and the rather by a strange accident; for Creighton a Scottish Jesuite, sayling from the Low-Countries, and taken by Dutch Pirats, had certain papers which he tore and threw away, which thrown over-board, and by the winde blown back unto the Ship, miraculously (as Creighton himself said) they were brought to Sir William Wade, who patching them together with much labour and cunning, discovered by them some new intendments of the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Guyse, about the Invading of England: Whereupon, and upon divers other rumors, the better to provide for the safety of the Queen, a number of her Subjects (the Earl of Leicester being the formost) men of all ranks and conditions, bound themselves mutually to each other, by their oaths and subscriptions, to persecute all those to the very death, that should attempt any thing against the Queen; which league of theirs, they called the Association.

An Association of Lords and others in defence of Queen Elizabeth.

The Queen of Scots who presently apprehended, that this Association was entred into for her destruction; maketh this proposition by Nave her Secretary, to the Queen and the Council; That if she might have her liberty granted, and be assured of the Queens love, she would enter a strict league and amity with her, and passing by all matters of offence, esteem and honour her, above all the Princes of the Christian World; yea, and (saving the ancient League betwixt France, and Scotland) she would her self be comprehended in the Association, and a League defensive, against all that should go about to injure the Queen. Herewith Queen Elizabeth was wonderfully pleased, and at that time certainly had an inclination to grant her freedom. But see what malice can do; for many in England, but specially the Scots of the adverse party, endeavoured by all means to hinder it; exclaiming, That the Queen could be no longer in safety, if the Queen of Scots were set liberty, That both Kingdoms were utterly undone, if she were admitted into the joynt Government of the Kingdom of Scotland, and that the reformed Religion lay a bleeding, if Papiests were admitted within the Court walls; nor was this all, but the Scottish Ministers in their Pulpits, loaded the Queen Scots with all manner of contumelies, slandered the King himself, and his Council in the most bitter manner; and being cited to appear before him, refused, saying, That the Pulpits were exempted from all Regal Authority, and that Ecclesiastical persons were not to be censured by their Prince, but by their own Consistory (directly against the Laws made the year before in Parliament) whereby the Kings Authority over all persons, whether Ecclesiastical, or Secular, was confirmed; and namely, That the King and his Council, were Supreme Judges in all Causes; and that whosoever refused to be tryed by them, should be holden guilty of High-treason; all Presbyters and Lay-conventicles forbidden, Parity of the Clergy taken away, and the authority of Bishops restored, whose Calling the Presbyteries had condemned as wicked and Antichristian: And lastly, all scurrilous Labels against the King and his Mother, prohibited; namely, the Scottish History of George Buchanan, and his Dialogue, De Jure Regni apud Scotos.

The Queen of Scots offers to enter into the Association, if she may have her liberty.

To which Q. Elizabeth is inclining. But is made averse from it by Scots and English of the adverse party, and specially by Scottish Ministers.

At this time, upon her adversaries suggestion, the Queen of Scots is taken from the Earl of Shrewsbury, and committed to the custody of Sir Amias Pawlet and Sir Drue Drury, and that on set purpose (as some were perswaded) to drive her into abrupt and desperate attempts; and indeed upon this, she grew more importunate with the Pope and King of Spain, to hasten their intendment, whatsoever became of her, as ill indeed was like to become of her, if it be true (as some said) that Leicester sent out assassins to make her away, but that Drury detested the villany, and would grant them no access.

And now to alienate Queen Elizabeth utterly from her; it is suggested to her, That Allen for the Catholics of the Clergy, Inglefield for the Laity, and the Bishop of Rosse for the Queen of Scots, with consent of the Pope and the King of Spain, had joyntly combined to depose her, and to bar the King of Scotland from his hereditary Right to the Crown of England, and to marry the Queen of Scots to an English Nobleman of the Romish Religion, and him the English Catholics should choose King of England, and the Pope confirm the Election: and all this upon the credit of Hart the Priest: but who this English Nobleman should be that should marry the Queen of Scots, could not be found, though Walsingham were busie to search it out: the fame went upon Henry Howard, the Duke of *Norfolk*s Brother, who was a single man, a great Papist, and of high estimation amongst the Catholics.

A Combination in the Catholics to marry the Queen of Scots to some English Nobleman of the Romish Religion; and who he was thought to be.

It was now the year 1585. and the eight and twentieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when, to tie the French King more nearly to her, whom the year before she had received into the number of the Knights of the Garter, she sent the Earl of Derby into France, to invest him with the Robes and was invested with them.

At this time a Parliament was assembled at Westminster, wherein William Parry a Welsh man, a up, and exclaimed that it was a cruel and bloody Law: and being asked his reason, he stoutly

Nuntio at Venice, and grant of a plenary Indulgence from the Pope, he undertook to kill the C Queen; but coming into England to that intent, he altered his minde, and disclosed to the Queen the whole matter. After this, he received a Letter from the Cardinal of Como, perswading him to go forward with the Enterprize; and this Letter also he shewed the Queen. After this, he chanced to see a Book of Doctor Allens, written contra Iustitiam Britannicam, wherein was declared, That Princes who were for heresie excommunicate, might lawfully be deprived of their life and Kingdom. This Book wonderfully confirmed him, and he read it to Nevill; who, though he took an oath of secrecy, yet now upon a hope of the Earldom of Westmerland, betrayed him. This was his confession, before Baron Hunsdon, Sir Christopher Hatton, and Sir Francis Walsingham: as likewise in his Letters to the Queen, to the Lord Burleigh, and the Earl of Leicester, acknowledging his fault, and craving mercy. A few days after, he was called to D the Bar in Westminster Hall, where he confessed himself guilty, and thereupon was condemned.
After the sentence of death pronounced, he furiously cited the Queen to Gods Tribunal: five days after he was laid upon a Hurdle, and dragged through the City to Westminster, where at the Gibbet he made a vain-glorious boasting of his faithfulness to the Queen, but not so much as in a word commended himself to God; and in the great Palace at Westminster was executed as a Traytor, the Nobility and Commons sitting then in Parliament.

Laws made for safeguard of the Queen.

In this Parliament, the Association before spoken of, was universally approved, and enacted in this Form; That four and twenty, or more, of the Queens Privy Council, and Peers of the Realm, should be selected and authorized, under the Great Seal of England, To make enquiry of all such persons as shall attempt to invade the Kingdom, or raise Rebellion, or shall attempt any evil E against the Queens Person, for whomsoever, and by whomsoever, that layeth any claim to the Crown of England; and that person for whom, or by whom they shall attempt any such thing, shall be altogether un-capable of the Crown; and more to this purpose. Laws also for the Queens safety, were enacted against Jesuites and Popish Priests, and against all that shall receive or relieve them. These Laws terrified many, and particularly out of fear of them, Philip Earl of Arundel, the Duke of Nor- folks eldest Son, purposed with himself to travel beyond Seas; for having been once or twice cited before the Lords of the Council, and confined to his house, and after six moneths set at liberty, he thereupon wrote a Letter to the Queen, That for the service of God, and his souls health, he purposed to leave his Countrey, but not his loyal affection towards her; but as he was taking Shipping; by his own servants treachery he was discovered, apprehended and laid in F the Tower.

The Earl of

mitted to the Tower, and

Henry Percy Earl of Nor- thumberland being in the Tower, is found dead in his bed.

At the same time lay in the Tower Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland; a man of a lofty spirit, being suspected by reason of secret consultation with Throgmorton, the Lord Paget, and the Guise, about the invading of England, and freeing of the Queen of Scots (whose cause he ever highly favoured) but in the moneth of June, he was found dead in his bed, shot into the body with three bullets, under his right pap, and the door bolted on the inside. The Coroners Inquest examining the matter, found and pronounced that he had killed himself. Three days after, the Lords meeting in the Star-chamber, Bromley Lord Chancellor, declared this fact of the Earls, and then commanded the Attorney General to shew the cause of his imprisonment, and the manner of his death; whereupon, Popham first, and then Egerton the Queens Solicitor, in long Orati- G ons, lay open all his Treasons, and how for fear of the Law, he had laid violent hands upon himself.

Q. Elizabeth enters League with the Princes of Germany.

And now the Queen knowing that the seeds of these Treasons proceeded from the Duke of Guise, and his adherents, she sought for the strengthening of her self, to enter into the League with the Princes of Germany; and to this end, she sent Sir Thomas Bodley to the King of Denmark, to the Count Elector Palatine of the Rhine, to the Duke of Saxony, Wittenberg, Brunswick, Lonce- burg; the Marquels of Brandenburg, and the Landgrave of Hessia; and into Scotland, she sent Sir Ed- ward Wootton, to let the King understand how sincerely she was affected towards him, and withall

A to draw the King (if he could) into a League of mutual defence and offence, and to commend to him the Match of the King of Denmark's Daughter. The King was very inclinable to the matter of the League, but for the present the business was interrupted, by the death of Francis Russel, Son to the Earl of Bedford, slain at a meeting to compound a difference between the Borderers, by a sudden tumult of the Scots, but who it was that slew him, was not known. The English laid it upon the Earl of Arran, and the Lord Ferniburst Governour of the middle Borders; whereupon, at the Queens complaint, the Earl of Arran was confined, and Ferniburst committed to prison at Dundee, where he dyed; a man of great valour and resolution, and one that was always firm for the Queen of Scots. But Queen Elizabeth not thus satisfied, gave leave by way of connivence to the Scottish Lords that were fled into England, namely, the Earl of Angus, the B Hamiltons and John Cladius, the Earl of Marre, Glames, and other, that they should steal away into Scotland (the supplying them with money) there to master and subdue the Earl of Arran. For Maxwell, who was lately made Earl of Bothwell, Baron Humes, Goldingknolls, and other in Scotland, had already promised them their assistance, even in the very Court. Sir Patrick Gray (Arrans great Rival for the Kings favour) Belenden, and Secretary Maitland (by Wottons craft) were made against Arran. These men, upon their first entry into Scotland, command all persons in the Kings name, to aid them for conserving the truth of the Gospel, for freeing the King from corrupt Counsellors and for maintaining of Amity with the English, so as there presently joyned with them about eight thousand men. The Earl of Arran hearing hereof, makes hast to the King; and accuseth Patrick Gray as Author of this commotion: but whiles Arran was making provision for defence of the Town, the enemies were ready to scale the Walls: whereupon Arran being advised, that only his life was sought, gets secretly away with only one servant, the rest betook themselves to the King in the Castle. Then the Rebels get into the Market-place, and display their Banners against the Castle: the King sends Gray to know the reason of their coming; they answer, to submit themselves and in humble manner to kisse the Kings hands: the King offereth restitution of all their goods, if they would depart; They desire to be admitted to his Presence, which upon these conditions the King granted. That they should not attempt any thing against his life, or those whom he should nominate, nor make any innovation in the Government. They protest; They are ready to sacrifice their lives for the Kings safety; and of any Innovation they had not so much as a thought; only they request to have their adversaries, and the Fortifications of Scotland delivered up into their hands. Hereupon after a days Consultation, they are admitted into the Kings Presence, and forthwith the Earls of Mount Ruffe, Crawford, and Rothsay; Colonel Steward, Downs, Arran's Brothers, and others, were delivered to them: The Earl of Arran, who was fled into the Western Islands, is called home; the assaulters were pardoned, and pronounced good subjects. Hamilton is set over Dumbrition Castle; Goldingknolls over Edenburgh; the Earl of Angus over Tantallon; the Earl of Marre over Stein; and Glames is made Captain of the Guard. Upon this, all Proscriptions and Outlaws against all persons, since the Kings Inauguration (saving some few proscribed for the murder of the Kings Father) are called in, and with an unanimous consent of all parties, the Treaty of a League with the Queen of England is agreed upon, and Delegates nominated to that purpose.

E In Ireland likewise was a Combustion this year, first the Burkes (descended of the ancient Family of the Burroughs in England) provoked by the severe Government of Richard Bingham, Governour of Cannaght, raise Rebellion; but this was soon suppressed, for Thomas Burk dyed fighting; Meyler and Thesbald Burk were taken and hanged. After this, the Clan Gibbons, Clan Donells, and Foyes, combined together in great numbers, and say plainly, They will have a Mac-William of their own, one of the Burks to rule over them, or some other Lord out of Spain; they will admit of no Sheriffe into their Countrey, nor appear before the English Courts of Justice; and thereupon harried all the Countrey with Fire and Sword, and neither by the persuasions of the Archbishop Tuan, nor by the intreaties of the Earl of Clan-riccard (the chief of the House of the Burks) would be quieted, till Jon Bingham the Presidents Brother, following them into the Woods, drave away five thousand Head of their Cattell, so as after forty days, half starved, they came forth and submitted themselves. But this was not yet an end; for now the President understood, That two thousand Scottish Islanders were landed, and ready to break into Cannaght; whereupon he musters his men to give them Battel; but they flying to Bogs and Woods, he retires back as though in fear, thereby to draw them from the Bogs to firm ground, and then with his whole Forces set upon them, slew three thousand of them (indeed all but four-score) amongst whom were Donell Garmy, and Alexander Garmy, the sons of James Mac-Conel, who had long disquieted this part, and those Burks who were the first authors of this Rebellion. This was a famous Victory, for the good of the present and future times; for hereby the name of the G Mac-Williams in Cannaght was utterly extinct, and the insolent attempts of the Scottish Islanders absolutely crushed.

In the Low-Countries at this time the States were very hard beset, so as they held a Consultation, whither to flee for protection, either to the French King, or to the Queen of England. Monsieur Prunie the French Ambassadour shewed many advantages, and gave many reasons why they should flee rather to the French King; the English on the other side, alledged many reasons why they should flee rather to the Queen of England: but in conclusion they have first recourse to the king of France, and afterward being by him neglected, to the Queen of England.

A great tumult amongst the Lords in Scotland, and why.

A combustion in Ireland how caused, and how pacified.

The name of the Mac-Williams in Cannaght, is utterly extinct.

The States of the Low-countries flee to Q. Elizabeth for protection, which she for the present refused.

England. But then in England it was consulted, Whether it were meet to protect them; wherein A the Council was divided; some were of opinion, That it were good to receive and aid them, lest the Spaniard first conquering them, might have the better way to annoy England; other again thought, They were to be held no better then Rebels to their lawful Sovereign, and therefore unworthy of assistance. After long debating the matter, the Queen refuseth to take into Protection, much lesse to exercise Sovereignty over them. Nevertheless, to raise the Siege of Antwerp, which was then beleaguere'd by the Prince of Parma, she was content to supply them with four thousand Souldiers, so as the Town of Sluce, and the Ordinance belonging to it, were given up into their hands: but while this matter was discussing, the Town of Antwerp was fain to yeeld it self.

For at last she undertakes it.

She sends Sir Francis Drake and Christopher Carlile to the West, and what they effected there.

Tobacco first brought into England at this time by Ralph Lane.

The Earl of Leicester is sent General of the Queens Forces into Holland.

The States commit to him the absolute command over the united Provinces. Which the Queen is angry at.

And the States excuse it.

What was done by the Earl of Leicester at his being in Holland.

But the Queen better bethinking her self, partly as fearing the growth of the King of Spain's B power, and partly, as commiserating the afflicted of her own Religion, at last resolves to undertake their protection, upon condition of her part, to supply them with five thousand Foot, and a thousand Horse, under a sufficient General, paying them during the War; and afterward the expenses to be payed back, upon condition on their part, by way of Pledge, to deliver Flushing and the Fort of Kamekin, the Town of Brill, with the two neighbouring Forts: and for the justifying of this her action, she set forth a large Declaration. And knowing that herein she incensed the King of Spain, she thought best to turn his anger further from home, and thereupon sent out Sir Francis Drake, and Christopher Carlile, with a Navy of one and twenty Ships (wherein were two thousand Volunteers and Mariners) towards the West-Indies; who first surprized the Town of St. Jago, afterward St. Dominick (where five and twenty thousand Crowns were given them, to spare the Town from burning) afterward Cartagena, which they held seven weeks, till the Spaniards redeemed it for a hundred and ten thousand Crowns. After this, the Calenture waxing hot, and diminishing their Forces, they returned homewards, passing by Virginia, a Colony which Sir Walter Raleigh had there planted; from whence Drake brings home with him Ralph Lane, who was the first that brought Tobacco into England, which the Indians take against crudities of the Stomach. At this Expedition were lost about seven hundred men, who for the most part dyed of Calentures: their Booty amounted to the value of threescore thousand pounds Sterling, besides two hundred and forty Brasse and Iron Pieces. These things were done under the Torrid Zone in America; when in the mean while, Captain John Davis, with two Ships (at the charges of William Sanderfun, and other Citizens of London) found out a way to the East-Indies, by the higher part of D America, under the Frigid Zone.

At the end of this year the Earl of Leicester is sent General of the Q. Forces into Holland, accompanied with the Earl of Essex, the Lords Audley, and North, Sir Wil. Russell, Sir Tho. Sherley, Sir Arthur Bassett, Sir Walter Waller, Sir Gervase Clifton, and divers other Knights, besides five hundred Gentlemen. Landing at Flushing, he was first by Sir Philip Sidney the Governor his Nephew, a stranger by the Towns of Zeland and Holland, entertained in most magnificent manner; and coming to the Hague in January, the States by Patent committed to him the command and absolute authority over the united Provinces, with the Titles of Governour and Captain General of Holland, Zeland, and the Confederate Provinces: So as being now saluted with the Title of his Excellency, he began to assume unto him Princely spirits. But the Queen took him soon off from further aspiring, E writing unto him in most peremptory manner; That she wondred how a man whom she had raised out of the dust, could so contemptuously violate her commands, and therefore charged him upon his Allegiance, to put in execution the Injunctions she sent him by Hennage her Vice-Chamberlain; Withall, in Letters apart, she expostulateth with the States, that to her great disparagement, they had cast upon the Earl of Leicester her Subject, the absolute command over the united Provinces, without her privity, which she her self had utterly refused; and therefore willeth them to develt him of that absolute authority, to whom she had set bounds, which he should not passe. The States return Answer, That they are heartily sorry they should incur her displeasure by conferring upon the Earl that absolute Authority, not having first made her acquainted, but they beseeched her to consider the necessity of it; seeing, that for avoiding of F confusion, that Authority must needs be cast upon some one or other; Neither was there any great matter in the word Absolute, seeing the Rule and Dominion resided still in the people. By these Letters and Leicesters own submissive writing, the Queen was soon satisfied; Leicester all this while receiveth Contributions and Rewards from all Provinces, maketh martial Laws, and endeavouring likewise to raise new Customs upon Merchandizes, incurred great dislike amongst the common people. His first service was to relieve Grave a Town in Brabant, which the Prince of Parma, by Count Mansfield had besieged: Hither he sent the Count Hobenlo a German, and Norris General of the English Foot, but notwithstanding all the great service they did there, the Town in the end was taken; but Hismart the Governour, for his cowardly yeelding it up, lost his head. From hence the Prince of Parma marched into Gelderland, and pitched his Tents before Venlow, where G Skenkic a Frizlander, and Roger Williams a Welshman performed great service, yet that Town in a short time was taken also. But in the mean while, the Lord Willoughby Governour of Bergen up Zome, cut off the enemies Convoyes, and took away their victuals; and Sir Philip Sidney, and Maurice the Prince of Oranges Son, upon a sudden onset, took Axales Town in Flanders. From Venlow the Prince of Parma goes to Berke, where there were twelve thousand English, under the command of Colonel Morgan; he notwithstanding laid Siege to the Town, which the Earl of Leicester came to raise, but finding his Forces too weak to raise it, he seeks to divert it, by beleaguering

A guering Duisburgh; which before the Prince of Parma could come to relieve, he took. And now the Prince of Parma, fearing lest Zutphin should come in danger, commandeth victuals to be carried thither, which the Spaniards carrying along in a fogge, the English by chance lighted on them, vanquished a Troop of their Horſe, ſlew Hannibal Gonzaga, and divers others, but then on the English ſide was one ſlain, more worth then all the English and Spaniards put together, Sir Philip Sidney, who having his Horſe ſlain under him, and getting upon another, was ſhot into the thigh, and 25 days after, in the flower of his age, dyed: A man of ſo many excellent parts of Art and Nature, of Valour and Learning, of Wit and Magnanimity; that as he had equalled all thoſe of former Ages, ſo future Ages will hardly be able to equall him. His Funerals were in ſumptuous manner ſolemnized at St. Pauls Church in London. James King of Scotland made his Epitaph, and

After this, Leiceſter aſſaulteth Zutphen, where ſetting upon a Fort, he takes it in this manner; Edward Stanley (of the Stanleys of Elford) catching hold of a Spaniards Launce, which was brandiſhed at him, held it ſo faſt, that by it he was drawn into the very Fort; whereupon the Spaniards being affrighted (as thinking all the enemies were coming up) forſook the place; Leiceſter Knighted Stanley for this act, gave him forty pounds in preſent money, and a yearly Penſion of an hundred Marks during his life. And now though in this forwardneſſe to win the Town, yet Winter being already come on, he thought it unreaſonable to beſiege it any longer (eſpecially ſo many English Garrisons lying round about it, which were in nature of a ſiege) but returned to the Hague, where the States entertained him with complaints, that their money was not care-

C fully huſbanded, that the number of the English ſupplies were not full, that foreign ſouldiers were levied without their conſent, that the privileges of the united Provinces were ſet at nought, and new deviſes for contribution invented; for all which evils, they entreated him to provide ſome preſent remedy. To which complaints (having a purpoſe to go for England) he gave a friendly answer; but upon the very day in which he was to depart, he committeth the government of the Province, to the deliberation of the States; and the ſame day made another private inſtrument of writing, where he reſerved to himſelf the whole authority over the Governours of the ſeveral Provinces, Cities, and Forts; and more than this, taketh away the wonted jurisdiction from the States Council, and Preſidents of the Provinces; and came into England the third day of December. And thus paſſed the affairs of the Netherlands for this year.

The States complain of the Earl of Leiceſters carriage.

D But in England, Philip Earl of Arundel, who had lyen in Priſon a whole year, was at laſt brought to the Star-chamber; and being charged with foſtering of Priests, and having correſpondence with Allen and Parſons the Jeſuite, and offering to depart the Kingdom without liſence, was fined ten thouſand pounds, and impriſonment during the Queens pleaſure.

Philip Earl of Arundel is fined, and why.

At this time, the Queen, by Sir Horatio Palavacino, ſupplied with a large ſum of money the King of Navarre; through whoſe ſide, the Guyſes oppoſed the reformed Religion in Scotland, but her moſt intentive care was how to unite England and Scotland in a ſolid friendſhip: To which end, ſhe ſent Thomas Randall into Scotland, who making Propoſitions to the King, touching a League offenſive and deſenſive, though the King at firſt required ſome additions, and though the French Ambaſſadour infinitely oppoſed it, yet at laſt he conſented to it; and in July following, there met

A League of ſtrict Amity concluded with the King of Scots.

E at Barwick, Edward Earl of Rutland, William Lord Ever, and Thomas Randal for the Queen of England; Francis Earl of Bothwell, Robert Lord Boyde, and Humes for the King of Scots, and there the League (which was called the League of ſtrict Amity; for that the word offenſive liked not the Scots) was upon certain points concluded: Firſt, for the maintenance of the reformed Religion, and then other ſuch Articles, as commonly in Leagues are uſual.

The very ſame moneth that this league was agreed on, a moſt dangerous conſpiracy againſt the Queen was diſcovered. For firſt, one John Savage was by the perſwaſions of Gifford, Doctour in Divinity, induced to believe, that it was a meritorious work, to take away the lives of Princes Excommunicate, who thereupon vowed to kill Queen Elizabeth: but to make the Queen and her Council ſecure, at the very ſame time they wrote a Book, exhorting the Papiſts in England, to

F attempt nothing againſt their Prince, and to uſe only the Chriſtian weapons of Tears, Prayers, Watching, and Faſting. About Whiſſun-tide, one Ballard a Seminary Prielt of Rheims, acquainted with the vow of Savage, (having dealt in France with Mendoza and Charles Paget, about invading of England) arrived here in a ſouldiers habit, and by a counterfeit name, called Captain Foſcu; with theſe matters he acquaints one Anthony Babington, a Gentleman of Darbyſhire, who by the Biſhop of Glaſco, the Queen of Scots Ambaſſador in France, had been commended to her, as one worthy of her love; ſo, as between them, there paſſed often letters in unknown characters. In ſhort time, Babington had drawn into the Plot, other Gentlemen as zealous of the Romiſh Religion as himſelf; namely, Edward Windſor, Brother to the Lord Windſor, Thomas Saluſbery of a good Family in Devonſhire, Charles Tilney one of the Queens Penſioner, Chydrick Tichburn of Hamſhire, Edward Abington (whoſe Father was Coſerer to the Queen) Robert Gage of Surrey, John Traverſe, and John Charnock of Lancashire, John Jones, Savage formerly ſpoken of, Barnwell of a noble Family in Ireland, and Henry Dun a Clerk in the Office of Firſt-fruits and Tenths; one Polle alſo ſcrwed himſelf into their company, a fellow thoroughly acquainted with the affairs of the Queen of Scots, who was thought to have revealed all their conſultations to Walsingham day by day. To theſe Gentlemen, Babington communicateth his affairs, but not every particular to every one, but to Ballard, Tichburn, and Dunne, he ſheweth the Letters which paſſed between him and the Queen of Scots: with Tilney, and the reſt, he dealeth to be Aſſiſtants; of whom, ſome at firſt loth, at laſt consented, and in a foolish vaingloriousness, a picture of the Assassins was made to the life, and Babington in the midst, with these words: Quorsum hæc aliis properantibus? This Picture (they say) was gotten and privately shewed to the Queen, who knew none of them by face, but only Begunell, (who had oftentimes come to her in the causes of the Earl of Kildare, whose servant he was.) Certain it is, that the Queen one day walking abroad, spied this Begunell, and turning to Halton, said, Am not I well Guarded, that have not so much as one man in the company with a sword by his side? Thus much Begunell himself told the rest of his confederacy; and how easie a matter it had been to have dispatched her at that time, if the rest had been present. The chief discoverer of the Plot, was the aforesaid Gifford: This man was a Gentleman of a good House at Chellington in Staffordshire, not far from Chartley, where the Queen of Scots was kept prisoner, and was now sent by the English fugitives in France, under the counterfeit name of Lusson to put Babington in minde of the vow he had made, and to convey letters between them and the Queen of Scots. But he, whether pricked in conscience, or dismayed in minde, came to Walsingham privately, revealing who he was, and for what end, and by whom sent into England. Walsingham courteously entertained him, and sent him down into Staffordshire, to do the work he had undertaken. Here Gifford bribing the Brewer of the house, where the Queen of Scots lay, contrived the matter in such sort with him, that by a hole in the wall, in which a loose stone was put, he should give in, and receive forth Letters, the which by messengers purposely laid by the way, came evermore to Walsingham's hands, who broke them open, copied them out, and by the rare cunning of one Thomas Philips, found out the meaning of the private Characters, and by the singular Art of Arthur Gregory, sealed them again so curiously, that no man would imagine them to have been opened, and ever sent them to the parties, to whom the superscription directed them. In like manner were the former letters from the Queen of Scots to Babington intercepted; as also, other letters written at the same time to Mendoza the Spanish Ambassador, Charles Paget, the Lord Paget, the Archbishop of Glascow, and Francis Englefield. The Queen as soon as she understood by these Letters of the storm hanging over her head, both at home and abroad, commanded Ballard to be apprehended, who on a suddain is taken in Babington's house. Babington hereupon goeth to Walsingham, with whom he had long been a suitor, for licence to go into France, promising to do great matters in discovering the practises of the Fugitives; Walsingham with fair promises drives him off from day to day; and now perswades him, that for a small space till he could get his license sealed, he would lodge at his house in London, where they might have secret conference without suspicion. This web Walsingham himself had spun hitherto, and no other of the Queens Council were made acquainted; and longer yet he would have drawn the thread out, but that the Queen was unwilling; lest (as she said) by not avoiding danger when she might, she should seem rather to tempt God, then to trust in him. Whereupon, Walsingham sent a Note to his man Scudamore from the Court, to look carefully to Babington: This Note was delivered in such manner, that Babington sitting by a Table when Scudamore read it, overlooked him, and read it likewise; Hereupon suspecting that all was discovered, the next night he and Scudamore, and one or two more of Walsingham's servants supping at a Tavern, and being very merry, he made an excuse that he must needs step aside, and rose up, leaving his cloak and his sword, and so made hast through the dark to Westminster, where Gage and he changed apparel, and then together withdrew themselves into S. Johns wood neer the City, whither Barnwell and Dun betook themselves. In the mean space they were proclaimed Traytors all England over. Hereupon they lay lurking in Woods and by-places; they shave Babington's face, disfigure the beauty of his countenance (for he was of an extraordinary beauty) with the husks of green Wall-nuts; and when they were half starved, went to the houses of the Bellamies, neer Harrow on the hill, who were great Papists: There they were hid in Barns, and put into a Countrey habit: but notwithstanding all their shifting, within ten days after they were discovered and brought to London. The other Complices were soon after taken, most of them in the Suburbs of the City, Salisbury and Traverse in Cheshire, and Jones in Wales, who harboured them in his house, after he knew they were proclaimed Traytors, Windore only was never heard of. Many days were spent in the examination of them, who cut one the others throats, with their own confessions. All this while, the Queen of Scots and her servants are so narrowly looked to by Pawlet, that she knew nothing of all these passages: as soon as they were apprehended, Thomas Gorge was sent to acquaint her with the whole matter, which yet he did not do, till she was got on Horse-back to ride a hunting, and was not then suffered to return, but in shew of curtesie was carryed up and down, to see the Houses of the Gentry thereabouts. In which mean while John Manners, Edward Aiton, Richard Bagot, and Sir William Wade, took Nave and Curle the Queen of Scots Secretaries, and the rest of her servants, and delivered them to Keepers apart, that they might have no speech between themselves, nor with their Lady the Queen of Scots. Then they broke open all dores, and such Desks and Boxes as they found with any papers in them, they set their seals upon, and sent them to the Court: In which, being broken open before the Queen, were found a number of Letters from Foreign parts, the copies likewise of Letters sent to several persons, and threescore Alphabets at least of private Characters; as also, Letters to her from some of the English Nobility, containing great proffers of love and service, which the Queen notwithstanding took no notice of, but passed over in silence, according to her Motto, Vides & Taces, I see, and say nothing. Gifford now, who had all this while served their turn, is sent into France; but ere he went hence, left an Indenture with the French Ambassador herein England, with Instructions that he should deliver no Letters to the Queen

A Queen of Scots, or the Fugitives in France; but to him that exhibited an Indenture matching with that, the which he sent under-hand to Sir Francis Walsingham.

The twentieth of September, seven of the forenamed Conspirators were Arraigned, and pleading guilty, were condemned of High-Treason. Two days after, seven other were called to the Bar, who pleaded not guilty, but notwithstanding were found guilty by their own confessions, and condemned; Pollie only, though he were privy to all passages, yet because he had disclosed many things to Walsingham, was not called in question. The twentieth day of the moneth, the first seven in St. Giles Fields, where they were wont to meet, were hanged, cut down instantly, their privy members cut off, and themselves yet living and beholding it, were in cruel manner bowelled and quartered; namely, Ballard, Babington, Savage (who, the roap breaking, fell down from the Gibbet, and was presently taken by the hangman, his privy members cut off, and bowelled, while he was perfectly living) Barnwell, Ticbburn, Tibney, and Abbingdon. The next day, the other seven were drawn to the same place, and executed in the same fashion, but in a more gentle manner, by the Queens special charge, who detested the former cruelty, for they were to hang till they were quite dead. Salisbury first, then Dun, then Jones, Chernock, Traverse, Gage, and with them Hierome Bellamy, who had concealed Babington after he was Proclaimed Traytor (whose Brother being guilty of the same fact, had strangled himself in Prison)

Fourteen of the Conspirators are Arraigned, and hanged.

When these men were executed, Nave a French man, and Curle a Scotch man, Secretaries to the Queen of Scots, were examined concerning the Letters, the copies of Letters, and private Characters found in the Queen of Scots Closet; who under their own voluntary subscriptions acknowledged, that they were their own hand-writings, dictated in French by the Queen her self, taken by Nave, turned into English by Curle, and copied out in secret Characters. Hereupon, Sir Edward Wootton was sent out of hand into France, to make known to the King, the order of the Treason, and to shew him the copies of the Queen of Scots Letters, confirmed by the testimony of sundry of the English Nobility, that the French King might see what dangerous plots were by Charles Paget, and the English Fugitives contrived against the Queen of England.

Sir Edward Wootton is sent into France, to acquaint the King with this conspiracy.

And now, what should be done with the Queen of Scots, was a great consultation; wherein the Counsellours were not all of one minde; some conceived, That it were not good to take any rigorous course against her, but only to hold her in fast custody; both for that she was not Author of the Treason, but only consicious to it, and because she was crazie, and not likely to live long. Others, out of a care of Religion, were of opinion, to have her forthwith Arraigned and put to death according to Law; Leicester thought it better to have her poisoned, and sent a Divine to Walsingham to prove it lawful, but Walsingham protested against that course. A difference then arose amongst them, by what Law to proceed against her; Whether by the Law of the 25. of Edward the Third; (In which they are pronounced guilty of Treason, who plot the destruction of the King or Queen, raise War in his Dominions, or adhere to his Adversaries) Or else by the 27. of the Queen, Enacted a year since: Their opinion at last prevailed, who thought best to proceed against her by this latter Law, as being indeed in this case provided. Whereupon, divers of the Lords of the Privy Council, and other of the Nobility, are Authorized by the Queens Letters, to enquire by virtue of that Law, and passe sentence against all such as raised Rebellion, invaded the Kingdom, or attempted any violence against the Queen.

Consultation is held, what should be done with the Q. of Scots, and the resolution.

These Commissioners therefore upon the eleventh day of October, repaired to Fotheringay Castle in Northamptonshire, where the Queen of Scots was then held prisoner; and the next day, sent unto her Walter Mildmay, Pawlet, and Edward Barker, publick Notary, who delivered her the Queens Letters; which having with a settled countenance read, she said, It seems to me strange, that the Queen should lay her Command upon me, to hold up my hand at the Bar, as though I were a Subject, seeing I am an absolute Queen, no lesse then her self; but howsoever, I will never do any thing prejudicial to Princes of my degree, nor to my Son the King of Scotland. After many meetings, she standing still upon her innocency, and upon her exemption from answering, as being an absolute Prince, and specially for yeelding to be tryed by the English Laws; of which, One (she said) had lately been made of purpose for her destruction: It was at last told her plainly, by the Chancellour and Treasurer, That if she refused to answer to such crimes as should be objected, they would then proceed against her, though she were absent. Being brought at last with much ado to consent, the Commissioners came together in the Presence Chamber; a Chair of Estate was set for the Queen of England, in the upper end of the Chamber under a Canopy; beneath over against, was placed a Chair for the Queen of Scots; on both sides of the Cloth of Estate, stools were set, upon which on the one side sate the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, the Earls of Oxford, Kent, Derby, Worcester, Rutland, Cumberland, Warwick, Pembroke, Lincoln, and Viscount Mountacute; On the other side sate the Lords Aburgavenny, Zouch, Morley, St. John of Bleisbo, Compton, and Cherney; Next to these, sate the Knights that were Privy Counsellors, Sir James Crofts, Sir Christopher Hatton, Sir Francis Walsingham, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Walter Mildmay, and Sir Amias Pawlet; Forward, before the Earls, sate the two Chief Justices, and the Lord chief Baron; on the other side, the two Barons, and the other Justices; Dale, and Foord, Doctors of the Civil Law, at a Table in the midst, Popham the Queens Attorney General, Egerton her Solicitor, Gawdie her Serjeant at Law, the Clerk of the Crown, and two Notaries. When the Queen of Scots was come, and had placed her self, silence being made; Bromley Lord Chancellour turning towards her,

Commissioners are sent to the Q. of Scots to acquaint her with the resolution.

But she stood upon her Innocency, and upon her exemption from answering as being an absolute Prince.

Yet at last she was brought to consent.

Hereupon she appears before the Commissioners.

said;

And the Queens Council open the crimes with which she was charged.

Upon which afterward, in the Star-chamber, Sentence was pronounced against her.

And in a Parliament presently following, the Lords petition the Queen, that the Sentence passed against her, might presently be promulged.

And the Queens Answer,

A while after, the Queen intreats the Lords to think of some way, by which the Queen of Scots life may be saved, and her own not endangered. The Lords return Answer, that there can be no way of her safety, but the Queen of Scots death.

said, That the Queen had appointed these Commissioners, to hear what she could answer to A crimes laid to her charge, assuring her, that nothing would be cause of more joy to the Queen, then to hear, that she had proved her self innocent. Upon this, she rising up, said; That although, being an absolute Prince, she could not be compelled to appear before the Delegates, yet to manifest her innocency, she was now content to appear. Then Gawdie, opened every speciality of the Law lately made (against which she had taken exception) shewing by Babingtons confession, by Letters passed between them, by the confessions of Ballard and Savage, by the confessions of her Secretaries, Nave and Curle, that she was privy to their Treasons, and consented to the Invasion of England, and destruction of the Queen. To which she answered, That Letters might be counterfeited, her Secretaries might be corrupted, the rest, in hope of life, might be drawn to confesse that which was not true: In this she stood peremptorily, That she never B consented to any attempt against the Queens Person; though for her own delivery, she confessed she did. After many other charges by the Commissioners, and replies by the Queen of Scots; At last, she requested, that she might be heard in a full Parliament, or before the Queen her self, and her Council. But this request prevailed not; for on the twenty fifth day of October, following, at the Star-chamber in Westminster, the Commissioners met again, and there pronounced sentence against her; Ratifying by their Seals and subscriptions, that after the first day of June, in the seven and twentieth year of our Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, divers matters were compassed and imagined in this Kingdom, by Anthony Babington, and others, with the privy of Mary Queen of Scots, pretending Title to the Crown of England, tending to the hurt, death, and destruction of the Royal Person of our said Sovereign Lady the Queen.

After a few days, a Parliament was holden at Westminster, the which was begun by Authority from the Queen, derived to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Treasurer, and the Earl of Derby; and the same, not without some Presidents. At this Parliament, the Proscriptions of the Lord Paget, Charles Paget, Francis Inglefield, Francis Throgmorton, Anthony Babington, Thomas Salisbury, Edward Jones, Chydock Tichburne, Charles Tilney, and other the complices, was confirmed, and their goods and possessions adjudged confiscate. Also the Peers of the Kingdom, with an unanimous consent, exhibit a Petition to the Queen by the Lord Chancellor, that for the preservation of the true Religion, and safety of the Queen, of themselves, and their Posterity, the sentence passed against Mary Queen of Scots, might according to law be presently promulged: They put the Queen in minde of the fearful examples of Gods Judgements extant in Scripture, upon King Saul, for sparing of Agag, and upon Ahab, for not putting Benbadad to death. But the Queen answereth them to this effect: First, acknowledging Gods miraculous preservation of her, and then their constant affections towards her, for whose sakes only she desires to live: Otherwise, when she calls to minde things past, beholds the present, and expects what may happen in time to come, that she accounts them most happy, who go soonest hence. That the Law lately made, by which the Queen of Scots is condemned, was not made (as some maliciously have imagined) to ensnare her, but contrariwise, to forewarn and deter her from attempting any thing against it, which though it had not been made, yet were there other ancient Laws enough to condemn her. Nothing could have been more grievous to me, then that a Prince, and one so neer allied unto me, should deserve the sentence pronounced against her; and seeing the matter is of rare example, and of a very weighty consequence, I hope you will not expect, that I should at this present determine any thing; yet that there may be no danger in delay, I will in due time signifie my minde unto you; and in the mean time, would have you expect from me, whatsoever good Subjects look for, from a Gracious Prince.

Twelve days after, having deeply weighed the matter in her minde, she sent the Lord Chancellor to the Peers, and Puckering to the Lower House, entreating them to advise more diligently concerning to we ghly a matter, and to be think themselves of some wholesome remedy, by which the life of the Queen of Scots might be spared, and their security also provided for. They, when they had a long time in most serious manner deliberated hereof, return at last this Verdict; That the Queens life could not be in safety, while the Queen of Scots lived, unlesse she F either repented and acknowledged her crimes, or were kept in straight custody, or bound by her oath and obligations, or gave Hostages, or lastly, departed the Kingdom. And seeing none of these were likely to be remedies; it remained, that only her death would be a remedy. Repentance in her they could little hope for, who would not so much as acknowledge her self faulty: Close Imprisonment, Obligations, Oath, and Hostages they accounted as nothing, which all vanished, if the Queens life were once taken away; and if she departed the Kingdom, they feared she would straightway go about to invade it again. These things the Lord Chancellor, and Puckering the Speaker of the Lower House, declared to the Queen at large, and urged her in their names, to have the Sentence put in execution. Hereupon, the Queen after a short pause, spake at last to this effect: I protest, my chief desire hath been, that for your security, and my own safety, some other way might be devised, then that which is now propounded; but seeing it now evident and certain, that my safety without her destruction, is in a more deplorable estate, I am most grievously affected with inward sorrow; that I, who have pardoned so many Rebels, have neglected so many Treasons (either by connivence, or silence) should now at last exercise cruelty upon a Prince so nearly allied to me. As for your Petition, I beseech you to rest in an Answer, without an Answer: If I say I will not grant your Petition, I shall happily say what I mean not; If I should say, I will grant it, then cast I my self into destruction headlong, G whose

A' whose safety you so earnestly desire; And that I know, you in your wisdoms would not I should do.

After this, the Parliament was prorogued, and then were the Lords Buckhurst and Beal sent to the Queen of Scots, to let her understand that Sentence was pronounced against her, and confirmed by Parliament, and that the execution of it was earnestly desired by the Nobility and the Commons; and therefore perswaded her, that before her death, she would make acknowledgement of her offences, against God and the Queen; Intimating, that if she lived, the Religion received in England, could not subsist. Hereupon, she was taken with an unwonted alacrity, and seemed to triumph for joy, giving God thanks, and gratulating her own felicity, That she should be accounted an Instrument, for establishing Religion in this Island; and therewith requested, she might have some Catholick Priest to administer the Sacrament to her; but was denyed, which some deemed, not inhumane only, but tyrannical and heathenish. The Bishop and the Dean, whom for this cause they commended to her, she utterly rejected, and jeered at the English Nation, saying; The English were ever and anon wont to murder their own Kings, and therefore no marvel, they should now thirst after her destruction. In December following the Sentence against her was Proclaimed, in London first, and after over all the Kingdom, wherein Queen Elizabeth seriously protested, that this Promulgation of the Sentence was extorted from her, to her great grief, by the importunity of the whole body of the Kingdom. The Queen of Scots being told hereof, seemed not a whit dejected with it; but writing to the Queen, never maketh intercession for her self, nor expostulateth her death, but only makes three small requests; one, That she might be buried in France, by her Mother; another, That she might be put to death privately, but her servants to be present; the third, That her servants might not freely depart, and enjoy such Legacies as she had given them. Of which Requests, she desireth the Queen to vouchsafe her an answer; but whether this Letter ever came to Queen Elizabeth, is uncertain.

Upon this, the Queen of Scots is made acquainted with the Lords Petition to have the Sentence executed, at which she seemed to rejoice.

This condemnation of the Queen of Scots, as a thing strange, and scarce credible, was soon spread far and near; so as intercessions came thick in her behalf to Queen Elizabeth, but specially from the King of Scots, and the King of France, who sent their several Ambassadors, using all the reasons that natural affection in the one, and likeness of condition in the other, could urge, for sparing of her life; but when the necessity of the State, seemed to obstruct all ways of clemency, the French Ambassador L' Aubespine, falleth from reasons to action, and thinketh no way so effectual for saving of the Queen of Scots life, as to take away Queen Elizabeth's life; and thereupon, first, he dealeth covertly with William Stafford, a young Gentleman, and prone to embrace hopes (whose Mother was of the Bed-chamber to Queen Elizabeth, and his Brother at that time, Ambassador Lieger in France) and afterward, more openly by Trappe his Secretary, to murder the Queen. Stafford, though not daring to act such a villany himself, yet commended one Moody to him, a resolute fellow, and one that for money would be sure to do it. Upon this, Stafford brings Trappe to Moody, being then in the common Gaol, who upon Trappe's offer, undertakes it: But then the consultation was, by what way it should be done? Moody propounded poyson, or else to lay a bag of Gunpowder under the Queens Bed, and suddenly fire it. But Trappe liked of neither of these ways, but would rather have it done, as was done to the Prince of Orange. But while they are thus consulting about the way of doing it, Stafford discovers all to the Lords of the Council. Whereupon Trappe who was now bound for France, was apprehended, and being examined, confessed the whole matter. Upon this, the Ambassador himself was sent for to Cecil's house, the twelfth of January; where met him by the Queens appointment, Cecil Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Leicester, Sir Christopher Hatton Vice-Chamberlain, and Davison one of her Secretaries; who declare to the Ambassador every particular which Stafford, Moody, and Trappe his Secretary had confessed. As soon as Stafford was brought forth, and began to speak, the Ambassador interrupted him, and reviling him, made asseveration, that Stafford first propounded it; when Stafford falling on his knees, made fearful imprecations, that the Ambassador first propounded it himself. But whosoever propounded it (saith Burleigh) it appears, that you were made acquainted with the matter. To which he presently replied; That if he had known of any such thing, yet, being he was an Ambassador, he ought not to give notice of it, but to his own King. After much reasoning in this manner, the Lord Burleigh admonished him, to beware how he offended hereafter in this kinde; and let him know, That he is not quitted from the offence, though for this time the Queen be pleased to forbear him.

The King of Scots and the King of France solicit for her life.

L' Aubespine the French Ambassador, sets agents a work to kill Q. Elizabeth.

But upon this Treason, the Queen of Scots Adversaries put many terrors into Queen Elizabeth's minde, giving out, That the Spanish Navy was come to Milford Haven; That the Scots were broken into England; That the Duke of Guyse with a great Army was landed in Sussex; That the Queen of Scots was escaped out of Prison, and had gotten a Company up in Arms, and many other such feigned suggestions; Through which, at length they drew the Queen to this: That she sealed Letters, for executing the Sentence against the Queen of Scots; and one of her greatest perswaders to it (as the Scots reported it) was one whom the King of Scots had sent to dissuade her from it; namely, Patrick Grey, who sounded often in her ears, Mortua non mordet; when she is dead, she cannot bite.

Q. Elizabeth terrified with many rumors, seals a Warrant for executing her.

The Queen notwithstanding, began to weigh with her self, whether it were better to rid her out of the way, or else to spare her; and many great reasons offered themselves on both sides, But

But being long in suspense about it, at last the commanded Secretary Davyson to get the Commission made: but not disclose the matter to any.

Yet Davyson acquainted divers of the Privy Council with it.

Hereupon Beale is sent down to give authority to the Earl of Shrewsbury and others to see her executed.

The Commissioners acquainted her with it, with which she was not a whit daunted.

but where only speculative reasons presented themselves for sparing her; many practical reasons, A and those pressed both by Courtiers and Preachers, were presented to her; so as long holden in suspense, she would oftentimes sit speechlesse, and her countenance cast down: At last, her fear prevailing, she delivered to Secretary Davyson, Letters under her hand and Seal, to get the Commission made under the Great Seal of England, for the Execution of the Queen of Scots, which might be in a readinesse upon any fear of danger; charging him not to disclose the matter to any whomsoever. But the next day her minde was altered, and sent Sir William Killebrew to Davyson, to countermand the making of the Commission. Whereupon Davyson goes to her, and lets her know, That the Commission was already made, and the Seal put to it; Whereat, the Queen extremely angry, rebuketh him sharply for his baseness; yet Davyson imparteth the matter to Privy Counsellors; and perswades them, That the Queen commanded the Commission should be B put in execution. Hereupon, Beale Clerk of the Council, is sent down with Letters, wherein authority is deputed to the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Derby, Cumberland, and others, that she should be put to death according to the Law; with which proceeding, the Queen was not once made acquainted; and more then this, although she had intimated to Davyson, That she would take some other order concerning the Queen of Scots, yet did not he stay Beale from going.

And now comes in the last Act of the Queen of Scots Tragedy; for as soon as the Earls were come to Fotheringay; they, together with Sir Amias Pawlet, and Sir Drue Drurie, with whom she was then in custody; go unto her, and reading the Commission, signifie the cause of their coming; and in a few words, admonish her to prepare her self for death, for that she must die the next day. C Whereunto, without any change of countenance or passion of minde, she made answer; I had not thought that my Sister the Queen would have consented to my death, who am not subject to your Laws; but since it is her pleasure, death shall be to me most welcome. Then she requesteth that she might confer with her Confessor, and Melvyn her Steward, which would not be granted: The Bishop or Dean of Peterborough they offered her, but them she refused. The Earls being departed, she gave order that Supper should be hastened, where she eat (as she used to do) soberly; and sparingly; and perceiving her men and women servants to lament and weep, she comforteth them, and bid them rejoyce rather, that she was now to depart out of a world of misery. After supper, she looketh over her Will, read the Inventory of her Goods and Jewels, and writ their names severally by them, to whom she gave any of them; at her wonted hour she went D to bed, and after a few hours sleep, awaking; spent the rest of the night in her devotion. And now the fatall day being come, which was the eight of February; she getteth up, and makes her ready in her best Apparel, and then betook her self in her Closet to Almighty God, imploring his assistance with deep sighes and groans; untill Thomas Andrews Sheriff of the County gave notice, that it was time to come forth, and then with a Princely Majesty, and cheerful countenance she came out, her head covered with a linnen Vail, and carrying an Ivory Crucifix in her hand; In the Gallery the Earls met her, and the other Gentlemen, where Melvyn her Servant upon his bended knees, deplored his own fortune, that he should be the messenger to carry this sad news into Scotland; whom she comforted, saying, Do not lament Melvyn, Thou shalt by and by see E Mary Steward freed from all cares. Then turning her self to the Earls, she requested that her Servants might stand by her at her death, which the Earl of Kent was very loath to grant, for fear of superstition: To whom she said, Fear nothing, these poor wretches desire only to give me my last farewell. I know the Queen my Sister, would not deny me so small a request. After this, the two Earls, and the Sheriff of the County leading the way, she came to the Scaffold, which was set up at the upper end of the Hall, where was a Chair, a Cushion, and a Block, all covered with Mourning. Then the Dean of Peterborough going to Prayers, she falling upon her knees, and holding up the Crucifix in both her hands, prayed with her Servants in Latine, out of the Office of the blessed Virgin. Prayers being ended she kissed the Crucifix, and signing her self with the sign of the Crosse, said, As thy arms, O Christ, were spread forth upon the Crosse, so embrace me with the open arms of thy mercy, and forgive me my sins. Then the Executioner asking her pardon, she F forgave him. And now her women helping off her outer Garments, and breaking forth into shrieks, and cries, she kissed them, signed them with the Crosse, and willed them to leave lamenting, for now an end of her sorrows was at hand; and then shadowing her face with a linnen cloth, and lying down on the Block, she repeated the Psalm, In te Domine speravi, ne confundar in eternum; at which words she stretching forth her Body, her head at two blows was taken off. Her body was afterward Royally buried in the Cathedral Church at Peterborough; but since that, her Noble Son James, King of great Britain, erected a Royal Monument for her, in King Henry the seventh's Chappel at Westminster. This end had Mary Queen of Scots, in the six and fortieth year of her age, and of her Imprisonment in England the eighteenth; a G Lady so compleat in all excellent parts of body and minde, that must needs have made her a happy woman, if she had not been a Queen: and perhaps a happy Queen too, if she had not been Heir to the Crown of England: For why did all her endeavours want successe, but only from the fear of that Succession? and no Innocency of hers could be a Defence, where the fury of Jealousie made the Assault.

As soon as it came to the Queens knowledge, that the Queen of Scots was put to death, her countenance grew dejected, and her speech failed her; intomuch that all in mourning weeds, she gave her self over to sorrow, commanded her Counsellors from her Presence, and caused

Davyson

A Davyson to be cited to the Star-chamber. And as soon as grief would suffer her, she wrote a Letter with her own hand to the King of Scots, and sent it by Sir Robert Cary, to this effect; That her minde was infinitely disquieted, in regard of this lamentable event, against her meaning and intent; entreating him to believe, that if she had commanded it, she would never have denied it, and withal protesting her true affection towards him, and her assiduous watchfulness for the prospering of his affairs.

And soon after writes to the King of Scots to satisfy him in it, that it was done against her meaning.

While Cary was on his journey, Davyson is cited to the Star-chamber before these Delegates, Sir Christopher Wray Chief Justice of the Kings Bench, for that time made Lord Privy Seal, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Earls of Worcester, Cumberland, and Lincoln, the Lords Gray, and Lumley, Sir James Croft, Comptroller of the Queens House, Sir Walter Mildmay, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Edmund Anderson, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Sir Roger Manwood, Lord Chief Baron (where note, That Bromley Lord Chancellor, Burleigh Lord Treasurer, Leicester, and Hatton, who were indeed more guilty of the fact than Davyson, were none of the number) Before these Delegates, Popham the Queens Attorney layeth to Davysons charge, Contempt of the Queens Majesty, violating of his trust, and neglect of his duty, laying open all particulars of his fact; which after Egerth the Queens Solicitor, Gawdy, and Tuckering Serjeants at Law, urged also against him with great aggravation: To which Davyson mildly answered, That he would not contest with the Queen; only protests, That if he had done any thing otherwise then he ought, it was out of ignorance and mistaking, and not out of any purpose to disobey her Majesty. It seems the Queen had carried her self, as one that would have it done, and yet was loath to do it, scarce knowing her own minde, and yet would have another know it; meaning to make it the work of mistaking, rather then of purpose, that so at least she might leave some place of satisfaction to her self, that it was not absolutely of her doing.

Davyson is cited in the Star-chamber, and charged with violating her Majesties trust.

The Pleadings ended, the Commissioners went to censure; Manwood began, and gave his opinion, that Davyson for the inconsideratenesse of his fact, should be fined ten thousand pounds, and Imprisonment during the Queens pleasure; the rest went on in that sentence, only the Lord Gray excused Davyson so far, That he thought him worthy of reward, rather then of punishment: The conclusion was, the first Sentence for his Fine and Imprisonment, was by Wray Keeper of the Privy Seal confirmed; and Davyson never after recovered the Queens favour, though she relieved him sometimes in his necessity. A man ingenious indeed, but not thoroughly acquainted with the ways of the Court; and thought to have been raised to this place, of purpose to act this part, and for nothing else.

His censure in the Star chamber.

By this time Sir Robert Cary, Son to the Lord Hunsdon, who was sent to excuse the Queen, was come to the Borders; but being come thither, was not suffered to set foot in Scotland; The King would scarce hear him by another, and with much ado received his Letters. He called home his Ambassador out of England, and thought of nothing but revenge.

The King of Scots will not admit the Queens messenger and threatens revenge.

But the Queen still laying the fault upon Davyson, and the unadvised credulity of her Counsellors, by little and little allayeth his passion; and expecting, till time had somewhat asswaged his grief, that it would indure to be touched, at length, by her Agents in Scotland, and soon after by the Lord Hunsdon Governor of Berwick, she admonished him, How dangerous it would be for him, to break out into War against England, and what little help he could justly expect from either Spain or France; but if he persisted in the amity with England, he might be sure the Queen of England would most lovingly account him for her Son. And to the end, that he should assure himself, that the Queen his Mother was put to death without her privy, she sent him the sentence against Davyson, under the Seals of all the Delegates, and attested under the Great Seal of England; and another Instrument likewise signed with the hands of the Judges of England; in which they aver, That the Sentence against the Queen of Scots, could in no wise be prejudice to his right in the Succession.

Queen Elizabeth seeks to pacify him, and by what reasons.

Having now by these and the like courses, somewhat asswaged the King of Scots indignation; to prevent the War which they foresaw was imminent from the King of Spain, they send forth Drake with four of the Queens ships and others, unto the Coast of Spain, to set upon their ships in the Havens, and to intercept their Munition. Drake entring into the Port of Cales, sunk, took, and fired about an hundred ships, wherein was great store of Munition and victuals: Then returning to the Cape of St. Vincent, he set upon three Forts, and compelled them to yeeld. Thence setting sail to the Western Islands, called Azores, under the great Meridian; by great good fortune he happened upon an huge and wealthy Carack, called St. Philip, returning from the East-Indies, and easily vanquished it; Whereupon the Mariners on both sides, from the name of Philip, portended no good luck to Philip King of Spain.

Drake is sent to the Coast of Spain, and what mischiefs he did the King.

At the same time, Thomas Cavendish of Suffolk, in the other part of the World, who two years before had set sail from England with three ships, passing through the Straights of Magellan, in the Coast of Chily, Peru, and Nuova Hispania, fired a great number of Spanish Towns, took and pillaged nineteen great ships, and amongst them a wealthy ship of the Kings, nigh unto California, in North America; and so by the Philippine Isles, the Molucces, the Cape de Bone Esperance, and the Island of St. Helene, returned home the next year, being the third after Magellan, that sailed about the World.

And the like also did Tho. Cavendish of Suffolk.

As Drake and Cavendish at this time gained great fame and renown; so two other men in the Netherlands (Stanley and York) purchased as great infamy and disgrace: This York was a Londoner, a bold fellow, and of loose behaviour; famous for bringing first into England, the manner of turning the point upon the Adversary in single Combats, where as the English till this time, were wont to be armed with Bucklers and Swords, and to strike with edge, and it was held no manhood to turn the point, or strike below the girdle. He suffered some affront from the

York and Stanley in the Low-Countries, perditionally delivered up Towns to the Spaniards, and their ends.

Earl of Leicester, fled away, and for a time, served under the Spaniards in the Netberlands, till at length being reconciled to Leicester, he was set over the Fort near Zutphen; but being bribed, he not only yeelded up the place to the Enemy, but drew to the like villany one Stanley, who with great valour had served in an Irish expedition, to yeeld up Darenty to the Spaniards, a wealthy and well fortified Town. But what got they by their treachery? The Spaniards set Tork and Stanley at variance, they poyson Tork and seize upon his goods, his carcasse was three years after digged up by the States commandement, and hanged upon a Gibbet till it rotted away; Stanley went into Spain, where there was no credit given to him; for the Spaniards have a saying, It is lawful to give honour to a Traytor sometimes, but never to trust him.

Upon the complaint of the States, against the Earl of Leicester, the Lord Buckhurst is sent to examine his doings.

These late treacheries, wrought the Earl of Leicester much envy with the Confederate Netberlands, because the Traytors were very intimate with him; whereupon the States in large letters B to the Queen, accuse Leicester for his ill managing of the Weal publick, in the matter of money, Merchandize, and Military affairs; and to his credulity, they impute the harm which accrewed by Tork and Stanley. The Queen, for the narrow sifting of the matter, and composing it; sent thither Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst (lately taken into her Privy Council in Leicester's absence) Norris, and Bartholomew Clerk: But when the officious diligence of Buckhurst, seemed to trench upon Leicester's reputation; his grace with the Queen proved so forcible, that Buckhurst at his return, was for certain moneths confined to his house.

Leicester is called home, and gives up the Government to the States.

Afterward, Since being beleaguered by the Prince of Parma, Leicester was by the States sent for out of England, to succour it; the Town was furiously assaulted, with seventeen thousand great shot, and a mighty breach was made into it; which neverthelesse Roger Williams, Francis Vere, C Nicholas Baskerville, with the Garrison of the English and Walloons, was valiantly defended for a while, but at last were enforced to yeeld it up, Leicester, that came to relieve it, finding himself too weak for the Besiegers, being gone away. And indeed, the States would not commit any great Army to his Command; who (they knew) had a determination to seize Leyden, and some other Towns into his own hands, and had a purpose to surprize the absolute Government. Whereupon, the States used means, that Leicester was called home; gave up the Government to the States, and in his room succeeded Maurice of Nassaw Son to the Prince of Orange, being now but twenty years of age. Peregrine Lord Willoughby, was by the Queen made General of the English Forces in the Low-Countries, to whom she gave command to reduce the English Factions into the States obedience; the which, with the help of Prince Maurice, he easily D effected.

Being called to examination before the Lords of the Council, how he eludes it.

Leicester being now come home, and perceiving that an accusation was preparing against him by Buckhurst and others, for his unfaithful managing of affairs in Holland; privately with tears he cast himself down at the Queens feet, entreating her, that she would not receive him with disgrace, at his return, whom she had sent forth with honor; and so far prevailed with her, that the next day being called to examination before the Lords, he took his place amongst them, not kneeling down at the end of the Table, as the manner of Delinquents is; and when the Secretary began to read the heads of his Accusation, he interrupted him, saying, That the publick instructions which he had received, were limited with private restriction; and making his appeal to the Queen, eluded the whole crimination, with the secret indignation of his Adversaries. E

How the honor of Aburgavenny came to the Family of Nevill.

This year was famous for the death of many great Personages: In the moneth of February, dyed Henry Nevill, Lord of Aburgavenny, great Grandchilde to Edward Nevill, who in the Reign of King Henry the Sixth, got this Title in the right of his Wife, only Daughter and Heir to Richard Beauchamp Earl of Worcester, and Lord of Aburgavenny; In which right, when as the only Daughter of this Henry, Wife to Sir Thomas Fane, challenged the Title of Baronesse of Aburgavenny; a memorable contention arose concerning the Title between her, and the next Heir Male, to whom by Will (and the same confirmed by Authority of Parliament) the Castle of Aburgavenny was bequeathed. This question being a long time debated; at last in a Parliament, holden in the second year of King James, the matter was tryed by voyces; and the Heir male carried the Lordship of Aburgavenny, and the Barony Le Despencer, was ratified to the Female. F

Anne Stanhope Dutchesse of Somerset dies, of great age. Sir Ralph Sadler dies, the last Banneret of England. Sir Christopher Hatton is made L. Chancellor.

This year also, in the moneth of April, dyed Anne Stanhope, Dutchesse of Somerset, ninety years old, who being the Wife of Edward Seymer Duke of Somerset, and Protector of England, contended for precedency, with Katherine Parre, Queen Dowager to King Henry the Eighth. There dyed also Sir Ralph Sadler, Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, the last Banneret of England, with which dignity he was adorned at the Battel of Musselborough in Scotland. After him dyed Thomas Bromly Lord Chancellor of England; and six days after, he, whom the Queen meant should have succeeded him, Edward Earl of Rutland; but he now sayling, Sir Christopher Hatton was made Lord Chancellor, who though he were a Courtier, yet the Queen knowing him to be an honest man, thought him not unfit for the place, where conscience hath, or should have more place than Law; although some were of opinion, That it was not so much the Queens own choice, as that she was perswaded to it by some that wisht him not well: both thereby to be a cause of absenting him from the Court, and thinking that such a sedentary place, to a corpulent man that had been used to exercise, would be a means to shorten his life: and indeed he lived not full out three years after. G

This year Sir John Perot was called home out of Ireland, and left all in great quiet to Fitz Williams his Successor. For hitherto the English found it no hard matter to vanquish the Irish, by reason of their unskilfulnesse in Arms; eight hundred Foot, and three hundred Horse, was held an invincible

A invincible Army : but after that by Perrots command, they were exercised in Feats of Arms ; and taught to discharge Muskets at a Mark, and had in the Low-Countries learned the Art of Fortification, they held the English better to it, and were not so easily overcome.

And now we are come to the one and twentieth year of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, being the year 1588. long before spoken of by Astrologers, to be a wonderful year, and even the Climacterical year of the World. And yet the greatest Wonder that happened this year, was but the wonderful Fleet that Spain provided for invading of England, if the defeat of that wonderful Fleet were not a greater Wonder.

It is true, there was at this time a Treaty of Peace between England and Spain ; and the Earl of Derby, the Lord Cobham, Sir James Crofts, Dale, and Rogers Doctors of Law, Commissioners for the Queen ; for the Prince of Parma, the Count Aurenberg, Champignie, Richardot, Mies, and Garwyer, Doctors, had many meetings about it neer to Ostend ; but it seemed on the part of Spain, rather to make the English secure, that they should not make provision for War, then that they had any purpose of real proceeding, seeing they accepted not of any reasonable Conditions that were offered, but trifled out the time, till the Spanish Navy was come upon the Coast, and the Ordinance heard from Sea, and then dismissed the English Delegates.

In the time of a Treaty of Peace between England and Spain, the King of Spain sends his great Armado against England.

The Spanish Navy consisted of one hundred and thirty Ships ; whereof Galeasses and Gallies seventy two, goodly Ships, like to floating Towers ; in which were Souldiers, 19290 ; Mariners, 8350 ; Gallyslaves, 2080 ; Great Ordinance, 2630 : For the greater holiness of their Action, twelve of their Ships were called, The twelve Apostles. Chief Commander of the Fleet was Don Alphonso, Duke of Medina ; and next to him, John Martin Recalde, a great Sea-man. The twentieth of May they weighed Anchor from the River Tagus, but were by Tempest so miserably disperst, that it was long ere they met again : but then they sent before to the Prince of Parma, That he with his Forces, consisting of fifty thousand old Souldiers, should be ready to joyn with them, and with his Shipping conduct them into England, and to land his Army at the Thames Mouth.

Of what number of Ships the Armado consisted : and who was General.

The Queens Preparation in the mean time, was this ; The Lord Charles Howard, Lord Admiral, with all her Navy, and Sir Francis Drake, Vice-Admiral, to be ready at Plymouth ; and the Lord Henry Seymer, (second Son to the Duke of Somerset) with forty English and Dutch Ships, to keep the Coasts of the Netherlands, to hinder the Prince of Parma's coming forth. Then D for Land-Service, there were laid along the Southern Coast, twenty thousand Souldiers, and two Armies besides of Trained men were levied ; over one of which, consisting of a thousand Horse, and two and twenty thousand Foot, the Earl of Leicester commanded, and pitched his Tents at Tilbury, near the Thames mouth : Over the other, appointed to guard the Queens Person, and consisting of four and twenty thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse, the Lord Hunsdon was General. Arthur Lord Grey, Sir Francis Knolles, Sir John Norris, Sir Richard Bingham, Sir Roger Williams, and other Military men, were chosen to make a Council of War, and consult how the Land service should be ordered. These declared, amongst other things, That the places which lay fittest for the Enemies landing, as Milford Haven, Falmouth, Plymouth, Portland, the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth, the Downs, the Thames mouth, Harwich, Tarmouth, Hull, and such other, should be fortified with Works and Garrisons ; the Trained Souldiers of those Shires, which lay near the Sea Coast, should defend those places, and be ready at the Alarm to hinder the Enemy from Landing ; but if he did land, then to spoil the Countrey round about, that he might finde no food ; and by continual crying, Arm, Arm, give the Enemy no rest, but yet should not give Battel, till good store of Commanders were come together.

The Queens preparation both by Sea and land, to resist it.

At this time many fearing the Papists at home, no lesse then the Spaniards abroad, persuaded the Queen to take off the heads of some of the greatest of them ; but she detesting such cruelty, took order only, That some of them should be committed to custody in Witch Castle.

Many Papists are committed to custody in Witch Castle.

And now all things on both sides prepared, the Spanish Navy set forth out of the Groyn in F May, but was disperst and driven back by weather. The English Navy set forth somewhat later out of Plymouth, bearing up towards the Coast of Spain ; but partly by occasion of contrary windes, partly by advertisement that the Spaniards were gone back, and upon some doubt also that they might passe by towards the Coast of England, whilst they were seeking them afar off, they returned to Plymouth : At which time, a confident (though false) advertisement came to the Admiral, That the Spaniards could not possibly come forward that year : whereupon the English Navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of the men were gone on shore ; when suddenly the invincible Armada (for so it was called in a Spanish ostentation) was discovered upon the Western Coast : whereof the Lord Admiral being informed, had much ado to get the Queens Navy out of the Haven (the winde being contrary) yet at length G he haled it forth. The next day, the English beheld the Spanish Ships, in height like to Castles, sayling slowly along, whom they suffered peaceably to passe by, that they might have the benefit of the winde to follow after. The one and twentieth day of July, the Admiral of England sent a Pinnace before, called The Defiance, which by a great shot, challenged the Spaniards to fight, and by and by they fell to it. Then Drake, Hawkins, and Forbisher let fly against the outmost Squadron, which Recalde commanded, making him glad to fly to their main Navy for succour. The night following, a mighty Birkayner of Oquenda's (in which the King of Spains Treasure was) was by chance fired with Gun-powder, but was timely quenched by other

The two Fleets encounters ; and the passages and events of it.

Ships sent to her succour; one of which Ships, was the Galleon of Don Pedro, whom Sir Francis A Drake took prisoner, and sent him to Dartmouth. The Biskayner it self (the Treasure being taken out by the Spaniards) they left behinde them, which the English brought into the Haven at Weymouth.

The three and twentieth day of this Moneth, they had a second fight, in which most of the Spanish shot flew over the English Ships, and never hurt them; Only Cock an English man, being with his little Vessel in the midst of the Enemies, died valiantly. The four and twentieth day they rested on both sides; in which time the Lord Admiral ranked his whole Fleet into four Squadrons: The first he ruled himself, Drake the second, Hawkins the third, and Forbisher the fourth.

The five and twentieth day (which was Saint James's day) they fell to it the third time; B in which Fight, the English had again the better, so as after this time, the Spaniards would no more turn upon the English, but holding on their course, dispatched a Messenger to the Prince of Parma; requiring him forthwith to joyn himself to the Kings Fleet, and withall to send them Bullets.

The day following, the Lord Admiral knighted Thomas Howard, the Lord Sheffield, Roger Townsend, John Hawkins, and Martin Forbisher; and holding a Councel of War, they decreed not to set again upon the Enemy, till they came to the straight of Calice, where the Lord Henry Seymour and Sir William Winter waited for their coming. And now so far were the English from being terrified with this invincible Navy, that many of the Nobility and other of special note, hired Ships at their own charges, and came to the Admiral; as the Earls of Oxford, Northumberland, Cumberland, Thomas and Robert Cecil, Henry Brook, Sir Charles Blunt, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir William Hatton, Sir Robert Cary, Sir Ambrose Willoughby, Sir Thomas Gerard, Sir Arthur Gorge and others.

The Prince of Parma is unprepared to put to Sea.

The seven and twentieth of July towards the Evening, the Spaniards cast Anchor near unto Calice, and not far from them rode the English Admiral, within shot of a great Ordinance, to whom Seymour and Winter joyned themselves: so as by this time there were in the English Navy a hundred and forty Ships, nimble and serviceable for fighting or Sayling, yet only Fifteen of them bore the stroke of the Battel. And now again the Spaniards sent Post after Post to the Prince of Parma to send them forty Fly-boats, without which they were not able to skirmish with the English, by reason of the greatnesse and unwieldinesse of their Ships, and importune him presently to D put to Sea with his Army; But he was unprepared, and his Flat-bottomed Boats were full of chinks and leaked, and besides, the Hollanders hovered before the Ports of Dunkerke and Newport, in such sort, that he durst not look forth.

A stratagem used by the English Admiral.

The eight and twentieth day, the Lord Admiral made ready eight of his worst Ships, on the out-side dawbed with Wilde-fire, Rozin and Brimstone, within full of combustible matter, and under the conduct of Young and Prowse, sent them down with the winde in the silent time of the night, towards the Spanish Fleet; the which when the Spaniards saw approach them, and the Sea as it were all on a light fire; imagining withall, that those Fire-ships might carry in them some murdering Engines, they made a hideous noise, took up Anchors, cut Cables, spread Sails, and betook themselves to their Oars, but more to flight: One of E the Spanish Galeasses having lost her Rudder, and floating up and down, was held in fight by Arminas Preston, Thomas Gerard, and Harvie, who slew Captain Hugh Moncada, cast the Souldiers overboard, and carryed away a great deal of Gold, but the Vessel and Ordinance was wreck to the Governour of Calice.

Drake and Fenner in the mean while perceiving the Spanish Fleet to gather together again before Graveling, set upon them with great violence, to whom straightways, Fenton, Southwell, Beeston, Crosse, and Riman joyn themselves, and soon after the Admiral himself, Sir Thomas Howard, and the Lord Sheffield; the Galleon called Saint Matthew, was sorely battered by Seymour and Winter, driven toward Ostend, and set upon again by the Zealanders, and at last was taken by the Flushingers.

The Spanish Navy returns home.

The Queen in person comes to Tilbury to view the Army.

And now the Spanish Navy having want of many necessaries, and no hope of the Prince of Parma's coming, they resolved to return Northward for Spain; in which passage they lost both many Ships and men, the English Navy still following them close, till they were faine to give them over for want of Powder. Whilst these things passed at Sea, the Queen in Person came to Tilbury to view the Army and Camp there, where she shewed such undaunted Courage and Resolution, that it wonderfully animated the spirits of them all.

And thus this Navy, which was three whole Years in preparing, in the space of a Moneth was often beaten, and at length put to flight, many of their men being slain, more then half of their Ships taken and sunk (of the English not above a hundred at the most missing, nor so much as a Ship, but Cock's little Vessel) and sayling about all Britain by Scotland, the Orkneys and Ireland, G they returned into Spain with as much dishonour as they came out with boasting, for indeed Adoniza in France by a Book in Print, triumphed before the Victory.

Queen Elizabeth comes to Pauls and gives public thanks to God for this Victory.

For the happy successe of this Action, Queen Elizabeth appointed prayers and thanksgiving over all the Churches in England, and she (as it were in Triumph) came in Person, attended with a great Troop of Nobility into the City, and went into the Cathedral Church of S. Paul (where the Banners taken from the Enemy were placed in view) and there in most humble manner gave thanks to Almighty God. And that which increased the publick joy, was the news which Sir Robert Sidney

A Sidney brought out of Scotland, That the King had over-past all injuries, was lovingly affected towards the English, and desired to imbrace sincere and perfect amity with the Queen. For as for the King of Spain, he wittily told the Embassadour, that he expected no other curtesie from him, but such as Polyphemus promised Ulysses, that he should be the last whom he would devour.

The King of Scots is reconciled to the Queen.

And now dyed the great Earl of Leicester the fourth day of September, at his Manor of Killingworth of a violent Feaver; I may well say the great Earl, considering the many great honors he enjoyed, which are extant in the Story; yet one honour greater then any he had before, he effected even then when he was ready to go out of the world, and that was, To be Vicegerent in the high Government of England and Ireland; for which the Patent was already drawn, B and had been sealed, but that Burleigh and Hatton shewed the Queen how dangerous a thing it might prove, for so great Authority to reside in one Subject. He was while he lived in so great favour with the Queen, that some thought (and himself not the least) that she meant to marry him; yet when he dyed, his goods were sold at an Outcry to make payment of the debts he owed her.

About this time Philip Earl of Arundel, who three years before had been cast in prison, was now cited in Westminster Hall, to the judgement of his Peers, and Henry Earl of Derby was made High Steward of England for the time. The matters laid to his charge were these: That he had contracted friendship with Cardinal Allen, Parsons the Jesuite, and other Traytours, exciting divers both abroad and at home to restore the Romish Religion, promising his assistance thereunto: C and for that reason had a purpose to depart the Kingdom. That he was privy to the Bull, in which Pope Sixtus Quintus had deposed the Queen, and given England to the Spaniard; That being imprisoned in the Tower, he caused Masse to be said for the prosperous successe of the Spanish Fleet, and for that purpose had framed peculiar prayers for his own private use. Being demanded whether he were guilty of these things; turning himself to the Judges, he asked them these questions: First, whether it were lawful to heap up so many crimes together in one Bill of Indictment? They answered that it was: Then whether Arguments taken from presumptions were of force? They answered, that it was lawful for him to interpose exceptions if he saw cause. Then again, if he might be Arraigned for those things which were Capital, by the Law made the thirteenth year of the Queen, after that the time expressed in the Act was expired? D They promised, they would proceed against him by no Law; but the old Statute of Treason, made in the Reign of King Edward the third. But now again asked if he were guilty or not? he pleaded not guilty; whereupon Puckering the Queens Serjeant at Law, Popham Atturney General, Shuttleworth Serjeant at Law, and Egerton the Queens Sollicitour, in their turns, urged and proved the crimes objected; some whereof he denyed, some he extenuated; but in conclusion was by his Peers found guilty and condemned; yet the Queen spared his life, and was content with thus much done in terror to the Papists.

Philip Earl of Arundell, is cited to be tried by his Peers, by whom he is condemned, but the Queen spares his life.

It was now the year 1589. and the two and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign; when to be in some sort revenged of the Spaniards for their Invasion, she gave leave to Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake to undertake an Expedition at their own private charges, requiring nothing E of her but a few Ships of War, who took along with them Anthony the bastard, laying claim to the Kingdom of Portingall, and of Souldiers to the number of eleven thousand, of Seamen about fifteen hundred: setting sayl from Plimmouth the fifth day of April, they arrived at the Groyne in Galatia; whereof with great valour they took first the Lower Town, and afterward the Higher, and from thence sayling towards Portingall, they met Robert Earl of Essex, who without the Queens leave had put to Sea: After two days they arrive at Pennycha a Town of Portingall, which they took; and left the Castle to Don Antonio, and from thence they march by land towards Lisbon threescore miles off: The Foot Companies led by Norris, whom Drake promised to follow with the Fleet, being come to the West Suburbs of Lisbon, they found no body there but a few poor disarmed Portugals, who cried F out, God save King Antonio. The day following the Spaniards made a sallie out, in which skirmish Bret, Careilly, and Carre, (stout Commanders) were slain; yet did the Earl of Essex drive the Spaniards to the very gates of the City. And now having tarried here two days, and seeing no sign of the Portugals revolting, which Don Antonio had assured them would be, finding fresh supplies come into the Town, their own Army sickly, Victuals and Powder failing; and which was most of all, Sir Francis Drake not bringing the great Ordinance as he promised, they departed from the Suburbs of Lisbon towards Cascais, a little Town at the mouth of the River Tagus, which Town Drake had taken this mean while, who excused his not coming to Lisbon, by reason of the Flats he must have passed, and the Castle of Saint Julian Fortified with fifty pieces of great Ordinance. Neer this place they found threescore Hulks of the G Hanse towns of Germany, laden with Corn and all manner of Munition, which they took as good prize towards their charges, in regard the Queen had forbidden them to carry Victuals or Munition to the Spaniard. From hence they set sayl to Virgo, a forlorn Town by the Sea-side, and pillaging all along that Quarter, returned for England, having lost in the Voyage of Souldiers and Mariners about six thousand; yet not so much by the Enemy, as by eating of strange fruits and distemper of the Climate.

Norris and Drake undertake an expedition into Spain, to see D^r Antonio in his Kingdom of Portingall, but prevailed not, and why.

It concerns the state of England, to look at this time into the state of France, for while those things were in doing between Spain and England, the Popish Princes of France, under pretext

A combination called the Holy League, is made in France.

The head of this League was the Duke of Guise.

Whom the King for his insolent carriage, caused to be murdered in the very Court.

The Confederates make a New Seal and usurp the Royal Authority. The King is murdered by a Monk.

Being ready to dye he declarerth the King of Navarre to be his lawful successor.

The Cardinal of Bourbon is proclaimed King of France, and at the same time also, the King of Navarre.

The King of Navarre is aided by Queen Elizabeth, both with money and men.

Sir William Drury is slain by Mr. Boroughs in a single Combat upon a quarrel of taking place, the one being a Knight, the other a Barons younger Son.

James King of Scots marries Anne the King of Denmark's Daughter.

Many great personages die. William Somerset Earl of Worcester, his numerous issue, Customer Smith is raised in his Farm of the Customs, and how much, pretext of defending the Catholick Religion, entred into a combination, which they called The Holy League: The purpose whereof was, to root out the Protestants, and to divert the Right of Succession to the Crown of France; For they bound themselves to each other by oath, to suffer no person but a Catholick to be King of France; which was directly to exclude the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde, if the present King without issue male should fail. The head of this League, was the Duke of Guise, who having given some overthrows to the German Forces, that came into France in aid of the Protestants, was immeasurably extolled by the Clergy and others; and grew to such a height of reputation, that entering into Paris, he made the King glad to leave the City, and in an Assembly at Blois, to make him great Master of the French Cavallery, and to consent by Edict, to the cutting off the Protestants. So as the King standing now in fear of him, used means at last, even in the very Court, to have him murdered; and soon after, the Cardinal his Brother to be strangled. Hereupon so great a confusion followed, that the people every where disobeyed the Magistrates, and spoyled the Kings very Palace at Paris. Some Cities affected a Democracie, others an Aristocracie, but few liked of a Monarchy. The Confederates in the mean while made a new Seal, usurped the Royal Authority, seized into their hands the best fortified places, intercept the Kings Revenues, call in Spanish Souldiers, and in all places denounce war and violence against the King. And the King in this case being forced to flee to the Protestants for succour, they then most wickedly, by one James Clement a Monk, made him away. The King being ready to die, Declarerth the King of Navarre to be his lawful Successor, but the Confederates would exclude him as an open Heretick; and yet whom to make choice of they cannot well agree, some would have the Duke of Lorraine, as being descended from the ancient Kings of France, some the Duke of Savoy, as born of the French Kings Daughter, a Prince Potent and Couragious; others would have the Duke of Guise's Brother that was murdered; others the King of Spain; but the greatest part gave their voices for the Cardinal of Bourbon, who was one degree nearer allyed to the slain King, then the King of Navarre his Nephew. He therefore was proclaimed King of France, with the Title of Charles the Tenth; but he being a Priest, the King of Navarre also was at the same time proclaimed King of France, who abode at Diepe a Sea Town in Normandy, and doubted not to drive the Cardinal easily out of France.

The King of Navarre being thus raised in Dignity, but weak in means, implored Aid of the Queen of England, offering to make a League Offensive and Defensive; the Queen out of a pious respect to a King of her own Religion, sent him presently two and twenty thousand pound sterling in Gold (such a sum of Gold, as he professed he had never seen at one time before) and withall supplied him with four thousand Souldiers, under the command of Peregrine Lord Willoughby; for Colonels, she appointed Sir Thomas Wilsford, who was made Marshal of the Field, John Boroughs, Sir William Drury, and Sir Thomas Baskerville, and gave them a months pay in hand. Hereupon the Confederates (whom the King had vanquished a little before at Arques beyond all expectation) began to quail, and the day before the arrival of the English they vanished away: with this addition of Forces the King marcheth to Paris, and being ready to enter the City, causeth a retreat to be founded, as loath to have spoil made of a City, which he hoped shortly should be his own. Afterwards by the assistance of the English he won many Towns, and then having marched at least five hundred miles on foot, he gave them leave after a long Winters service, to return into England. In which Voyage of men of note, died Captain Hunnings, but of a natural death, also Stubbs (he whose right hand was cut off for writing the Book against the Queens marriage) and Sir William Drury slain by Master Boroughs in a single Combat, where the quarrel was, that he being but a Knight, would take place of Boroughs that was the younger Son of a Baron, contrary to the Laws of the English Gentry.

About this time, James King of Scots (with Queen Elizabeths good liking) espoused Anne the Daughter of Frederick the second King of Denmark by his Deputy; but she afterward saying for Scotland, was by tempest cast upon Norway, and there, through continual storms forced to stay, so as the King in the Winter season set sayl thither, that the marriage according to his vow might be accomplished within the year: some were of opinion that those storms were caused by witch-craft, and was confirmed indeed by some witches taken in Scotland; who confessed they had raised those storms to keep the Queen from landing in Scotland, and that the Earl Bothwell had asked Counsel of them concerning the Kings end; who was thereupon cast into prison, but in a short time breaking loose, occasioned new stirrs in Scotland.

This year many Noble personages dyed; Frances Countesse of Suffex, Sister to Sir Henry Sidney, Sir Walter Mildmay, Chancellor and Vice-Treasurer of the Exchequer, William Somerset Earl of Worcester, so numerous in his off-spring, that he could reckon more children of both Sexes, then all the Earls of England. Also John Lord Sturton, Henry Lord Compton, and at Brussels the Lord Paget.

At this time, the Queen who was always frugal, strained one point of Frugality more then ever she had done before; for upon the information of one Caermarden, (though Leicester, Burleigh, and Walsingham were offended, that credit should be given to such a one, and themselves neglected) she raised Thymas Smith the Customer from thirteen thousand pounds yearly, to two and forty thousand pounds, and at last to fifty thousand.

It was now the year 1590. and the three and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, in which the Earl of Cumberland made a Voyage to the Indies, where he laid level to the ground the Fort. of the Isle of Fiata, and brought away eight and fifty Pieces of great Ordinance.

This

A This year was fatal to many Noble personages; first dyed Ambrose Dudley Earl of Warwick, (Son to John Duke of Northumberland) without issue. After him Sir Francis Walsingham, Secretary, a man more skilful in the Politicks, then in the Oeconomicks; more cunning in managing matters of the publick State, then of his own private estate, which he left so mean, and dyed so much indebted, that he was fain to be buried by night, without any Funeral pomp, in the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul; leaving behinde him one only Daughter, famous for her three husbands, all of them the goodliest men of their time; the first Sir Philip Sidney; the second, Robert Earl of Essex; the third Richard Burgh Earl of Clanriccard, by King Charles made Earl of Saint Albans. Within two Moneths after Walsingham dyed Sir Thomas Randall, who had been fourteen times sent in Embassage to several Princes, yet was never rewarded with any greater dignities, then the Chamberlainship of the Exchequer, and the Postmastership of England. Soon after him dyed Sir John Crofts, who had done good service in Scotland, in Edward the Sixths time; in Queen Mary's time was condemned of high Treason; in Queen Elizabeths time set at liberty, and made Comptroller of her house. After him dyed George Talbot, the seventh Earl of Shrewsbury of this house; he was made Earl Marshal of England, and left behinde him a memorial of Wisdom and Integrity. Lastly dyed Thomas Lord Wentworth, the last of the English that had been Governour of Calice.

Many Noble personages die.
Sir Francis Walsingham dies.

In Ireland at this time Hugh Gaveloc (so called, because he had been long kept in Fetters) the natural Son of Shain O Neale, accused Hugh Earl of Tir-Oen, for holding private consultations with certain Spaniards, who in 88 were by Ship-wrack cast upon the coast of Ireland: Tir-Oen to prevent the Accusation, took the said Hugh, and when others refused to do it, took a cord and with his own hands strangled him. Hereupon he was sent for into England, and came, and upon pardon obtained, solemnly undertook in presence of the Queen at Greenwich, to maintain the peace with Turlough Leynigh; Not to usurp the Title of O-Neale, nor any authority over the Gentry about him; to reduce the Territory of Tir-Oen to the form of a County, and civil behaviour, and many such matters; giving hostages for his true performance; and indeed for a time he observed all things very duly. This trouble allayed, another arose; for soon after this, Hugh Roe Mac-Mabon, a Potentate in the Territory of Monaghan, compelled those under his jurisdiction to pay him tribute; whereupon the Deputy caused him to be taken, and tryed by a Jury of common Souldiers, and then to be hanged up, dividing his lands amongst certain English, and some of the Mac-Mabons, reserving a certain yearly Rent to the Crown of England, by this means thinking to extinguish the Power and Title of Mac-Mabon. But hereupon, O Rork, fearing that he should be served in like manner, took up Arms against the Queen; whom Bingham President of Connaght soon distressed, and drave into Scotland, and at the Queens request, was by the King delivered up into his hands.

Some disturbances in Ireland, but soon composed.

It was now the year 1591. and the four and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when she, careful lest Britain should come into the Spaniards hands, sent Edmund York into France, to advertise the King to take care thereof; and promising to send him Forces to that end, if he would name some Towns, where they might be in safety. Hereupon he named Cherburg, Granville, or Brest, as the fittest; and it was agreed, that three thousand English should be sent into Britany and Picardy; but in the meantime, Henry Palmer was sent to Sea, with certain Ships, who seized upon thirteen Spanish Ships, as they were returning from Nova Francia. And now Roger Williams, with a Company of six hundred Souldiers, passeth over to Diepe in Normandy; and Sir John Norris with the rest of the Forces, hasted into Britain soon after. Roger Williams, with his own six hundred, and the help of Charter Governour of Diepe, put to rout the Confederates, that had blocked up the passages; whose valour, the French King in his Letters to the Queen, highly extolled. Whereupon growing more couragious, and not minding his charge, which was to stay at Diepe, he accompanied the King to the very Suburbs of Paris, where in honour of his Nation, he sent a Challenge to the Spaniards, to encounter two hundred Pikemen of the English, and a hundred Musqueteers, with as many Spaniards, in open Field.

Sir Roger Williams extolled by the King of France.

F After this, the King of France acquainted the Queen, that he had a purpose to set upon Roan, or New-baven, before the Prince of Parma should come into France, and thereupon requested her, to send four thousand English into Normandy, which upon certain conditions she willingly did, and sent them under the command of Robert Earl of Essex, accompanied with Sir Thomas Leighton, and Sir William Killigrew, as his Counsellours. When the Earl came into France, he found that the King was at Noyon, and in Normandy no preparation for the War at all, which seemed strange, and much troubled him; but by and by Sir Roger Williams comes to him from the King, requesting him to come to Noyon, that they might confer concerning a course of War. Thither the Earl made a tedious journey, and being come thither, the King told him he was now of necessity to go himself into Champaigne; but promiseth to send Marshal Biron, and the Duke of Montpensier forthwith to him, to lay siege to Roan. Hereupon the Earl returned to his Tents, expecting their coming, but neither of them came, which troubled the Earl more then before; so as being weary now of doing nothing, he made himself one approach to Roan, where his Brother Walter Devereux was unfortunately slain. Indeed the affairs of the King of France were at this time upon so uncertain terms, that before he could act what he had resolved, something still intervened, that diverted him; for which, by his Letters he excused himself to the Queen of England, and by the mediation of the Earl, and Mornay Lord du Plessis, whom to that end he sent into England, obtained new supplies, and then besieged Roan.

Robert Earl of Essex is sent with an Army to aid the King of France.

Brian O-Rork an Irish Potentate, condemned and hanged; and why.

The Colledge in Dublin made an University.

At this time was memorable the prodigious carriage of one Hacket, born at Oundale in Northamptonshire, a mean fellow of no learning, whose first prank was this; That when, in shew of Reconciliation to one with whom he had been at variance, he embraced him, he bit off his Nose, and the man desiring to have his Nose again, that it might be sowed on, while the wound was green, he most villanously eat it up, and swallowed it down before his face. After this, all on a sudden, he took upon him a shew of wonderful holiness, did nothing but hear Sermons, and getting Scriptures by heart, and counterfeiting Revelations from God, and an extraordinary calling, grew to be magnified by certain zealous Ministers, and specially of one Edward Copping, (a Gentleman of a good house) and one Arthington, a great admirer of the Geneva Discipline; that they accounted him as sent from Heaven, and a greater Prophet then Moses or John Baptist, and finally, that he was Christ himself, come with a fan in his hand, to judge the world. And this they proclaimed in Cheapside; giving out that Hacket participated of Christs glorified body, by his especial Spirit, and was now come to propagate the Gospel over Europe, and to settle a true Discipline in the Church of England; and that they themselves were two Prophets, the one of Mercy, and the other of Judgement; with many other such incredible blasphemies; whereupon Hacket was apprehended and arraigned; and at last, hanged, drawn and quartered, continuing all the time, and at his death, his blasphemous Assertions. Copping a while after starved himself to death in Prison, Arthington repented, and made his Recantation in a publick writing.

Besides these, other also at this time opposed the established Government of the Church of England, crying down the calling of Bishops, with whom sided some Common Lawyers also, affirming, that the Queen could not depute, nor these men exercise any such Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; and that the Oath Ex Officio was unchristian. But the Queen conceiving, that through the sides of the Prelates, she her self was shot at, suppressed them what she could, and maintained the Government formerly established.

About this time, the Lord Thomas Howard, with six of the Queens ships, having waited at the Azores six whole Moneths, for the coming of the Spanish Fleet from America, was at last set upon by Alphonso Bassano, with three and fifty ships, sent out for the Convoy of the American Fleet, where Richard Greenville Vice-Admiral, being in the Revenge, and separated from his company, was so hemmed in by the Spanish ships, and so battered with great shot, that most of his men being slain, his Main-mast cut off, himself sore wounded in the head, he commanded to sink the Ship, that it might not come into the Spaniards hands; but this being countermanded by most voices, it was agreed, to yeeld it to the Spaniards, upon condition that the men should be set at liberty. Greenville himself was carryed into the Spanish Admiral, where within two dayes he died, not without praise of his very enemies; Thus the great Ship called the Revenge, was yeilded, but had so many leaks in the Keel, that soon after it was cast away in a storm; and the losse of this one Ship the English soon made good upon the Spaniards, by taking many of theirs.

About this time also, Cavendish, who in the year 1578. had sailed round about the world, now with five Ships bent his course towards the Magellan Straits, but by reason of foul weather, was not able to passe them, and being driven to the coast of Brasile, was there cast away.

And now, enmity increasing daily between Spain and England, two Proclamations were set forth; one, prohibiting upon pain of High Treason, to carry Victuals or Munition into any of the King of Spains Dominions: Another, forbidding all persons to entertain any in their houses, till inquiry made, what they were, lest they might entertain Popish Priests, who at this time came swarming into England, by reason the King of Spain had lately founded a Seminary at Valedolid for the English.

At this time died Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor, whom of a mean Gentlemans house, the Queens favour had raised to this height of Dignity; a goodly personage of body, of Noble, but no aspiring spirit; the only of all the Queens special Favourites, that died a Batchelour; and therefore left William Newport his Sisters son his Heir, who erected for him in Saint Pauls Church, a sumptuous Monument. After his death, the keeping of the great Seal was for certain Moneths committed to the Lord Burleigh Treasurer, Hunsdon, Cobham and Buckhurst: Afterward, Puckering the Queens Serjeant at Law was elected, not Chancellor, but Keeper of the great Seal.

At this time also, Erian O-Rork, the Irish Potentate, was arraigned at Westminster; his Indictments were, for raising Rebellion against the Queen, for dragging her Picture at a Horse tail, for giving the Spaniards entertainment; which things being told him by an Interpreter, (for he understood no English) he said, He would not be tryed, unlesse the Queen her self in person sate to judge him. Yet being told, that it was the Law, he only said, If it must be so, let it be so; and so condemned, was executed at Tyburn as a Traytor, whereof he seemed to make as little reckoning, as if it had but been in jest. And now this year, the Queen made the Colledge of Dublin in Ireland, an University, which was formerly the Monastery of All Saints, endowing it with power to confer Scholastical Dignities.

At this time, Sir John Perot, who had been Deputy of Ireland, and done good service there, was yet by the malice of Adversaries, of whom Hatton was one, called in question, before the Baron Hunsdon, the Lord Buckhurst, Sir Robert Cecil, (lately made a Counsellour) Sir John Fortescue,
Sir

A Sir John Wolley, and some of the Judges: His Accusations were; First, that he had spoken opprobrious words against the Queen, saying, She was illegitimate and cowardly; Secondly, that he had tolerated notorious Traytors, and Popish Priests; Thirdly, that he held correspondence with the Prince of Parma, and the Queens enemies. To the first of which he confessed, that in his passion he had spoken of the Queen unadvisedly, for which he was infinitely grieved; the rest he denied: And all men knew, he was never Popishly affected. His Accusers were one Philip Williams, sometime his Secretary; Denys O-Kophan an Irish married Priest, whose life he had saved; and one ~~John~~ ~~son~~, a fellow of no worth or reputation. Yet the crimes being urged against him by Popish and Lawyers, till eleven a clock at night, he was at last condemned of high Treason, but Sentence was not pronounced till twenty days after; and yet was not put to death, but dyed a natural death in the Tower; he was a man of a goodly personage, stout and cholerick, and one whom (many thought) the Queen had the more reason to respect, for her Father King Henry the Eighth's sake.

Sir John Perot, arraigned, and condemned: and why. Yet his life was spared, and he died in the Tower.

The Earl of Essex, after a tedious Winters Siege in Normandy, challenged Monsieur Villerse Governor of Roan to a single combat; who refusing to meet him, he then returned into England, being called home by the Queen, whose favour, by his long absence, might else have suffered prejudice.

The Earl of Essex challengeth Monsieur Villerse to a single combat, but is refused.

And now the King of France, hearing that the Prince of Parma was coming into France, once again was fain to flie to the Queen for succour, to whom, upon certain conditions, she granted an Army of four thousand men, and some great Ordinance, with which Sir John Norris was sent into France; whom yet the French King employed not, as was agreed, to the great displeasure of the Queen. But as for the Prince of Parma's coming into France, he was prevented by death, when he had governed the Netherlands under the Spaniards fourteen years; a Prince of many excellent parts, and whom Queen Elizabeth never mentioned but with honour.

The Prince of Parma dies.

And now Queen Elizabeth considering that the King of Spains chief strength was in his Gold of America, sends forth Sir Walter Raleigh with a Fleet of fifteen Ships to meet with the Spanish Fleet; who passing by a Promontory of Spain, received certain intelligence, that the Spanish Fleet was not to come forth that year: Whereupon dividing his Navy into two parts; whereof the one he committed to Sir John Boroughs, the other to Sir Martin Forbysher; he waited other opportunities, when soon after, a mighty Caraque came in view, called The Mother of God, which from the Beak to the Stern, was a hundred threescore and five foot long, built with seven Decks, and carrying six hundred men, besides rich Merchandize. This great vessel they took, and in it, to the value of a hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling, over and above what the Commanders and Sea-men pilfered.

Sir Walter Raleigh sent with 15 Ships against the Spaniards; and what he did.

This year, the Queen going in Progresse, passed through Oxford, where she was entertained by the Scholars with Orations, Stage Playes, and Disputations; and by the Lord Buckhurst Chancellor of the University, with a sumptuous Feast. At her departure, she made a Latine Oration, wherein she vowed a vow, and gave them counsel; Her vow was, That as she desired nothing so much, as the prosperity and flourishing estate of her Kingdom, so she as much wished to see the Universities and Schools of learning to flourish likewise. Her Counsel was, That they would serve God above all, not following the curiosity of some wits, but the Laws of God, and the Kingdom; That they would not prevent the Laws, but follow them, nor dispute whether better Laws might be made, but observe those which were already Enacted.

The Queen in her Progresse goes to Oxford; her entertainment there, and her Counsel to the University.

This year, dyed Anthony Brown Viscount Montacute, whom Queen Mary honoured with this Title; because his Grandmother was Daughter, and one of the Heirs of John Nevill Marques Montacute; who, though he were a great Roman Catholick, yet the Queen finding him faithful always, loved him, and in his sickness went to visit him. There dyed at this time also, Henry Lord Scroop of Bolton, Knight of the Garter, and long time Governour of the Western Border toward Scotland.

Anthony Brown Viscount Montacute dies, and how this honour came to his family.

At this time Henry Barrow, and his Sectaries, condemning the Church of England to be no Christian Church, and derogating from the Queens Authority in matters Ecclesiastical; he the said Barrow, as Ring-leader of the rest, was put to death, in terror to all such disturbers of the peace of the Church.

Henry Barrow a seditious Sectary is put to death.

About this time, by reason of the Queens correspondence with the Turk, to the end her Subjects might have free Trading in the Territories; it was maliciously given out by some, that she had excited the Turk to a War against the Christians; which caused the Queen to write to the Emperor, shewing him the falseness of this report, wherein she gave him full satisfaction.

And now a constant report came into England, That the King of France had already embraced, or was ready to embrace the Romish Religion: which so much troubled the Queen, that she presently sent Thomas Wilks into France; with reasons (if it were not too late) to divert him from it. But before Wilks came, the King indeed had openly professed the Romish Religion, at the Church of Saint Denis in Paris; of which his Conversion, he declared the causes to Wilks at large, shewing the necessity of it, unlesse he would suffer himself to be utterly thrust out of the Kingdom. And the French Ambassadour signifying as much to the Queen, in great perplexity, she writ to him to this effect:

The King of France embraceth the Romish Religion: and acquaints the Queen with the necessity of his doing it.

Alas, what grief? what anxiety of minde hath befallen me, since I heard this news? was it possible that worldly respects should make you lay aside Gods fear? could you think, That he, who had hitherto upheld and kept you, would now at the last, leave you? It is a dangerous thing to do evil, that good may come thereof.

The Queens Letter to him, out of her sorrow for it.

But

But I hope your minde may alter; In the mean while, I will pray for you, and beg of God, That the hands of A Esau, may not hinder the blessing of Jacob.

And the Kings
Answer.

To this the King answered, That though he had done this in his own person out of necessity; yet he would never be wanting to those of the Reformed Religion, but would take them into his special care and Protection.

Richard Hawkcondemned and executed:
and why.

And now was Richard Hasket, condemned and executed for Treason, being sent from the English Fugitives beyond Sea, to perswade Ferdinand Earl of Derby, Son to Henry newly deceased, to assume the Title of the Kingdom, by right of Descent from Mary, Daughter to Henry the Seventh; and threatening him, that unlesse he undertook this enterprize, and withall, concealed him the Abettor, he should shortly die in most wretched manner. But the Earl fearing a trap was laid for him, revealed the matter; yet the fellows threatening proved not altogether vain, for the Earl within four Moneths, dyed a most horrible death. This year, Death had his tribute paid him from the Nobility; for there dyed Henry Ratcliffe Earl of Suffex, and three renowned Barons, Arthur Grey of Wilton, Henry Lord Cromwell, and Henry Lord Wentworth; besides Sir Christopher Carlile, whose Warlike Prowesse at Sea and Land, deserves to be remembered.

In Ireland, at this time, divers great men in Connaght Rebelled; and Turloagh Leynigh being dead, Tir-Oen assumed to himself the Title of O'Neal, (which in Ireland is more esteemed, then to be called Emperour;) But upon a sudden, dissembling his discontent, he submitted himself to the Deputy and promised all obedience.

It was now the year 1594. and the seven and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when the good correspondence between the King of Scots and Queen Elizabeth, gave the Papists small hope that ever he would prove an Instrument to restore the Catholick Religion. Whereupon, they began to bethink themselves of some English Papist, that might succeed the Queen; but finding none of their own Sect, a fit person, they fixed their thoughts upon the Earl of Essex, who always seemed a very moderate man: and him they devised to have some right to the Crown, by Descent from Thomas of Woodstock, King Edward the Thirds Son. But the English Fugitives were for the Infanta of Spain; and desiring to set the King of Scots and the Earl of Essex at odds, they set forth a Book, which they Dedicated to Essex, under the name of Doleman, but was written indeed by Parsons, (Dolemans bitter Adversary) Cardinal Allen, and Francis Englishfield. The scope of which Book was, to exclude from Succession, all persons whatsoever, and how near soever allied to the Crown, unlesse they were Roman Catholicks; Contending further, for the right of Isabella, Infanta of Spain, as being descended from Constance, Daughter of William the Conqueror; from Eleanor eldest Daughter to Henry the Second, married to Aphonso the ninth King of Castile; from Beatrix, Daughter to King Henry the third: Titles obsolete, and which exceed the bounds of Heraldry to dispute. This year, the nineteenth of February, was Henry Prince of Scotland born, to whom the Queen was Godmother, and sent Robert Earl of Suffex for her Deputy.

But now greater matters were in hand, Plots were laid against the Queens life; some Spaniards thinking to make her away by Poyson, and not daring to trust any English man in such a business, they treat to that purpose, with Roderick Lopes a Jew, and Physician to the Queen, with Stephen Ferreira, Emmanuel Loyse, and other Portugals; for divers of that Nation came into England at this time, in relation to Don Antonio; who being discovered by letters of theirs, that were intercepted, were Arraigned at Guild hall, and by their own confessions convinced, to have conspired against the life of the Queen: they were all condemned, and Executed at Tyburn; Lopes professing that he loved the Queen, as well as Jesus Christ: which was the cause of laughter to them that knew him to be a Jew. The next day after them, was condemned Patrick Cullen an Irish Fencer, sent hither by the English Fugitives, to kill the Queen, who was straightway executed, though he were at that very time sick and ready to die.

About this time, Sir John Norris having been in a hot conflict at Sea against the Spaniard, where Sir Martin Forbysher received his deaths wound, was now called home, with a purpose to sent him into Ireland. In which mean while, Rich. Hawkins son of Sir Job. Hawkins the famous Sea Captain, had been set forth a year since, with three of the Queens ships, and two hundred men in them; whereof one of them at the Isle of St. Anne, was by chance fired, another of them separated by tempest, returned into England, himself in the third, passed the Straights of Magellan, being the sixth man in the Spanish accompt, that had ever done it; and being now come into the wide Southern Sea, he took five ships laden with Merchandize; one whereof he took away, the rest he suffered to redeem themselves for two thousand Duckats: But at last being set upon by Bertrandus a Castro, who was sent out by the Vice-Roy of those parts, with eight ships against him, after three days battery, he yielded, and though upon composition, yet was nevertheless sent into Spain, and there for divers years kept prisoner.

and thirty Spanish Ships, and

But James Lancaster in another part of America, had better success; for being set forth by some London Merchants (whose goods the Spaniards had seized) with three Ships and a long Boat, he took nine and thirty Spanish Ships, and at Fernambucke in Brasile, where the wealth of an East-Indian Caraque was lately unloaden; he desperately venturing upon the shoar, loaded fifteen ships with the wealth of the Indian Caraque; Sugar, Reed, Redwood called Brasil, and other Merchandize, and then safely and victoriously returned home.

A At Rome, about this time dyed Cardinal Allen, born in Lancashire, of an honest Family, brought up in Oxford, in Oriol Colledge. In Queen Maries days he was Proctor of the University, and after Canon of the Cathedral Church at York. Upon the change of Religion in England, he left the Kingdom, and was Divinity Professor at Doway in Flanders, and made Canon of the Church at Cambray. He procured a Seminary to be set up in Doway, for the English, another at Rheims, and a third at Rome; and through zeal of the Romish Religion, forgot whose subject he was born.

Cardinal Allen dies, and of his Education.

At home, at this time, dyed John Peers Archbishop of York, in whose place, succeeded Matthew Hutton, translated from the See of Durham. There dyed also Ferdinand Stanley Earl of Derby, being in the flour of his age, miserably tormented, and vomiting stufte of a dark rusty colour, being thought to have been poysoned or bewitched. There was found in his chamber a little Image of wax, with hairs of the colour of his hairs, thrust into the belly: which some thought was done of purpose, that men should not suspect him to be poysoned; his vomit so stained the silver Andirons, that it could never be gotten out, and his body though put in searclothes, and wrapped in lead, did so stink and putrefie, that for a long time none could endure to come neer where he was buried. The Master of his Horse was much suspected, who the same day the Earl took his bed, took one of his best Horses, and fled away. About this time also dyed Gregory Finet Lord Dacres, a man somewhat crazed, the Son of Thomas Lord Dacres, hanged in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth.

The strange death of Ferdinand Earl of Derby.

And now Sir William Fitz-Williams Lord Deputy of Ireland was called home, and William Russell youngest Son of Francis Earl of Bedford, was sent in his room; to whom presently came the Earl of Tir-Oen, and in humble manner craved pardon of his fault, that he had not presented himself at the call of the late Lord Deputy. Bagnal Marshal of the Irish Forces, exhibited many Articles against him, but he so pleaded for himself with promise of loyalty hereafter, that he was dismissed. But see the subdoloufnesse of this man, for he would never after be gotten to come again, though the Deputy sent for him with many kinde messages.

William Russell is sent Deputy into Ireland, to whom Tir-Oen submits himself but dissemblingly.

It was now the year 1595. and the eight and thirtieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign; when Edmund York, and Richard Williams who were formerly apprehended, came to their trial, and were executed at Tyburn, for being bribed to kill the Queen.

Edmund York and Richard Williams executed for being bribed to kill the Queen.

D At this time a constant rumor was blown abroad from all parts of Europe, that the Spaniards were coming again against England, with a far greater Fleet then that in Eighty eight, and that it was already under sayl; whereupon, Souldiers were levyed, and placed on the Sea-coast. Two Navies were made ready, one to expect them at home in the Channel; the other to go for America, under Hawkins and Drake; but when all came to all, it was but certain Spaniards, who loosed from the Sea-coast of France, with four Gallies, which betimes in the morning landing in Cornwall, fired a Church standing alone in the fields, and three Villages of Fishermen, Newlyn, Mowbole, and Pensaw, and then presently retired, not taking or killing any one person; And these were the first and last Spaniards that in hostile manner ever set Foot upon English ground.

A new rumor spread of a new Fleet of Spaniards to invade England, but false.

E And now mischiefs growing dayly in France, a great number perswaded the King, to conclude a peace with Spain, and the Queen her self began to mistrust him; especially, having lately received intelligence out of the Popes Conclave; that he was received into the bosome of the Church of Rome, with the Popes Benediction, and that upon conditions prejudicial to the Protestants.

And therefore at this time, were divers undertakings of the English against Spain; Sir Walter Rawleigh Captain of the Guard, having deflowered a Maid of Honour (whom afterward he married) had lost the Queens favour, and was held in prison for certain moneths; but afterward being set at liberty, though banished the Court, he undertook a Voyage to Guyana; setting sayl from Plymouth in February, he arrived at Trinidada, where he took St. Josephs Town, but found not a jot of Money there: From hence, with Boats, and a hundred souldiers, he entred the vast River Orenoque, ranging up in Guyana four hundred miles, but getting little but his labour for his travel. In like manner, Amyas Preston and Sommers, pillaged sundry Towns of the King of Spains in the Western parts; and three ships of the Earl of Cumberland, set upon a huge Caraque which by casualty was fired when they were in fight, and these were the enterprises of private persons: but the Queen being informed, that great store of wealth for the King of Spains use, was conveyed to Port Rico, in St. Johns Island, sent thither Hawkins, Drake, and Barkerville with land Forces, furnishing them with six ships out of her own Navy, and twenty other menmen of War. They set sail from Plimmouth the last of August, and seven and twenty days after, came upon the Coast of the great Canarie, which being strongly fortified, they forbore to assault. A moneth after, they came to the Ile of St. Dominick, where five Spanish ships being sent forth to watch the English, G lighted upon one of the small English ships which was strayed from the Company, and parting the Master and Mariners upon the Rack, understood by them, that the English Navy was bent to Port Rico; whereupon they make all possible speed to give notice thereof, that being forewarned, they might accordingly be armed. And thereupon as soon as the English had cast Anchors in the Road of Port Rico the Spaniards thundered against them from the shore; Sir Nicholas Clifford, and Brute Brown were wounded as they sat at supper, and two days after dyed: Hawkins also, and Drake, partly of disease, & partly of grief for their ill successe, dyed soon after. At the end of eight months, the the Fleet came home, having done the Enemy little hurt, fired only some few Towns and ships, A but received infinite damage themselves; lost two such Sea-men, as the Kingdom, I may say, all Europe had not their like left. For the Spaniards having of late years received great harms by French and English, had now provided for themselves with Fortifications which were not easie to be won.

At this time the Queen made known to the States in the Low-Countries, the great charges she had been at in relieving them ten years together; for which she requireth some considerable recompence: The States again alleadge the great charges they were at in Eighty eight, in repelling the Spaniards in her cause; yet (not to fall out about the matter) they were content to allow some reasonable retribution; but yet for the present, nothing was concluded. Likewise at this time, the Hanse Towns in Germany make a complaint to the Emperour, and the Princes B of the Empire, That the Immunities from customs anciently granted them by the Kings of England, began to be antiquated, and that a Monopoly of English Merchants was set up in Germany; To which the Queen by Sir Christopher Perkins, first shewing the cause of the first Grant, and then the reason of Queen Maries prohibiting it afterward, makes them so satisfactory an answer, that those very Hanse-Towns which complained, brought into England at this time, such store of Corn, that it prevented a mutiny, which through dearth of Corn, was like to have hapned in London.

This year many great personages dyed.

This year was famous for the death of many great Personages, Philip Earl of Arundel, condemned in the year 1589. The Queen had all this while spared, but now death would spare him no longer, having since that time been wholly given to contemplation, and macerated himself in a strict course of Religion, leaving one only Son, Thomas by his Wife Anne Dacres of Gillingham. He had two Brothers, Thomas Lord Howard, whom Queen Elizabeth made Baron of Walden, and King James afterward Earl of Suffolk; and William Lord Howard of the North, who yet liveth; and one sister, the Lady Margaret; marryed to Robert Sackville, afterward Earl of Dorset, and father of Edward Earl of Dorset now living; a Lady so milde, so vertuous, and so devout in her Religion, that if her Brother macerated himself being in prison, she certainly did no lesse, being at liberty; whom I the rather mention, because I had the happinesse to know her living, and the unhappinesse to be a Mourner at her Funeral. There dyed this year also, William Lord Vaux, a zealous Papist, and Sir Thomas Hineage, Vice-Chamberlain, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, whose only Daughter marryed to Sir Moyle Finch of Kent, was no small advancer of that House. There dyed also William Whitaker, Master of S. Johns College in Cambridge, and Divinity Professor: As likewise Sir Roger Williams, and Sir Thomas Morgan; so as this year was honoured with the deaths of two great Lords, one exquisite Courtier, one great Scholar, and two famous Souldiers.

Sir John Norris is sent into Ireland with an Army to aid the Deputy.

The Earl of Tyrone approaches aimed Traytor.

Norris out of emulation to the Deputy, takes Tyrone.

Tyrone with him, d. M. bies.

Albertus Duke of Austria takes Calice by a sudden assault.

In Ireland at this time, Russell the Deputy doubting a storm of War from Tyrone, sent into England, requiring to have some experienced souldiers sent to him with Forces, who though he desired Baskerville to be the man, yet Sir John Norris was sent, with thirteen hundred old souldiers, besides a further supply; whom Tyrone hearing to be coming, set presently upon the Fort of Blackwater, and in the absence of Edward Cornwall the Governour, took it. But now being doubtful of his case, in a subdalous manner (as he was a double dealing man) he both offereth his help to the Earl of Kildare, against the Deputies servants; and at the same time, maketh promise to the Earl of Ormond, and Sir Henry Walpole, of loyalty and obedience; but notwithstanding he was forthwith proclaimed Traytor, under the name of Hugh O-Neal, bastard Son to Con O-Neal: There was at this time with the Rebels in Ulster, a thousand Horse, and 6280 Foot: and in Connaught, two thousand three hundred, all at Tyrone's command: and the Forces of the English under Norris, not much fewer, with whom the Deputy himself joyned, and marched together to Armeagh; which so terrified the Rebels, that Tyrone forsaking the Fort of Blackwater, began to hide himself. Whereupon the Deputy returned, leaving Norris to follow the War, with the Title of General of the Army. But this satisfied not Norris, and therefore out of emulation betwixt himself and the Deputy, he performed nothing worth the speaking of, and seemed to favour Tyrone, as much as the Deputy hated him; insomuch, as he had private conference with him (a thing not lawfull with proclaimed Traytors) and upon his submission, and hostages given, a Truce was granted both to him and Odonell, till the first of January. When the Truce was expired, Tyrone exhibited certain Petitions, protesting; if they were granted, he would then perform all duties of a loyal subject. In consulting about which Petitions, another Truce was concluded, till the first of April: during which Truce, Tyrone dealt secretly with the King of Spain for Aid to be sent him, making nevertheless a fair shew of willingness to obedience; so far, that by the procurement of Norris and Fenton, a pardon was granted him; the which he pretended to receive more joyfully, then the Instrument which conferred the Earldome upon him; yet all this was but dissimulation, to win time for his own ends.

In the midst of these Irish Affairs, Albertus Arch-Duke of Austria, and Cardinal, whom the King of Spain had newly set over the Netherlands, mustered together the Spanish Forces, upon pretence of raising the Siege of La Fere in Picardy; but upon a sudden turneth aside, and besiegeth Calice; and taking Newham Fort, the very first day became Master of the Haven. The Queen informed hereof, forthwith upon the very Sunday, in time of Divine Service, commandeth to levy Souldiers, whom she committeth to the Earl of Essex; but before they could be shipped, certain

A certain News came, That the Town and Fort were taken by the Spaniard: Whereupon, the Queens, Army was dismissed, and only some money lent to the French King.

But a few days after, a far greater, and more select Army is raised in England, wherein many of Noble Houses served as Voluntaries: For the Queen, to divert the King of Spain from invading her Borders, thought it the best way to invade his: Whereupon a Navy of a hundred and fifty Ships was made ready; where were Souldiers under pay, 6360; Voluntaries of the Nobility and Gentry, 1000; Mariners, 6772, besides the Dutch men, who brought two and twenty Ships. Robert Earl of Essex, and Charles Howard Lord Admiral of England, were made Generals with equal Authority; but the Admiral to hold Prerogative at Sea, Essex at Land. To these, for a Council of War, were joyned, the Lord Thomas Howard, Walter Rawleigh, Francis Vere, George Carew, and Conyers Clifford. The whole Fleet was divided into four Squadrons; The Admiral commanded the first; Essex the second, the Lord Thomas Howard the third, and Rawleigh the fourth. The Officers of the Army were Francis Vere, Serjeant Major General, or Marshal; John Winkfield, Quarter-Master General; George Carew Master of the Ordinance; Conyers Clifford, Serjeant Major. Colonels were, Robert Earl of Suffex, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Thomas Gerrard, Sir Richard Winkfield; William Winkfield was Commander of the Voluntaries, and Anthony Aspley Secretary to the Council of War, was to Register their Acts and Consultations. The Commission being drawn the Queen gave them private Instructions, and withall, a Prayer of her own making, to be daily used in every Ship.

Robert Earl of Essex, and Charles Howard L. Admiral are sent with forces against Spain: who take Cales; and the passages of it.

This Fleet set forth from Plimmouth at the beginning of June. Nigh unto Cabo S. Vincent they lighted upon an Irish Barque, which told them, That at Cales they were secure, and that in the Haven there were at Anchor Gallies, ships of War, and a great many Merchants Vessels. The twentieth of June, they cast Anchor on the West side of the Island; within two days they were agreed to set upon the Spanish ships, whereat the Earl of Essex cast up his cap for joy. This businessse was allotted to the lesser ships, because the Road was too shallow for the great. The Gallies quickly fled, and creeping along the shore, shifted away, but the Spanish ships that lay at Anchor at Punta, turned their broad sides; so as the English fight with them, lasted from break of day till noon; at which time the Spaniards having their Galleons miserably torn, and many of their men slain, resolved to fire the ships, or run them ashore. The Spanish Admiral being fifteen hundred Tun of burthen, was fired by a Moor, and two other ships which lay next her took the fire, and were lost likewise. When this Sea-fight was ended, Essex landed eight hundred souldiers at Punta, a league from the Town of Cales, when half a mile from the Town, the Spanish Horse and Foot shewed themselves, and presently gave back again; but straight way cometh forth a greater number: Then Essex commanded his Forces to make a fair retreat; and having inticed forth their enemies, they turned upon them with such violence, that they forced them back into the Town. Then the Earl got up to a Bulwark newly raised, neer the Gate, where he spied a passage into the Town, but so high from ground, that they must leap a Spears length to get down. Yet Evans the Earl of Suffex his Lieutenant, Arthur Savage, and other, leaped down; and the mean while Sir Francis Vere broke the Gate, and rushed in, and the rest with him. In the Market place John Winkfield was shot in the head, & with stones from the tops of houses divers were wounded; amongst whom, Samuel Bagnall received eight wounds, and Arthur Savage was bloody all over; which two were Knighted in the place. The next day the Castle was yeilded, upon condition, That the Inhabitants might depart with the cloathes on their backs, the rest to be left for spoyle. For five hundred and fourscore thousand Duckets the Castle was to be redeemed; and for the payment, forty of the chief Citizens to be sent Hostages into England. Now Rawleigh was commanded to fire the Merchants ships lying at Port Real when they promised two Millions of Duckets to redeem them: but this the Admiral would not hear of, saying, He was sent to destroy Ships, not to dismisse them upon Composition. A world of Munition was found in the City, and great store of money privately carried away, every one shifting for himself. It was thought by the wiser sort, That the Spaniard could not be damnified lesse by this Expedition, then twenty Millions of Duckets. None of note was slain, amongst the English, but only Winkfield, who also slew a Spanish Captain; and now at last, three-score Military men were honored with Knight-hood. After this, having spoyle the whole Island, and demolished the Forts, they returned into England, much against the will of Essex, who would fain have been attempting some other enterprise.

The Queen received them home with much affability, giving many thanks to those of principal note, but extolling the Earl of Essex and the Admiral, above the rest. And now bethinking her self of a fit man to be Governour of the Bryll, which was given by the States as a Caution Town for money due, she made choice of Sir Francis Vere, although Essex commended other to her for the place: but another thing he took with great indignation, That in his absence she had made Sir Robert Cecil Secretary, whereas he had formerly with great instance commended Sir Thomas Bodley to her.

Sir Robert Cecil is made Secretary of State.

And now the King of Spain, to recover his honour lost at Cales, setteth forth a Navy for England and Ireland, with a great number of Irish Fugitives; but being at Sea, most of his ships were either run upon Rocks, or cast away in storms; so as this Expedition came to nothing.

Q. Elizabeth enters a League Offensive and Defensive with the K. of France.

But the Queen, at this time, for her better security, entred a League of Defence and Offence with the French King, against the Spaniard, upon certain Conditions; which League she confirmed by Oath, in the Chappel at Greenwich, the nine and twentieth of August, laying her hand upon the hand of Henry de la Tour, Duke of Bulloign, and Marshal of France; the Bishop of Chichester A holding forth the Evangelists, and a great company of the Nobility standing round about. In September following, Gilbert Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, was sent on Ambassage into France, to take the French Kings Oath, and to present Sir Anthony Mildmay for the Queens Ambassadour in Ordinary in the room of Sir Henry Unton lately there deceased, and to invest the King with the Order of the Garter. Soon after, Baskerville wasted into Picardy with two thousand souldiers; for no more were by agreement to be sent this year.

An. Reg. 39.
Thomas Arundell del ot Warder, is by the Emperour made Earl of the Empire; and what the priviledges of that honour are, Whether honours given to the Queens Subjects without her privy, are to be admitted.

It was now the year, 1596. and the nine and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths reign, when Thomas Arundell of Warder returned into England, from the Wars in Hungary against the Turk; whom, for his good service done there, the Emperour by his Letters Patents, had created Earl of the sacred Empire, and all and singular his Heirs and their Posterity, Males or Females, lawfully descended from him, to be Earls and Countesses of the holy Empire for ever. Those who are graced with this Title, have a Place and Voice in the Imperial Diets, may purchase Lands in the Emperours Dominions, may take up voluntary souldiers, and are not bound to answer any matter before any Judge, but only in the Chamber of the Empire. At his returns, a great Question came in agitation, Whether Titles of Honour given to the Queens subjects without her privy, ought to be accepted by them, or admitted by her. For this new Earl stuck in the stomachs of the English Barons, who inwardly grudged to give him place. The matter was long disputed on both sides, but what issue it had, or whether he were permitted this Honour here at home, I finde not: Certain it is, That Sir Nicholas Clifford, and Sir Anthony Sherley, whom the French King two years since received into the Order of S. Michael, were laid in Prison at their coming home, and charged to resign their Robes of the Order. C

Many great persons die.

This year many great Persons dyed; John Puckering, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, whom Thomas Egerton succeeded; Richard Fletcher, Bishop of London; who for marrying the Lady Baker (as goodly a Lady as he was a Prelate) incurred the Queens displeasure; and to cure his cares, fell immoderately to drinking of Tobacco, and so expired. Henry Cary, Baron of Hunsdon, Lord Chamberlain of her Majesties House, and her Cousin german. Sir Francis Knolls, who married Hunsdons sister, in Queen Marias days an Exile in Germany for the Gospel, by Queen Elizabeth made first Vice-Chamberlain, then Captain of the Guard, afterward Treasurer of the Household, and Knight of the Garter. Henry Hastings, Earl of Huntington, and President of the Council in the North, who spent his estate upon Puritan Ministers: Francis Lord Hastings, Nephew to him by his brother George, who succeeded him in the Earldom, and Margaret Clifford Countesse of Derby, (who defended of the bloud Royal, from Charles Brandon) consulted with sorcerers and cunning men, and thereupon a little before her end, was in a manner excluded from the Queens favour.

The Earl of Essex, Sir Walter Rawleigh and others are sent to seize upon the Spanish Fleet, but are distressed by tempests.

The Queen at this time was told, that the King of Spain was preparing a new Fleet against Ireland; whereupon to encounter him, she also prepared a Navy of a hundred and twenty Ships, seventeen of the Queens, three and forty lesser Ships of War, the rest for the carriage of provision. They were parted into three Squadrons: Essex commanded the first, who was also chief Commander in the expedition; The Lord Thomas Howard the second, and Rawleigh the third. In this Fleet were sundry of the Nobility and Gentry, Charles Blunt, Lord Munsey, Vere, Carew, Sir Christopher Elum, the Earls of Rutland and Southampton; the Lords, Grey, Cromwell, Rich, and many other. The ninth of July they weighed Anchour from Plimmouth, and were to direct their course to Ferall and the Gr-yu, to seize upon the Spanish Fleet in the Harbour, and towards the Isles called Azores, to intercept the Indian Fleet at their return into Spain; but this expedition was crossed and overthrown by Tempests, for they had not sailed forty Leagues from Plimmouth, when they were shaken with such a terrible Tempest for four days together, that the Mariners themselves were at their wits end, and the Fleet had much ado to recover Plimmouth; The Navy being mended, they hoise up sail the second time, but the winde fell presently again so crosse, that for a whole Moneths time they could not get out of the Haven, returning to Plimmouth the seventeenth of August they got out of the Haven; and now the third time, with a side winde hoise up sail, but before they came in view of Spain, they were dispersed by another horrible tempest, wherein of the two great Ships which were taken at Callice, one was dashed in pieces, the other wandred no man knew whither. At the Island Flores the Fleet met again; where Rawleigh being distressed for water went on shore without leave; and ere he had watered, had charge to follow Essex to Foyall: but not finding him there, he observed the Port, and calling a Council, the Commanders wished him to set upon the place, and not let slip so fair a booty. Upon this, Rawleigh with some of the prime Voluntaries, got to shore, and won the Town, but found no booty in it. The next day Essex came thither, whom Merrick informeth what Rawleigh had done, affirming spitefully, that he had done it only to prevent his Lordship in the honour of the exploit: whereupon some perswaded the Earl to call a Council of War and then displace him; others again, to take off his head for going to Land, without the chief Commanders leave; saying, he was never like for to have such another opportunity to be rid of his Adversary; upon this, Sidney, Brett, Berry, and other of Rawleighs company were displaced, and laid by the heels; Rawleigh himself was sent for, and entertained with a grim look by Essex and all his Party; Essex rebuketh him angrily, for landing his Forces, which none upon pain of death might doe, without the Rawleigh, without leave, goes ashore, and takes Foyall.

For this he is questioned by the Earl: but his Answer, and the Lord Tho. Howards mediation, reconciles all.

A the Generals command; Rawleigh made answer, that the Captains indeed, Shipmasters, and the rest were within the compasse of that Law; but not the Three prime Commanders, of whom himself was One: That he had a long time waited his coming, and longer would have waited, but that the Islanders provoked him to fight. And now the Lord Thomas Howard mediated, that no severity might be used against Rawleigh, and perswaded him to acknowledge his fault; which being done, all were friends, and the displaced Captains were restored to their places, for the Earl was of a placable disposition; easily apt to take offence, and as easily to remit it.

From hence they sail to Gratiola, where the Inhabitants craved mercy and obtained it; and here Essex would have tarried, in expectation of the Indian Fleet; but that Graves the Pilot dissuaded, because the Harbour was not good: and now see the unluckinesse of ill counsel, for B the English were not gone above an hour, or two, from this place; when loe, the American Fleet (wherein were forty Ships, and seven of them loaden with treasure) cometh thither; which, hearing that the English were thereabouts, directed their course to Tercera, where they gained the Haven, all but three Ships, indifferent wealthy; which the English took: and then were minded to set upon the rest, in the Port; but finding the attempt not feasible, they passed from hence to S. Michaels; where Southampton, Rutland, Evers, Bredon and Dockwray were Knighted. And then Essex landed within six miles of the Town, nigh unto Villa Franca, a fair Town, and well furnished with Merchandize; Wine, Wood, and Corn; where they tarried six days: and the common Souldiers found good booty. And now a Caraque was espied, coming out of the East-Indies; which by a warning peece shot off in a Dutch Ship, C perceiving that the English were there; run her self ashore, unloaded her Merchandize, and then fired her self. Thus the English had ill luck every where in this expedition: And the ninth of October they hoisted sail for England; but within two days, a terrible tempest, from the Northward dispersed them; and the Spanish Fleet also at the same time, so as they never came in view of one another: one Spanish Ship was cast upon Dartmouth, the Mariners and Souldiers half starved in her; who intimated, that the Spanish Fleet intended to seize upon some Haven in Cornwall, which being nigh the mouth of the Channell, might be convenient to receive Forces from Spain: but the divine Providence frustrated the designs both of the Spaniard and the English.

The English misse the Spanish Fleet, through ill coun. el.

But now at his return, the Earl of Essex found that done in England. in his absence, which D infinitely discontented him: Sir Robert Cecil made Chancellour of the Dutchy of Lancaster; and which was more, Charles Lord Howdrd, created Earl of Nottingham, with relation in his patent to the Victory in eighty eight; and his good service at Cales: This glory he envied him, and besides stomached it; that he must now take place of him: It being enacted in the Reign of Henry the eighth, that the chief Officers of the Kingdom, should have Precedence of all men of their degree. Whereupon the Queen, to give him content, was fain to create him Earl Marshal of England; by which he recovered his place again.

About this time, an Embassadour came into England, from the King of Polland; who, when the Queen expected he should give her thanks for having procured a Peace between the King his Master, and the Turk, he clean contrary expostulated unkindenesse, for breach of Priviledges, in E trading with Spain, requiring a present remedy, or else the King would otherways right himself. The Queen not a little offended, suddenly replied, How was I deceived? I expected an Embassadour, and behold a Herald; such a speech I never heard in all my life time. And after some further checking of him for his boldnesse, she referred him to her Councel; and then retired into her Closet. The Embassadour afterward, in private conference with some of the Councel, excused himself, saying, that his speech was penned by others, and then given him in writing. To his Message, the Councel gave the like answer, as they had given before the Hanse-Towns, upon the like occasion: though now again, the Hanse-Towns obtain of the Emperour, to prohibit the English from trading in Germany, which made the Queen to prohibit the Hanse-towns from trading in England, and put them out of the Steelyard till this difference was F corded.

The Earl of Essex is made Earl Marshal, of purpose to take place of the Admiral.

The sawcie speech of a Pollish Embassadour to the Queen, and her Answer.

This year the Chancellour of Denmark came into England to restore the Garter, which she had bestowed upon the Kings Father, and withal offering the Kings help, to make a peace for the Queen with the Spaniard. The Queen thanked him; but meant not to use his help for that which she did not desire, and especially not now, when he had newly molested the King of France her Allye, and had taken Amyens the strongest Town of Picardy: Though why should the Queen be so tender of the French King, when now to get an aid of four thousand Souldiers from her, he fell to devices; intimating unto her, that he was now offered by the Popes Nuntio a very commodious peace, if he would but forsake her. But while these things were in Treaty, Amyens was recovered again by the valour of Baskerville (who dyed at the siege) and of Sir Arthur Savage, as the King in his Letters G to the Queen thankfully acknowledged.

Baskervilles and Sir Arthur Savage service in recovering of Amyens.

About this time a Parliament was holden at Westminster, where Subsidies were willingly granted; and to this Parliament was called the Lord La Ware, and restored to his blood, which by Act of Parliament in the reign of King Edward the sixth was tainted; Also to this Parliament was called Thomas Lord Howard, by the Title of Baron Howard of Walden.

The Lord Thomas Howard is made Baron of Walden.

In Ireland at this time, a great part of Ulster, and almost all Connaght was in Rebellion; Whereupon Russel the Deputy was called home; and Thomas Lord Burrough sent in his place, a man very stout and courageous, but no souldier: This infinitely discontented Norris, who thought thought himself sure of the place himself, and now to see his Rival preferred before him, and himself to be under him, President of Munster, drave him into such a melancholy, that in a very short time (and as he thought to himself with much disgrace) he ended his life.

And now the Earl of Tir-Oen craveth, and obtaineth a moneths Truce of the new Deputy, at the moneths end, the Deputy marcheth against the Rebels, and gaineth the Fort at Blackwater, when suddenly the Rebels shew themselves upon a hill hard by, against whom the Earl of Kildare marcheth and puts them to flight; but yet with some losse of his own side, as Francis Vaughan the Deputies Brother in Law, Turner a Serjeant Major, and two Fosters, Brothers of the Earl of Kildare, whose death he took so heavily, that within a few days he dyed himself.

As soon as the Deputy had fortified the Castle at Blackwater and withdrawn his Army, the Rebels began to besiege it again; (for this was the main place of their strength) which caused the Deputy with all possible speed to make thither, but unhappily dyed by the way. Whereupon the Rebels set upon the Fort more fiercely then before; but being still repelled, they comforted themselves with this, that there was not many days provision left in the Fort; yet the admirable fortitude of Thomas Williams the Captain, and the Garrison Souldiers saved the place, who, when their Horse-flesh was all spent, fed upon weeds growing within the Trenches, and endured all kinde of misery. And now the Lord Burroughs the Deputy being dead, the Army by direction from England, was committed to the Earl of Ormond, and the Government to two Lords Justices, Adam Lofthouse Archbishop of Dublin and Chancellor, and Robert Gardiner: To this new Lieutenant, Tir-Oen exhibiteth a Bill of his oppressions and grievances with request of pardon, and at the same time stirreth up Mac-Hugh to a new Rebellion in Leinster.

In France at this time, the French King being importuned by the Pope, and by his own subjects, began to incline to a Peace with Spain; which the Queen understanding, she sent into France Sir Robert Cecil, Herbert and Wilks, (who died at his landing in France;) The States likewise sent thither, Justine of Nassaw, and Barneval, and others likewise into England to dissuade the Peace; but notwithstanding all they could say or do, the French King shortly after concluded a Peace, to the great discontentment of the Queen and the States, but to the great good, and establishment of the French Common-wealth.

And now the Queen providing for her own and her peoples safety, sent Sir Francis Vere to the States, to know if they were willing to joyn in a Treaty of Peace with the Spaniard; if not, what they would afford toward a War; and to deal earnestly with them, about repayment of money due to her from them. At home in the mean time, a great Consultation was holden, Whether a Peace with Spain were convenient for England, or no; and many Reasons were on both sides alleadged. Burleigh Lord Treasurer was for Peace, Essex for War, and so vehement in it; that the Treasurer, after a long debating, in a strange manner of Preface, reached forth the Book of the Psalms to him, pointing him to that Verse, The bloody minded man shall not live out half his days. Which made Essex afterward to set forth an Apology, with Reasons for justification of his opinion.

But now another Consultation was held, about a fit man to be Deputy of Ireland; The Queen intended to send Sir William Knolles, Essex his Uncle; but Essex was violent for Sir George Carew, whom he had a minde to remove from the Court; and when he could not by any means perswade the Queen to it, he then, forgetting himself and his duty, uncivilly and contemptuously turned his back upon the Queen, muttering certain words. Whereupon she growing impatient, gave him a box on the ear, and bid him be gone with a vengeance; Essex laid his hand upon his sword hilt, and swore a great oath, That he could not, nor would not put up such an Indignity; and that he would not have taken it at King Henry the Eighth his hands; and so in a rage flung away from the Court. But afterward, admonished by the Lord Keeper, he became more milde, and in a short time, returned into the Queens favour.

About this time, William Cecil Lord Burleigh, and high Treasurer of England, finding himself to droop with age, (for he was now threescore and seventeen years old) sent Letters to the Queen, intreating her to release him of his publick charge; whereupon she went to visit, and comfort him, but within a few days he ended his life, after he had been the principal stay of the English Common-wealth for many years together. One great good he did to his Countrey, a little before his death, that he brought the States of the Low-Countries to a Composition, for the payment of Eight hundred thousand pounds, by Thirty thousand pounds yearly; likewise a new League to be concluded with them.

The King of Denmarks Subjects having lately seized upon some goods of the English as Prize, to the value of a hundred thousand Dollers; the Queen sent the Lord Zouch, and Christopher Perkins Doctor of Law, in Embassage to the Dane, both to congratulate his late marriage with the Electors Daughter of Brandenburg; and also to crave restitution of the English goods; who obtained, that in lieu thereof, Threescore thousand Dollers were repaid. And now George Clifford Earl of Cumberland, having with a Navy of eleven ships, waited for Portingall Cariques, and the American Fleet, till the season of the year was past (they not daring to stir forth) he at last set upon Port-Rico and took it; but seven hundred of his men falling sick of Calenures, and dying within forty days, he was fain to return home with some honour, but little profit.

A About this time, one Edward Squire was Arraigned of high Treason; he had been at first an ordinary Scrivener, afterwards a Groom in the Queens stable, and going as a Souldier in Drakes last expedition, was taken prisoner and carried into Spain, there he came acquainted with one Walpoole an English Jesuite, who caused him to be put into the Inquisition for an Heretick, and the fellow railing of miltery, was easily drawn to become a Papist, and afterward to attempt any thing for the Catholick cause. His ghottly father perswaded him it were meritorious to make away the Queen and the Earl of Essex, and sent him into England with a certain poyson, wherewith to anoint the pommel of the Queens Saddle, and the chair in which the Earl should sit, which he accordingly performed, but neither of them took effect, whereupon Walpoole suspecting Squires fidelity was bent to revenge it, and sent one into England, who in general terms should lay this aspersions upon him; whereupon Squire is called in question, and never thinking that his Confessor would detect him, directly denied all at first; but after seeing himself betrayed, confessed all the matter and was executed.

Edward Squire executed, and why.

This whole year the rebellion was hot in Ireland; For Tir-Oen notwithstanding his pardon lately obtained, all on a sudden besieged the Fort at Blackwater, to the raising of which siege, the Lieutenant General (for there was as yet no Deputy) sent thirteen Companies under the command of the Marshal, Tir-Oens sworn adversary, him Tir-Oen slew, and put his whole Army to rout, and achieved such a Victory, with so great losse to the English, as they had never felt the like since they first set footing in Ireland; for thirteen valiant Commanders, and fifteen hundred common Souldiers were slain at this skirmish, and soon after the Fort of Blackwater was yielded up. And now Tir-Oens fame began to resound as the Assertor of the liberty of the Nation, and upon a sudden all Munster brake forth into Rebellion. For the cherishing whereof Tir-Oen sent thither Ouny Mac-Rorke and Terell (who originally an English man, was grown a deadly enemy to the English Nation) with four hundred Kernes. Against these, Thomas Norris President of the Province, marched to Killmallock with a good force; but finding that the Irish Souldiers of his Company were ready to revolt, he was fain to disperse his Army and retire to Corke. Hereupon the Rebels grew insolent, spoyle the Countrey, and in cruel manner put all the English to the sword. Furthermore they declare Fitz Thomas to be Earl of Desmond; but upon condition he should hold of O-Neale, that is, of Tir-Oen, who now dispatched Letters to the Spaniard, relating his Victories to the full, and vowing to accept no terms of peace with the English, and yet at the same instant (after his wonted treacherous manner) proffered some kinde of submission to the Lieutenant, but withall made unreasonable demands.

Tir-Oen breaks openly into Rebellion, and gives the English a great a fear.

The State of Ireland being thus in combustion, a serious consultation is holden whom to send to quench it: the Queen and most of the Council thought Sir Charles Blunt Lord Mountjoy the fittest man; but Essex covertly intimated, that he had no military experience, and besides was too Bookish to prove a good Commander: he seem'd to aim at the place for himself, though he made a shew modestly to refuse it, and yet still ready with his exceptions if any other were nominated: many thought it dangerous to have an Army put into his hands, for his followers talked of great matters, that he (forsooth) was descended of the bloud Royal of Scotland and England, and had better Right to the Crown, then any other of the Competitors. In Conclusion, he is appointed Vice-Roy; with ample Authority, to make War or conclude Peace, and pardon all offenders, even Tir-Oen himself. An Army is allotted him as great as he desired: Indeed greater then ever Ireland had seen before, Twenty Thousand Foot, and Thirteen Hundred Horse: with these, and a great Retinue besides of the Nobility, he passeth into Ireland; where as soon as he had taken the Sword, contrary to his Commission (which was to goe immediately against the Arch-rebel) he marched towards Munster, against the petty Rebels. taked the Castle of Cahir, and driveth the Rebels into the Woods and Groves adjoining. His Forces being now impaired, he tarrieth to make them up; but in the mean time sendeth directions to Sir Conyers Clifford, President of Connacht, to set upon the Rebels in one place, (thereby to sever their forces) while he assaulted them in another; Clifford marched toward Belike, with 1500. Souldiers, where the Rebels are upon them at unawares, under the conduct of O-Rorke, (his Son that was hanged here in England). The English repel them at first with ease, and march along, but the Rebels finding they wanted Powder, set upon them again, and put them to flight; in which skirmish, Clifford and many of the old Souldiers were slain.

Yet at the same time makes some offer of submission.

A Consultation is held, whom to send against Tir-Oen.

At last the Earl of Essex is sent with ample authority.

Essex having by this time received new supplies out of England, and a check for neglecting the Queens Command, setteth forth at length towards the Borders of Ulster, with Thirteen hundred Foot, and five hundred Horse; being come thither, Tir-Oen by a Messenger requested Parley, Essex refuseth, saying, he might speak with him the next morning, between the two Armies; the next day word is brought to Essex, that Tir-Oen craved the Queens mercy, and that he might only be heard speak, appointing the shallow of Balla Clinch for a most convenient place; thither came Essex alone, with whom Tir-Oen (riding his Horse up to the girts) had private conference a full hour; A while after, Con Tir-Oens base Son came to Essex, requesting in his Fathers name a second Parley, and that some of the chief on both sides might be present: Essex consented, so there came not more then six. At the day appointed, many words had not passed, but it was agreed, that their Delegates should Treat the next day concerning a Peace: between them it was concluded, that a Truce should be held from six weeks to six weeks, till May day.

He hath private conference with Tir-Oen.

A Truce is concluded.

By this time, the Queen understanding that no more was done, after so much time and money A sent, in a great anger taxeth the Earls proceedings, and I know not how, it fell from her to some others that stood by, that he had other thoughts in his minde, then the good of his Prince and Countrey: And thereupon dispatched very sharp Letters to him, blaming his delay, and letting slip every fair opportunity: with which Letters Essex was so netled, and chiefly troubled, that the Queen had now made Cecil Master of the Wards, which he expected himself: that he began to cast strange projects within his minde, and held private consultations of returning into England with part of his Forces, to surprize his Adversaries; But from this course, the Earl of Southampton, and Sir Christopher Blunt dissuaded him, as being dangerous and wicked. Yet within a moneth, over he went, and came to the Court at Nonefuch, to inform the Queen of the State of Ireland. By the way, the Lord Gray of Wilton crossed him, but saluted him not; whom one B of his followers offered to kill for his contempt: but Essex would not suffer him: And made such halt, that early in the Morning he was upon his Knees before the Queen in the Privy Chamber. She entertained him courteously, but not with the countenance she was wont: and after a little talk bid him keep in his Chamber; And soon after, Committed him to Custody, in the Lord Privy Seals House; where entring into Consideration of his case, he giveth himself wholly to Divine Contemplation, and writeth wonderful Letters to his friends, of the vanity of the things of this life.

It was now the year one thousand six hundred, and the two and fortieth of Queens Elizabeths Reign, when after the departure of the Earl of Essex, Tir-Om began to carry himself as Monarch C of Ireland, and sendeth Kernes to make spoil in the possessions of such as continued in their loyalty to the Queen, under Mac-Guir their Captain, who lighting casually upon Sir Warham Saint- Leger, thrust him through with a spear, and was himself thrust through withall. Whereupon the Queen sent Sir Charles Blunt Lord Montjoy, to take upon him the Deputies place, who loseth no time, but first of all marcheth towards Ulster, buildeth a fort within eight miles of Armagh, which, in honor of Sir John Norris, under whom he had his first military schooling, he calleth by the name of Mount Norris; there he placed Edward Blayze, who kept the Rebels in awe in those parts, from thence back he goeth into Leinster, wherein the Glynnes he reduceth into order, Donel-Spaniab, Phelim Mac-Phroph, and the rebelling Nation of the O-Tooles, taking hostages of them, then back into Ulster again, being victor wheresoever he cometh, and at Tradogh, receiveth into protection Mac-Henry, Mac-Cowly, and other Rebels who fell at his feet for mercy. All this and more D he did in his first year, and no lesse successful was Carew President of Munster, who drove out of the County the Titular Earl of Desmond, and having found Munster a turbulent Province in April, he overcomed and made it so quiet by December following, that the Rebels maintained not one Fort in it against the Queen.

And now a new consultation was holden in England, touching a peace with the King of Spain, the which he sought both by the French King, and by Albertus the Archduke, who was now returned into the Netherlands out of Spain, where he was married to the Infanta. The Queen consenting to a Treaty, left it to the French King to nominate both the time and place for the meeting of the Delegates, who set down the moneth of May, and Bulloigne in France; But now fore-seeing that a question would arise about Precedency, some were appointed to search E Ancient Records concerning that point. These men found in the Book of the Ceremonies of the Court of Rome, which (according to the Canons) giveth Rule to the rest, as the Lady and Mistresse; that amongst Kings, the first place is due to the King of France, the second to the King of England, and the third to the King of Castile; That the English quietly held this privilege in the General Councils of Basil, Constance, and others: besides the Kingdom of Castile, which is the Spaniards first Title, is but an upstart in regard of England, which had Earls, but no Kings till the year 1017. In like manner, that Pope Julius the third, gave sentence for Henry the seventh of Eng- land, against Ferdinand, who was then King of Castile.

At the day appointed, the Delegates met at Bulloign, Sir Henry Nevill, Legier Embassadour, Sir John Herbert, Robert Beal, and Thomas Edmunds for the English, and other for the King of Spain and F the Archduke. The English had instructions, first concerning Precedency, in no case to give way to the King of Spain; yet if they contended, to put the matter to the division of the Lots, rather then the Treaty should be dissolved; and for the rest, to propose and mention the renewing of the ancient Evagundian League, freedom of commerce, &c.

At the meeting, when they had severally shewed their Commissions; the English challenge the Precedency, the Spaniards do the like, and in so peremptory a manner that without it they would dissolve the Treaty: Hereupon the English made a proposition, to let passe the question of Prece-dency; and to transact the businesse by writing, and Messengers between them: Or that the Treaty might be intermitted only for threescore days, not quite boken off; but all was to no purpose; and at three moneths end they parted.

The States the mean while, were so far from regarding a Peace, that at this time they thought G upon reducing the Sea Coast of Flanders into their command; and thereupon they landed an Army there, of fourteen thousand Foot, and three thousand Horse, under the conduct of Maurice of Nissaw; and fifteen hundred of the English under the command of Sir Francis Vere, and his Brother Horatio: At which time happened the famous Battail of Newport, against the Archduke, wherein nine thousand of the Spaniards were slain; and the Victory, by the valour of the English, fell to the Dutch; for so forward were the English in this Battail, that of their fifteen hundred, eight hundred

A hundred were slain and sore wounded, eight Captains killed, and of the rest every man hurt.

All this year, and the year past, sundry quarrels and complaints arose between the English and the French, touching reprisals of goods taken from each other by Pirates of either Nation: Also touching Customs and Impositions, contrary to the Treaty of Bloys, and deceit in English clothes, to the great infamy of our Nation. In Denmark likewise arose controversies touching Commerce, and the Fishing of the English upon the Coast of Island and Norway. The Queen also at this time, for the increase of Navigation and Commerce, Founded the Company of East-India Merchants, allowing them large Priviledges: but whether this hath proved beneficial to the Common-wealth, (there having been by this means such a masse of money and great store of other commodities carried out of the Kingdom, and so many Mariners lost every year) wise men make a question.

About this time also, Pope Clement the eighth, perceiving the Queen to be in her declining age, sent two Breeves into England, the one to the Popish Clergy, the other to the Laity, to suffer no person whatsoever, to take the Kingdom upon him after the Queens death, but one that should promise by Oath to promote with all his might, the Roman Catholick Religion, how neer soever otherwise, he were allyed to the Bloud Royal of the Kings of England.

This year by reason of intemperate weather, happened a great scarcity of Corn in England, and thereby many grievous complaints were occasioned. The common people cast out reproachful slanders against the Lord Treasurer Buckhurst, as the granter of Licences for transportation of Corn; but he appealing to the Queen, she forthwith defended his Innocency, and made it known by open Proclamation, imputed the fault upon the Broggers of Corn, and Foretallers of Markets, and gave order that the slanderer should be reprehended and punished.

The Earl of Essex, who had now been Prisoner six moneths in the House of the Lord Privy Seal, he then began to repent in good earnest, resolving to put away his perverie Counsellors, Gylly Merrick and Henry Cusse, and then he shewed so much patience and great submission, that the Queen then sent him to his own house, and to be there confined, always protesting that he would doe nothing that should be for his ruine, but only that, which should be for his amendmet. Nevertheless, when as the common people extolled his Innocency, she could not for the removal of suspicion of injustice, free her self and her Counsellors, but bring him to tryal, not in the Star-Chamber, lest the censure should fall too heavy on him; but in the house of the Lord Privy Seal, where the cause should have a plain hearing before the Lords of the Councel, four Earls, two Barons, and four Judges of the Realm. The objections were, That contrary to his Commission he had made the Earl of Southampton General of the Horse, had drawn his Forces into Munster, neglecting the Arch-rebel Tir Oen, entertained a Parlee with him, against the Dignity of the Queens Majesty, and the person of a Viceroy, which he represented; and that the said Parlee was suspicious, in regard it was private. Some aggravations the Lawyers added from abrupt sentences in his Letter to the Lord Privy Seal, written two years since, as these; No storm is more fierce then the indignation of an Impotent Prince. What? cannot Princes erre? May they not injure their Subjects? and such like.

The Earl of Essex upon his penitence is allowed to live at his own house.

Yet he is brought to a private Trial in the Lord Privy Seals house, and what was objected against him.

He falling upon his knee at the end of the Board, professed he would not contest with the Queen, nor excuse the faults of his young years, either in whole, or in part, Protesting that he always meant well, howsoever it fell out otherwise, and that now he would bid the World farewell; withall shedding many tears, so as the standers by wept also. Yet could he not contain himself, but began to plead excuses, till the Lord Privy Seal interrupted him, advising him to proceed as he had begun, to fly to the Queens Mercy, who would not have him questioned for disloyalty, but only for a contempt; and that he did not well to pretend obedience in words, which in deeds he had not performed. At length, in the name of the rest, he pronounceth this Sentence against him; That he should be deposed from the Office of a Privy Counsellor, suspended from the functions of the Earl Marshal, and Master of the Ordinance, and be imprisoned during the Queens pleasure. She had given expresse charge, not to suspend him from the office of Master of the Horse (minding to take him shortly into favor) and that his Censure in no case should be Recorded. After this he made shew of wonderful humility and mortification, which so affected the Queen, that shortly she removed Barkeley his Keeper, and gave him leave to go at large; only admonishing him, To make his own discretion his keeper, and not to come at the Court, or in her Presence.

The Earl protests his Innocence; and sheweth his repentance with tears.

What his Censure was.

Yet upon his humility he had leave to go at large.

After this Sentence, Cusse, who always perswaded the Earl to stand stoutly in his own defence, began so plainly to tax him of cowardize and pusillanimity; that the Earl in anger, commanded the Earl for his name to be put out of the Rowl of his servants, yet Merrick the Steward did it not, as being of Cusses minde himself.

Cusse taxeth the Earl for cowardize.

Essex being now ready to go into the Countrey, remembered himself to the Queen, by the Lord Henry Howard, in these words; That he kissed the Rod, and the Queens hands, which had only corrected, not overthrown him; yet he should never enjoy solid comfort, till he might see those blessed eyes, which had been his load-stars, whereby he had happily steered his course, while he held on his way at lawfull distance; But now he resolved to eat grasse with Nebuchadnezzar, till it please the Queen to restore his senses. She being greatly joyed joyed with these his speeches; Would to God (said she) his deeds might be answerable to his words; he hath A long tried my patience, I must now make trial of his humility.

And now the Earl grew so confident of the Queens favour, that he became a suitor to her for the Farm of sweet Wines; but she to try his temper, and with what minde he would bear a repulse, made him Answer, That she must first know what it was worth, and not give away things hand over head; and had often times in her mouth, the Aphorism of Physicians, That foul bodies, the more you nourish them, the more you corrupt them. And indeed, this was the right way to finde, whether the ulcer of his minde were thoroughly cured or no; for being not thoroughly cured, it would endure no touching; and no more did his, but as though every denial of a courtesie, were an injury that required revenge; his melancholy was presently turned into choler, now he began to hearken to Cuffe again; telling him, That it was now plain, the Queen de- B termined to make him as poor as Job, that he should live of the basket, and gather crumbs under the Table. Hereupon he returned to London, Southampton is sent for out of the Low Countries, his doores are set open for all comers, Merrick his Steward receiveth to his own table decayed souldiers, discontented and audacious persons; Sermons are made there every day by Puritan Ministers, to which the Citizens flock, and all signes of popularity appeared; which mat- ters coming to the Queens ears, alienated her affection from him daily more and more; but especially she was exasperated, that her Person was despised by him; for (not to say the worst) he had muttered, That the Queen was now old and decrepit, and withered as well in minde as body.

And now again, he runneth upon desperate counsels, for the removal of his adversaries from C
 the Court, seeketh to scruce himself into the King of Scots favour, to whom he traduceth his adversaries, by name Raleigh, Cobham, Carew, Cecil, and the Admiral as inclined to the Spanish Faction, and at one and the same time, seeketh to win to him both Puritans and Papists. Many were of his party, but few of his counsel; and these were the Earl of Southampton, Sir Charles Davers, Sir Ferdinando Gorge, Captain of the Garrison of Plimouth, Sir Christopher Blunt, and some other. With these he met privately in Drury House to avoid suspicion, where he first giveth them a Catalogue of the Nobility and Gentry that favoured him, to the number of a hundred and twenty. Then they consult, whether it were better to set upon the Tower of London, or the Queens Palace; this latter they resolve upon which should be done in this manner. Blunt should keep the great Gate with a selected number of men, and Davers seize upon the Presence D Chamber: Then Essex with his Company should come from the Mues, and present himself be- fore the Queen. But now suspicions arising from divers circumstances, Secretary Herbert was sent to call him before the Council, at the Treasurers House; but he doubting the matter, ex- cuseth himself that he was not very well. And now the Plot of seizing upon the Court, which had been four moneths in contriving, was by this means quite dashed, for they had ready at the pre- sent, neither Souldiers, nor munition, so as some speedier course must now be thought on: at which time very opportunely cometh one to them (set on no doubt by Essex his Adversaries) as if he had been sent on purpose from the Citizens, to promise him the aid, which made Essex to ap- plaud his own great good fortune.

And now were four of the Lords, namely the Lord Keeper, the Earl of Worcester, Sir William E
Knolles, and the Lord Chief Justice of England, sent by the Queen to Essex house, who could hardly be suffered to come in, all their Attendants were kept out, save he that carried the Seal before the Keeper. In the Court, they found a confused number of people, and the Earls of Essex, Rutland, and Southampton in the midst of them. The Keeper turning himself to Essex, telleth him, The Queen had sent him and the rest to understand the cause of this concourse, pro- mising Justice, if any person had done them wrong. Essex with a loud voice cryeth out, They ly in wait for my life, we are met to defend our selves. The Keeper urging Essex again to unfold some part of his grievance; the unruly multitude cryeth out, Away, let us be gone, they come to be- tray you, Kill them, cast away that Great Seal. Essex retireth into the House, the Lords follow him, he chargeth them to make the doores fast, and turning him to the Lords, Have patience for a while F (saith he) I must go into the City, to dispatch a little businesse with the Maior and Sheriffs, I will return presently.

There the Lords are kept prisoners; Essex maketh hast into the City, with a Troop of 200 men at his heels; the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Cromwell, and other Lords meeting him by the way, joyn themselves: coming into London, he cryeth out aloud, For the Queen, For the Queen, they lay wait for my life. The Citizens came running to gaze, but not so much as one person took Arms to take his part. Passing along the City, he came all in a sweat to the Sheriff Smith's house, who shuffeth himself forth at a back-door, and goeth to the Lord Maior. By this time, cer- tain of the Nobility entred the City with a Herald, declaring Essex and his adherents Traytors. Hereupon, hearing also that the Lord Admiral made towards him with an Army, he began to be G disheartned; Gorge taketh care for himself, requesteth he might be sent to release the Counsellors, and with them to crave the Queens mercy, whiles the issue was yet doubtful. The Earl content, that Popham only should be freed; but he refused, unless the Keeper also might be dismissed. Then Gorge freeth them all, and goeth along with them to the Court by water.

Now when Essex thought to return, he found a chain fastened crosse the street, at the West end of Pauls, and men in Arms on the other side: then he began to draw his sword; and having once given the word, Blunt letteth fly at them, slew one of them incontinent, himself being sorely wounded

A wounded and taken. Essex himself had his Hat shot through; whereupon retiring he took Boat at Queen-Hytbe, and went to Essex house; where finding the Counsellors all dismissed, he grew extreme angry and dismayed, and cast certain papers into the fire, saying, They should tell no tales. By and by the Admiral besiegeth the house, commanding them to yeeld. Southampton offereth, if the Admiral would give Hostages to secure them, they would present themselves to the Queen. The Admiral answereth him by Sidney, That Rebels are not to proffer Conditions. Within an hour, Essex finding the case desperate, resolved to rush forth; and the Lord Sands (the most aged in the company) greatly urged it, saying, It were better to die valiantly then by the hands of a Hang-man. But Essex his minde, upon a little deliberation altering, they fell upon their knees, and deliver their weapons to the Admiral, when it was ten a clock at night. Owen Salisbury, and one or two more were slain with Musket Shot, and as many of the Besiegers. The next day, Thomas Lea, Commander of a Company of Souldiers in Ireland, who to one Crosse a Sea-Captain (that detected him) intimated, how noble an exploit it were, for six stout fellows to go to the Queen, and compel her forcibly to release Essex and Southampton, was presently apprehended, examined, found guilty, and executed. Essex and Southampton were carried first to Lambeth, to the Archbishops house, because it was a dark night; but anon were sent to the Tower, by the Queens direction; and with them, Kutland, Sands, Cromwell, Mounteagle, Danvers, and Bromley, the rest were put in common prisons.

Essex returning and finding the Counsellors all dismissed, grows much dismayed.

At ten a clock at night, Essex yeelds himself to the Lord Admiral.

He is sent to the Tower, together with the Earl of Southampton and other Lords.

Essex and Southampton are arraigned.

On the nineteenth of February, Essex and Southampton were called to their Arraignment, before their Peers in Westminster Hall, where Buckhurst Lord Treasurer, was appointed Lord High Steward of England for that time. The Peers being severally called by their names, Essex demanded, If it were not lawful for them to except against some of the Peers, as private persons might do against the Jurors. The Judges made answer, That the credit and fidelity of the Peers of England was presumed to be such, that in Tryals they were not bound to take an Oath, nor are they lyable to any exception. Then were they joyntly indited of High-Treason; namely, That they plotted to deprive the Queen of her life and Kingdom, To surprize her in her very Palace; and that they brake forth into open Rebellion, by imprisoning the Counsellors of the Kingdom; by exciting the Londoners to Rebellion with vain Fictions; by assaulling the Queens loyal Subjects in the City; and by defending of Essex House against the Queens Forces. Hereunto they pleaded, Not guilty: Essex withal averring, That they had done nothing but of necessity, and the Law of Nature.

They plead not Guilty.

Edward Coke Attorney, argueth That the Earl could not excuse himself from the Law of Nature, seeing Majesty is not to be affronted for private revenge: The Earl of Essex with great confidence made answer, That to his Prince and Countrey, he always had and would bear a loyal affection. Then Francis Bacon (one that was little expected to speak against Essex, by whom he had been raised) in defence of Cobham, Cecil, and Rawleigh, aggravateth his crying out, That the Crown of England was sold to the Spaniard: whereto Essex replied, that he heard indeed, that Cecil the Secretary should say to one of the Lords of the Council, That the Right of the Infanta of Spain to the Kingdom of England, was as good as any of the Competitors. Upon this Cecil (who stood by as an Auditor) steppeth in, and falling upon his knees, beseecheth the Steward that with his good leave, he might quit himself from this foul aspersion: which leave being granted him, he provoked Essex, if he durst, to name the Counsellor; but he would not: therefore (saith Cecil) it is a Fiction: still Essex averreth it. Then Cecil turning himself to Southampton, besought him, by all manner of Obtestations, to name the man. He referreth it to the Honourable Assembly, and to Cecil himself, if in Honour and good Reason he ought to do it: they affirming He might, Southampton nameth Sir William Knolles, Essex his Uncle. He being sent for, at *Cecil*s intreaty, said, That Cecil two years since told him, that one Dolman, in a Book, had asserted the Right of the Infanta; and had spoken no otherwise then so.

Now after the Judges had delivered their opinion what was Law in the matters alleadged, the Earls, by the Stewards direction, were taken aside: Then the Peers rose, and went apart, and having consulted about an hour, returned to their seats, and in their order, pronounced the Earls guilty of high Treason. Then the high Steward, advising Essex to implore the Queens mercy, giveth Sentence, and that done, brake his Staff and departed.

But are found guilty by their Peers.

The next day, Sir Robert Vernon, Sir William Constable, Sir Edmund Baynham, Littleton, Cluff, Captain Whitlock, John and Christopher Wright and Orell an old Souldier, were called to their Tryal: but the Queen (informed by Sir Fulk Grevill, That most of them were drawn unwittingly into the danger) commanded that only Littleton, Baynham, and Orell should have their Tryal, the rest to be sent back to prison. These were all condemned, but their lives spared; which favour (Rawleigh for a good sum of money received of Baynham) procured.

Essex in the mean while, requested he might speak with some of the Counsellors, to whom he reconciled himself, and to Cecil especially; and then intimating that the Queen could not be in safety while he lived; he requested he might be executed privately in the Tower: He grievously inveigheth against some of the Conspiracy, & wished to speak with some of them, but specially with Blunt and Cusse; whom as soon as he saw, he brake forth into these words; O Cusse, ask pardon of God and the Queen, for thou hast chiefly provoked me to this disloyalty. Also he intimated Sir Henry Nevill, ordinary Ambassadour in France, to have been acquainted with the Conspiracy; and that other in Scotland, France, the Netherlands, and the Lord Mountjoy, Deputy of Ireland, knew of his purpose, and other in England; who being many in number, and the Lord Mountjoy, ordering the Affairs of Ireland in good fashion, the Queen wisely would take no notice of it.

Essex complains of Blunt and Cusse.

The

The five and twentieth day of February, which was to be the fatal day, there were sent to the A Earl divers Ministers, to give him ghostly comfort. The Queen now wavering in her self, one while remembering the ancient kindenesse she had shewed him, she commanded he should not be executed; then again, thinking of his stubbornnesse, That he would not once ask her mercy, and had said openly, That he could not live, but she must perish; countermanning her former word, she gave order that he should be executed.

H. is executed in the Tower.

Then was he brought forth into the Yard, where a Scaffold was erected, and sundry of the Nobility present, amongst whom Rawleigh also; but being told, it was an inhumane thing to stand by and behold the death of his adversary, he withdrew himself into the Armory, and from thence beheld the Tragedy. Essex being ascended the Scaffold, uncovered his head, cast up his eyes towards Heaven, and cried God mercy for the manifold sins of his youth, but this last specially, which he said was a bloody, crying, and contagious sin; craved pardon of the Queen and her Counsellors, commended his Spirit into the hands of God, and had his head taken off at the third blow, though the first bereft him both of his sense and motion.

Cuffes pleading for himself at his tryal.

The fifth of March, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Charles Davers, Sir John Davis, Sir Gyllie Merrick, and Cuffe, were brought to their Tryal in Westminster Hall, before the Queens delegates. The Heads of their Inditements, were the same which were objected to Essex and Southampton. The others said little in their defence, only Cuffe stood upon these two Answers; Whereas (saith he) I am challenged of Treason, because I was in Essex house the day of the Rebellion; by the same Argument the Lyon in the Cellar might be indited; all that day I lamented the Earls fortune, and dealt with him to fly to the Queens mercy. And as for the Consultation in Drury C House, it is no more to be called High Treason, then an Embryon may be accounted a perfect man. The Lawyers on the other side demonstrated, That no necessity lay upon him to tarry in the House; and that the Consultation in Drury House was it self a Treason, though it had never broke forth into act. Merrick said only this, The Earl of Essex raised me, and he hath overturned me.

Merrick and Cuffe, are burn, and there executed.

Sir Charles Davers, and Sir Christopher Blunt beheaded at the Tower Hill.

The thirteenth of March, Merrick and Cuffe are drawn to Tyburn, where Cuffe entering into a long Speech, was by the Sheriff interrupted; and then, after prayers to God, and desiring God and the Queen to pardon him, he was cast from the Ladder: a man of great Wit and Learning, but of a boisterous and turbulent disposition. In the same maner dyed Merrick.

The fifteenth of March, Sir Charles Davers, and Sir Christopher Blunt were beheaded on the D Tower Hill; albeit Davers offered ten thousand pounds to redeem his life, though with perpetual imprisonment. The Earl of Southampton, and the Sheriff Smith were kept prisoners; though Smith, after some time, was upon sureties suffered to goe at large. The eighth of July, Sir Henry Nevill was cited before the Lords of the Council, where it was laid to his Charge, That he was present at the Consultation in Drury House, yet had not revealed their sinister purposes; and had imparted to Essex the secrets of his French Embassage. He confessed, That at the Earls intreaty, he shewed him the Commentaries of the French proceedings, was present at one of their Consultations only; but contemned their counsels, yet durst not be an Informer against so great Personages. Hereupon he had a grievous check given him, and was committed to prison.

One act of the By, is not here to be omitted. Essex at his Arraignment had complained, That his hand-writing was counterfeited. It happened the Countesse of Essex being fearful in her Husbands behalf, gave a Letter which she had received from him, to the custody of one Ribbave, a Dutch woman that waited on her: this Dutch womans husband named Daniel, lighted by chance upon the Letter, and perceiving some passages in it which might bring the Earl of Essex into danger, got a cunning fellow to draw a counterfeit Copy of the said Letter; with this he cometh to the fearful Lady, who was newly brought to bed, threatening to give the same to her husbands adversaries, unlesse she would presently give him three thousands pounds. She to shun the danger, paid him eleven hundred and seventy pounds at the very instant; yet did he deliver her the counterfeit Copy only, meaning to make use of the true one, F to get another sum of the Earls adversaries. This imposture being found out, he was censured to perpetual Imprisonment, condemned in three thousand pounds (two of which were to go to the Countesse) and his ears nailed to the Pillory, with this Writing over his head; A notorious Cheater.

The Queen sets forth a Proclamation, declaring all Monopolies to be void.

Soon after, a Parliament was assembled, wherein grievous complaints being tendred to the lower House touching Monopolies; the Queen, by way of prevention, sendeth out Proclamations, declaring the said Licences and Patents to be void in part, leaving some part to the discussion of the Laws: which thing was so acceptable to the Lower house, that they presently sent eighty select persons, together with the Speaker, to give the Queen thanks, and she on the other side, gave them thanks, for being such faithful Monitors to her, to recall her from an error, whereinto G through ignorance, not wilfulnesse she was fallen.

The Spaniards land in Ireland and take Kin-sale.

In Ireland, the Deputy at the entry of the Spring, draweth his Forces together, and driveth Tir-Oen from where he had fortified himself; Carew, President of Munster, taketh the titular Earl lurking in a Cave, and receiveth intelligence, That the Spaniards invited by Tir-Oen, had a purpose to land in Munster, yet could not perswade the Deputy they had any design for Ireland; but in the midst of September, certain news was brought, the Spaniards were in sight, who wanting winde to carry their Fleet to Cork, put into Kinsale, the three and twentieth of September,

A tember, and land their Souldiers without resistance. Richard Percy having but few Souldiers to defend the Town, is commanded to come away and leave Kinsale to the Spaniards, into which they enter with Ensignes displayed, and by the Magistrates and Inhabitants, were bidden welcome.

D Aquila, who commanded the Spaniards, publisheth a Declaration, wherein he sheweth, That Queen Elizabeth was deposed from her Kingdom by sentence of the Pope, her subjects absolved from their Allegiance; And that the Spaniards were now come to deliver Ireland from the jaws of the Devill. Tir-Oen joyneth his Forces with them, so as they were now six thousand Foot, and five hundred Horse, and promised themselves assured Victory, the English being not near so many. The four and twentieth of December, a Battell is joyned; where, after a long fight, the Victory inclined to the English. Tir-Oen, Odonell, and the rest, cast away their weapons, and save themselves by flight. Alphonso O Campo, chief Leader of the Spaniards, together with three other Captains, was taken prisoner, and six Ensign-bearers, twelve hundred were slain, nine Colours taken, whereof four belonged to the Spaniards: of the English not many were slain, but a great number wounded.

Tir-Oen joyneth his Forces with the Spaniards, which together make a great Army, but in a battail are defeated.

Alphonso O Campo their chief leader is taken prisoner.

After six days, D^r Aquila sendeth Letters to the Deputy by a Drummer, requesting that some person of account might be sent to him, with whom to confer; Sir William Godolphine is sent, to whom he complained of the cowardise, and (he feared) treachery of the Irish; and therefore, although he wanted nothing to hold out the Siege, and did dayly expect great Forces from Spain, yet was willing to make a Composition: whereupon, at last it was agreed, The Spaniard should yeeld up Kinsale to the Deputy, as also the Castles and Forts at Baltimore, Bere-Haven, and Castle-Haven, and should depart with life and goods, and Colours displayed. The English, at a reasonable price, should furnish them with ships and provision into Spain; and that they should not carry Arms against the Queen of England, till they were arrived in Spain, &c.

D^r Aquila who commanded the Spaniards, requires a Composition and departs.

And now the Spaniards being driven out of Ireland, the Queen, to prevent their coming again, sendeth out Sir Richard Levison, and Sir William Monson, with eight ships of her own, and some smaller ships of War, to attempt something upon the Coast of Spain. On the nineteenth of March, Levison hoyseth Sail, and Monson afterward, having in vain tarried behind for some Dutch ships to joyn with them. Levison in the mean time lighted upon the Spanish Navy of eight and thirty ships, which brought the Treasure from America, and set upon them, but to no purpose. When Monson was come with the rest of the Fleet, they had certain notice, That a mighty Indian Caraque of sixteen hundred Tun, and richly laden, was upon the Coast of Portugal. There indeed they found it, but it lay close under a Fort, attended with eleven Gallies; and the Caraque it self appeared as big as a Castle; yet they resolved to fire it, if they could not take it. The next day, they thundred so violently against the Gallies, that within seven hours the Marquess of St. Croffe, together with the Portugal Gallies which he commanded, withdrew themselves; two of them were taken and fired; and in them was great store of powder, which was going for the Low-Countries. And now Levison signified to the Captain of the Caraque, That the Gallies which they trusted to, were driven away, and therefore, if they now refused mercy, they must expect none hereafter. After much speech to and fro, it was at last agreed; That the Caraque, with the Ordinance and Merchandize should be yeelded up. Thus the English, having a fair winde returned home with a Booty, to the value of a Million of Duckets, by the Portugal account, and not past five of their men lost in the Voyage.

Sir Richard Levison sets upon the Spanish Fleet of Treasure, but cannot prevail.

But he takes a Caraque of 16 hundred Tun, worth a Million of Duckets.

At this time there arose a Contestation amongst the Popish Clergy here in England; for the Jesuites and Secular Priests, made bitter Invectives in their writings, one against the other. The original of the Priests quarrel was, That Blackwell, one wholly at the beck of the Jesuites, was set over them as Arch-Presbyter, who first of all despoyled them of their Faculties; and when they appealed to the Pope, caused them to be declared Schismatics and Hereticks. They in sundry Books extolled the Queen very highly, as one that dealt mildly alwayes with the Catholics, till such time as they set all in a combustion in England; and by their Treasons, caused most severe Laws to be enacted against the Catholics. Parsons they traduced as a Bastard, an Equivocator and a Traytor. Whether they contended thus in good earnest, or in jest only, is hard to say; but the Bishop of London politickly nourished the contention; and all he gained, was this, That the Queen and her Council, finding them dangerous to the Common-wealth, both the one and the other, upon penalty of the Laws, were by Proclamation commanded to depart out of the Kingdom presently.

The Jesuites and the secular Priests contend against one another.

Both of them are commanded to depart the Realm.

In France, the Marshal Biron, for entring into dangerous attempts against the publick Peace, was arraigned, and lost his head. His confession brought some other into danger; and amongst them, the Duke of Bulloign, of the Protestant Religion, that when he was cited, he durst not appear, but fled into Germany. Hereupon the King of France sendeth to Queen Elizabeth, complaining that the Duke held his marriage unlawful, and the Popes dispensation nothing worth, pronouncing his sons illegitimate; had destined the Prince of Conde to the Succession of the Crown, and conspired the Destruction of the prime of the Nobility. The Queen, by her Legier Ambassadour, adviseth the King not too credulously to entertain those reports, as doubting these suggestions might proceed from some of the Spanish Faction. Hereupon the King grew very angry, saying, The Queen held a better opinion of the Duke than he deserved, and that he was one of the chief Architects of Essex his Treason; and being questioned by the King about it, was not able to deny it. About this time also, the Duke of Savoy, by cunning sleights, and and open force, practised against the State of Geneva; and the Queen relieved them with a great sum of money, gathered amongst the Clergy and Laity all over England.

And now the Earl Tir-Oen, perceiving himself in a desperate estate, resolved to sue for mercy, and promised at last to submit his life and fortunes to the Queens pleasure, absolutely without condition. Hereupon, being admitted to the presence of the Deputy, at the very entry of the room, he fell on his knees; and then passing on a few steps, prostrated himself again, saying, I confesse and crave pardon for my great fault, against God, and a most bountiful Prince my dread Sovereign; I fly to the Queens mercy, as a sacred Anchor, permitting her to dispose of my life and fortunes at her pleasure. Upon this his submission, the Deputy commanded him to go aside, and the next day took him along to Dublin with him, meaning to bring him into England, that the Queen might deal with him according to her Royal pleasure: But before he could come into England, the Queen dyed.

Her Taxations.

She refuseth to burden her Subjects with Subsidies.

IN a Parliament holden the first year of her Reign, a Subsidy was granted, of two shillings eight pence the pound of Goods, and four Shillings of Lands, to be paid at two several Payments, of every person Spiritual and Temporal. In her sixth year, in a Parliament holden at Westminster, one Subsidy was granted by the Clergy, and another by the Laity, together with two Fifteenths and Tenths. In her eighth year, in a Parliament then holden, there were offered to her four Subsidies, upon condition she would declare a Successor; but she refused their offer, and directly remitted the fourth Subsidy, which they had granted, saying, It was all one, whether the money were in her Subjects Coffers, or in her own. In her thirteenth year, in a Parliament then holden, towards her charges of repressing the Northern Rebellion, there was granted her by the Clergy, a Subsidy of six shillings in the pound; and by the Temporality, two Fifteenths, with a Subsidy of two shillings and eight pence in the pound. In her six and thirtieth year, a Parliament was holden, wherein was granted by the Clergy, two whole Subsidies, and by the Laity three, besides six Fifteenths and Tenths; but it was put into the Act, That this great Contribution, the like whereof had not been known in former Ages, should not be drawn into example. In her fortieth year, in a Parliament at Westminster, were granted her by the Clergy, three entire Subsidies; and by the Laity, as many, with six Fifteenths and Tenths. In her two and fortieth year, to furnish her self with money towards the Irish War, she delegated certain Commissioners, to confirm the Crown Lands to the possessors, that held any of controverted Titles, and to take money for the Confirmation, thereby to take away the troubles by concealers, who at this time were very busie.

Controverted titles of Crown Lands confirmed by her.

Of her Laws and Ordinances.

Bishops limited for letting their lands.

All base moneys called in. Provision for the Queens house first ordained.

Allowance to Judges for their Circuit first ordained. Outcries for sale of Goods first ordained.

Buildings in London restrained. College Rents to be paid part in provision, first ordained. The Company of East-India Merchants first set up.

IN a Parliament holden in her first year, an Act was made, That every person should go to Divine service upon Sundays and Holy days, or else pay twelve pence to the poor. Also it was enacted, That Bishops should not let the Lands of the Church, longer then for one and twenty years, or three Lives, except to the Queen or her Successors. In her third year, a Proclamation was made, That the Teston, coyned for twelve pence, and in the Reign of King Edward embased to six pence, should not be current but for four pence; the Groat, but for two pence; and the piece of two pence, but for a penny: And not long after, all the said base moneys were called in, and fine Sterling money was allowed for them, after the Rate. For Ireland also, she coyned Sterling money; where nine pence in England, went for twelve pence there. The Queen was the first that brought certain Counties to deliver Provision at a certain rate, that so they might be freed from the Purveyors: Also the first that granted allowance to Judges for their Circuit. In her sixth year, in a Parliament then holden, it was made Treason to refuse taking the Oath of Supremacy; yet with this limitation, That by it the bloud should not be dishonoured, nor goods confiscate; nor the Oath to be required of any Baron of the Kingdom. Also this year, by a Common-Council in London, it was enacted, That all such Citizens as from thenceforth should be constrained to sell their household-stuff, Leases of houses, or such like; should first cause the same to be cryed through the City, by a man with a Bell, and then to be sold by the common Outcryer appointed for that purpose, and he to receive one farthing upon the shilling for his pains. In her three and twentieth year, she represseth by Proclamation excesses in apparel, Gold Chains, and Cloaks which men wore down to their heels. The length of Swords was limited to three Foot, and Daggers to twelve Inches, besides the hilts. Buildings likewise in the Suburbs were restrained, In-mates forbidden, and expresse charge set forth, That no dwelling house should be new built within three miles of any of the City Gates, under pain of imprisonment, and losse of the materials. In her time was set on foot by Sir Thomas Smith, the Law made for the serving of Colledges with provision, to the great benefit of those Scholastical Societies. In her two and fortieth year, she setteth forth Proclamations against the Transportation of Gold or Silver, wrought or unwrought, according to the former Acts of Parliament in that case provided. This year also she founded the Company of the East-India Merchants, and allowed them ample

A Priviledges. In her three and fourtieth year, all Monopolies are called in by Proclamation. In her four and twentieth year, severe Laws are made against Papists, some inflicting death, some fine and imprisonment. In her eight and twentieth year, a Proclamation was set forth, prohibiting to sow Woad within eight miles of any of the Queens Houses, and four miles of any Cities or Towns Corporate. In her five and twentieth year, was first instituted and founded a publick Lecture in Surgery: to begin to be read in the College of Physitians in London, and the Reader to have a stipend no lesse then those of the Universities erected by King Henry the eighth.

All Monopolies called in by Proclamation.

Woad not to be sowed neer the Queens houses.

Affairs of the Church in her time.

B ON Sunday the first of January next after the Queens coming to the Crown, by vertue of her Proclamation, the English Letany was read accordingly as was used in her Graces Chappel, in all Churches through the City of London, and likewise the Epistle and Gospel of the day, begun to be read at Masse-time in the English Tongue. Also in a Parliament holden in in her first year, the first Fruits and Tenths were restored to the Crown, and the Supreme Government over the state Ecclesiastical, and the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments in the English Tongue was restored, and by degrees the Protestant Religion was established. The Bishops that refused the Oath of Supremacy, were all removed, and Protestant Bishops placed in their room. It was enacted also, That all persons should go to Divine Service upon Sundayes and Holy dayes, and a Fine of twelve pence imposed upon every one that should be absent, and the same to be given to the poor. In her fourth year, the Queen was solicited by Pope Pius, to send her Orators to the Councell of Trent, which she refused, as not acknowledging it a lawful Councel. In a Parliament holden in her eighth year, it was enacted and by a general consent declared, That the Election of the Archbishops and Bishops in England, together with their Consecration, Confirmation, and Investiture (which some persons slanderously called in question) was lawful and Canonical, and that they were rightly, and according to the Acts and Statutes of the Kingdom, chosen and consecrated. In her eleventh year, there arose in England two contrary factions in Religion: on the one side, Thomas Harding, Nicholas Sanders, and other Divines that had fled out of England, began to exercise the Episcopal Jurisdiction upon the Queens Subjects which they had derived from the See of Rome: On the other side, Colman, Burton, Hallingham, Benson, and other, making profession of the pure Religion, would allow of nothing but what was directly taken out of the Scriptures, openly condemning the received Discipline of the Church of England, together with the Church Liturgy, and the very calling of Bishops, as favouring too much of the Romish Religion, protesting in the Pulpits, That it was an impious thing to hold any thing common with the Church of Rome, and used all diligence to have the Church of England reformed in every point, according to the Rule of the Church of Geneva. These, although the Queen commanded to be committed to prison, yet it is incredible how upon a sudden their followers encreased, known by the envious name of Puritans. This sect so mightily encreased, that in her sixteenth year, the Queen and Kingdom was extremely troubled with some of the Clergy, who breathing out nothing but Evangelical parity, cryed down the Ecclesiastical Form of Government (as a thing polluted with Roman dregs) and setting forth Books likewise, intituled, The Admonition to the Parliament, and the Defence of the Admonition: they refused to resort to the Divine Service publicly in use, and framed to themselves other Rites. Whereupon, the Queen to suppress them, whom by no means she liked, commanded every where the severity of the Law touching the Uniformity of Common-Prayer, to be put in execution, and those Books, upon pain of Imprisonment, to be delivered into the hands of the Bishops, or some of the Queens Councell. And this year were taken at Masse in their several houses, the Lord Morley's Lady and her children, the Lady Guilford, and the Lady Brown, who being thereof indited and convicted, suffered the penalty of the Law in that case provided. Untill the twentieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, the Papists in England were mercifully connived at, while they solemnized their own Rites within their private houses (though that also were against the Laws) but when as that Thunderbolt of excommunicating the Queen came abroad, then was the Law enacted against those who brought into the Kingdom any Agnus Dei, or hallowed Beads, or reconciled any of the Queens Subjects to the See of Rome; yet for six whole years together after this Law was made, it was not executed upon any Papist, till Cuthbert Mayn, a Priest, and an obstinate maintainer of the Popes authority against the Queen, was executed at Launston in Cornwall, and the Gentlemans goods that harboured him confiscate, and himself adjudged to perpetual Imprisonment. In her three and twentieth year, divers Priests and Jesuites came into England; amongst whom, Robert Parsons, and Edmund Campian, English men and Jesuites, being now bound for England, to promote the Catholick Cause, at which time a Proclamation was set forth, That whosoever had any children beyond the Sea, should by a certain day call them home; and that no person should receive or harbour any Seminary Priest or Jesuite. At this time also, there arose up in Holland a certain Sect, naming themselves, The Family of Love, who perswaded their followers, that those only who were adopted into that Family, were elected, and no other could be saved, but were all reprobates, and damned, and that it was lawful for them to deny upon oath whatsoever they pleased, before any Magistrate or whomsoever, that were not of their Family. Many of their books were printed, under these titles, The Gospel of the Kingdom, The Lords Sentences, The Propbesie of the spirit of love, The publication of Peace upon earth, by the Author thor H.N. but who this Author was they would by no means reveal: at last he was found to be A Henry Nichols of Leyden, who blasphemously preached, That he was partaker of the Divinity of God, and God of his humane Nature: all which books were by Proclamation commanded to be burnt. In a Parliament holden the eight and twentieth year of her Reign, some out of a desire of Reformation, began to pick quarrels at the Clergy, desiring to passe Laws for the restraint of Bishops in their granting of Faculties, conferring of holy Orders, Ecclesiastical Censure, and the Oath Ex Officio. They complained likewise of the non-residency of Ministers, and the like.

But the Queen, who always hated Innovation (which for the most part changeth for the worse) would give no ear unto them; conceiving besides, That these proceedings in Parliament in Ecclesiastical Affairs, derogated from her Prerogative. In her six and twentieth year, the Queen gave a special charge to Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, to settle an Uniformity in the Ecclesiastical B Discipline, according to the Laws, which through the connivence of Bishops, and perversnesse of the Puritans, lay now almost gasping: Whereupon, he provided three Articles, to which every Minister should subscribe.

The first, That the Queen had Supreme Authority over all persons born within her Dominions, of what condition soever they were; and that no other Prince, or Prelate, or Potentate, haib, or ought to have any Jurisdiction, Civill or Ecclesiastical, within her Realms and Dominions.

The second, That the Book of Common Prayer, and the Ordination of Bishops, Priests and Deacons; containeth nothing contrary to the Word of God, but may lawfully be used, and that they will use that and no other.

The third, That the Articles agreed on in the Synod holden at London, in the year 1562, and published by the Queens Authority, they did allow of, and believe them to be consonant to the Word of God. C

It is incredible what reproaches the Archbishop incurred by setting forth these Articles, both from factious Ministers, and from some also of the Nobility; yet by his patience and constancy, he brought at last peace to the Church, making this his Motto, Vincit qui patitur. Neither did these at home only disturb the Peace of the Church, but others also from abroad, as Robert Brown, a young Student of Divinity in Cambridge; from whom came the Sectaries called Brownists; and Richard Harrison, a petty Schoolmaster. These presuming to judge matters of Religion by their own private spirit, by Books set forth in Zealand, and dispersed D at this time over England, condemned the Church of England for no Church, and ensnared many in the nets of their new Schism. Neither could they be refrained, though their Books were prohibited by the Queens Authority, and soundly confuted by sundry learned men; and one or two of the Ring-leaders executed at S. Edmunds Berry. In her one and thirtieth year, these Puritans flames brake forth again, Books are written by the names of Martin Mar-Prelate, and A Demonstration of the Discipline, by Penty and Udal against the Government of Bishops; and nothing would please them, but the Discipline of Geneva: Many Abettors they had, Knightly and Wigstone, Knights, besides Cartwright (the father of them) Snape, King, Pradlow, Payn, and others; who though called in question, fined and imprisoned, could never be reclaimed. In her six and thirtieth year, the Queen caused the severity of the Laws to be executed upon Henry Barrow and E his Sectaries, for disturbing the Church, and the publick Peace, by scattering of their monstrous Opinions, condemning the Church of England as no Christian Church, and derogating from the Queens Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical.

Works of Piety in her time.

THIS Queen converted Westminster Abbey into a Collegiate Church, and there ordained a Dean, twelve Prebendaries, a Master, Usher, and forty Scholars, Vicars, Singing-men, and twelve Almshouses. In her third year, the Merchant-Taylors founded a notable Grammar School, in the Parish of S. Lawrence Pountney in London. Also this year, William Harper, Maior of London, founded a Free School in the Town of Bedford, where he was born.
In her seventh year, on the seventh of June, Sir Thomas Gresham laid the first stone of the Royal Exchange in Cornhil, which in November the year after, at his own charges was finished, being the year 1567. In her tenth year, the Citizens of London builded a new Conduit at Walbrook corner, neer to Dowgate, the water whereof is conveyed out of the Thames.
Also this year, Sir Thomas Roe Maior of London, caused to be enclosed within a wall of Brick, one Acre of ground, neer unto Bedlam, without Bishops Gate, to be a place of Burial for the dead of such Parishes in London as lacked convenient ground within their Parishes: He also builded a convenient room in Pauls Church-yard, on the South side of the Crosse, to receive G a certain number of Hearers at Sermon time. Sir William Peter, having himself been born at Exeter in Devonshire, he gave to Exeter College in Oxford, a hundred pounds Lands a year:
He also builded at Ingershale in Essex, Almshouses for twenty poor people, and giving them some competent maintenance. Sir Thomas Gresham had his dwelling house in Broadstreet London, which he dedicated to the profession of the Liberal Sciences, erecting there Lectures of Divinity, Civil Law, Physick, Geometry, Astronomy, Musick, and Rhetorick, allotting to the Professors very competent allowance. In her seventeenth year dyed Matthew Parker, Archbishop
of

A of Canterbury, who founded a Grammar School in Rochdale in the County of Lancaster: He also procured to Corpus Christi College in Cambridge, thirteen Scholarships, and built two Chambers for Scholars, and the inward Library of the same College, and procured to it the Patronage of S. Mary Abchurch in London, with many other works of like kinde. Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord Keeper gave for six Scholars to be found in Benet College in Cambridge, three pounds, six shillings and eight pence for ever. Edmund Grindall Archbishop of Canterbury, founded a Free-School in Cumberland, where he was born, and gave many Pensions to both Universities. Frances, Countesse of Suffex, sister to Sir Henry Sidney, founded Suffex Sidney College in Cambridge: As likewise Sir Walter Mildmay, Chancellor of the Exchequer, founded Emmanuel College in the same University. Sir Thomas Bodley erected and furnished the famous publick Library at Oxford. Alexander Nowell Dean of Pauls, endowed Brasen-nose College in Oxford, where he was brought up, with two hundred pound per annum, and dyed in the year 1602. Sir Roger Manhood, chief Baron of the Exchequer, built seven Almshouses in Canterbury, giving to every Almshouse four pounds yearly: and our worthy Countreyman William Lambard built an Almshouse at Greenwich, which he called, The College for the poor of Queen Elizabeth. Also in her time, namely in the year 1595. Bevis Bulmar Gentleman, builded a large house of great height, called an Engine, at the Bridge foot, for the conveying and forcing of Thames water to serve in the middle and west parts of the City. Also in her time, namely in the year 1596. Ralph Rokeby one of her Masters of Requests, then dying, gave by his Will, to Christis Hospital in London, 100 l. to the College of the poor of Queen Elizabeth in East Greenwich, 100 l. to the poor Scholars in Cambridge, 100 l. to the poor Scholars in Oxford, 100 l. to the prisoners in the two Compters in London 100 l. to the prisoners in the Fleet 100 l. to the prisoners in Ludgate 100 l. to the prisoners in Newgate 100 l. to the prisoners in the Kings Bench 100 l. to the prisoners in the Mashalfe 100 l. to the prisoners in the White Lyon 20 l. a liberal and pious Legacie; and worthy not to be forgotten.

Casualties in her time.

IN the first year of her Reign, dyed Sir Thomas Cheyney, Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, of whom it is reported for a certain, That his pulse did beat more then three quarters of an hour after he was dead, as strongly as if he had been still alive. In her third year there was found near Keswick in Cumbrelland, a most rich Vein of pure and native Brasse, which had lain neglected a long time: Also the stone called Lapis Calaminaris, which is of great use in Brasse Works, was first brought into England at this time, and that in most plentiful manner. Likewise this Queen was the first that caused Gun-powder to be made in England, which before was had from forain parts, and at dear rates. In her third year, the Spire of the Cathedral Church of Pauls, being five hundred and twenty foot from the ground, and two hundred and sixty from the square Steeple where it was placed, and was made of wooden materials, but covered with Lead, was with lightning burnt down, together with the Roofs of that large Church, and that within the space of five hours; the Roofs were after re-edified, but the Spire is yet wanting. The Queen gave towards it a thousand Marks in money, and a thousand load of Timber; and the City granted a Benevolence, and three Fifteens; and the Clergy also contributed towards it. Also this year there were many monstrous Births: A Mare brought forth a Foal with two heads, and a long tail growing out between the two Heads. A Sow farrowed a Pig with two Bodies, eight Feet, and but one head. A man-child was born at Chichester in Suffex, having arms and legs like to an Anatomy, the Breast and Belly monstrous big, about the neck a great collar of flesh and skin, growing like the ruff of a shirt. In her sixth year, upon the returning of the Army from Newhaven, the Pestilence was brought into England, but especially into London; where in one year there dyed one hundred and twenty thousand and five hundred. This year also, in the Moneth of December, was driven on the shore at Grimsbey in Lincolnshire a monstrous Fish, in length nineteen yards, his tail fifteen foot broad, and six yards between the eyes. Twelve men stood upright in his mouth to get the Oyl. In her seventh year on the one and twentieth of December began a Frost, so extreme, that on New-years Even people passed over the Thames on foot; some played at Foot ball, some shot at pricks, as if it had been firm ground. Yet this great Frost, the third of January at night began to thaw, and by the fifth day, there was no Ice at all to be seen; which sudden thaw caused great Inundations. In her eighth year, within the space of ten Moneths, there dyed in London seven Aldermen, namely, Edward Banks, Richard Chamberlain, Sir Martin Bowes, Sir Richard Mallory, Sir William Hewet, Sir Thomas White, and Richard Lambert, one of the Sheriffs for that year. The same year also, in the Town of Offesbury in Wales, two hundred houses, in the space of two hours, were consumed with fire. In her tenth year, were taken in Suffolk, at Downham Bridge neer to Ipswich, seventeen monstrous Fishes; some of them being seven and twenty Foot in length: And in the same year, many Dutch flying into England, to avoid the persecution of the Duke D'Alva, were the first that brought into England the Art of making Bayes, Sayes, Serges, and such woven stuffs both Woollen and Linnen. In her time a rich Vein of Copper was found in the Earl of Northumberland's Grounds, which she by her Prerogative seized upon. In her thirteenth year, a prodigious Earth-quake happened in the East parts of Herefordshire, at a little Town called Kinnaston. On the seventeenth of February, at six of the clock in the evening, the earth began to open, and a Hill with a Rock under it (making at first a great bellowing noise, which was heard a great way off) lifted it self up a great height, and began to travel, bearing along with it the Trees that grew upon it, the Sheep-folds, and Flocks of Sheep abiding there at the same time. In the place from whence it was first moved, it left a gaping distance forty foot broad, and fourscore Ells long; the whole Field was about twenty Acres. Passing along, it overthrew a Chappell standing in the way, removed an Ewe-Tree planted in the Church-yard, from the West into the East; with the like force it thrust before it High-ways, Sheep-folds, Hedges and Trees, made tilled ground Pasture, and again turned Pasture into Tillage. Having walked in this sort from Saturday in the evening, till Munday noon, it then stood still. In her fifteenth year, in the month of November, a new Star, or rather a Meteor (but that it was found to be above the Moon) was seen in Cathedra Cassiopeæ, exceeding Jupiter in brightnesse, and in that place was carried with the Diurnal motion of the Heavens sixteen moneths together, though after eight moneths it was perceived to grow lesse and lesse. In her sixteenth year, was a great Dearth, so as Wheat was sold at five and six shillings the Bushell, and other things in proportion. In her seventeenth year, a vast mighty Whale was cast upon the Isle of Thanet in Kent, twenty Ells long, and thirteen foot broad from the belly to the back-bone, and eleven foot between the eyes. One of his eyes being taken out of his head, was more then a Cart with six Horses could draw; the Oyl being boyled out of the head, was Parmacittæ. This year also, the River Thames ebbed and flowed twice within an hour: and in the moneth of November, the Heaven seemed to be all on fire. Also on the four and twentieth of February, being a great Frost, after a Flood which was not great, there came down the River of Severne such a swarm of Flies and Beetles that they were judged to be above a hundred Quarters; the Mills thereabout were dammed up with them for the space of four days, and then were cleansed by digging them out with Shovels. In her two and twentieth year, a strange apparition happened in Somersetshire, threescore personages all cloathed in black, a furlong in distance from those that beheld them; and after their appearing and a little while tarrying, they vanished away, but immediately another strange company, in like manner, colour and number appeared in the same place: and they encountred one another, and so vanished away. And the third time appeared that number again, all in bright armour, and encountred one another, and so vanished away. This was examined before D Sir George Norton, and sworn by four honest men that saw it, to be true. In her three and twentieth year, in the beginning of April, about six a clock after noon, happened an Earthquake not far from Tork, which in some places strook the very stones out of Buildings, and made the Bells in Churches to jangle. The night following, the earth trembled once or twice in Kent, and again the first day of May. In this year also, in the Town of Walsbam in Suffex, a childe of eleven years old, named William Withers, lay in a trance for the space of ten days without any sustenance; and at the last coming to himself he uttered to the standers by, many strange speeches: Inveighing against Pride, Covetousnesse, coldnesse of Charity, and other enormous sins. In her six and twentieth year, being the year 1588. the like Prodigie happened in Dorsetshire; as in the year 1571 had happened in Herefordshire; A field of three acres in Blackmore, with the Trees and Fences, moved from its place, and passed over another field, travelling in the High-way that goeth to Herne, and there stayed. In her eight and twentieth year, Tobacco was first brought out of the West-Indies into England by Ralph Lane. In her five and thirtieth year, there was so great a drought, that not only the Fields, but the Springs themselves were dried up, and many Cattel every where died for want of water. The River of Thames likewise did so fail, that a Horseman might ride over at London-bridge. In her six and thirtieth year, was a great Plague in London, so as there dyed this year, in London and the Suburbs, seventeen thousand eight hundred and ninety, besides the Lord Maior, and three Aldermen; and Michaelmas Term was holden at S. Albons. For the prices of victuals in her time, we may take a pattern of the rest by one kinde: for John Stow reporteth, that in his youth he fetched many a half peniworth of Milk from a Farm by the Minories, and never had lesse then three Ale Pintes for a half peny in the Summer, nor lesse then two Ale pintes for a half peny in the Winter. Also in the year 1533, a fat Ox was sold at London, for twenty six shillings at the most; a fat Weather for three shillings four pence; a fat Calf the like price: a fat Lamb for twelve pence, three pound of Beef for a peny.

She was of stature indifferent tall, slender and straight, fair of Complexion, her hair inclining to pale yellow, her fore-head large and fair, her eyes lively and sweet, but short sighted; her nose somewhat rising in the midst; the whole compasse of her countenance somewhat long, yet of admirable beauty, but the beauty of her minde was far more admirable: She had been a subject, which taught her to rule; she had been in misery, which taught her to be merciful; and indeed, never Prince ruled with more justice, and with her justice mingled more mercy: She had more Valour in her then was fit for a woman, but that she was a Ruler over men; and more Humility in her then was fit for a Prince, but that she meant to be a President to women. She delighted in nothing so much, as in the love of her people, which she procured by ordaining good

Agood Magistrates, and forbearing Impositions. Her way not to need them, was frugality; and her way to have them when she needed them, was liberality. She made honour in her time the more honourable, by not making it common; and indeed, knowing it to be an influence from her self, she kept it, as her self, a Virgin, and would not prostitute it to unworthy persons. She declined being a mother of children, to the end she might be a mother of her Countrey; and indeed, no mother ever loved her children more, then she did her people; and therefore never children loved a mother more, then her people did her. She coveted not so much to be an owner of riches, as of rich Subjects; for she thought money did as well in their Coffers, as in her own: and indeed, she never wanted it, when they had it; and they always had it, when she needed it. Never Prince had a wiser Council then she, yet never Prince needed it lesse; for she was her self a Counsellor to her Counsel. In sum, whatsoever may in flattery be said of a wise, just, merciful, religious, and learned Prince, may truly be said of her: in all which, if ever she had an equal, yet she never certainly had a superiour. In playing her game of Fortune, she loved not an after-game; for she liked Preventions better then Remedies. She was admirable in expressing her minde, both by speech and writing: and if collection could be made of her Apophthegms, and extemporal Orations, it would certainly excel any thing extant in that kinde: And for her writing, Sir Henry Savile affirms, That he had seen some Translations of hers, which far exceeded the Originals. Never Prince kept greater State with lesse statelineffe: Her Pensioners and Guard were always the tallest and goodliest Gentlemen and Yeomen of the Kingdom: her maids of Honour and other women about her, the fairest and most beautiful Ladies of the Realm; and yet her self a Diana amongst her Nymphs; insomuch that a great Lord of France being entertained at Court, and the Queen asking him how he liked her Ladies, made answer, It was hard to judge of Stars, in presence of the Sun.

Of her Death and Buriall.

IT was now the year 1602, when she feeling some Infirmities of Old age and sicknesse, retired her self at the end of January, to Richmond; at which time, in a sad Onen, she commanded the Ring to be filed off her finger, wherewith she was solemnly at the first inaugurated into the Kingdom, and since that time had never taken it off it being grown into the flesh in such manner, that it could not be drawn off without filing. At the beginning of her sicknesse, the Almonds of her Jaws began to swell, and her appetite by little and little failed her; withal she gave her self wholly to sadnesse and heavinesse, which some imputed to her care for the losse of the Earl of Essex; others, because she heard, That divers of the Nobility fought the favour of the King of Scots, adoring him as the Sun rising, and neglecting her: but howsoever, in March a kinde of benumbednesse seized upon her, with a deep melancholy, so as she would sit silently, refrain her meat, and not admit of any conference, but with the Archbishop of Canterbury, with whom she prayed fervently, till such time as her speech failed her, which failed her E a day before she dyed. She being in this case, it was thought fit the Admiral and Secretary should go to her, to know her minde concerning a Successor; to whom she gave this answer; My Throne hath been the Throne of Kings, I would not a mean person should succeed me. The Secretary requestling her to speak more plainly, I will (said she) have a King succeed me; and what King, but the King of Scots, my neereſt kinsman? After this, the Archbishop exhorting her to think of God, That do I (said she) nor do my thoughts ever wander from him. And when her tongue no longer served her, it was evident by the lifting up of her hands and eyes; that her thoughts were fixed upon him. And so on the four and twentieth day of March, being the last day of the year 1602, she yielded up her soul to God, when she had lived threescore and nine years, six moneths, and seven dayes; Reigned four and forty years, four moneths, F and seven days. Her Body was embalmed, wrapped in Lead, and brought to White-hall; from whence on the eight and twentieth of April following, in great solemnity, it was carried into the Collegiate Church of Saint Peters at Westminster, and there interred in the Vault of her Grand-father, King Henry the seventh, in his magnificent Chappel, where our renowned Sovereign King James hath built her a Princely Monument, inscribed with Epitaphs to her eternal glory. At her Funeral were said be Mourners in black, to the number of one thousand and six hundred persons.

Men of note in her time.

THE Ocean is not more boundlesse; then the number of men of note in her time; but though all of them cannot be reckoned, yet some of them must not be omitted. And to begin with States-men: An exquisite States-man for his own ends, was Robert Earl of Leicester; and for his Countries good, Sir William Cecill, Lord Burleigh; as also Sir Francis Walsingham, that great underminer of Conspirators. Famous Sea-men, were the Earl of Cumberland, the Lord Thomas Howard, afterward Earl of Suffolk; and of meaner Rank, Sir John Hawkins, Sir Martin Forbyſher, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Cavendish, Preston, Ryman; and, to name the worthiest his delight in Gaming and Cockfighting.

Famous Players, and Playmakers,

last, Sir Francis Drake, who though he were but a short square bodyed man, yet his great Acts A have made the Spaniards believe that he was some goodly personage. Great Commanders by Land, were Robert Earl of Essex, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Grey of Wilton, Sir Francis Vere, Sir Roger Williams, Baskerville, Savage; and the Honour of his Family, and our English Nation, Sir John Norri. Learned Gentlemen and Writers, were Sir Thomas Chaloner, employed by Queen Elizabeth as her Legier in Spain, who wrote five books of the restoring of the English Common-wealth, in Elegant Verses, while (as he said) he lived in a Stove in Winter, and in a Barn in Summer: Roger Askam, born in Yorkshire, notably skilful in the Greek and Latine Tongue, who had some- B time been Schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth, and her Secretary for the Latine Tongue; but taking too great delight in Gaming and Cockfighting, he both lived and dyed in mean estate, yet left behinde him sundry Monuments of Wit and Indultry. Sir Thomas Smith, born at Saffron Walden in Essex, B sometime Secretary to King Edward the sixth, who wrote an imperfect Work of the English Common-wealth, a singular Book of the Orthography of the English tongue, and another of the Pronunciation of the Greek; the first man that set on foot the Law for serving the Colledges with Provision. Sir Henry Savill, Provost of Eaton, and Reader to Queen Elizabeth, who set forth all S. Chrysostoms works in Greek, and by translating of Cornelius Tacitus, deserved as much of the English Tongue, as he of the Latine: But above all, the admirable Sir Philip Sidney, who by writing in a light Argument, shewed how excellently, and beyond all comparifon he could have done in a grave. Learned Divines were John Jewell, born in Devonshire, a Student in Corpus Christi College in Oxford, in Queen Maries time an Exile, by Queen Elizabeth made Bishop of Salisbury, who wrote an Apology for the Protestant Doctrine, and dyed at scarce fifty years of age, in the fourteenth C year of Queen Elizabeth. John Whitaker, Master of S. Johns College in Cambridge, who learnedly answered all the Books of Bellarmino. Bilson Bishop of Winchester, sometimes Fellow of new Col- D lege in Oxford, who, amongst his other learned Works, hath written notably of Christs descent into hell. Richard Hooker, Preacher at the Temple, who with too much meeknesse smothered his great Learning, yet hath something discovered it in his five Books of Ecclesiastical Disci- pline, and dyed in the year 1599. Alexander Nowel Dean of Pauls, who forbearing deeper Works, set forth a Catechism, according to the Doctrine of the English Church, and dyed in the year 1620. After such men, it might be thought ridiculous to speak of Stage-players; but seeing ex- cellency in the meanest things deserve remembring, and Roscius the Comedian is recorded in Hi- story with such commendation, it may be allowed us to do the like with some of our Nation. D Richard Bourbidge and Edward Allen, two such Actors as no age must ever look to see the like: and, to make their Comedies compleat, Richard Tarleton, who for the Part called the Clowns Part, never had his match, never will have. For Writers of Playes, and such as had been Players them- selves, William Shakespeare and Benjamin Johnson, have specially left their Names recommended to posterity.

THE REIGN OF KING JAMES.

Anno Dom.
1603.

King James is proclaimed King of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

JAMES the fourth King of Scotland, married Margaret eldest Daughter of Henry the seventh King of England, by whom he had James the fifth, who had one only child Mary Queen of Scots, who had one only Son James the sixth, who from James the fourth had undoubted right to the Kingdom of Scotland, and from Margaret, King Henry the seventh's eldest Daughter (the male line being clean extinct) unquestionable title to the Crown of England: whereupon Queen Elizabeth being dead about ten a clock in the morning the 24. of March, King James the sixth King of Scotland was the very same day (M. Secretary Cecill himself reading his Title, and Queen Elizabeth's Will) proclaimed King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, by sound of Trumpet, first at White-hall; and then in Cheapside, in presence of all the Lords of the Council, and other of the Nobility, with a general acclamation of all sorts of people, that we may truly say, sorrow was never more deceived then at this time; for where upon the death of Queen Elizabeth, it was expected there would be nothing for a long time but sorrowing and lamenting; now that very sorrow was swallowed up of joy, her death bringing with it no other alteration but only of sex, in all other points in a manner the same, the like wisdom, the like learning, the like Justice, the like religiousness in them both: only bettered in this, that we changed a Queen of 70 years old, whom we could not look to keep long, for a King of 36, whom we might well hope to enjoy many years.

Sir Robert Cary
acquaints him with the Queens death.

Queen Elizabeth was no sooner dead, but Sir Robert Cary a younger son of the late Lord Hunsdon, passed away unsent, to King James in Scotland, informing him of the accident; for bringing which news, the King afterwards rewarded him with making him a Baron of the Realm, and Lord of Leppington. But though it were sufficient for the Kings information that he heard the news by Sir Robert Cary; yet it was not sufficient for the Lords of the Council in discharge of their duty, if he heard it not from them, and therefore within a very few days, as soon as they could provide fit men, they sent first Sir Charles Piercy, and Mr. Thomas Somerset, and after them Sir Thomas Lake, Clerk of the Signet, a man well acquainted with the State of the Kingdom, both to acquaint him with the general applause of all the Realm, to receive him for their Sovereign, and also inform him in what terms the state of the Kingdom stood, that so he might not come altogether a stranger when he came into it.

The King
addes new Counsellors.

Queen Elizabeth indeed had left him not only a Kingdom, but a Kingdom without incombrance; no wars abroad, no sedition at home; and not only so, but a Kingdom furnished with all the fruits of Peace, plenty of all things necessary, and of all necessary things; the chiefest a wise Council, for she left Sir Thomas Egerton Lord Chancelour, Thomas Lord Buckhurst Lord Treasurer, Charles Earl of Nottingham Lord Admiral, and Sir Robert Cecill principal Secretary: Four such men that the meanest of them were sufficient to sit at the Helm of any Kingdom. Yet to these and divers others besides (all whom the King now by his letters authorizeth to exercise their several places, as formerly they had done) he addeth certain new ones of his own choosing, as namely the Earl of Northumberland, and Cumberland, the Lord Thomas Howard, and then after the

- A the Lord Henry Howard; the one the brother, the other the son of the late Duke of Norfolk, who had suffered so much, that at last he suffered for the Queen his mother. But although the calling of these two last to such place, was done (no doubt) out of favour to that house; yet one of them being known, the other doubted to be a Papist, it was presently apprehended, as a favour to that side; and the Catholics were not a little confident of his good inclination to them all in general. And it was indeed but necessary they should at this time have such a conceit, for in the late Queens sickness, a little before her death, Pope Clement the eighth, had written two Brieves to the Catholics in England, to admit of none to succeed in the Kingdom, when that miserable woman should happen to die (so he pleased to style the most glorious Queen that ever lived) but such a one, of whose good inclination to the See of Rome, they should at least be well persuaded. And now King James having settled the Government of his Kingdom of Scotland, &c. made convenient preparation for his journey: on the fifth of April 1603, he set forward and rode that day from Edenburgh to Dunglassie, and from thence the next day to Berwick, where having stayed two days, the eighth of April he rode to Wuberington a house of Sir Robert Carier, from thence the ninth to Newcastle, where he stayed Sunday and heard the Bishop of Durham preach, and so joyful were the Townsmen of his being there, that all the time of his stay they bore the charge of his household. The thirteenth of April he set forward to Durham, and from thence the fourteenth to Waltworth, the fifteenth towards York, where his train increased to such a multitude, that he was fain to publish an inhibition of the peoples resorts, and flocking to him. At York it was a question to whom it belonged to bear the sword before the King in that place, for both the Earl of Cumberland claimed it, as hereditary to his House, and the President of the North claimed it as belonging to his place, but it was adjudged to George Earl of Cumberland; who accordingly did it. From York the eighteenth day the King rode to Grimston, to a house of Sir Edward Stanbops, the nineteenth to Pomfret, and so to Doncaster, where he lodged at the sign of the Bear and Sun: The twentieth of April he rode towards Worsuppe, a house of the Earl of Shrewsbury; from thence the twenty one to Newark upon Trent, where a Curpurse being taken in the fact, was by the Kings warrant hanged; a most unseasonable delinquent, who would force the King to a work of Justice at a time when he intended nothing but mercy: the 22. to Beaver Castle, a house of the Earl of Rutlands, hunting all the way as he rode: From Beaver the 23. to Burleigh, where having stayed two or three days, the 27. he removed to Hitchinbrook, a house of Sir Oliver Cromwells, where the heads of the University of Cambridge met him: From thence he rode towards Royston, and as he passed through Godmanchester, a Town close by Huntington, the Bailiffs of the Town presented him with 70 Teem of Horse all traced to fair new Ploughs, at which the King wondring, they said, it was their ancient custom so to do when any King of England passed through their Town, and by which as being the Kings tenants, they held their land. At Royston he lodged that night at M Chesters house, at his own charge, which he had not done before, since his coming into England. The 30. of April he rode to Standon, a house of Sir Thomas Sadlers, where he stayed Sunday, and heard the Bishop of London preach. The second of May he removed to Brosbourn, a house of Sir Henry Cock, cofferer to the late Queen, and now to the King, where met him the Lord Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Admiral, and divers other Lords: The third of May he came to Theobalds, a house of Sir Robert Cecils; when all the Lords of the late Queens most honourable Privy Council presented themselves, and there the Lord Keeper made a grave Oration. At this house, the fourth of May, the King made divers Noblemen of Scotland, of his Privy Council here in England; namely the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Marre, the Lord Hume, Sir George Hume Treasurer of Scotland, Sir James Elphinston his Secretary, and the Lord of Kinlosse made afterward Master of the Rolles. Saturday the seventh of May, he rode towards London, where by the way, the Sheriff Swynerton, and the Aldermen met him; and by their Oratour Mr. Richard Martin, made him an eloquent Oration; and then he rode on to the Charter-house neer Smithfield, a house belonging to the Lord Thomas Howard, where he stayed four days: and at his departing from thence made the Lord Zouch, and the Lord Burgley, of his Privy Council. But we must not here omit, that from the Kings first setting forth of Scotland; as he was in all places received with most Royal entertainment and rich presents; so he again carried himself most affable, and distributed his favours in most plenteous manner: in some places discharging all prisoners, but such as lay for Treason or murder: but especially in conferring the order of Knighthood, of which sort the first he made, was Mr. John Peyton, son to Sir John Peyton, Lieutenant of the Tower. After him divers Scots in sundry places; at Theobalds, eight and twenty; (of which number the compiler of this work, though the unworthiest, was one;) at Charter-house above fourscore: and not many days after, no fewer then at least a hundred; and before the year went about, God knows how many hundreds; that one would wonder what the King would do with so many Milites, having no war toward: But it was indeed fit to give a vent to the passage of Honour, which during Queen Elizabeths Reign had been so stopped, that scarce any County of England had Knights enow to make a Jury.
- G Before we go further, it will not be amisse, to shew what great men attended King James out of Scotland; as namely the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Marre, the Lord Hume, and many other great Lords; and many other whom he afterward made great Lords, as being in his special favour; first Sir George Hume, made afterward Earl of Dunbarre: then Sir Thomas Erskin, made Earl of Kelly; then Sir John Ramsay made Earl of Holderness; (which two last had the fortune to come first in to his rescue against the Gowries) then Sir James Hey, made afterward Earl of Carlisle; and then Sir Richard Preston made Earl of Kildare in Ireland; but whole great fortune by marrying the Heir of that Earldom, was afterward the occasion of his great misfortune; for coming out of Ireland, he was unfortunately cast away and drowned.

But though King James was now safely come himself to London; yet he accounted himself but half come, until his Queen and children were come to him; and therefore there are now appointed to go to conduct them, of Lords, the Earl of Sussex, the Earl of Lincoln, the Lord Compton, the Lord Norris, and Sir George Carew Knight, Lord President of Munster: of Ladies the Countesse of Worcester, the Countesse of Kildare, the Lady Anne Herbert Daughter to Henry Earl of Pembroke; the Lord Scroopes Lady, the Lady Rich wife to the Lord Rich, and the Lady Walsingham, one of the late Queens Bedchamber: But although these only were appointed to go, yet many other Lords and great Ladies went of themselves to attend her Majesty, as the Countesse of Bedford, the Lady Hastings, the Lady Cecill, the Lady Hatton, the Lady Harrington, and divers other: and with this Princely attendance, the Queen with two of her children, namely Prince Henry of the age of nine years, and the Lady Elizabeth on the eleventh of June came to York: where resting themselves some few days, on the seven and twentieth of June they came to Euston in Northamptonshire, a house of Sir George Fermors, where the King met them at dinner: and afterward they rode together to a house of Sir John Fortescue, and so to London. The Kings younger son, Charles Duke of Albany, came not at this time, as being not three years old, and therefore not thought able to endure such a journey, but the year following falling sick of a Feaver, Doctor Atkins one of the Kings Physitians was sent to conduct him, who in six weeks cured him of his feaver; and the first week of October brought him safe to Windsor; where the King then lay; for which service he was so well rewarded, that together with the gains of his usual practise, he grew to a greater wealth then was usual for Physitians.

King James had distributed the meener Order of Knighthood, very plentifully; now he thinks fit to raise his distributions to a higher degree, and thereupon the twentieth of May, he made Sir Robert Cecil Baron of Esmond; Sir Robert Sidney Baron of Penhurst; Sir William Knowles Baron of Grey; and Sir Edward Wootton Baron of Morley: and not long after he made the Lord Henry Howard Earl of Northampton; and Thomas Sackville Lord Buckhurst, he made Earl of Dorset.

The King had by this time found the love and affection of his own people; but the affection of neighbouring Princes towards him stood yet in suspense, when now to take away that doubt came first in the beginning of June, an Embassadour from the Palgrave of Rhine; presently after another from the States of Holland and Zeland; another from the Archduke of Austria; another from the King of Spain; from the Seignior of Venice another; another from the Duke of Florence; and lastly on the eighth of June Monsieur de Rosny from the King of France: all congratulating his happy coming to the Crown of England: for entertainment of which Embassadours, and all other that should come after; the King had created an Office by the name of Master of the Ceremonies, allowing him two hundred pounds a year Fee, and the first that had the place was Sir Lea in Lewkenor: a Gentleman, who besides other good parts, was very skilful in the neighbouring languages.

Upon the seventeenth of May this year, were made fourteen Serjeants at Law: whereof eleven had received Writs the last year of Queen Elizabeth: namely, Thomas Coventry, Robert Haughton, Lawrence Tanfield, John Crook, Thomas I. Esq. Edward Phillips, Thomas Harris, James Alibam, Henry Hubbard, Augustine Nicholls, and Robert Parker; to whom the King added three new; John Sherly, George Snygge, and Richard Hutton, who all kept their Feast together in the middle Temple Hall.

One would think that this time all Offences against Queen Elizabeth had been forgotten; but King James more tender of wrongs done to her then to himself, would not suffer Valentine Thomas so to escape; who after he had lyen many years prisoner in the Tower, was on the fourth of June arraigned at the Kings Bench-Barre; and for conspiracy against the late Queen and some of her Council, was on the seventh of June after six a clock at night, drawn to S. Thomas Waterings, and there hanged and quartered.

About this time the Honourable Charles Lord Montjoy, returned out of Ireland; bringing along with him Hugh O'Neal, Earl of Tir-Oen; at whose coming to the King, the Lord Montjoy was sworn of the Kings Privy Council; and the Earl of Tir-Oen, who had been the cause of so much English blood shed, was yet pardoned, and Proclamation made, that by all men he should be used with respect and honour.

All this while the King had moved within his own Sphear, and had done nothing out of the Realm; his first Employment abroad was now in June, to his brother the King of Denmark, to whom he sent in Embassage the Earl of Rutland upon two occasions: the one to be Godfather to his Son, who was named Christianus, the other to present him with the Order of the Garter; upon the like employment, soon after, he sent the Lord Spencer to Frederick Duke of Wirtemberg; which Lords saw the said Princes invested with the Garter, and after honourable entertainment returned home.

It was now a time that every man might sit under his Vine, and enjoy the happinesse of a peaceable Government: when suddenly like a storm in a fair Summers day, brake forth a Treason of a strange Composition: for where in all Treasons commonly they are all of some one Faction,

A Faction, in this, there were people of all sorts; Priests and Laymen, Papists and Protestants, Noblemen, Knights and Gentlemen; that one would think it should be a well managed Treason, and yet was the shallowest that was ever set on foot; so shallow, that it could scarce be observed, either what the Authors of it ailed, or what it was they would have done. Indeed the great favour which King James at his first coming to the Crown, shewed to the Earl of Southampton, was like to breed no good blood in those that were his opposites; and it was said (how true I know not) that as the King had sent to enlarge the Earl of Southampton, and appointed him to meet him upon the way: so when he heard of an intention that the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh had to meet him; he sent them word they should spare their labour. But whether it were so or no, it seems they found some cause of discontentment, and discontentment will never want Complices; and by this means was the composition of this Treason made up, and thereupon were apprehended Henry Lord Cobham, and George Brook his brother, Thomas Lord Grey of Wilton, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Sir Griffith Markham, and Sir Edward Parham Knights, Bartholomew Brookesby and Anthony Copley Gentlemen, William Watson and William Clerk Priests: But though they were apprehended in July, yet they came not to their arraignment till November following; for by reason of the sicknesse, which was then hot in London, the Term was put off till Crasno Martini, and then to be kept at Winchester in Hampshire, only the Courts of the Exchequer, Wards, Liveries and the Dutchy of Lancaster were kept in the Kings Manor at Richmond in the County of Surrey; and so in the fourth of November following, all the foresaid Delinquents were removed from the Tower of London and other Prisons, by strong Guards to Winchester, and there

C arraigned; whose Indictment was for Conspiring

- 1 To kill the King.
- 2 To raise Rebellion.
- 3 To alter Religion.
- 4 To subvert the State.
- 5 To procure Invasion by Strangers.

Concerning the first Point, it was proved that the Lord Grey intended to obtain the levying of two thousand men, for defence of the Low-Countries, and with them to seize upon the King and Prince, and take the Lords of the Council in their chambers. For the other Points, It was proved,

D about raising Sedition, moving Rebellion, altering Religion, subverting the State, and to set up the Lady Arbella. And particularly for the Point of subverting the State; it was proved, that Watson was designed to be Lord Chancellor, George Brook Lord Treasurer, Sir Griffith Markham Secretary, and the Lord Grey to be Master of the Horse, and Earl Marshal of England. And for effecting of these Treasons, It was proved that Watson the Priest had devised Oaths in writing, by which all parties were bound to keep them secret. And for the last point, It was proved, that Sir Walter Rawleigh was appointed to treat with Count Aramberg for six hundred thousand Crowns, and the Lord Cobham to go the Archduke and to the King of Spain, to perswade them to assist the Lady Arbella. These things being proved against them; on the days in which they were severally

E Indicted, the most which was replied in mitigation of their fault, was first by Watson, who affirmed it could not be Treason, because the King was not yet Crowned; and then by the Lord Grey, that it was but a verbal matter and never took effect, and therefore could be no Treason: but these assertions being both refused, they were all (except Sir Edward Parham, who only was acquitted) on their several days of inditement, found guilty of Treason; and had Judgement accordingly. The Priests Watson and Clerk were executed at Winchester, the nine and twentieth of November: George Brook was beheaded the fifth of December, but then the hand of Justice stayed: and this was the course which the King held in shewing mercy. After the death of the three before named he signed three other Warrants for the execution of the late Lord Cobham, the Lord Grey, and Sir Griffin Markham; on a certain day then following; but before that day came he privately framed another Warrant, written with his own hand to the Sheriffe, (who was then

F Sir Benjamin Tiroburne) by which he countermanded the former Warrants: and that there might be no notice taken of it, he sent it by Mr. John Gybbe, a Scotch man, and one utterly unknown of all the company, appointing him to deliver it so, that it might not take effect, till after their several confessions, and at the very point of their Execution; which was accordingly performed: At which time it was a wonderful thing to see how the Delinquents falling on their knees, lamented their misdoings, and most of all how they extolled the Kings unspeakable mercy. But though thus pardoned, yet were they carried back to the Tower, where the Lord Grey not long after dyed, and in him was extinct that Barony, which had formerly brought forth many valorous and worthy men. Sir Griffin Markham after some time was set at liberty and passed beyond Sea, where he lived long after in mean account. The Lord Cobham likewise was afterward discharged of imprisonment, but deprived of his Estate, lived divers years after in great penury; and in him ended that noble Family, which had flourished in great honour many Ages. Sir Walter Rawleigh was kept

G in the Tower, where to his great honour he spent his time in writing, and had been a happy man if he had never been released. But such is our state, that no mans fortune is understood, whether it be good or bad until it be discovered by the Event.

But in this mean time many things had passed, for his Majesty having deferred the Feast of St. George until his being at some of his own houses, held now the said Feast at Windsor, the second of July; where the Prince was installed Knight of the Garter; as also the Duke of Lennox, the Earl of

Southampton,

Southampton, the Earl of Marre, and the Earl of Pembroke; and at the same time were elected the King of Denmark, and the Duke of Wurtemberg: though their investing have been spoken of before.

Divers Lords made.

And now was preparation made for the Kings Coronation, and for a preparative unto it, he first restored the Earl of Southampton, and then raised in honor these following: Sir Thomas Eger-ton Lord Chancellor, he made Baron of Elsemere; Sir William Russel, Baron of Thornauigh; Sir Henry Grey, Baron of Groby; Sir John Peter, Baron of Writtle, Sir John Harrington, Baron of Ex-ton; Sir Henry Denvers, Baron of Dantsey; Sir Thomas Gerard, Baron of Gerards Bromley in the County of Stafford; and Sir Robert Spencer, Baron of Wormeleyton. After this he conferred inferior Orders; and made Knights, all the Judges and Serjeants at Law, all Civilians and Clerks of the Signet, all his Gentlemen Ushers and divers other: and lastly made Knights of the Bath three- B score and two, most of them Noblemens sons, and the rest Gentlemen of special worth. These things done, on the five and twentieth of July, being St. James day, the King and Queen were together crowned, and anointed at Westminster, by the hands of John Whitegift, Archbishop of Canterbury, in presence of the Nobility and other, namely Sir Robert Lee Lord Maior of London, in a Gown of Crimson Velvet, his Brethren the Aldermen in Gowns of Scarlet, and 12 principal Citizens admitted to attend on them: all other Citizens stayed from passing thither either by water or by land, by reason of the sicknesse; and the first of August following, all suiters were by Proclamation forbidden to repair to the Court till the Winter following.

The King and Queen are Crowned together.

The fifth of August kept holy day, for the Kings deliverance from the Gowries.

At this time the King forgot not a deliverance he had formerly had, which though it were had in Scotland, yet he would have notice of it taken in England, which was his deliverance from the conspiracy of the Gowries on the fifth day of August three years before; and thereupon Friday being the fifth of August was by commandment appointed to be holy day, with Morning Prayer, Sermons, and Evening Prayer that day, and Bonfires at night; which was then, and after during his life solemnly observed.

All Letters of Mart called in. A Treaty of Peace with Spain, and who were Commissioners.

A Peace concluded, and the solemn manner of confirming it.

King James had in him as it were two persons; one as he was the King of Scotland; and in this he was in perfect amity with the King of Spain, another as he was King of England, and in this he had some difference with Spain; but he, as Rex pacificus, took the best from both, and was altogether for the Olive branch, and thereupon when at his coming into England, he found letters of Mart granted against Spaniards, he first caused them all to be called in, and then consented to a Treaty of perfect reconcilment: In which Treaty handled at London, the 18. of August, 1604. D the Commissioners for the King of England were Tho. Earl of Dorset, Charles Earl of Nottingham, Charles Earl of Devonshire, Henry Earl of Northampton, and Robert Viscount Cranburn: For the King of Spain, John de Velasco Constable of Castile, John de Tassis Earl of Villa Mediana, and Alexander Robidim Professor of the Law in the College of Milain: For the Archdukes, Charles Count of Aramburg, John Richardot President of the Privy Council, and Lodowick Verreikin principal Secretary: by whom a Peace being concluded and contained in many Articles; the Summer following, the King of Spain sent Don John de Velasco Constable of Castile and Duke of Fryas, also Pedraza de la Syerra, his great Chamberlain accompanied with divers Marqueses, Earls and Barons, who coming into England, were by the Earl of Devonshire on the nineteenth of August brought to the Court, where the King in his Chappel in the presence of the Commissioners and other English Lords, (the Duke of Fryas holding the Kings hands between his) took his Oath upon the holy Bible, religiously to observe and keep all the Articles of the Peace and League agreed upon: and in March following, being now the third year of King James, Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord high Admiral of England was sent into Spain to take in like manner the King of Spain's Oath: who accompanied with three Barons, and many Knights, Gentlemen and other, to the number of six hundred and fifty, the fifteenth of April arrived at Groyne, from whence he was conducted to Valledolid, three hundred miles off, where the King of Spain then kept his Court, entertained in all places as he passed, at the King of Spain's charge, with so great provisions and such demonstration of love and gladnesse, that it plainly shewed the Spaniards were as glad of our friendship as we of theirs. The Lord Embassadour being come to the Court, he caused Thomas Knoll Esquire, to deliver the presents sent from the King of England, which were six goodly Horses, with saddles and saddle clothes very richly imbroidered, whereof three for the King, and three for the Queen: two F
Crosse-bows with sheafs of arrows: four fowling pieces inlaid with plates of gold: and a couple of Lyme-hounds of singular qualities: which the King and Queen in very kinde manner accepted, and then on the thirtieth of May, the Lord Embassadour being sent for, the King came forth into a large room: where having a little Table set before him, and a Bible very reverently laid upon it, together with a Crucifix: the Archbishop of Toledo read the Oath, at the reading whereof, the Lord Embassadour held the Kings hands between his, and the King kneeling down, laid his hands upon the Book, and after his Oath, subscribed to the Articles formerly concluded. Whilst the Earl of Nottingham was thus employed in Spain, the right honorable *Edward Earl of G
Hartford*, was likewise sent Embassadour to Albertus and Isabella, Archdukes of Austria, to take their Oaths, for confirmation of the said Articles of Peace, which were taken at Bruxel the first of May with great state and solemnity: After which, as the Earl bestowed on the Archdukes servants, to the full sum of three thousand pounds; So the Archduke at his departy, bestowed upon the Earl, a Jewel worth nine hundred pounds, and a suit of Arras worth three hundred, and bore his charges all the time of his stay at Bruxels. And now was King James truly Rex pacificus, in peace and amity with all Princes of Christendom, which few of his Ancestors ever were.

Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord Admiral is sent into Spain to take the Kings Oath, and his entertainment. The Kings Presents to the King & Queen of Spain.

A A little before this, in the Month of August, in the year 1604, the strong Town of Offend in Flan- ders, after above three years siege, and the slaughter of above a hundred and twenty thousand men of both sides, and in defence whereof, Sir Francis Vere General, and his brother Sir Horatio Vere had shewed great Valour, was by the Marquess Spinola taken; for which service, the King of Spain made him Duke of Santa Severina, and the Lord General of all the Forces in the Low-Countries.

It was now the third year of King James his Reign, when he kept Saint Georges Feast at Green- wich, and there made two new Knights of the Garter; namely the High and Mighty Prince Duke Ulrick, heir of Norway, and brother to our gracious Queen Anne: and the right Noble Lord Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton. And upon the Saturday following, in the Hall at Greenwich, being richly hanged with Arras, he created three Earls, one Viscount and four Barons: namely Sir Ro- bert Cecil Viscount Cranburn, he created Earl of Salisbury: Thomas Cecil, Lord Burley his eldest

An. Reg. 3.

Earls and Barons created.

B brother, he created Earl of Exeter, and Sir Philip Herbert, younger brother to the Earl of Pembroke, he created Earl of Montgomery: then Robert Sidney Baron of Penbursi, Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, he created Viscount Lisle: Sir John Stanhope, Vicechamberlain to the King, he made Lord Stanhope of Harington: Sir George Carew Vicechamberlain to the Queen, he made Lord Carew of Chipton: Mr. Thomas Arundell of Devonshire, he made Lord Arundell of Wardour: and Mr. William Caven- ish, he made Lord Cavendish of Hardwick.

About this time a strange fancy possessed the brains of a professed Physitian, one Richard Haidock Richard Hai- of new College in Oxford, who pretended to preach at night in his sleep, in such sort, that though he were called aloud or stirred and pull'd by the hands or feet, yet would make no shew of either hearing or feeling. And this he did often, in the presence of many honourable persons, that came to hear him, so as within a short time, his fame was spread through the land, by the name of the sleeping Preacher. At length the King commanded him to be brought to the Court, where his Majesty late up the most part of a night to attend the event: when at last Haidock making a shew to be asleep, began to pray; then taking a Text, made his Division; applying it to his purpose, for in his Preaching his use was to inveigh against the Pope, against the Crosse in Baptism, and against the last Canons of the Church of England; and having ended his Sermon seemed to continue sleeping. His Majesty having well observed the manner of his carriage; after a few days, called the said Haidock before him, and in Conference with him (as he had indeed an admirable sagacity in discovering of Fictions) made him confesse, that all he did was but imposture: and thereupon to fall upon his knees, and ask forgiveness: which the King granted, upon condition, that in all places he should openly acknowledge his offence; because many were brought into belief, that his nightly preaching was either by inspiration or by vision.

 ding to preach

 the King.

D We may not here think it unworthy the relating, seeing King James thought it not unworthy the seeing, thereby to observe the nature of the Lyon, and make a solemn matter of it; for on Mun-day the 3 of June (taking with him the Duke of Lennox, and divers Earls and Lords) he went to the Lyons Tower, and caused two Lyons, a male and female, to be put forth, and then a live Cock to be cast before them; which they (as being their natural enemy) presently killed and sucked his blood. Then a live Lamb to be put down to them, which the generous Lyons (as having respect to its Innocency) never offered to touch, though the Lamb was so bold as to go close unto them. Then the King caused those Lyons to be taken away and another Lyon to be put forth, and two Mastiffs to be put in to him, who presently flew upon the Lyon and turned him upon his back, and though the Lyon were superior to them in strength, yet it seems they were his matches in courage, and so much superior as they were the first assailants, with whom otherwise, perhaps the Lyon would not have offered to meddle.

E On Fryday the 4 of January in the Kings second year, Charles Duke of Albany the Kings second Son, being then but four years old, was created Duke of York; which because it was done with extraordinary solemnity, is not unworthy to have the manner of it, here related. First were appointed Knights of the Bathes, the Duke of Albany himself, then the Lord Willowby, the Lord Chandos, the Lord Compton, the Lord Norris, William Cecil, son and heir to the Viscount Cranburn, Allan Percy, brother to the Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Somerset, second son to the Earl of Worcester, Francis Manners brother to the Earl of Rutland; Thomas Howard second son to the Earl of Suffolk, and John Harington son and heir to the Lord Harington, the Earls of Oxford and Essex were Esquires to the Duke of Albany; all the Knights took their lodging that night in the first Gate-house going to Kings street; where they supped, and had Bathes provided for them. The next morning being Saturday, they went out into the Park in their Hermits weeds, the Minstrels playing and the Heralds going before them into the Court, and so into the Chappel, where every Knight with his Esquires went to the Altar, and there offered, (the Dean of the Chappel, in a rich Cope, holding the Bason) After this they went up into their lodgings, and there new attired themselves in robes of Crimson Taffaty, with hats and white feathers, and so went back to the great Chamber:
 where by the King they were girded with the sword and had gilt spurs put upon them. This done, they were solemnly served at dinner, and after went again to the Chappel, and there offered their swords. The next day being Sunday and Twelfth day, in robes of purple Sattin, with Doctors hoods on their shoulders and hats with white feathers, they issued out of the Reveltry with the Duke of Albany (being then to be made Duke of York) into the Hall, where the King fate under the cloth of Estate, and then the Heralds going before, the Knights of the Bath followed, and then the Earl of Suffolk Lord Chamberlain came alone, then followed Henry Howard Earl of Northampton, and Charles Blunt Earl of Devonshire, carrying the robes of Estate for the Duke of York; after whom Wriothesly

Earl of Southampton carried the Coronet, George Clifford Earl of Cumberland, the Golden Rod, the A Earl of Worcester the Cap of Estate, and the Earl of Nottingham bore the Duke of Albany in his Arms, supported by the Earls of Dorset and Northumberland, who all coming in this order before the King; the Duke of Albany was after the Patent read created Duke of York, with the Robes and Coronet put on him; and the Golden Rod delivered into his hand: all which performed, they went to dinner, and the solemnity ended.

Thomas Douglas a Scotch man, hanged in Smithfield, and why.

About this time on the fifteenth of June, Thomas Douglas a Scotch man, was committed to the Tower, and had Irons put upon him, being sent hither, but three days before from the Count Palatine of Rhyne. His offence was, that he had counterfeited the Kings Privy Seal to divers Princes of Germany; One to the Archbishop of Cullen, another to the Archbishop Tryer, another to the Duke of Cleve, another to the Archbishop of Moguntia, and a fifth to the Count Palatine of the Rhyne; B whereof being examined and convicted, he was drawn on a hurdle into Smithfield, and there hanged and quartered.

The Gunpowder Treason.

By whom first plotted.

And with what Assistants.

And now was a second Parliament appointed to be held at Westminster, on the nineteenth of March following, when four days before the day of sitting, the King, the Queen and Prince rode solemnly in great state through the City of London, where in divers places were erected Pageants: Presents given, Orations made, and all demonstrations of love and observance; and then the Parliament beginning, the King made a long and loving Speech to the House, wherein he signified the causes of his calling it; but in the time when it should have proceeded, there was suddenly discovered a Plot of Treason (so damnable and foul, that posterity will hardly think it true, when they shall hear it) the Plot was, to blow up with Gun-powder, both Houses of Parliament C at a time, when the King, Prince and all the Nobility should be sitting in the Upper House, and all the Knights and Burgesses in the Lower.

The principal contriver of this Plot was Robert Catesbie, a Gentleman of great account in Northamptonshire, descended from that Catesbie who had been a special Counsellor of King Richard the third, to whose family the Divine Providence had now ordained to give a disastrous period. This Catesbie not able to perform the work himself alone, draws in many to assist him, as namely, Thomas Percy, Thomas Winter, John Grant, Ambrose Rookwood, John Wright, Francis Tresham, Guydo Fawkes, and at last Sir Everard Digby, all earnest Papists, and all bound by Oath, and by receiving the Sacrament to be secret; For effecting of this plot, they hired a house close adjoining to the Upper House of Parliament, where they were to dig through a Wall, for the fit placing of their Powder. About Candlemasse they had wrought the Wall half through: when suddenly they heard a noise in the next room, which made them fear they had been discovered: but sending Guy Fawkes (who went now under the name of John Johnson, as Master Percies man) to see what the matter was, he brought word, that it was a Cellar where Sea-coles had been laid, and were now a selling, and the room offered to be let for a yearly rent. This room therefore as most fit for their purpose, being right under the Parliament House, Master Percy presently went and hired, laying into it twenty barrels of powder, which they covered with Billets and Faggots, for being discovered. Thus the first part of the plot was put in a good readinesse. It now remained to consider what was to be done, when the blow should be given: for though the King and Prince might be slain, yet the Duke of York and the Lady Elizabeth should still be E safe, and so they should be no nearer their end then now they were. This work therefore for surprizing the Duke of York, Percy undertook, and for surprizing the Lady Elizabeth, they agreed upon a match of hunting near to Duncburch, under colour whereof they would draw company together, and surprize her at the Lord Harington house in Warwickshire, where she then lay, and then proclaim her Queen, and so be sure to have all things done, as they would themselves. Thus far their bloody plot went fairly on, and had perhaps gone on so still, if they had continued only bloody; but now a tendernesse of heart took some of them, lest their friends should perish together with the rest, and this tendernesse overthrows them; for to prevent such promiscuous slaughter, a Letter was framed, and sent to Lord Monteagle, son and heir to the Lord Morley, brought him by one of his Foot-men, which he received from an unknown man F in the street: The Letter was this: My Lord, out of the love I bear to some of your friends, I have a care of your preservation; therefore I would wish you, as you tender your life, to forbear your attendance at this Parliament; for God and man have concurred to punish the wickednesse of this time: And think not slightly of this Advertisement: for though there be no appearance of any stir; yet I say, they shall receive a terrible blow this Parliament, and yet shall not see who hurts them. This counsel is not to be contemned; because it may do you good, and can do you no harm; for the danger is past, as soon as you have burnt this Letter; and I hope you will make good use of it.

By what means first discovered.

My Lord having read the Letter, though much perplexed, yet went presently to the Court at White-hall, (the King being then a hunting at Royston) and delivered it to the Earl of Salisbury, principal Secretary of State, and the Earl having read it, acquainted first the Lord Chamberlain G with it, and then the Lord Admiral, the Earl of Worcester and Northampton, who as soon as the King was returned from Hunting, acquainted him with it: the Earl of Salisbury telling him, that he thought it must be written either by a fool, or by a mad man, because of those words, (for the danger is past as soon as you have burnt this Letter) for if the danger were so soon past, what needed any warning? But the King considering it more deeply, apprehended presently some violent motion; and that it must be some sudden danger by blowing up with powder, and thereupon commanded, that diligent search should be made in the Parliament House, and

A and all other rooms and lodgings near adjoining: which search was made by the Lord Chamberlain, accompanied with the Lord Mounteagle, who entering the Cellar under the upper Houle, found there great store of Faggots and Billets; which was answered to be for Mr. Percie's own provision: but then (it being considered why such store should be laid in for Mr. Percie, who used to make but little stay in Town) and thereupon more diligent search being made, there was found under the Billets one of the Barrells of powder: and after that all the rest, being six and thirty; together with other instruments fit for their purpose, and then spying the said Fawks to stand suspiciously, they apprehended him, and found in his pocket a piece of Touch-wood; a Tynder-box to light the Touch-wood, and a Watch, which Mr. Percie had bought the day before, to try the short and long burning of the Touch-wood, which he had prepared to give fire to the train of powder. The plot being thus discovered, yet the most of the confederates met at Dunchurch, as they had agreed; where they divulged many deceitable untruths against the King and State: signifying withall, that they were there met for advancement of the Catholick cause; hoping thereby to have drawn many to joyn with them in their Rebellion: but this availed them nothing: for first Sir Richard Verney high Sheriffe of Warwickshire chased them from thence; and then Sir Richard Welsh, Sheriff of Worcestershire, knowing them to be entred into Matter Littletons house at Walbach, beset them round, where Catesbie and Percie issuing forth, were both slain with one shot of a Musquet; and after them, both the Wrights, John and Christopher, were likewise slain outright; Thomas Winter was taken alive: all which time, Francis Wresham remained still about the Court, offering his service for their suppression: but being suspected, was examined, and sent to the Tower, where he confest all, and within a few days after dyed of the Strangurie. On the seven and twentieth of January following, a Commission was directed to divers Lords and Judges of both Benches, for tryal of the rest of the Confederates: namely, of Thomas Winter, Guyus Fawks, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, Robert Winter, late of Hoodington in Warwickshire Esquire, John Grams, late of Torthbrook, in the County of Warwick Esquire, Ambrose Rookwood, late of Stanisfield in Suffolk Esquire, Sir Everard Digby, late of Gottburst in Buckinghamshire, Knight, who were all condemned, and had Judgement to dye, and on the Thursday following Sir Everard Digby, Robert Winter, Grams and Bates, were accordingly drawn, hanged and quartered, at the West end of Pauls Church in London, and on the Friday, the other four; namely, Thomas Winter, Keyes, Rookwood, and Fawks were executed in the Parliament yard at Westminster.

D Of all whom, none was so much lamented as Sir Everard Digby, and indeed worthily; for he was a goodly personage, and of excellent parts, and had it seems been cunningly drawn in, and bound to secrecy by Oath, when he little thought of any such Treason. The seventh of November the Earl of Northumberland, upon suspition of being acquainted with the plots, was first commanded to his house, and after a while committed to the Tower. And thus was this great plot discovered, and the Plotters punished; to the great rejoycing of all people: insomuch, that even the King of Spain's and Arch-dukes Embassadors made Bonfires, and threw money among the people in token of joy. And at this time, on the fourth of January, the Spanish Embassadour delivered a Present to the King from the King his Master: namely six Jennets of Andalusia, with saddles very richly imbroydered, and saddle-clothes of cloth of Tissue: One of which Jennets was snow white, and had a main which reached to the ground. But this was a present sent before any knowledg had of the Powder Treason: but as soon as that was known, there was presently another Present sent from the Queen of Spain to the Queen of England, of purpose to congratulate the Kings happy deliverance from the intended Powder Treason; and the Present was brought by Don John de Mendoza, which was a Roab of Murrie Sattain, imbroydered all over with Amber leather; and upon the leather, in every seam and skirt twice imbroydered about with gold; the fore-part whereof were set with eight and forty tagges three inches long of beaten gold, hollow within, and filled with Amber-greece, also two large Chains of Amber-greece; Two Carkanets of Amber-greece, a Velvet Cap with gold Buttons, curiously enameled; and a girdle futable to the Buttons; all which were presented together in a large vessel of gold, in form of a Bason; so as it seems there was none rejoyced more for the overthrow of this plot for the Catholick cause, then the Catholick King himself. And now King James, not to be unmindeful to the Lord Monteagle, for being the means of discovering this Treason, he gave unto him in Fee Farm of Crown land 200*l.* to him and his heirs, and 500*l.* a year besides, during his life: and not to be unthankful to God for the deliverance, he caused the fifth of November, being the day of the discovery, to be kept holy, with Prayer and Thanksgiving to God, which was then solemnly performed, and hath been since, and is likely for ever to be continued.

But in the midst of this great joy, there was suddenly spread a rumour of greater sorrow, for on Saturday the two and twentieth of March, news was brought to the Court for certain, that the King was slain at Oking, twenty miles from London, stabbed with an invenomed knife; whereupon the Court gates were presently shut, and double guard set in all places about London, and all mens mindes were infinitely distracted; but within two houres all these clouds were slain disperfed, and the Sun began to shine out again; and it was certainly known, that the King was safe, and in perfect health: for which a Proclamation was presently sent forth to signifie it to the people; and that afternoon the King came himself to White-hall, where thousands of people, ravished with joy, came flocking to see him; and so general was the rejoycing, that the Spanish Embassadour gave Sir Lewis Lewknor, Master of the Ceremonies, a chain of gold of good value for bringing him the news: Though afterward it was thought by some, that this rumour was a Jesuite executed, and why.

The eight and twentieth of March following, Henry Garnet Provincial of the English Jesuites, was straigned in Guilt-hall, for concealing the foresaid treason, where he had Judgement to be hang'd, drawn, and quartered, and accordingly on the third of May, was drawn from the Tower to the West end of Pauls Church, and there executed. At his death, he confessed his fault, asked forgiveness, and exhorted all Catholics never to attempt any treason against the King or State, as a course which God would never prosper.

On Tuesday the twentieth of May, were entailed at Windsor Knights of the Garter, Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, and Thomas Howard Viscount Byndon; both of them honourably attended, but the Earl of Salisbury beyond ordinary proportion.

Henry L. Mor-

fined, and why.

There was yet a Fag end of the late Powder treason behind to be examined: whereupon two Barons of the Realm; namely, Henry Lord Mordant, and Edward Lord Sturton, were brought from the Tower, to the Star-chamber: and there, not charged indeed with any point of the treason, but only reflectingly, because they neglected to appear at the Parliament, according to their summons, for which neglect only, without any further charge, they were fined to pay to the King, the Lord Mordant ten thousand Marks, and the Lord Sturton six thousand, and to be prisoners during the Kings pleasure. But on the 27. of June, Henry Earl of Northumberland was likewise brought from the Tower to the Star-chamber, and more directly charged with circumstances concerning the Treason, specially in regard of Thomas Percy, whom he had admitted to be one of the Kings Gentlemen Pensioners, without ministring unto him the Oath of Supremacy, knowing him to be a Recusant; for which, and some misprisions, he was fined to pay to the King thirty thousand pounds, to forfeit all his Offices, and to be kept prisoner during the Kings pleasure, as indeed he continued many years, and at last released, was yet confined.

It was now the fourth year of King James his Reign, and was a time of Princely visitation; for this Summer, the 17. of July, Christianus King of Denmark, brother to the Queen, having been long expected, with eight ships came into the River of Thames, and anchored before Graves-end; to whom the next day, King James, with Prince Henry, and divers of his Lords went by Barge, and conducted him to London, where he stayed till the twelfth of August following: in which time, he was entertained with all the Magnificence that could be devised; the King and he riding in great state through the City; where Pageants in many places were erected; and after he had been shewed the chief places about London: as namely the old Exchange, the Tower, the Monuments at Westminster, and had gone up to the top of Pauls, had been feasted by the King, by the Earl of Salisbury four days together at Theobalds, had seen Tilting, Fencing, Wrestling, and many other pastimes, on the twelfth of August, conducted by the King, the Queen, and Prince, with many other great Lords, he departed to his ships, and in eight days arrived at home: A happy thing when Princes can converse together like private persons, and are not kept asunder with jealousies of State.

But these Festivals were followed with a little disturbance; for in May, the year after, great Assemblies were gathered together in Northamptonshire, Warwickshire, and Leicestershire, throwing down Inclosures, at first, without any particular head: but at last rose up a base fellow, called John Reynolds, whom they named Captain Pouch, because he had a great leather Pouch hanging by his side, who affirmed to the Company, that in that Pouch he had sufficient to defend them against all commers: but when he was afterward apprehended, and his Pouch searched, there was nothing found in it but a piece of green cheese. Proclamation was made, commanding them to surcease their disorder: But this prevailed nothing, till the King sent Henry Earl of Huntington, Thomas Earl of Exceter, Edward Lord Zouch, and Sir Edw. Cook Lord chief Justice of England, to suppress them by force of Arms, and to punish the Levellers according to the nature of their offences; some by death, as for Treason; some by Fines, as for Routs: but Captain Pouch was made exemplar.

The King is made free of the Cloth-
workers.

On Fryday the twelfth of June, his Majesty attended with divers Lords, dined with the Lord Maior, Sir John Watt, who after dinner presented him with a purse full of Gold, and humbly besought his Majesty, that he would be pleased to be free of his Company the Cloth-workers: To which, the King graciously condescended; and thereupon called to Sir William Stone, Master of the Company, and said, Stone give me thy hand; and now I am a Cloth-worker: And in token of my special favour to this Fraternity, I do here give to this Company a brace of Bucks yearly for ever, against the time of the Election of the Master and Wardens: at which time also many Lords and Gentlemen were made Free of the Cloth-workers.

The Prince is

On Thursday the 16 of July, the King and Prince with many Lords, dined at Merchant-Taylors Hall, where the Master and Warden of that Society, presented the King with a purse of gold, giving him humble thanks for gracing their Fraternity with his Royal Presence; and therewithal shewed him a Roll, wherein were registred the names of 7 Kings, 1 Queen, 17 Princes and Dukes, 2 Dutcheffes,

A chesses, one Archbishop, one and thirty Earls, threescore and six Barons, seven Abbots, seven Priors, with a great number of Knights and Esquires, who had been free of that Company; which His Majesty graciously accepted, but told them, that he himself was already Free of another Company: but the Prince his Son should be free of theirs, and that he would see the Garland put on his head: whereupon the Master presented the Prince also with a purse of Gold, which he graciously accepted, and said, that not only himself would be free of the Merchant-Tailors, but the Lords also that were with him should do the like, all which was performed with great solemnity.

The fourth of July this year, Sir Thomas Knevit was called by Writ to the Parliament by the name of Baron of Estrict, the next day Sir Julius Caesar, Chancellor of the Exchequer was sworn a Privy Counsellor; and the sixteenth of November following Sir Jervis Clifton Knight, was called to the Parliament by Writ, by the name and title of Baron of Layton Bramesfold, whose only Daughter and Heir, was soon after married to Eysme Steward, Baron of Aubigny in France, sole Brother of the Duke of Lenox; whom he afterward succeeded in that Dignity.

About this time, Hugh Earl of Tir-Oen, most ungrateful and utterly forgetful of the Kings great clemency to him, together with Terconell, Hugh Baron of Dungaunon, and divers other Irish Lords, fled into the parts beyond Sea, with a purpose to sollicite forain Princes against the King, and to offer the Kingdom of Ireland to the Pope, which was presently signified to the Realm by Proclamation.

On the eleventh of April this year, George Jervis, a Seminary Priest, and the three and twentieth of June following, Thomas Garnet a Jesuit, were both executed at Tyburn; Thomas Garnet having the favour offered him to be pardoned, if he would but take the Oath of Allegiance, which he refused.

The nineteenth of April at Whitehal, dyed Thomas Earl of Dorset Lord Treasurer, (whose death because he dyed suddenly as he sat at the Councel Table) was by some untowardly interpreted; but being dead, and his head opened, there were found in it certain little bags of water, which whether by the straining of his study the night before, in which he sat up till eleven a clock, or otherwise by their own maturity, suddenly breaking and falling upon his brain, caused his sudden death. So certain it is that death comes not always by determinate steps, but sometimes per saltum, and we all carry about us the causes of sudden death, though unsensible of them till we be unsensible. This Lord was of excellent parts, and in his place exceeding industrious, and I have heard many Checker men say, there never was a better Treasurer, both for the Kings profit and the good of the subject.

The twentieth of May at Windsor, were made two Knights of the Garter, George Earl of Dunbar, and Philip Earl of Montgomery; but the Earl of Dunbarre, within a year or two after left both his honour and his life; but not his life without honour, having been a faithful servant, and a wise Counsellor to the King, and was honourably interred in the Church at Westminster.

About this time were many famous English Pirats that stuck not some of them to turn Turke, and lived in great state at Tunis, of whom the chief were Ward, Bishop, Sir Francis Vernay, and Glanville, whom after many depredations and outrageous acts at Sea, partly the King of Spain suppressed, and partly the K. of England, and 19 of their associates being taken, were hanged at Wapping.

Also at this time, in the Strand on the North side of Durban house, where stood an old long stable: Robert Earl of Salisbury now Lord Treasurer of England, caused to be erected a stately building; which upon Tuesday the tenth of April, in the year 1609. was begun to be richly furnished with wares; and the next day after, the King, the Queen, and Prince, with many great Lords and Ladies came to see it: and then the King gave it the name of Britains Burie.

On the eighth of May this year, the King by Proclamation prohibited all forein Nations, that after August they should not fish upon any of the Coasts of England, Scotland, or Ireland, nor the Isles adjacent, without the special licence from the Commissioners in that behalf ordained.

At this time the making of Alum, which heretofore with great charges had been fetched from forein parts, was by divers that laboured in it, and now lastly by Sir John Bourcbier, brought to perfection in England, and thereupon the King prohibited upon pain of confiscation, any Alum to be brought from beyond the Seas, and took the whole traffique thereof to himself.

And now the King according to an ancient custum, had aid of his Subjects through England, for making his eldest Son Prince Henry Knight, which yet was levied with great moderation, and the Prince to shew himself worthy of it, performed his first Feats of Arms at Barriers, with wonderful skill and courage: being not yet full sixteen years of age.

It was now the eighth year of King James his Reign, being the year 1610, when Prince Henry being come to the age of seventeen years, it was thought fit he should be Initiated into Royalty: and thereupon the thirtieth of May this year, he was Created Prince of Wales in most solemn manner; which was thus, Garter King at Arms, bore the Letters Patents, the Earl of Suffex the Robes of Purple Velvet, the Earl of Huntington the Train, the Earl of Cumberland the Sword, the Earl of Rutland the Ring, the Earl of Darby the Rod, the Earl of Shrewsbury the Cape and Coronet, the Earl of Nottingham and Northampton supported the Prince, being in his Surcoat only and bare-headed: and in this manner being conducted to the King, attended on by the Knights of the Bathe, five and twenty in number, all great men, and great mens sons, the Earl of Salisbury principal Secretary, read the Letters Patents: the Prince kneeling all the while before the King: and at the words accustomed, the King put on him the Robe, the Sword, the Cape and the Coronet, the Rod and the Ring, and then kissed him on the cheek, and so the solemnity ended.

Sir Tho. Knevet and Sir Jervis Clifton made Barons by calling them to the Parliament.

The East-India Company made a Corporation, with large Privileges.

They build a ship of twelve hundred Tun, called The Trades increase, which was cast away in the Red Sea.

Thereupon the King builds a ship of 1400 tun called The Prince, and gives it to the Prince.

The King dissolves a Parliament under the Great Seal of England.

Sir Robert Carr comes into the Kings favour, and of the many honours heaped suddenly upon him. His falling into disgrace, and why.

Sir Thomas Overbury Poisoned.

Sir Jervis Yelvis Lieutenant of the Tower executed. The Earl of Somerset and his Lady condemned, but their lives spared.

After this, it was thought fit, he should keep his Court by himself: and thereupon Sir Thomas A Chamberlain, a learned Gentleman, who had before been his Governour, was now made his Lord Chamberlain, Sir Edward Philips his Chancellor, and all other Officers assigned him, belonging to a Princes Court: wherein he shewed himself so early ripe for Majesty, that he seemed to be a King, while he was yet but Prince: and all mens eyes began to fix upon him.

King James had long since shut up the Gates of Janus, and was in Peace with all Princes abroad; his only care now was how to keep Peace at home; and to this end, the three first days of June, in his own Person he heard the differences between the Ecclesiastical and the Temporal Judges, argued, touching Protections out of the Kings Bench and Common Pleas; to this end, the eighth, ninth, and tenth of June, he heard the manifold complaints of the abuses of the Victuallers, and other Officers of his Navy Royal; to this end, the fourth of June, 1610, he once again by Proclamation, commanded all Roman Priests, Seminaries and Jesuits, as being the chief Incendiaries of troubles, to depart this Kingdom by the fifth of July next, and not to return upon pain of severity of the Law: also all Recufants, to return home to their dwellings, and not to remain in London, nor to come within ten miles of the Court, without special License. After which Proclamation, the Oath of Allegiance was presently ministred to all sorts of people, and their names certified to the Lords of the Council, that refused to take it; and this he the rather did out of consideration of the bloody fact, committed lately by one Ravillack, upon the person of the renowned King of France, Henry the fourth: and whereas Queen Elizabeth in her 43 years, had granted her Letters Patents to continue for 15 years to the East-India Merchants, now upon their humble Petition, the King was pleased to enlarge their Patents, giving them a charter to continue for ever, enabling them thereby to be a body Corporate and Politick, which so encouraged the Merchants, that they built a ship of twelve hundred tun, the greatest that was ever made in this Kingdom by Merchants; which the King and Prince honoured with going to Debitford to see it; and then named it, The Trades increase: and at this time gave to Sir Thomas Smith, (Governor of that Company) a fair chain of Gold, with a Jewel, wherein was his Picture. But this great Ship having been in the Red Sea, and returning to Bantam, was there lost and most of her men cast away. But then the King himself builded the goodliest ship of War, that was ever built in England, being of the burthen of 1400 Tun, and carrying threescore and four pieces of great Ordinance, which he gave to his Son Prince Henry, who named it after his own dignity, The Prince.

And now whereas a Parliament had been holden this year, and was prorogued to a certain day; the King perhaps not finding it to comply with his designs, or for some other cause known to himself on the last day of December, under the great Seal of England dissolved it.

Before this time one Sir Robert Carr, a Gentleman of Scotland, or of the Borders, at a time of Tilting before the King, chanced with a fall off his Horse to break his leg; upon which mischance, he was forced for some days to keep his bed, in which time the King was sometime pleased to come and visit him: and then it was first perceived that the King had begun to cast an eye of favour upon him: and indeed from that time forward (as he was a very fine Gentleman and very wise) many great favours were heaped upon him: So as on Easter Munday, in the year 1611, he was Created Viscount Rochester. On the two and twentieth of April, 1612, was sworn a privy Counsellor. On the fourth of November 1613, was created Earl of Somerset, and the tenth of July following, made Lord Chamberlain.

But this Sun-shine of Fortune lasted not long; yet not by any inconstancy in the King, but by the Earls own undeserving, which thus fell out: The Right Honourable Robert Earl of Essex, had before this time married the beautiful Lady Francis Howard, Daughter of Thomas Earl of Suffolk, who upon causes judicially heard, were afterward Divorced and left free to marry any other. After which Divorce, this great favorite (the Earl of Somerset) takes her for wife; the King gracing their marriage with all demonstrations of love and favour; and the Lords gracing it with a stately Masque that night, and a few days after, the Bride and Bridegroom, accompanied with most of the Nobility of the Kingdom, were Feasted at Merchant-Taylors Hall, by the Lord Maior and Aldermen. But see how soon this fair weather was overcast: For it happened, that one Sir Thomas Overbury, a very ingenious Gentleman, and the Earls special friend, who had written a witty Treatise of a Wife: and it seems not thinking the Lady in all points answerable to his description, had been an earnest dissuader of the Match, and to strengthen his dissuasion, laid perhaps some unjust imputation upon the Ladies fame, which so incensed them both against him, that a lesse revenge could not give them satisfaction, then to take away his life: So true is that saying:

Improbe amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogit?

Upon this, they finde pretences to have the said Sir Thomas committed to the Tower, and there by their Instruments effect their revenge: some say by a poisoned Tansey sent him to eat, some by a poisoned Glyster ministred unto him, but howsoever effected it was, for which fact Sir Jervis Yelvis then Lieutenant of the Tower, and three or four other of inferiour condition were put to death, the Lady and Earl themselves were arraigned and condemned: but through the Kings great clemency had their lives spared, but in such a sort spared, as was to them no lesse grievous then death itself, being never after suffered to see the Kings face, nor to come neer his Court.

This

A This Favorite being thus out of favour, there was place made for entertaining another; for indeed King James was of so sociable and loving a nature, that he could not be long without an Alter idem; a bosome friend with whom to communicate his Internos sensus, and upon whose shoulders he might sometimes lay a burthen, which he was not willing to bear himself; and this new friend was Mr. George Villers, a Gentleman of a good House, but younger brother, but of so delicate a composure of body, and withal of so excellent parts of minde, as if nature had framed him on purpose to be a Kings Favorite. And indeed never any man was partaker of the Royal influence like to him, made first a Knight and Gentleman of the Kings Bed-chamber, soon after made a Viscount and Master of the Horse; a while after created Earl of Buckingham, then Marquess of Buckingham, and made Lord Admiral: Lastly, made Duke of Buckingham, the greatest Title of Honour that a Subject is capable of, and yet this Title not greater then his Power: for all matters of Grace passed from the King by him, and to grace him the more, his Mother (who after his Fathers death, had marryed a younger Son of the Lord Comptons) was created Countesse of Buckingham, his Sister who had marryed a Gentleman of no extraordinary Family, had her husband made Earl of Denbigh, his two Brothers were made, one of them Viscount Purbach, the other Earl of Anglesey; besides many other of his friends and kindred highly advanced; For this Lord affected not an advancement that should be only personal, but rather be in common to all his Family, and was not of the disposition of some, who like to great Oaks, love to keep all that are neer them underwood; though it be in truth both against Nature and Policy to stand alone, when they would be lesse subject to the violence of windes, if more stood together. And though never any man had juster cause to be envyed then he, yet never any man was lesse envyed; because though his honours made him great, yet they made him not swell, but he retained the like temper of affable carriage after his advancement, as he had done before.

Mr. George Villers comes into the Kings favour, and of the many honours heaped suddenly upon him.

B But before all these favours were heaped upon him, many other great passages had intervened; for first, after the death of Thomas Earl of Dorset, Robert Earl of Salisbury had been Lord Treasurer, and after him Thomas Earl of Suffolk. But this Lord, though of a most noble disposition, yet as having had his training up another way, seemed lesse ready in discharging the place, and whether for this, or for his Ladies taking too much upon her by his indulgence; the staffe was soon after taken from him; after whom there came in, such a sequence of Treasurers as no Age before had ever seen; all wise and able men indeed; but yet in whom the Office seemed an imployment, rather to ennoble the Officer then to enrich the King. For first Sir Henry Montague was taken from the Kings Bench: and on the fourth of December, 1620. made Lord Treasurer, and presently upon it Earl of Manchester, and before the year went about put off. After whom Sir Lionel Cranfield, from Master of the Wards was made Lord Treasurer, and shortly after Earl of Middlesex: and then not only put off, but fined to pay the King fifty thousand pounds: After him, Sir James Lee from chief Justice of the Kings Bench was made Lord Treasurer, and soon after Earl of Marleborough; and then having made a good return of his Place, put it off himself. After him Sir Richard Weston, from Chancellor of the Exchequer was made Lord Treasurer, and soon after Earl of Portland: so as within the compasse of little more then four years, four Treasurers in a row were made four Earls; enough to make a prescription for all Treasurers hereafter; to claim a right of being made Earls, which yet I speak not as derogating from those worthy men, whose memories I reverence, but as observing, Fatale fortuneque Virum; so rare as that there was never any Precedent of the like.

Thomas Earl of Suffolk Lord Treasurer bath the Staffe taken from him.

Four Lord Treasurers made in four years.

E Also the five and twentieth of June, 1612. the Lord Sanquer, a Nobleman of Scotland, having in a private revenge suborned Robert Carlile, to murder John Turner a Master of Fence, thought by his greatnesse to have born it out; but the King respecting nothing so much as Justice, would not suffer Nobility to be a shelter for villany, but according to the Law, on the nine and twentieth of June, the said Lord Sanquer having been arraigned and condemned by the name of Robert Creighton, Esquire, was before Westminster Hall gate executed, where he dyed very penitent.

The Lord Sanquer of Scotland hanged, and why.

F About this time, the King in special favour for the present Plantation of English Colonies in Virginia granted a Lottery to be held at the West end of Pauls; whereof one Thomas Sharplys a Taylor of London had the chief Prize, which was four thousand Crowns in fair Plate.

A Lottery granted for the Plantation of Virginia.

At this time also the Corps of Mary late Queen of Scotland, the Kings Mother, was translated from Peterborough, to St. Peters Church in Westminster, and from thence was carryed to the Chappel Royal there; where it was interred in a Royal Tombe, which the King had erected for her.

G About this time also Sir Robert Sherley, third son of Sir Thomas Sherley of Suffex Knight, who sixteen years past had betaken himself to travel, and had served divers Christian Princes for the space of five years; but chiefly Rodolphus the Roman Emperour; who for his service, made him an Earl of the Empire: he afterward went into Persia, and served the Persian ten years, who made him General of the Artillery; and held him in so great account, that he gave him the Lady Terefta in marriage, whose sister was one of the Queens of Persia, after which the Persian employed him to sundry Princes of Europe; and sent him in special Embassage into England to King James, to whom he delivered his Letters, and shewed his Commission; all which signified the Persians great love and affection to his Majesty: with frank offer of free Commerce to all his Highnesse Subjects through all the Persians Dominions: After a years stay here, in which time his Lady lay in of a son, to whom the Queen was God-mother, and Prince Henry God-father; he left the child here in England, and then with his Lady departed into Persia.

the Lady Elizabeth: on the sixteenth of October arrived at Gravesend; to whom the Duke of Lenox and divers other Lords were sent by the King, who conducted him to White-hall, and from thence into the great Banqueting house, where the King, the Queen, Prince Henry, and the Lady Elizabeth entertained him in all kinde manner, and after by Barge conducted him to Essex House, appointed for his lodging. It was many years since any Kings Daughter had been married in England; which now happening, and to so Illustrious a Prince, was just cause of Triumph and rejoycing; but see the misery of Humane Affairs; joy can no sooner be setting forth, but sorrow will be sure to follow her at the heels, as now indeed it happened: for on the nine and twentieth of October, the Prince Palatine, with all the great Lords of the Kingdom, in most jovial B manner dining at Guild-hall: Prince Henry who was also invited and expected, could not come being newly fallen exceeding sick of a popular malignant Feaver, which reigned that year in most parts of this Land: whereof on the sixth of November, between seven and eight a Clock at night, at his Court of St. James he dyed: But he being infinitely beloved of the people, and one that had given great hope of proving an Heroick Prince, it caused suspicion in many mens heads, that his death was not without violence offered to Nature; some said, by bunches of Grapes given him to eat: some by Gloves of a poysoned perfume, given him for a present: but these were but idle rumours and conceits: It seems the Divine Providence had ordained it should be said of him; Hunc tantum terris ostendent Fata, nec ultra esse sinent: whose death would have given a great blow to the happinesse of this Kingdom, if there had not been another Prince left, of a mil- C der Spirit perhaps, but so accomplished with all excellent endowments, that there could be no great want of Prince Henry, as long as there was left Prince Charles. The Corps of Prince Henry; who dyed at the age of eighteen years, eight moneths, and seventeen days, was drawn in a Chariot to the Abbey Church at Westminster, and there interred in the Chappel Royal, on the seventh of December following.

This Accident something appalled the general joy, but yet triumphs went on. Upon Saint Thomas day, the Palsgrave and Grave Maurice were Elected Knights of the Garter; and the seven and twentieth of December, the Palsgrave was betrothed to the Lady Elizabeth. On Sunday, the seventh of February, the Palsgrave in person was entailed Knight of the Garter at Windsor, and D at the same time was Grave Maurice entailed by his Deputy, Count Lodowick of Nassau. On the fourteenth of February, being Shrove-Sunday, and Saint Valentines day, this happy marriage of the Palsgrave with the Lady Elizabeth was solemnized in the Chappel at White-hall: The Bride was led to Church by two Batchellors, her Brother Prince Charles, and the Earl of Northampton, Lord Privie Seal: she was attired all in white, having a rich Crown of Gold upon her head, her hair hanging down at length, curiously beset with Pearls and precious Stones, her Train supported by twelve young Ladies in white garments: The King gave her in marriage, the Archbishop of Canterbury married them, the Bishop of Bath and Wells preached the Bridal Sermon: which ended, the Bride was led home by two married men, the Duke of Lenox, and the Earl of Nottingham, Lord Admiral. This marriage was solemnized the first night with a stately Masque of Lords and Ladies: the second night with a magnificent Masque of the Gentlemen of the Middle- E Temple, and Lincolns-Inne: The third night with a sumptuous Masque of the Gentlemen of the Inner-Temple, and Grays-Inne, provided indeed then, but was not performed till Saturday night following, by reason the concourse of people was so great, it would have hindered the Show.
After this the Lord Maior and Aldermen gave the Bride a Chain of Oriental Pearl, valued at two thousand pounds: and now when all things had been done for honouring their Marriage, which either love and observance could devise, or art magnificence and could perform, on the tenth of April, the Bridegroom with his Bride took leave of the King and the Queen at Rochester, (who had by Barge conducted them thither) and there taking ship on the nine and twentieth of April they arrived at Flushing; from whence the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Arundel, the Viscount Lisle, and the Lord Harington waited upon them to their chief City of Heydelburgh, in F all places as they passed, being received with all state and magnificence: but then on the fourteenth of June, the English Lords returning home, the Lord Harington dyed by the way at Wormes, whose Corps was brought over, and buried in England. And here it will not be amisse, to shew of what extent and largeness the Palsgrave's Countrey is, because of the iniquity of some that seek to disgrace it. It is in length about two hundred English miles, taking the lower and upper Countrey. In the lower he hath six and twenty walled Towns, besides an infinite number of fair Villages, and two and twenty houses of residence. In the upper, not so many walled Towns, and houses, but those that are generally fairer then in the lower, especially Amberg, and New market.

But it is now time to look home; in the year 1609. the King having care for the quietnesse G of Ireland, had granted to the City of London the present possession and Plantation in the Province of Ulster: whereupon afterward in the year 1612. they sent thither about three hundred persons, of all sorts of handy-crafts men, chiefly to inhabit the two Cities of London-Derric and Coleraigne: where they ordained Alderman Cockain for the first Governour. And for their advancing of this, or the like Plantation in Ireland, King James about this time began a new Order of Knights, which are called Baronets, because they take place next to Barons younger sons; and he appointed certain Laws, to make them capable that should be admitted.

First

- A First that they should maintain the number of thirty foot Souldiers in Ireland, for three years, after the rate of eight pence a day, and to pay the wages of one whole year, upon the passing of their Patent: Then that they should be Gentlemen of Bloud of three Descents; and lastly, should have land of Inheritance, in possession or immediate Reversion, to the value of a thousand pounds per annum: And to keep the Order from swarming, he stinted it within the number of only 200. and as the issue should fail the Order to cease. But he that will look, how well the end of the Institution, and the Laws of it have been observed, shall perhaps find it to be here, as it was in the Order of St. Michael in France, into which at first, there were none admitted, but Princes and eminent persons: but afterward, all sorts of men, without any difference, were admitted, that it came almost to be doubted, whether the Dignity of the Order did more grace
- B the persons, or the meannesse of the persons disgrace the Order: and indeed, when the Laws of an Institution are not in some measure observed, it seems to make a kinde of nullity in the collation.

About this time, on Sunday the 24. of October, an exemplar penance was imposed upon Sir Pecksal Brockes Knight, which was to stand at Pauls Crosse in a white sheet, holding a stick in his hand, having been formerly convicted before the high Commissioners, for many notorious Adulteries with divers women.

Sir Pecksal Brockes stands in a white sheet at Pauls, and why.

Christianus King of Denmark comes the second time into England: and how entertained.

- This year 1614 in the moneth of July Christianus King of Denmark, (out of his love to his Sister, and King James) came the second time into England; but as being now secure of himself, privately, and with a small company, so as he came to the Queen at Somerset house unexpected, and before any knowledge was had of his coming; but King James being then in progresse in Bedfordshire, and hearing of it, came presently back, and after he had entertained him here, with Hunting, Hawking, running at Ring, Bear-baiting, Plays, Fire-works, and Fencing, on the first of August Prince Charles brought him aboard his Ship, who then took his leave, and returned home.

In October this year was a call of Serjeants at Law, being 11. in number, namely, George Wilds, William Towes, Richard Bawtrie, Henry Finch, Thomas Chamberland, Francis Moore, Thomas Atrow, John Moore, Francis Harvey, Charles Chibburn, and Thomas Richardson; and in Trinity Term before there had two other been called, namely, Sir Randal Crew of Lincolns Inne, and Sir Robert Hitcham of Grays Inne, Knights.

A call of Serjeants at Law.

- D About this time an Embassador came from the young Emperor of Russia to King James, desiring his continual love and amity, and to be a means of making atonement, between him and the King of Swethland, and withall presented him with a rich present of Furs: which was no small honour to the King of great Britain to have so great a Potentate as the Emperor of Russia sollicite him to be his mediator.

Though King James out of a natural goodnesse was addicted to peace, yet out of providence he neglected not to be prepared for war, and thereupon in the year 1610. had granted priviledges to a society called of the Military Garden; and this year 1614. caused a Muster of men to be presented before him; which was performed to his great liking, and to the great commendation of the City.

The Military Garden first erected.

- E About this time a memorable Act was performed by M. Hugh Middleton, Citizen and Goldsmith of London, and born in Denbighshire, who having an Act of Parliament for his Warrant, with infinite cost and indefatigable labour, brought water to the City of London, from the two great Springs of Chadwell and Amwell in Hartfordshire, having cut a Channel from thence to a place neer Istington, whither he conveyed it, to a large Pond, and from thence in pipes of young Elms to all places of the City, for as the Poet saith:

Water brought to London from Chadwell in Hartfordshire, by Sir Hugh Middleton.

Aetior ubi idus.

Nothing is so commodious for the life of man, as water.

- F Another memorable act was about this time done on the North side of London, called Moorfields, which being before invironed with deep stinking ditches and noysome common shoars, was now, not only made fair and sweet, but so levelled into walks and set with trees, that it is the pleasantest place of all the City.

Moor-Fields made into walks.

The next year being 1615, another memorable act, for the benefit and beauty of the City of London, was performed; for Smithfield, which was before a rude dirty place, was now paved all over, and strong rails sequestering the middle part of it, were set up, to make it a fair walking place, and fit for Market or any other use.

Smith-field first paved all over.

- The Lady Arbella a near kinswoman of the Kings, had sometime before, without the Kings privacy, secretly married Master William Seymour, younger Son of the Earl of Hartford, now Earl of Hartford himself; for which they were both committed to the Towers and now this year on the seven and twentieth day of September she ended her life there, and was buried in the Chappel Royal at Westminster.

The Lady Arbella secretly marries Mr. William Seymour.

She dyes in the Tower.

This year also in July were enstalled Knights of the Garter, Francis Earl of Rutland, Sir George Villers Master of the Horse, and Sir Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle, and in another kinde of Honour, the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Carew, and Doctor Andrews Bishop of Ely, were sworn Privy Counfellours.

Wales

Prince Charles is created Prince of Wales,

Wales by the death of Prince Henry, had been a good while without a Prince, and now to supply that place, Prince Charles is created Prince of Wales: In joy whereof, the Town of Ludlow in Shropshire, and the City of London, performed great Triumphs: and the more to honor his Creation, there were made five and twenty Knights of the Bath; all of them Lords or Barons sons: and yet more to honour it, there were forty selected Gentlemen of the Innes of Court, that performed a solemn Jufts at Barryers, with great magnificence.

Sir Edw. Coke,
the L. Egerton and Sir Henry Yelverton, put from their places.

This year was a Censure of divers great Delinquents, for first Sir Edward Coke, was upon displeasure discharged from being Lord Chief Justice of the Kings Bench; and two days after his discharge, Sir Henry Montague the Kings Serjeant at Law, was placed in his room: Next to him the Lord Egerton, whether disabled by sicknesse or age, to exercise the place, or upon displeasure also, had the Seal taken from him, which was delivered to Sir Francis Bacon the King's Attorney; he made first Lord Keeper; and the Lord Egerton dying soon after, Lord Chancellor. Not long after him Sir Henry Yelverton the Kings Attorney, for adding new privileges to the Londoners Charter, without the Kings privity, was in displeasure put from his place; and in his room was placed Sir Thomas Coventry, the Kings Solicitor. But a while after, Sir Henry Yelverton, was made a puny Judge of the Common Pleas; having indeed the reputation of an excellent Lawyer.

Sir John Bennet
Judge of the Prerogative Court put from his place, and

And yet this work of Censuring stayed not here, for much about this time, Thomas Earl of Suffolk Lord Treasurer of England, had the staffe of his Office taken from him; which was soon after delivered to Sir Henry Montague Lord Chief Justice of the Kings Bench. If Sir John Bennet, Judge of the Prerogative Court, had made a little more haste, he might have made one in this number of Delinquents: but he came short three or four years, and then being charged by his own servant with bribery, he was put from his place and censured in the Star-chamber to pay twenty thousand pounds: and in his room was placed Sir William Byrde a man of more integrity.

The King
makes a journey into Scotland: where he stays six moneths.

Though King James upon the death of Queen Elizabeth, came to reside in England, yet he forgot not that Scotland was his native Countrey; and therefore after he had spent some years in England, to acquaint himself with the State of the Kingdom, in March this year one thousand six hundred and sixteenth, he made a Journey into Scotland: for though he had left very able men to sit at the Helm there in his absence, yet he knew, that as it is the Masters Eye, that makes the Horse fat: so it is the Princes presence sometimes that keeps out many distempers in a State, that would otherwise creep in; and now, when in his staying six Moneths there, he had seen all things well settled, both in the Ecclesiastical State and in the Temporal, and made it appear that he resided not in England out of any neglect of Scotland; but to the end, he might be in the place of most conveniency to both Kingdoms: on the fifteenth of September, he returned to London, not more to the grief of the Scots to leave him, then to the joy of the English to receive him, so much was King James as a just and wise Prince, beloved of both the Nations.

The 14 of February 1617. in the fifteenth year of this King Francis Ashley of the middle Temple London Esquire, where he had been Reader the year before, was by a writ called to be Serjeant at Law, solum Serviens ad legem electus, and the first of July following was Knighted, and about that time was Steward of the Marshalsey of the Kings house; and by King Charles, the fifth of May, in the first year of his Reign was by letters Patents made one of the Kings Serjeants at Law; and so continued unto his death; which happened by the will of God the 28 of November, 1635. at Serjeants Inne in Fleetstreet: and was Recorder of Doncaster in Dorsetshire, where together with his Lady in the great Church he lies Involved: leaving Dorothy his only Daughter and heir (by the Lady Anne his wife, the eldest Daughter and Coheir of Bernard Samways of Dorsetshire Esquire) married unto the Honourable Denzell Holles Esquire, whose only issue is Francis Holles of Winterborne St. Martin in the County of Dorset Esquire.

This Fact Gundamore aggravateb against him.

Now comes to be related a matter of special observation; Sir Walter Rawleigh had lived a condemned man many years in the Tower, and now his Destiny brought him to his end by liberty, which it could not do by imprisonment; for out of a longing for liberty, he propounded a project to the King, upon which (as he was a well spoken man, and of a great capacity) he set such colours of probability; especially gilding it over, with the Gold he would fetch from a Mine in Guyana; and that without any wrong at all to the King of Spain (if he might be allowed to go the Journey) that the King, if he gave not credit that he could perform it, at least gave way that he should undertake it: and thereupon with divers ships accompanied with many Knights & Gentlemen of quality, he set forward on the Voyage; but when after long search or shew of search, no such place of Treasure, or no such Treasure could be found, whether it were, that he thought it a shame, to return home with doing nothing: or that his malin Genius thrust him upon the Design: he fell upon Saint Thome, a Town belonging to the King of Spain: sacked it, pillaged it, and burnt it: and here was the first part of his Tragical Voyage acted, in the death of his eldest son: the last part was acted in his own death at his return: For Gundamore the Spanish Lieger, did so aggravate this fact of his to the King, against him; that it seemed nothing would give satisfaction but Rawleighs head, without which he doubted there would follow a breach of the League between the two Nations. Rawleigh excused it, by saying that he was urged to it by the Spaniards first assaulting of him; and besides, that he could not come at the Myne, without winning this Town: but Gundamore was too strong an adversary for him; and the King preferring the publique Peace, before the life of one man, already condemned, gave way

A way to have the Sentence of his former Condemnation executed upon him; and thereupon, brought to the Kings Bench Bar, he was not newly Arraigned or Indicted, as being already Mortuum in Lege, but only hath the former Sentence averred against him, and so carryed to the Gatehouse, and from thence the next morning to the Parliament Yard: a Scaffold was there erected, upon which after fourteen years reprivall, his head was cut off: at which time, such abundance of blood issued from his veins, that shewed he had stock of Nature enough left to have continued him many years in life, though now above threescore years old, if it had not been taken away by the hand of Violence.

For which he is beheaded.

And this was the end of the great Sir Walter Rawleigh: great sometimes in the favour of Queen Elizabeth, and next to Drake the great scourge and hate of the Spaniard, who had many things to be commended in his life; but none more, then his constancy at his death, which he took with so undaunted a resolution, that one might perceive, he had a certain expectation of a better life after it: so far he was from holding those Atheistical opinions; an aspersions whereof some traducing persons had cast upon him.

About this time King James made a progresse to the University of Cambridge, where delighted with the Disputations and other Scholastical exercises, he stayed three whole days, and could have been content to have stayed as many years: for next being a King, he was made to be a Scholar.

The King makes a progresse to Cambridge; where he stays three dayes.

In the year 1619. being the seventeenth year of King James his reign, that knot of love which above twenty years had been tyed, between him and his Queen, was by death dissolved: for on Tuesday this year the second of March, Queen Anne dyed at Hampton Court, whose Corps was brought to Denmark house, and from thence conveyed to Westminster: where in the Royal Chapel with great solemnity it was interred: a Princess very memorable for her vertue, and not a little for her Fortune, who besides being a Queen, was so happy as to be Mother of such admired children, as she brought into the World. But the dissolving of this knot cast the King into an extreme sicknesse; and after some recovery, into a Relapse: from which notwithstanding, it pleased God to deliver him, as having yet some great work to do.

An. Reg. 17. Queen Anne dies.

This year on Munday the 3 of May, one Mr. Williams a Barrister of the Middle Temple, was arraigned at the Kings Bench, for libelling, and for writing Books against the King: and upon Wednesday following was hanged and quartered at Charing Crosse.

But an action of another nature was performed this year, the seventeenth of July, not unworthy the relating, which was this; that one Bernard Calvert of Andover, rode from St. Georges Church in Southwark to Dover, from thence passed by Barge to Callice in France, and from thence returned back to Saint Georges Church the same day, setting out about three a clock in the morning, and returned about eight a clock in the Evening, fresh and lusty.

Bernard Calvert his speedy journey from Southwark to Callice and back again in one day.

In the year 1621. a Parliament was holden at Westminster; wherein two great examples of Justice were shewed; which for future terror are not unfit to be here related: One upon Sir Giles Montpelion, a Gentleman otherwise of good parts; but for practising sundry abuses in erecting and setting up new Innes and Alehouses, and exacting great sums of money of people, by pretence of Letters Patents granted to him for that purpose, was sentenced to be degraded, and disabled to bear any office in the Common-wealth, though he avoided the execution by flying the land; but upon Sir Francis Michell, a Justice of Peace of Middlesex, and one of his chief Agents, the sentence of Degradation was executed, and he made to ride with his face to the Horse-tail through the City of London. The other example was of Sir Francis Bacon, Viscount St. Albans, Lord Chancellor of England, who for bribery was put from his place, and committed to the Tower: but after some few days enlarged: in whose place Doctor Williams Dean of Westminster was made Lord Keeper.

Sir Giles Montpelion is sentenced to be degraded, and why. Sir Francis Michell is degraded, and in what manner. Sir Francis Bacon Lord Chancellor put from his place for bribery.

The Count Palatine being now strengthened with the alliance of the King of Great Britain, was thought a fit man to be King of Bohemia, and accordingly was elected, by the States of that Kingdom, but he was no sooner invested in the Crown; but the Emperor with great Forces assaulted him in Prague, and not only drove him with his wife and children from thence; but took from him also his own Patrimony the Palatinate: so as though now a King, he was faine to fly to the States of the Low-Countries for a place of residence. King James though he had never given his consent to the Palgraves taking upon him that Kingdom, as fore-seeing in his great judgement what the event would be: yet in this distresse, he could not forbear to take care of his Daughter, and thereupon sent Sir Richard Weston, the same that was after Lord Treasurer, in Embassage to the Emperour to sollicite the restoring of the Palatinate to the Palgrave; but he returning without successe, the King had then conference with Count Gundomar the King of Spains Legier in England, what course might be taken to procure the restoring it: who made him answer, there could be no better course then to make a marriage between his Son the Prince of Wales, and the Infant of Spain, which he said would easily be effected, if the Prince might have leave to make a Journey into Spain. King James though he considered the inveterate grudges between Spain and England, and how dangerous it might be to put the heir of the Kingdom into the Spaniards hands, yet grounding himself upon the saying, Fidelem si putaveris, facies: and drawn on by the insinuating speeches of Count Gundomar, not perhaps without some inclination in the Marquess of Buckingham, was contented at last the Prince should go. And so Prince Charles sending his ships about, and taking along with him only the Marquess of Buckingham (who in the time of his being in Spain was created Duke of Buckingham) Eudymion Porter,

The Palgrave is chosen King of Bohemia, but is soon driven out, and his Palatinate seized on. The King hath conference with Gundomar how the Palatinate might be restored. Gundomar advieth by making a marriage between the Prince of Wales and the Infant of Spain. Hereupon the Prince is sent into Spain, and how accompanied.

Porter, and Mr. Francis Cottington: (two that were well acquainted with the language and affairs of Spain) he took his journey by the way of France, went to Paris, and secretly in disguise to the Court there, where he had the sight of that Lady, that might well have stayed him from going further, but yet on he went.

Gundomar gets much money of Ladies by perswading them of the certainty of the match.

In the mean time Gundomar a cunning man, and one that besides his Master's had ends of his own, and could play his game no lesse for his own profit then his Masters Honour; as he had perswaded the King of the facility of the Match with Spain, so he perswaded a certainty of it, especially amongst Catholick Ladies, by which means he brought no small store of Grist to his own Mill, receiving from one Lady three hundred pounds to be made Groom of the Stool, when the Spanish Princeesse should come; of another a good round sum to be Mother of the Maids, and of divers other the like for other places.

The Princes entertainment in Spain.

But the Prince being arrived in Spain, was received indeed with all the demonstrations of love and kindnesse that could be devised, so as the charge of his entertainment was said to stand the King of Spain in nine and forty thousand Duckats; but yet his acquaintance with the Lady was much restrained, for in all the time of his staying in Spain, (which was no lesse then eight moneths, being from February to October) he saw her but very seldom, and that at good distances, never spake with her but twice, and that before company, besides that his speeches were limited, how much and what he should say, far from any means of tying the knot between them which was pretended. What the cause should be was much in obscurity; some thought that a difference between the Duke of Buckingham, and the Count Olivares, the King of Spain's great Favorite, was a great hindrance of the proceeding, but other, and more likely, that the Spaniards indeed never really intended the Match at all, but had drawn the Prince into Spain for other ends: but what those ends were, was no lesse uncertain; one thought it was done to hold the Prince in a Treaty of marriage with a Daughter of Spain, till the Daughters of France should be bestowed, thereby to keep him from that alliance: but others and more likely, that the King of Spain entertained this Treaty with the King of great Britain, meaning to spin it out till he had compassed some designs in the Low-Countries, and the Palatinate, at least to make King James lesse vigilant for those parts.

What hindered the proceeding of the match.

The King sends for the Prince to return home.

But when much time had been spent in protracting, upon pretence of difficulties in obtaining the Popes dispensation, King James partly wearied with delay, but chiefly angry with delusion, sent to the Prince, with all speed to return into England; which the Prince presently signified to the King of Spain, and had his leave to depart; but upon promise to continue the Treaty of the marriage still. Though it was said, the Prince was gone but a few days on his journey, when a Post was sent to have stayed him, if he had been overtaken. But whether it was so or no, it was Gods Providence that he came safely to his ships, and in them safely into England; arriving at Portsmouth, where he was beheld of the people, with no lesse gladnesse, then the Sun after a long Eclipse: and now his safe returning did both justifie King James his judgment in suffering him to go, and the King of Spains justice, in suffering him to come back: and was cause, that the people began to have a better opinion of the Spanish faith, then they had before. But now it presently breaks out, that this match with Spain could never take effect: for King James having received Declarations of the Articles touching the marriage, found many very strict and large for exercise of the Catholick Religion: but none at all for restitution of the Palatinate; which made him so much discontented, that he presently brake off all Treaty of the marriage, and signified as much, not only to the King of Spain, but to divers other Princes of Christendom: Upon which breach two great Points were presently had in consultation: One for preparing Forces, for recovering the Palatinate by way of Arms, which could not be done by a way of friendship: and for this purpose, a Council of war was called, and a proposition resolved on both of men and money, for undertaking the enterprise: as also a great contribution by way of benevolence was collected; towards which, the compiler of this work, gave himself fifty pounds: as many other far greater sums, though the collection went not through the whole Land; by reason there was hope given of a peaceable reconciliation: so as many that were not over-hasty in their payments escaped without contributing at all. The other point was for providing a fit Wife for the Prince, in some other place. It was said the States of Holland offered a very great portion in marriage to the Prince, if he would match with some Lady of that Countrey, but matches are made in Heaven, and there was a young Lady of France destined to his bed: and for this purpose, the Earl of Carlisle, and the Earl of Holland were sent into France, to treat of a marriage with the younger Daughter of the great Henry the fourth, King of France deceased, and Sister to the present King Lewis; which marriage afterward took effect, but was not accomplished in King James his dayes; who dyed soon after the agreement.

A consultation had, to recover the Palatinate by Arms.

A Treaty of marriage with a younger daughter of the King of France which afterwards took effect.

A Call of fifteen Serjeants Law.

It was now the year 1623. in which in Michaelmas Term, there was a Call of fifteen Serjeants at Law, who kept their Feast in the Middle Temple Hall.

Two things in this Kings days grew to lose their Lustre. One the exercise of Tilting; which in Queen Elizabeths time, was so much used, that no year passed without a special solemnity in that kinde. The other, the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners and Yeomen of the Guard: which in her time consisted of the choycest persons both for stature and other good parts throughout the Realm; and was so great a grace to her Court, that no Prince of Christendom could shew the like: but King James was so intentive to Realities, that he little regarded shews: and thereby both these in his time came utterly to be neglected: No solemnity

A solemnity of Arms but very rare, no regard had what persons were admitted into the other places.

We may here observe, how the Surname of the Kings of England, hath at sundry times been changed. From William the Conqueror, to King Henry the second, what surname they had, or wheth rthey had any or no, is most uncertain: but then King Henry the second brought in the French surname of Plantagenet: which continued in all the succeeding Kings, till King Henry the seventh; and he brought in the Welsh surname of Teuther, which continued the surname of all the succeeding Princes; till King James the sixth of Scotland: and he brought in the Scottish surname of Steward: in which it is likely to continue, (and God grant it may do so) to the worlds end.

B Some passages of small moment I confess are omitted by me, in this Reign of King James, as whereof, for want of knowing the particulars, I dare not venture upon making the Relation: which if some men would have done, the truth of our Chronicles should not have been mingled with so many falsities.

Of his Taxations.

IN his second year, in the moneth of September, he sent Privy Seals, to the wealthiest Citizens of London, for moneys to be borrowed of them: and in October following, the customs of Merchandises, both outward and inward, were raised, and then were letten out to Farm. In a Parliament holden at Westminster, the third year of his Reign, there were given him three entire Subsidies, and six fifteens by the Temporality, and by the Clergy four entire Subsidies. This year also Henry Lord Mordant, convicted in the Star-chamber, for divers misprisions, was fined to pay ten thousand Marks, and Edward Lord Starston for the like offence to pay six thousand Marks, and Henry Earl of Northumberland for offences laid to his charge, to pay thirty thousand pounds, and some years after Sir John Bennet, Judge of the Prerogative Court was fined to pay twenty thousand pounds. In his fourth year he repayed threescore thousand pounds to the Citizens of London, which the Londoners had lent to Queen Elizabeth, three years before her death; an act by which he got more love, then he payed money. In his seventh year he had aid throughout England, for making his eldest Son Prince Henry Knight: which though levied with great moderation, brought him in great sums of money. In his eighteenth year, in a Parliament holden at Westminster, the Temporality gave him two Subsidies, and the Clergy three: and in another Parliament, in the year 1623. the Temporality gave him three Subsidies: and three fifteens; the Clergy four Subsidies. Besides these Subsidies he sent abroad many Great Privy Seals, and had also a Benevolence throughout the Realm: not without some grudging, but without any just cause; for it should have been remembered, that he took it not out of covetousness to gather wealth, but out of very necessity to supply wants: For by his employing many Embassadors in Ordinary, many Extraordinary, by his necessary bounty to his followers, and by his charge of keeping several Courts; none of all which he could avoid: his expences were far greater then any of his Predecessors had ever been.

The Customs of Merchandise raised.

Privy Seals sent out, and also a Benevolence.

The cause of the Kings great expences.

Of his Laws and Ordinances.

THE day of his removing from Charter house, at his first coming into England, he caused Proclamation to be made, that all Monopolies and Protections should cease; as likewise all oppressions done by Salt-Peter men, by Purveyers, and Carters. On the 26. of May following he set forth a Proclamation, restraining all persons under great penalties from killing of Deer, or any kinde of Fowl used for Hawking. The seventh of May, Proclamation was made against Robberies on the borders: and on the nineteenth of May, a nother for uniting the people inhabiting about the borders of England and Scotland, to live in love and quietnesse. In this first year, in a Parliament then holden, it was Enacted, that neither Archbishop, nor Bishop should Alienate, Grant, or Demise, or in any sort convey, no not to the King himself any of the Honors, Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments, being parcel of the possession of his Archbishop, or Bishoprick: and if any were, it should be utterly void, and of no effect, notwithstanding any former Law, Act, or Ordinance to the contrary. He then also caused himself by Proclamation to be enstiled King of Great Britain, that the division of England and Scotland might be no more remembered. In his second year, by his Letters Patents he incorporated the Felt-makers of London, by the name of Masters, Wardens, and Commonalty of the Art or Myserie of the Felt-makers, granting them divers privileges and liberties for their good government of their Corporation. In November, of his second year, were Proclaimed in London certain new pieces of coyn, both of gold and silver, with the true valuation and weights of them, according to the Mint of both Nations, English and Scottish. In a Parliament holden the third year of his Reign, the Oath of Allegiance was devised and ordained, and soon after ministred to all sorts of people.

Killing of Deer, or Fowl restrained.

No Bishop to alienate any Lands, nor to the King himself.

He is enstiled King of Great Britain.

The Felt-makers made a Corporation.

This year also he made Proclamation to redresse the misemployment of Lands, or goods given to charitable uses. Also this year, he set forth a Proclamation for bearing of Flags in Ships to be in this manner, that from thenceforth all the Subjects of great Britain should bear in their Inmates forbidden, and new buildings restrained.

main top, the Red Crosse commonly called Saint Georges Crosse, and the White Crosse, commonly called St. Andrews Crosse joyned together, and the Subjects of South Britain should carry in their Foretop only the Red Crosse as they were wont; and the Subjects of North Britain only the White Crosse. In this fourth year on the tenth of June he set forth a Proclamation, commanding all Jesuits, Seminary Priests and Fryers to depart the Realm before the first of August following: and never to return upon pain of death, according to divers Statutes in that behalf provided. In his second year he had set forth a Proclamation against inmates and increase of new buildings, which being little regarded, now in his fourth year he renewed the said Proclamation, adding withall that the Forefronts and windows of all new buildings should be either of Brick or Stone; for disobeying whereof, many were called in the Star-chamber, and there fined. In his fifth year, he gave order for planting of Mulberry Trees, and breeding of Silk-worms, that England might be a Countrey as well of Silk as Cloth. In his eleventh year, he instituted the Order of the Baronets, which hath much degenerated since his Institution, and thereby having been devised for the benefit of Ireland, hath caused but little contentment unto England. This year also the King himself in person came to the Star-chamber, where he had appointed the Mint-men to meet, and there, for the better keeping of Coyns of Gold within the Realm, he raised the prizes of them; ordaining the price called the Unity, which went before but for twenty shillings, to be current now for two and twenty, the double Crown and all other pieces to encrease in the like proportion. In his fifteenth year, he granted to the Apothecaries of London to be a Corporation for themselves, and their successors for ever; and by Letters Patents made them a Body Politick, and Corporate. In his time by his appointment a strict decree passed in the Star-chamber against Duels and single Combats, and a strict Law was made in Parliament against stabbing with a dagger or knife, making it to be a wilful Murther,

Affairs of the Church in his time.

A conference in matters of Religion is held before the King at Hampton Court, and how the matter proceeded.

THE King as a Religious Prince, desiring nothing so much as to settle Peace in the Church, and hearing of some dissensions of his Divines in point of Religion, in the very first year of his Reign, appointed a Conference to be holden before himself at Hampton Court, to which were called divers Bishops, Deans, and Doctors of one side, and of the other four eminent Divines; namely Doctor Reynolds, Doctor Sparkes, Mr. Knewstubs, and Mr. Chadderton: who all meeting before the King the 14 day of January: the King first signified the cause of his calling them together, and then told them he was there ready to hear, what they could object or say against the present Government of the Church: whereupon Dr. Reynolds being their Foreman, reduced all matters disliked, or questioned to these four Heads.

1. That the Doctrine of the Church might be preserved in purity, according to Gods Word.
2. That good Pastors might be planted in all Churches to preach the same.
3. That the Church Government might be sincerely administred, according to the Word of God.
4. That the Book of Common Prayer might be fitted to more encrease of Piety.

Out of these Heads, he drew and moved divers points: One that Confirmation might not be by Bishops only, but that every Pastor in his Parish might Confirm: but this was thought to trench too much upon the Jurisdictions of Bishops, and to be a step to bring in a Presbyterian Government, which the King much disliked; and the Bishop of Worcester challenged Dr. Reynolds with all his learning to shew, where ever he had read, that Confirmation was at all used in ancient times, by any other then by Bishops. Another motion of Dr. Reynolds was; That there might be a new Translation of the Bible, because the present Translations were corrupt, and not answerable to the truth of the Original; whereof he alleaged divers Examples; particularly, that in the 105. Psal. 28. v. where it is said, They were not Obedient, when in the Original it is, They were not Disobedient: To this it was agreed, that a new Translation should be made: and accordingly soon after was performed by the most learned Divines of the Kingdom; and is that, which is now used. After many other points moved by Doctor Reynolds, he came at last to subscription: Intreating it might not be exacted, as heretofore; which many good men refused for these reasons. First, because the Apocryphal Books are by the Common Prayer Book appointed to be read; albeit in some of them there are manifest errors, directly repugnant to the Scriptures. To this, the King himself answered, that as he would not wish all Canonieal Books to be read in the Church, unlesse there were one to Interpret; so he would wish no Apocryphal to be read wherein was any error: but for the other which were clear and correspondent to the Scriptures he would have them read; seeing there was good use of them, to make up the story of the Persecution of the Jews; but withall he would have the people be taught, they were not to teach a man, either to sacrifice to the dead, or to kill himself. The next scruple against subscription was, That in the Common Prayer Book, it is twice set down Jesus said to his Disciples, when by the Original Text it is plain He spake to the Pharisees. To which it was answered, that for any thing could be gathered by the place, he might speak aswell to the one as to the other: But the King, for more plainnesse sake, willed, that the word Disciples, should be omitted, and only the words, Jesus said, to be printed in a different letter, that it might appear, to be no part of the Text.

Another

A Another scruple was, concerning the Crosse in Baptism, which Doctor Reynolds confessed to have ever been used since the Apostles time, at going abroad, or entering into the Church, or at their Prayers and Benedictions; but doubted of the ancient use of it in Baptism: to which the Bishop of Winchester answered, that in Constantine's time it was used in Baptism, and the Dean of Westminster shewed out of Tertullian, Cyprian, Origen and others, that in their time it was used in Immortali lavacro: which could be nothing but Baptism: and this the King judged to be antiquity enough to warrant the continuance of it still. At last Master Knewstubs moved, how far an Ordinance of the Church was to binde them, without impeachment of their Christian liberty? At which the King seemed much moved, and told him, he would not argue that point with him, but answer therein as Kings are wont to speak in Parliament Le Roy s'avisera; and therefore, I charge you (said he) never B speak more to that point, how far you are bound to obey, when the Church hath once ordained it. Doctor Reynolds added; that the Crosse should be abandoned, because in the time of Popery it had been superstitiously abused. To which his Majesty answered, that his very reason was an inducement to him to have it retained still: For in as much as it was abused (so you say) to superstition in time of Popery, it doth plainly imply, that it was well used before Popery.

Concerning the Crosse in Baptism.

The next thing objected, was the wearing of the Surplice: to which the King answered, that seeing it appeared out of Antiquity, that in the celebration of Divine Service, a different habit appertained to the Ministry, and principally of the white Linnen; he saw no reason, but that in this Church, as it had been, for comeliness and order sake, it might be still continued.

Concerning the wearing of the Surplice.

At last of all, Master Chadderton, and Master Knewstubs requested, that in regard of some tender
 C Consciences, the Surplice and Crosse in Baptism, might not be urged: To which the King himself answered, If after the Gospels preaching five and forty years amongst you, there be any yet in these points unsatisfied, I doubt it proceeds rather out of stubbornness of opinion, then out of tenderness of Conscience; and therefore let them conform themselves, or else they shall hear further of it.

It was now observed, that in all their Objections, there was not a word spoken against Bishops, nor against the Ring in Marriage; for Dr. Reynolds himself confessed that the Ring was a very meer Ceremony; and the King affirmed he should not think himself rightly married, if he had not been married with a Ring: And as for Bishops, he declared himself to be verily perswaded, they were Divine Ordinations, and most necessary to Monarchy; and would often say, No Bishop, no King. Many other points were handled, as about Predestination, Absolution, and Remission of D sins, Baptizing by women, about the words in Marriage, With my body I thee worship, the Oath ex Officio, the high Commission and some other; in all which the King gave so good satisfaction, that they all joyntly promised to be quiet and obedient, now they knew it to be his mind to have it so: and the King was so admired for his excellent Resolutions and Answers, that the Archbishop of Canterbury said, undoubtedly his Majesty spake by the special assistance of Gods Spirit. After this Conference, the King in his second year set forth a Proclamation, to confirm the Ecclesiastical Government, and Book of Common Prayer, in the form and estate as Queen Elizabeth left them.

The Book of Common Prayer confirmed by the King.

After this, he sent divers learned Divines into Scotland, to have a Conference with the Divines there; and if it might be to reduce the two Kingdoms to an uniformity of Religion, as he brought them to an union of Possession. And now entering into consideration of this Title, of being
 E Defender of the Faith: he conceived it might extend not only to his own Dominions, but in some sort to Neighbouring Countries: if not in Authority, at least in care: and hereupon hearing that the States of the Low-Countries were determined to entertain one Vorstius to be publick Professor of Divinity in Leyden, and knowing him, though otherwise a learned man, yet tainted with many erroneous opinions, concerning the Essence and Substance of God, making him to be Quale & quantum, changing Eternity into Eviternity: teaching Eternity to consist of a number of Ages, and denying God to be Purum actum, but to have in some sort aliquid Diversitatis, & Multiplicitatis in seipso; etiam Principium cujusdam mutabilitatis; He earnestly solicited the States, both by his own Letters, and F by his Lieger Sir Ralph Winwood, by no means to admit the said Vorstius into that place: lest his doctrine having once infected their Country, might soon after spread it self into his Dominions. Which request of his, after much soliciting, the States at length granted, and expelled Vorstius from amongst them.

At this time a Synod was assembled at Dort in Holland, consisting of learned Divines, sent from the Count Palatin of the Rhine, from Hassia, from Zuiterland, from the Church of Geneva, from Bern, Emden, Holland, Zeeland, Virecht, Friseland and other Provinces: Some also sent from England, as namely, George Bishop of Landaffe, John Davenant Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, Samuel Ward, Master of Sidney College in Cambridge, The Good Dr. of Divinity, and Walter Belcanquell, a Scottish man Bachelor of Divinity: Which Synod was Assembled to examine and determine the Doctrine of Arminius; first concerning Gods Predestination, Election, and Reprobation; then concerning Christs death and Mans redemption by it; then concerning Mans corruption and conversion to God; then concerning the perseverance of the Saints: In all which points the doctrine of Arminius was rejected, as also of Vorstius, and the true Doctrine by a general consent, together with the Approbation of the Lords the States; which yet the Papists made so little reckoning of, that one of them in scorn, made Echo to censure it in this Distich:

But

But who knows not, that ill will never spake well, and that nothing is so obvious in the mouth of an adversary, as scandals and invectives?

Antonius de Dominis Archbishop of Spalato comes into England, and sets forth Books for the Protestant Religion.

After five years stay here he retracted all, and went to Rome, but dyed there in prison.

John Trask for holding divers Judaical opinions is censured, and after three years recants. George Abbot Archbishop of Canterbury, by misfortune killing a man is Censured.

In the year 1616, Mar. Antonius de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalato, in the Territory of Venice, came into England, leaving his Countrey (as he affirmed) for Religion; whereof he set forth in writing many reasons, and being thereupon entertained by the Archbishop of Canterbury was afterward made Dean of Windsor, and Master of the Savoy; in which time he preached publicly divers times before divers Lords of the Council, printed in London the first four of his ten Books, Intituled Of the Common-wealth of the Church: wherein with great earnestnesse he maintained the Doctrine and Discipline of the Protestants: But after all this, whether all he had done was but dissembling from the beginning, or whether out of remorse of conscience, he repented him of that he had done: after five years staying here, he retracted all he had said or written before: which so incensed King James, that he commanded him (within three days at his perill) to depart the Realm: who thereupon went to Rome, and there inveighed as bitterly against the Protestants, as he had done in England against the Papists; hoping at least for Pardon, if not for Preferment: but, notwithstanding his Recantation; according to the Law of the Inquisition, having once Revolted, (though now Returned) he suffered the death of an Heretick, though not the shame; had the punishment of a Martyr, but not the honour; and was publicly burnt at Rome, yet not burnt alive, but dying in prison and then buried, it is said, his body was afterwards taken up and burned.

In the Kings tenth year, two obstinate Arian Hereticks, Bartholomew Legat, and Edw. Wightman, were burnt for Heresie, Legat in Smithfield, and Wightman at Lichfield.

In his sixteenth year, one John Trask, a pretended Minister, was Censured in the Star-chamber, for depraving the Ecclesiastical Government, and for holding divers Judaical Opinions; as, that it was not lawful to do any thing forbidden in the old Law, nor to keep the Christian Sabbath; for which he was set on the Pillory at Westminster, and from thence whipt to the Fleet, and there to remain prisoner: but three years after he writ a Recantation of all his former Heresies and Schismatical Opinions.

In this Kings time, George Abbot Archbishop of Canterbury, being a hunting in a Park, and shooting at a Deer; his arrow by mischance glaunced and kill'd a man: upon which fact, it was much debated, Whether by it he were not become irregular, and ought to be deprived of his Archiepiscopal Function as having his hands imbrued (though against his will) in blood: but Andrews Bishop of Winchester standing much in his defence; as likewise Sir Henry Martin, the Kings advocate, gave such reasons in mitigation of the Fact, that he was cleared from all imputation of crime; and thereupon adjudged Regular, and in state to continue his Archiepiscopal charge: yet himself (out of a religious tenderesse of minde) kept the day of the year, in which the mischance happen'd, with a solemn Fast, all his life after.

Works of Piety done by this King, or by other in his time.

Structures of Piety King James made none at all, nor many of magnificence, only the great Banqueting House at White-hall; a wall of Brick about his Park at Greenwich, another at Theobalds, and some little buildings at Roydon, and such like. His greatest charity was expressed by largesses and Pensions: as first where the Gentlemen of his Chappel, being 33 in number, had each of them but 30 pounds a year fee, he made it up 40. Then he encreased the Pensions of his Alms Knights of Windsor, being 13 in number, from twelve pence a day to two shillings. Then as he encreased his number of the Yeomen of the Guard, from sevenscore to two hundred, so he encreased their Pensions, from two shillings a day, for three moneths in the Summer, to seven groats a day for six moneths in the Summer. Then, where at his coming, he found but only four Judges in the Courts of Law at Westminster, he added a fifth, with the like allowance as the former had; besides many other Pensions of like nature. But the works of Piety done by others in his time, were very many: whereof we may justly set in the first place, the repairing of Pauls Church, begun in his time, though not finished till many years after; a work of as great cost and labour, as the first founding of it: towards the furtherance whereof though many well devoted persons contributed liberally, yet none was more industrious, then the learned Doctor Land, first Bishop of London, and after Archbishop of Canterbury; who also was a bountiful Benefactor to the Colledge of Saint Johns in Oxford, where he had his Education. Next to him his Predecessor next before him, the worthy George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, founded a fair Almshouse at Guilford in Surry where he was born, as likewise Robert the second Earl of Dorset, founded another in Suffex; to the maintenance whereof, he gave Lands to the value of three hundred pounds a year. But of all the Almshouses that were ever founded in Christendom, there is none I think can parallel that of Thomas Sutton Esquire. This man born at Snayb in Lincolnshire, having always lived a Batchelor, and by sundry employments, and parcimony, being grown to great wealth, bought of the right Honourable, Thomas Earl of Suffolk, his Mansion house, called the Charter-house, near to Smithfield in London, and out of a pious minde converted it into an Almshouse, by the name of Suttons Hospital, endowing the same with above three thousand pounds of yearly rent: wherein are maintained fourscore poor men, with convenient lodging, diet, and allowance of money for apparel: also forty poor children with the like provision,

The number of the Yeomen of the Guard encreased, and also their pay. Five Judges in every Court. The repairing of Pauls Church begun.

Suttons Hospital founded.

A provision, and a Grammar School, with a Master and Usher to teach them: over all whom, he ordained a learned man to be Master of the household, and to be chosen by the Governours, whom he appointed for the present, by the Authority of the Kings Letters Patents, to be George Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Lord Elsmore Lord Chancellor, Robert Earl of Salisbury, Lord Treasurer, John Bishop of London, Lancelot Bishop of Ely, Sir Edward Cook, chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Sir Thomas Foster, a Judge of the Common Pleas; Sir Henry Hubbard, the Kings Attorney General, Doctor Overall Dean of Pauls, Doctor Mountain Dean of Westminster, Henry Thursby Esquire, Master of the Chancery, Richard Sutton Esquire, Auditor of the Impreits, Jeffery Nightingall Esquire, John Low Gentleman, Thomas Brown Gentleman, and Master of the Household for the time being, to be always one: and as any of these sixteen Governours should die, the Sur-

B vivers to make present addition of others. Next to this was a fair College in Oxford founded by Nicholas Wilbe Esquire, and called after his name. About this time also Edward Allen of Dulwich in Surry, founded a fair Hospital at Dulwich for six poor men, and six poor women, and for twelve poor children, from the age of four or six years, to be there maintained and taught till the age of fourteen or sixteen, and to have a Schoolmaster with dyet, and a convenient stipend. This man may be an example, who having gotten his wealth by Stage-playing converted it to this pious use, not without a kinde of reputation to the Society of Players. In this Kings time also, William Cambden, King at Arms, founded an History professor in Oxford, to which he gave the Manor of Bexley in Kent, which some years expired, will be worth four hundred pounds a year. In his tenth year, Sir Baptist Hicks, one of the Justices of Peace in Middlesex, who was

He also founded a fair Hospital of Free stone at Cambden in Gloucestershire, for six men and six women, allowing each them of a yearly Gown, and two shillings six pence a week, with two rooms and a Garden. In this Kings time, George Patyn Citizen and Grocer of London, gave to good uses, three thousand and six hundred pounds, whereof twelve hundred pounds to the two Universities, nine hundred pounds for an Almshouse, and a certain sum of money to buy two Bells, and make a Chime in Bow Church. Also Thomas Teafdale of Glympton in the County of Oxford Gentleman, gave five thousand pounds to purchase lands, for perpetual maintenance of seven Fellows, and six Scholars, to be placed

D at Baylyoll in Oxford, and to be chosen thither from time to time, out of the Free School of Abington in Berkshire: to which School he also gave lands for the maintenance of an Usher. In this Kings time also, Sir Marmaduke Darrell, being Lord of Fulmer, being a Town in Buckinghamshire, where was an old ruinous Church, standing a mile distant from the Town, pulled down that old Church, and at his own charge builded a fair new one in the Town, and furnished it with a Font, a Pulpit, and all Ornaments necessary. Also Thomas Watson of Halstead, in the County of Kent, Esquire, new builded a fair Chappel on the North side of the Parish Church of Halstead, of Freestone from the ground, and gave to the Church four new Bells, and two Pulpits. In his time also Doctor Aylmer Bishop of London, and Elizabeth Countesse Dowager of Shrewsbury, gave certain sum: of money towards the better maintenance of Sermons at

E Pauls Crosse: As likewise Thomas Russell Draper gave ten pounds a year for ever, to be given to unbeneficed Ministers, that should preach there: and to the same use, George Bishop Stationer of London, gave ten pounds a year more. In this Kings time also, the Citizens of London new builded Algate, where pulling down the old Gate, they found many ancient Roman Coyns. John Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, founded a fair Almshouse in Croydon.

Algate in London new builded.

Henry Earl of Northampton dies, who founded three Hospitals; and where.

On the fifteenth of June, 1614. dyed Henry Earl of Northampton, who built from the ground a house near Charing-Crosse; and dying, was buried in the ancient Chappel of Dover Castle, who in his life time founded three fair Hospitals, and endowed them with large maintenance for ever, one at Ryding in Norfolk for twelve poor women and a Governesse, a second at Clun in Shropshire, for twelve poor men and a Governor: The third at Greenwich in Kent, for a Governor and

F twenty poor Almshouses. In this Kings time also, Master Robert Dows of London Merchant-Taylor, gave a competent maintenance for ever, unto Sepulchers Parish, for the tolling of the great Bell, and for finding some Divine to come to the prison of Newgate, the midnight before Execution, and there to ring a hand Bell, and to put the prisoners in mind of their approaching death, with a Christian remembrance and exhortation; and the next morning to toll the great Bell, from six a clock till ten, and then to ring it out when the Execution should be past. He also established a free singing School, in Christs Hospital: for the better education of the poor children there: besides many other good deeds of Alms. About the same time Robert Peake of London Goldsmith, gave to Sepulchers Church a Communion Table of two yards long, and three quarters and a half broad, richly guilded over, and at every corner imbossed with plates

G of silver. In this Kings fourteenth year, William Jones of London Merchant, gave about eight thousand pounds to found a Free School in Wales, where he was born, with Almshouses and Pensioners in London: and a hundred pound a year for ever to a learned Preacher in London, ordaining all things to be ordered by the Company of Haberdashers, whereof himself was free. This year also the old ruinous gate called Aldersgate was taken quite down, and new builded from the foundation, towards the building whereof, William Parker, Merchant-Taylor of London, gave a thousand pounds. In this Kings time also, was erected a building near to Chelsey, with a purpose to be a College for Divines to study the controversies of Religion, but upon second thoughts, the

If any other deeds of Alms, or publick benefit were done in this Kings time, as perhaps there were many, the Reader may be pleased both here and in other Kings Reigns, to adde them, as he meets with them: for partly to this end, I have digested this Chronicle into such several Heads and Chapters.

IN his first year, on the seven and twentieth of April, thirteen persons were slain by mis-fortune with Gun-powder, at the Gun-powder Mill in Redriffe, and much other hurt done in divers B places. This year also, the Plague in London was so great, that from the three and twentieth of December, 1602. to the two and twentieth of December following, there dyed in London, and the Liberties, eight and thirty thousand; two hundred and four and forty, where of the Plague thirty thousand, five hundred threescore and eighteen, of them in one week three thousand fourscore and ten, where the next year after, though the City were increased with great number of strangers, yet there dyed that year of all diseases, within London and the Liberties, but only four thousand, two hundred threescore and three persons. In the second year of his reign, a strange accident happened, to the terrour of all bloody Murtherers, which was this; one Anne Waters enticed by a lover of hers, consented to have her husband strangled, and then buried him secretly under the dung-hill in a Cow-house; whereupon the man being missing by his neighbours, and the wife C making shew of a wondering what was become of him; It pleased God, that one of the Inhabitants of the Town, dreamed one night, that his neighbour Waters was strangled, and buried under the dung-hill in a Cow-house; and upon declaring his dream, search being made by the Constable, the dead body was found as he had dreamed: and thereupon the wife was apprehended, and upon examination, confessing the fact, was burned. And now what hope can murtherers have of being concealed, when they are subject to be discovered by any mans dream? The nineteenth of January in his third year, a great Porpus was taken at Weslham, in a small Creek, a mile and a half within the Land: and within few days after a Whale came up within eight miles of London, whose body was seen divers times above water, and judged to exceed the length of the largest ship in the River: but when she tasted the fresh water, and scented the Land, she returned into the Sea. In his D fourth year, being the year 1607. a mighty West winde brought in the Sea into the River of Severn, with such violence, that in some places of Somersetshire and Gloucestershire, the waters in divers Towns and Villages, grew higher then the tops of their houses; so as (notwithstanding all courses that could be taken) there were drowned in Somersetshire 80. persons, and damages done to the value of twenty thousand pounds. At Coventry also, the seventh of April, so sudden a flood came into the Suburbs and City, that in one hour it rose in some places above three yards in height, to the great damage and hurt of many; and that which is as much strange, as it suddenly came, so it suddenly abated: so as in four hours and a half, it both came and went away. In his 6 year, being 1608. a frost began in December, which continued till April following, with such violence, that not only the Thames was so frozen, that Carts loaden were driven over it as on dry land, but many E Fowls and Birds perished, as also much herbage in gardens, especially Artichoaks and Rosemary were destroyed. This year also the 11. of April a Malt-house in the the Town of St. Edmundsbury being by chance set on fire, continued burning till it had consumed 160. houses: but by the Kings bountifullnesse, (giving 500. loads of timber) and the City of London relief, the Town was forthwith new builded, in a fairer manner then it was before. In the year 1613. on the seventeenth of April, in the parish of Standish in Lancashire, a maiden child was born, having four legs, four arms, two bellies joyned to one back: one head with two faces, the one before, the other behinde, like the picture of Janus.

This year also the 26 of June, in the Parish of Christ Church in Hampshire, one John Hitchel a Carpenter, lying in bed with his wife and a young childe by them, was himself and the childe both F burned to death with a sudden lightning, no fire appearing outwardly upon him, and yet lay burning for the space of almost three days, till he was quite consumed to ashes. This year also on the seventh of August, the Town of Dorchester was quite consumed with fire, begun in the house of a Tallow Chandler, destroying all the houses, except a few neer the Church, and all their wares and goods, to the value of two hundred thousand pounds, yet not any man or woman perished. About the same time also the Play-house called the Globe upon the Banks side near London, was quite consumed with fire by discharging a piece of Ordinance. and yet no man hurt: and about four years after, a new built Play-house, near Golding-lane called the Fortune, was by negligence of a candle, clean burnt down to the ground. In the year 1614. the Town of Stratford upon Avon, was burned. And lest the water should be behinde in doing of mischief, so great Inundations were at this time in Norfolk and Lincolnshire, that the Sea entred twelve miles into the Land. In the year 1612. on the 18. of November a blazing Star began to be seen in the South-east about five a clock in the morning, the flame or stream whereof, enclined towards the West. This comet, in the opinion of D. Bembridge, the great Mathematician of Oxford, was as far above the Moon, as the Moon is above the Earth: what it portended is only known to God; but the sequel of it was, that infinite slaughters and devastations followed upon it, both in Germany and other Countries. In the year 1623. on Fryday the 24. of October. a Roman Catholick Priest preached in the afternoon, at Hunsdon house in the Black-Fryers

A Fryers in London, in an upper chamber, where there were assembled above 300 men and women, when about the middle of the Sermon, a great part of the Floor brake, and fell down with such violence, that it brake down the next floor under it: in the fall whereof, were slain the Preacher, and almost 100 of his Auditors, besides as many more hurt. In this Kings time course paper, commonly called white brown paper was first made in England, specially in Surrey, and about Windsor.

Of his Wife and Children.

B HE married Anne, the Daughter of Frederick, the second King of Denmark, whose marriage was there solemnized in the year 1589. By whom he had born in Scotland, two Sons, Henry who dyed before him, and Charles who succeeded him in the Crown; and one Daughter named Elizabeth, married to Frederick the fifth of that name, Count Palatine of the Rhein, by whom she had many children, both Sons and Daughters. King James had also by his Wife Queen Anne, two other Daughters born in England, the Lady Mary, and the Lady Sophia, who both dyed young, the Lady Mary at about three years old, the Lady Sophia the next day after she was born; and were both of them buried with great solemnity, in the Chappel Royal at Westminster.

C HE was of stature somewhat higher then ordinary, of a well compacted body, of an auburn hair, of a full and pleasing visage; in his latter days inclining to be fat and burley; of bodily exercises, he took most delight in hunting; which yet (some thought) he used rather as a retiring himself from the importunity of State affairs, then for any great pleasure he took in it. It is said, that he had such a fashion in riding, that it could not so properly be said he rid, as that his Horse carried him; for he made but little use of his Bridle, and would say, a Horse never stumbled, but when he was reined. He was of an admirable pregnancy of wit, and that pregnancy much improved by continual study from his childhood: by which, he had gotten such a promptness in expressing his minde, that his extemporal speeches were little inferior to his premeditated writings. Many, no doubt, had read as much, and perhaps more then he; but scarce ever any concocted his reading into judgement as he did: by which he became so judicious, that though he could not Prophecy, yet he could preface; and his Conjectures were little lesse then Oracles. In all the Liberal Sciences, he was (we may say) a Master of Arts: but in Divinity, a Doctor, as he made appear in the Conference at Hampton Court, and is seen still by the learned Writings he hath left behinde him. And as for that part of the Politicks, which concerns Monarchy, Regere Imperio populos, which himself used to call King Craft: in this he excelled. He knew how to take the inclinations of the people at their first bound, and never suffer them to rise higher, then he could well reach them: nor to grow stronger, then he could either alter or divert them. He would be sure to keep his Subjects in a temper of contentment; which if he could not do by preventives, he would by lenitives. He was so wise, that he could dissemble, without seeming a Dissembler: be free in opening his mind, and yet keep counsel. He was a provident Pilot, that in a calm would provide for a storm: and you should never find him committing the fault of Non putaram. He was both Marti & Mercurio; but not tam Marti quam Mercurio, as being of his temper who said, Cedant Arma Toge: and indeed seeing peace is the end of both, it were not wisdom to seek it by Arms, if it may be had by the Gown, as it is in the Aphorism, Consilio omnia experiri prius, quam Armis sapientem decet. That which was bounty in him being a King, would have been frugality, if he had been a private person, there being of both one radical reason. Of all the Moral virtues, he was eminent for chastity; in which the Poet seems to include all vertue: where he saith;

His promptness in expressing his minde.

His Learning, specially in Divinity.

His wisdom.

His chastity.

Nalli fas casto sceleratum insistere limen.

F By nulli casto, meaning no vertuous person; it was a manifest argument of his being an excellent Prince, that coming next to the admirable Queen Elizabeth, which was in a manner to compare them together: yet there appeared no inequality, that it might not untruly be said, King James was but the continuation of Queen Elizabeth: the same vertue, though different sexes: And now to expresse his Character in a word, which worthily might be matter for many volumes: He was to his Wife a most loyal Husband, to his children a most loving Father, to his servants a most bountiful Master, to his Subjects a most just Prince, to all Princes near him a most peaceable neighbour; that more justly it may be said of him, then of whom it was said, Que te tam laeta tulitum secula?

G A Prince after Plato's own heart, for his learning, and which is infinitely more worth, after Gods own heart, for his Religiousnesse and Piety.

Of his Death and Buriall.

OF his death, there were many scandalous rumors spread, and some were so impudent, as to write that he was poysoned, as the Duke of Richmond, and the Marquess Hamilton had been before: but King James being dead, and his body opened, there was found no sign at all of poyson, his inward parts being all sound, but that his Spleen was a little faulty, which might be cause enough to cast him into an Ague: the ordinary high way, especially in old bodies, to a natural death: of this Ague after a moneths languishing, notwithstanding all the remedies that could be applyed, he departed this life at Theobalds, on the 27. of March, in the year 1625. in B the 59. of his age, when he had Reigned two and twenty years compleat; His body for the greater State, was conveyed by Torch light, from Theobalds to Denmark house, who having rested from the 23. of Aprill, to the 7. of May, it was carryed to Westminster, and there interred in the Chappel Royal with great solemnity, but with greater lamentation: there being scarce any of the infinite multitude that was present, of whom it might not be said,

Multa gemens, largoque humectat flumine vultum.

Military Men of Note, in a time of Peace, as the whole Reign of King James was, we have no reason to expect; yet if we look amongst the Voluntaries that went to the School of War in the Low-Countries; we shall finde a pair of brothers, that may stand in comparifon, with the greatest souldiers in the most Martial times, Sir Francis Vere, who as another Hannibal, with his one eye, could see more in the Martial Discipline, then common men can do with two; and Sir Horatio Vere, who as another Philopamen, contained in a very little body, a very great both skill and courage. But for men of Note in Learning, as being in the time of a most learned Prince, there was never greater store; of whom these for example. In curiosnesse of Preaching, there was Doctor Andrews Bishop of Winchester; who hath left to posterity, a Century of such golden Sermons, that shews, he as well deserved the name of Chrysostom, as he that had it. In multiplicity of Reading, there was Doctor Reynolds of Corpus Christi College in Oxford; who seemed as it were, a living Library; and one would have thought his Memory to be a perfect Index of all the Books had ever been written. In knowledge of Law there was Sir Edward Coke, Chief Justice of the Kings Bench; who hath written such excellent Commentaries of the Law, that he seems as another Bartholus or Baldus amongst us. In Elegancy of writing, there was Sir Francis Bacon Viscount Saint Albans, who besides his profounder Books of Novum Organum, hath written the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, in so sweet a style, that like Mamma, it pleaseth the tast of all palats. In the skill of Antiquities, there was William Camden, King at Arms; who hath set forth the Description of Britain, and the life of Queen Elizabeth in so lively colours, that he seems to have brought Britain out of darknesse into light, and to keep Queen Elizabeth alive after death. And to speak it in a word, the Trojan Horse was not fuller of Herodick Grecians, then King James his Reign was full of men excellent in all kindes of Learning. And here I desire the Reader leave to remember two of my own old acquaintance, the one was Mr. John Dunne, who leaving Oxford, lived at the Innes of Court, not dissolute, but very neat; a great Visiter of Ladies, a great frequenter of Playes, a great writer of conceited Verses; until such time as King James taking notice of the pregnancy of his Wit, was a means that he betook him to the study of Divinity, and thereupon proceeding Doctor, was made Dean of Pauls; and became so rare a Preacher, that he was not only commended, but even admired by all that heard him. The other was Henry Wootton, (mine old acquaintance also, as having been fellow pupils, and chamber fellows in Oxford divers years together.) This Gentleman was employed by King James in Embassage to Venice; and indeed the Kingdom afforded not a fitter man, for matching the Capriciousnesse of the Italian Wits: a man of so able dexterity with his Pen, that he hath done himself much wrong, and the Kingdom more, in leaving no more of his Writings behinde him.

Of the English Plantations in the Indies, that were in King JAMES his time.

AND now we are come to a time, wherein we may very near say as much of King James, as was laid of Augustus Caesar: Super & Garamantas & Indos proferet Imperium. In this betwixt that where Augustus did it by the violent way of Arm, King James did it by the civill way of Plantations: for in his days began the great plantation of the English in the Indies; and must be acknowledged the proper effect of his peaceable Government. The first Plantation

A of the English in the Indies; was that which is now called Virginia, in memory of the Virgin Queen Elizabeth: but called before Wingandacoa. It was first discovered by Sir Walter Rawleigh, in the year 1584; to whom the first Letters Patents were granted for making a Plantation there: but yet no Colony was sent thither, till the year 1606. It is a Countrey in America, between the degrees of 34, and 45, of the North Latitude: but that part of it which is planted by the English, is under the Degrees of 37, 38, and 39. It is no Island, as many have imagined, but a part of the Continent adjoining to Florida. The first and chief Town made here by the English, is called James Town, in honour of the Kings most excellent Majesty. It is a Countrey abounding with all sorts of Fish and Fowl; so fruitful, that it yeelds thirty and sometimes forty Bushels of Corn upon an Acre: and that, (which to us is more strange) hath three harvests in a year, the Corn being sowed, ripe and reaped, in little more then two moneths. Many plantations had been attempted here before, but came to nothing: the first to any purpose was in the year 1607. under the conduct of Captain Gosnoll, John Smith, and Mr. Edward Maria Winkfield, who carryed a Colony thither of a hundred persons; but of these, many dying of sicknesse, or slain by the Savages, a new supply came in the year 1608. of a hundred and twenty persons, under the conduct of Captain Nelson. After which, was sent another supply of threescore and ten persons; and in the year 1609. a third supply came of five hundred persons, under a Patent granted to Sir Thomas West, Lord de la Ware, but conducted thither by Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Summers, and others. In the year 1611. was a fourth supply of three hundred men under the conduct of Sir Thomas Gates. In the year 1612. two other supplies were sent of forty men in each; and now was the Lottery spoken of before granted by the King, for further supplies of this Plantation. After this Master Samuel Argall being appointed Governour in the year 1618. the Lord de la Ware came thither with a supply of two hundred people; but in his stay there, dyed: After this, in the year 1620. were sent thither eleven Ships, with twelve hundred and sixteen persons, and now they founded themselves into Corporations: In the year 1621. Sir Francis Wiat was sent thither Governour, with thirteen hundred men, women, and children, and now they founded Schools, and Courts of Justice; and the Plantation was extended a hundred and forty miles up, on the River of both sides. But now when the English were secure, and thought of nothing but peace, the Savages came suddenly upon them, and slew of them three hundred and seven and forty men, women, and children. For repairing of which losse, the City of London sent presently over a supply of a hundred men. This massacre happened, by reason they had built their Plantations remote from one another, in above thirty several places, which made them now upon consultation, to reduce them all to five or six places, whereby they may better assist each other: since which time, they have always lived in good security. And thus much for Virginia.

The first Plantation of Virginia: and what Countrey it is, and abounding with what commodities.

Upon their security, 300 of them slain by the savages.

The Plantation of the Bermudas: why called Somers Isles.

Amber-greece in great quantity found in the Island.

The Plantation of New-England: and the commodities of the Countrey.

Next was the Plantation of the Island called Bermudas, so called of a Spanish Ship, called Bermudas which was there cast away, carrying Hogs to the West-Indies, that swam a shoar, and there increased. The first English man that entred this Isle, was one Henry May, in the year 1591. but in the year 1610. Sir George Somers was sent thither, who dying there, in memory of his name, the Isles have ever since been called Somers Isles. In the year 1612. one Mr. Moore landed there with 60 persons, and then builded the chief Town there called S. Georges, together with 8 or 9 Forts. The same year a supply of 30 more persons was sent thither, and the year after 60 more, under one Mr. Bartlet; with a shew to survey the land; but with a purpose indeed to get from thence a great lump of Amber-greece, and no lesse then 80 pound weight, that had been found and taken up in the Island some few years before, and was there still retained. A while after this came a ship called the Blessing, with a 100 passengers; and two days after came the Star, with a 180 more; and within 14 days after that again came thither the Margaret and two Frigats, with 130 passengers: So as now they began to divide the Countrey into Tribes, and the Tribes into shares. In the year 1616. Captain Daniel Tucker was sent from Virginia to be Governor there, and now it began indeed to be a Plantation; for now they began to build them houses: and now was sent from thence into England, a Ship freighted with 30000 weight of Tobacco, valued there but at 2 s. 6 d. the pound, though sold here oftentimes for Verino's at great rates. In the year 1619, Captain Nathaniel Butler was sent Governour, with new supplies, in whose time they build them a Church; held Assizes for Criminal causes, twice a year; and began to have Parliaments as in England: and now in the Ship called the Magazin, came divers Gentlemen of good fashion, with their wives and families: so as now their number was no fewer then fifteen hundred people: Dispersed twenty miles in length. In the year 1622, came Governour M. John Bernard, bringing with him a supply of a 140 persons; but he and his wife dying presently upon their coming, M. John Harrison in the year 1623. was chosen Governour. These Isles of Bermudas are in 32 degrees of Northern latitude: so as they are distant from Virginia, at least 500 leagues, and from England above three thousand three hundred. This Countrey is of a most healthful air, abounding with all sorts of Fowls, Birds and Fish; and where great pieces of Amber-greece are oftentimes found, which is valued there at no lesse then three pounds an ounce. And thus much concerning the state of Bermudas, till the year 1624.

Next comes the Plantation of New-England; concerning which, we must first know, that King James in the year 1606, granted two Letters Patents for Plantations in Virginia, one to the City of London; another to the City of Bristow, Excester and Plimmouth; with power to plant Colonies any where between the Degrees of 38 and 44, provided there should be at least a 100 miles distance between the two Colonies. So as the first Colony was from the City of London

London, and is that which is called Virginia; The second Colony was from Bristow and the other Towns, and is that which is now called New-England, and is situate between the degrees of 41 and 45: the very mean betwixt the North Pole and the Line. And now to speak a little of the Countrey, there are on the Sea coast, 25 excellent good Harbours, in some whereof there is Anchorage for 500 sail of Ships of any burthen. The Earth is fruitful, and the Air as healthful, as any part of the World: abounding with all sorts of Grain, Fowls and Fish: Many of such kindes as are to us unknown, yet excellent meat: Many Voyages had been made for the perfect discovery of the Countrey: Many attempts for setting a Plantation there: Many Miscarriages and Disasters in making the attempts: but all at last came to this, that in the year 1624 (which is the limit of our Narration) there was a Plantation settled, though but a small one: but a few years after (by the sending forth of new supplies) encreased to so many thousands, that if God continue to prosper it, as he hath begun, the New-England in a few ages may prove as populous as the Old; and the King of England likely to have as many and greater Crowns in the Indies then he had in his Realms of Great Britain and Ireland. But seeing of these and all other English Plantations in the Indies, whereof there are many; large discourses are written by divers Authors; it should be more then superfluous to speak more of them in this place: It is sufficient to have shewed that King James had the honour, to have them settled in his time, and under the influence of his peaceable Government.

Of the Earls and Barons made by King JAMES.

IN former Kings Reigns, the making of Earls and Barons was but rare, and therefore they are fitly set down, at the several times of their making; but in King James his Reign, there were so many made, that it may not be unfit, to set them down in a Catalogue together.

In his first year were made four Earls and nine Barons: namely, Henry Howard, younger brother of the last Duke of Norfolk, was made Earl of Northampton: Thomas Sackville Lord Buckhurst, was made Earl of Dorset; and shortly after Charles Blunt Lord Mounjoy, was made Earl of Devonshire, and Thomas Howard Baron of Walden, was made Earl of Suffolk: Henry Grey was made Lord Grey of Groby, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Stanford) Henry Danvers was made Baron of Danby, (afterwards by King Charles made Earl of Danby) Sir John Peter of Essex, was made Baron of Writtle: Sir William Russel was made Baron of Thornough: Sir Thomas Gerard was made Baron of Gerards Bromley in Staffordshire: Sir Robert Spencer was made Baron of Wormelayton in the County of Warwick: Sir Thomas Egerton was made Baron of Elmeston: and Sir Robert Cecil was created Baron of Henden in Rutlandshire: and Sir John Harington was made Baron of Exton.

In his second year on the 20 of May were made four Barons and one Viscount: Sir Robert Sidney was made Baron of Penhurst: Sir William Knowles, Baron of Graves: Sir Edward Wootton Baron of Marley: and Mildmay Fane, Lord de Spencer; and in August the same year, Sir Robert Cecil Baron of Essenden, was created Viscount Cranburn.

In his third year on the 4 of May, were created three Earls, and one Viscount, and four Barons; namely, Sir Robert Cecil Viscount Cranburn, was created Earl of Salisbury: Sir Thomas Cecil his elder brother Lord Furghley, was created Earl of Exeter; and Sir Philip Herbert, younger brother to the Earl of Pembroke, was created Earl of Montgomery: Robert Sidney Baron of Penhurst, was created Viscount of Lisle: Sir John Stanhope, was made Baron of Harington: Sir George Carew, Baron of Clopton: Mr. Thomas Arundell of Devonshire, Baron of Warder; and Mr. William Cavendish, Baron of Hardwick.

In his fourth year, on the fourth of July, Sir Thomas Knevet, was called by writ to the Parliament, by the name of Baron of Estrick, and was thereby Baron of that Title; and on the seventh of September, Sir Jervis Clifton was likewise called by writ to the Parliament, by the name of Baron of Layton Brumfensfold, and was thereby Baron of that Title.

In his ninth year, upon Easter munday, Sir Robert Carr was created Viscount Rochester: and

In his tenth year, on the fourth of November, was created Earl of Somerset.

In his eleventh year, Lewis Steward Duke of Lenox, was made Earl of Richmond, and after, Duke of Richmond.

In his thirteenth year, on the 29 of June, Sir James Hay of Scotland was created Baron of Sawley, and about three years after, was made Viscount Doncaster, and Sir Robert Dormer was created Baron of Wyng, (afterward by King Charles was made Earl of Carnarvan.)

In his fourteenth year, on the 9 of July, Sir John Hollys Knight, was created Haughton of Haughton in the County of Nottingham, and Sir John Roper of Kent, was made Baron of Tenham: and on the 17 of August, Sir George Villiers was created Baron of Whadden, and Viscount Villiers, and on the 7 of November, Thomas Egerton Lord Elmeston, was created Viscount Brackley, and he dying soon after, his Son John was created Earl of Bridgewater; William Lord Knowles was created Viscount Wallingford; and Sir Philip Stanhope was created Baron of Shelford: On the 5 of Jan. the Viscount Villiers was created Earl of Buckingham, and on the third of March, Sir Edw. Noell of Rutlandshire, was made Baron of Ryddlington.

In his fifteenth year, on New years day, Sir George Villiers Earl of Buckingham, was created Marquess of

A of Buckingham, and on the 12. of July, Sir Francis Bacon Lord Chancellor of England, was created Baron of Verulam, and not long after Viscount Saint Albans. Also in the Summer of this year, the King created four Earls and one Countesse: namely the Viscount Lisle was made Earl of Leicester, the Lord Compton was made Earl of Northampton, the Lord Rich was made Earl of Warwick, the Lord Cavendish was made Earl of Devonshire, and the Lady Compton wife to Sir Thomas Compton, and mother of the Marquesse of Buckingham was created Countesse of Buckingham.

In his sixteenth year, on the 25 of November, Sir John Digby Vicechamberlain to the King was created Baron of Sherbourn, by Patent to him and his heirs Males.

B In his seventeenth year, in the moneth of June, Esme Steward Lord d' Aubigny, younger brother to the Duke of Lenox, was created Earl of March; James Marquesse Hamilton was created Earl of Cambridge, and Sir John Villiers brother to the Marquesse of Buckingham was created Baron of Stock and Viscount Purbeck.

In his eighteenth year, William Cavendish was created Viscount Mansfield; (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Newcastle) and on Munday the fourth of December, Sir Henry Montague, being first made Lord Treasurer, was created Baron of Kimbolton, and Viscount Mandevile, and not long after, Earl of Manchester, and Sir John Ramsay Viscount Haddington of Scotland was created Earl of Holderness, and William Fielding was created Baron of Newenham, and Viscount Fielding.

C In his nineteenth year, Henry Cary was made Lord Cary of Leppington, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Munmouth) Sir Edward Montague elder brother to the Viscount Mandevile was made Baron of Boulton, the Lord Darcie of Essex, was created Viscount Colchester, (afterward by King Charles made Earl Rivers) the Lord Hunston was created Viscount Rockford, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Dover) Sir Lyonell Cranfield, Master of the Wards, was created Baron Cranfield in Bedfordshire; and Sir Thomas Howard, second son to Thomas Earl of Suffolk, was created Baron of Charleton, and Viscount Andover, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Barkshire.)

In his twentieth year, in the moneth of September, the Viscount Doncaster, was created Earl of Carlisle, the Viscount Fielding was created Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Digby was made Earl of Bristow, the Lord Cranfield was created Earl of Middlesex, and Sir Henry Rich was made Baron of Kensington.

D In his one and twentieth year, the Marquesse of Buckingham, being then in Spain with Prince Charles, had his Patent sent him to be Duke of Buckingham; William Grey was created Baron of Wark, Elizabeth the widow of Sir Moyle Finch of Kent, was created Viscountesse Maidstone, (afterward by King Charles made Countesse of Winchelsey.)

E In his two and twentieth year, the Earl of Clanriccard of Ireland, was created Viscount Tunbridge in Kent, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Saint Albans.) Sir John Holles Knight, Baron Haughton of Haughton was created Earl of Clare, Sir Henry Rich Baron of Kensington was created Earl of Holland, the Lord Fines, Baron of Say and Seale, was made Viscount Say and Seale: Sir Francis Fane was created Earl of Westmerland, Oliver Lord St. John of Bleisbo, was made Earl of Bullinbrook, Sir Christopher Villiers brother to the Duke of Buckingham, was made Earl of Anglesey, and Sir James Ley was made Lord Lee (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Mariborough.) Also this year, Sir Francis Leake was made Baron of Deincourt, and Sir Richard Roberts was made Lord Roberts of Truro in Cornwall.

F And this was the number of all the Earls and Barons made by King James; but in his time also began another sort of Nobility to be made in England, which had none of the privileges of English Barons, but had only Title to be called Lords, of some place either in England or Ireland, although they possessed not a foot of Land in either: Of which sort, the number being great; I forbear to rehearse them, lest I should be tedious, or otherwise be thought to encroach too much upon the Heralds office. It is sufficient to have shewed, that King James advanced so many in honor, that in a kinde it might be said of him, as was said of Augustus Caesar, That he left Rome of Marble, which he found but of Brick.

THE REIGN OF KING CHARLES.

KING James being deceased on the 27 day of March in the Forenoon, the same day in the Afternoon, Charles, Prince of Wales, his only Son then living, was proclaimed King of Great Britains France, and Ireland, with the generall Acclamation of all sorts of People, as being a Prince of admirable Endowments both of Mind and Body. He was now about the Age of 25 years, whereof, the most part of one he had spent in Spain; where, although he was frustrated of the end for which he went, yet it gave him a tincture of Travell and Experience, more worth perhaps, then the end he went for: For by this means he attained to a greater degree of that, which made Ulysses so famous.

Quod mores hominum multorum vidit & urbes.

The first thing he did after his Coronation, and the Ceremonies of his Fathers Funerall (in which he himself in person followed as chief Mourner, immediately after the Hearse, having his Train of black Velvet borne up by twelve Peers of the Realm; and at his right hand the Earl of Arundel, at his left the Earl of Pembroke.) Was to proceed in the Marriage agreed upon in his Fathers time, with the beautifull and vertuous Lady Henrieta Maria, younger Daughter of the Great Henry the Fourth, King of France: After which Marriage, we have only to say, that he was happy in the Wife of his Bosome, happy in his hopefull Issue, happy in the Love of his People, happy in the Peace and Tranquillity of his Kingdomes, and happy in the continuance of all these Happineses, for fifteen years together, and might have so continued still, if it had not been for Discordia demens,

But of that which happened afterward, I dare not take upon me to be a Register; Neither is it indeed safe to begin a Narration, which I must be fain to break off in amazement, as having nothing left me to say, but, Omnia in malum ruere: and so far from any appearance of humane remedy, that our only Anchor must be this; In te Domine speramus, non confundamur in aeternum: Quid enim nisi vota supersunt? Yet our hope is, It will be but a fit, and the storm once past, fair Weather again, and fairer perhaps then it was before, and then with Joy we shall resume our Stile, Latumque choro Peana canemus.

In the mean time, comforting our selves with the words of the Prophet David; Many are the troubles of the Righteous, but the Lord delivers him out of them all.

Carolus en Rex magnus in armis, major inermis.

Quid mirum? Imperio magnus, amore magis.

THUS far Sir Richard Baker an elegant and acute Writer hath deduc'd the History of England, from the very first beginning of the Romans Government in this Nation; having brought us to the very Threshold or Entrance of King Charles his Reign, and there left us; though intending, as it seems, had the success of things been answerable to his expectation, and the storm blowing over, been followed, by a Calm and Halcion Season, to have proceeded unto the end thereof.

and it were to be wisht, that he who with so happy a Career had travel'd through a History so full of variety, and fraught with so many great and memorable passages, had also brought it down to the very close, and finish'd the Catastrophe of this Tragedy: but if the lowering Menaces of the Storm he speaks of, induc'd him to break off in amazement, expecting the return of fair Weather, and better Daies; no wonder if the sad and fatall Effects it afterwards produc'd, forc'd him to abandon all thoughts of resuming his Stile. This Task therefore I rather by others solicitation, then my own choice, have undertaken, though not without some reluctance, as both distrustful of my Ability to keep up the Reputation of the History, coming after so judicious and well receiv'd an Author, and toucht with the same sense of the deplorable and unhappy passages I shall come at last to deliver, Infandum adigor renovare dolorem: but since it is necessary, that all Occurrences should be equally known and transmitted to Posterity, as well those which have the smiling Aspect of Prosperity, as those which bear the rugged form of adverse Fortune: I here recommend to the generall View, a faithfull account of what ever hapned observable in this Kings Reign, which I may safely say, affords no less variety and wonder, then the Reign of any former King, either of this, or of any other Nation: and what ever I may haply want of our Authors Stile, and prudent Conduct; I hope I shall not be thought to come far short in Truth and Impartiality of the Relation, intending neither on the one hand, out of a fawning Assentation, to cry up all that hath been acted by the prevailing power, insulting over the Calamities of a deprest and unfortunate Party; nor on the other, to cast any severe and satyricall reflections upon the Miscarriages that may be judg'd to have been committed by either Side, since nothing could have been done, but by the permission of All-over-ruling Providence; nor is it to be accounted any strange or unheard of matter, that a verteous man, be he Prince, or private person, should be brought to an unfortunate and untimely end.

The Introduction to the History you have already had from Sir Richard Baker himself; of that which next immediately follows, you may now, Bonis Avibus, proceed to the perusal.

IN prosecution of the Marriage, the King having sent over an Emisarry to Lewis the Thirteenth, then King of France (as he did to other Princes in Amity with him) to give notice of his Fathers deceale; he ordered also Letters of Procuracion or Proxy, to the Duke of Cheveraux, of the House of Guise, his neer Kinsman, as being lineally descended from Claudius of Loraine, Father-in-law to James the Fifth of Scotland.

The Duke of Cheveraux as King Charles's Proxy Espoused the Queen in France.

The Duke of Cheveraux therefore as King Charles's Proxy, Espoused her on Sunday, May the first, according to our stile; the Espousals were performed by Cardinal Richelieu, notwithstanding that the Office was desir'd and claim'd by the Arch-bishop of Paris, from whose Pallace the young Queen was conducted in solemn Pomp, by the King, Queen and Nobles of France (the Duke of Cheveraux in a rich black Suit, lin'd with Cloath of Gold, and beset with Diamonds, being attended on each hand by the King of Englands Ambassadors, the Earls of Carlisle, and Holland, both attir'd in beaver Silver) to the Church of Notre Dame, before the Frontispiece of which, was erected a Theater, where, under a Canopie of State, the Queen of England was delivered up to the Duke of Cheveraux, in behalf of King Charles; by her two Brothers, the King of France, and the Monsieur Gaston, Duke of Orleans: thence they went to the Church, where their Service was performed; after which the English Ambassadors came to the Door of the Quire, and took their places: then the whole Company, in the same order they came, return'd back to the great Hall of the Archbishops Palace; where a splendid Entertainment was prepared for them at the middle of the Table; under a Canopy sate the King of France, at his left hand the Queen of Great Britain, at his right, the Queen-Mother, next the Queen of England, sate the Duke of Cheveraux, and next him the Earls of Carlisle, and Holland.

She prepares for England.

As soon as the Nuptiall Solemnities were past, her Majesty prepared for England; for whose more honourable conveyance, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Earls of Carlisle, Holland, and Montgomery, cross'd the Seas and came to Paris: hence after a convenient stay for interchanging of reciprocall Adieus, the royall Bride, accompanied with her Mother, younger Brother, Duke and Dutcheß of Cheveraux, and other Persons of eminent Quality, besides the fore-mentioned English Attendants, set forwards for Amiens, where for a Fortnights space she received Princely Entertainment, and then took leave of her Mother, who was there attacked with a violent sickness, which stopp'd her further journeying. From Amiens the Queen with the rest of her Company pass'd on to Boloigne (for Calais was then infected) at which place she found ready for her reception the Royall Fleet of 21 ships sent from her Spouse with a noble Convoy of the Countess of Buckingham, and an honourable Train of Ladies. It will be needles to relate what Careßes the old Countess did there receive for her Sons sake, as, A personall Visit from the Monsieur at her own Lodging, and the precedence forced upon her by a too civill Complement of the great Dutcheß of Cheveraux: And now Monsieur takes leave of his Sister, who presently set Sail for England, and arriv'd safe at Dover, notwithstanding the tempestuous turbulence of the Sea, which then seem'd to portend her future Infelicity.

The

A The King himself was come thither from Canterbury, to greet his long desired Consort, at which meeting, both Parties were wonderfully surpris'd: he to find his Queens Beauty and Stature (to his joy) incredibly amended since his first view of her at Paris; she, to see her self (hitherto free) now in the power and subjection of another. But these Resentments once over their Majesties began to think of their Journey to Canterbury, where their Nuptials were in most stately manner accomplished: And the Duke of Cheveraux in his Sovereigns Name surrendered up his Charge to the British Monarch. From Canterbury the pair Royall passed in Coach to Gravesend, with the Acclamations of millions of people (who had placed themselves all along the way to behold them) and there took water in the Barge of State, for Somerset House, being rowed through the Navy Royall, which was disposed on each side of the shoars; B and in order Vollied the Princely Passengers till their Landing: where, three dayes after, the King and Queen shewed themselves on magnificent Thrones to the Nobility, and had their Marriage solemnly proclaimed; which being performed, their Majesties removed to Hampton-Court, by reason that London was infected with the Plague, as it had also been in the first year of King James.

King Charles now taking Truce with his Affections, called a Parliament, about the business of the Palatinates, which Assembled on the Eighteenth of June; And Sir Thomas Crew was Speaker of the House of Commons: It was observed, that the precedent Kings (the last only excepted) usually transmitted their Minds to Parliaments by their Chancellors; but King Charles himself saluted these Senators with a short, yet pithy Speech.

C Wherein he represented unto them the urgent necessity of raising a Subsidy; seeing, That it would not agree with his Kingly Honour to shrink from a War which his Father, upon solid Considerations, had by consent of both Houses undertaken, although prevented by Death from putting it in Execution.

That Moneys, the Sinews of War, must be levied, without which, neither Army, nor Fleet could move, former Contributions being already disbursed to D a Penny.

That he should seem ridiculous to all Europe, if he did not now at length proceed to Action.

That it was his first Enterprize, the Success whereof would be influentiall upon his following Reign.

That it concerned their own Reputations, herein to assist him effectually, least the World should judge them to have betrayed their King.

E That Celerity was requisite, because of Winter then approaching, a Season prejudiciall to Martiall Attempts; the Pestilence at that time Regnant in the City, which in all probability might cause a sudden dissolution of their Meeting.

All which Arguments, if duly considered, did evidently demonstrate, That it was most Honourable, Opportune, and Safe, to use Expedition in the Business.

As for his Religion, and manner of Government, he determined to tread in his Fathers steps, hoping that his former Life had ministred no just Grounds of any contrary Suspicion. It is reported of an Asian King, that he told his Son; If he knew the ponderous burthensomness F of a Crown, he would not take it up, though lying at his Feet: And certainly King Charles at this present found his Brows so oppressed with the weight of the massie Gold, and pretious Stones of his Crown, that for the ease of them he was then forced to move it with his hand; and afterwards complained of the pain received by it: whose ensuing Reign did irrefragably prove it to grow like the Child upon St. Christophers Back, each hour more heavy and burthensome then other; And even then did give occasion to some curious and criticall Wits to make many ominous Prefages thereupon. The motion of the Parliament was as heavy as the Crown, who acknowledged the fore-mentioned Incitements for a Subsidy to be very rationally; yet would not suddenly resolve upon it, untill they had first presented their two Petitions concerning reasons of Religion, and Complaints of their Sufferings; which Points had been offered to his Father in the close of his last Parliament, and by his death left hitherto unanswered.

G In both which receiving competent satisfaction, as also an account of the disbursement of his Land, and Navall Forces, with an Audit of the future Charges and Expences of the Spanish War: He obtained of the Layity absolutely and freely two Subsidies from Protestants, four from Papists, and of the Clergy three. In this Parliament Doctor Montague the Kings Chaplain was questioned for certain Tenents in his Answer to the Romish Gagger, and his Defence thereof, filed, Apello Casarem; being brought to the Bar, the Speaker declared the pleasure of the House, That they would refer his Censure to the next Meeting; and in the mean time he should stand committed to the Serjeants Ward, untill two thousand pounds Bail could be procured for his appearance next Sessions; and although the King took him into his protection, as being his Servant, yet his Bail-Bond remained uncanceled. In this Parliament were Laws Enacted;

Against Abuses committed on Sundayes.

For the King to make Leases of Lands, parcell of his Highness Dutchy of Cornwall, or annexed to the same.

For the ease of obtaining Licenses of Alienation, and in the pleading of Alienations with license; or of pardon of Alienations without license in the Court of Exchequer, or elsewhere.

For the further restraint of Tipling, and such like mis-behaviour in Innes, Ale-houses, and other Victualling Houses.

That this Session shall not determine by the Kings assent to these Acts.

There passed also in the House of Commons, A Bill of Tonnage and Poundage: but this was foundred in the House of Lords, because the House of Commons had limited it to a year: (whereas former Grants to the Kings Predecessors were for term of life) out of a design to reduce those Customs to the Rate settled in Queen Maries Reign. During this Session, the Lord Mordant a Papist, and his Wife a Protestant, desirous of one anothers Conversion, put their Cause upon a Disputation between the Archbishop of Armagh, and one Rookwood a Jesuit, calling himself Beaumont; wherein the Learned Primate so foiled his Adversary, at Draiton in Northamptonshire, about the points of Transubstantiation, Invocation to Saints, Images, and Visibility of the Church: That the Lord Mordant was convinced and converted, and his Lady confirmed.

On the Eleventh of July this year, the Parliament by reason of the Sickness Adjourned till the First of August; when they met again at Oxford, the Commons in the Divinity School, and the Lords in the Gallery above: shortly after which, the King calling them together at Christs Church Hall, urged to them (first by a Speech delivered to them himself; next by the two Secretaries, the Lord Conway, and Sir John Cook, who succeeded Sir Albertus Morton) His necessities of setting forth a Fleet for the recovery of the Palatinate. Moreover, the Lord Treasurer instanc'd the severall summs which King James died indebted to the City of London. These things produced high Debates among the Commons, who alledged;

That evill Counsels guided the Kings Designs.

That the Treasury was mis-employed.

That our Necessities arose through Improvidence.

That it would be necessary to Petition the King for a streight Hand, and better Councell to mannage his Affairs.

That though a former Parliament engaged the King in a War, yet, if things were mannag'd by contrary Designs, and the Treasure mis-employed, this Parliament was not bound to be carried blindfold in Designs not guided by sound Councell.

That it was not usuall to grant Subsidies upon Subsidies in one Parliament, and no Grievances redress'd.

With severall other passages of the like Nature; they had also many Reflections upon the Dukes Mis-carriages: but in conclusion, they promis'd to take the Kings Desires into Consideration, and presented him a Petition against Recusants, Describing their Ends, ascribing their growth to certain Causes, and prescribing certain Remedies: Whereunto a plausible Answer was returned. And thereupon ensued a Debate in the House concerning Supplies; Some would Contribute presently, Others demurred, as disliking the Enterprize in hand, and inclining more to Sir Robert Mansell's Project, hitherto concealed, which was also approved by the Lord Chichester, but rejected by the Councel of War. Finally, The Major part agreed not to give, and growing incensed against the Duke of Buckingham, the Lord Admirall (as chief Opposer of Mansell's Plot) began to think of divesting him of his Admiralty, and other Offices, and Revenues; and to demand an Account of those publike Moneys wherewith he had been intrusted. All which they concluded to couch into an humble Remonstrance: to prevent which, the King determined to dissolve the Parliament, and accordingly the Usher of the black Rod, was sent from the House of Lords with that Message to the Commons, who were then resolved into a Grand Committee, and understanding the Kings Mind, caused the Speaker then in the Chair to keep his Seat, while they agreed upon this Protestation: To give his Majesty thanks for his gracious Answer to their Petition for Religion, and for his care of their Health, in giving them leave to depart this dangerous time of Sickness; And upon a durifull Declaration of their Affection and Loyalty, and purpose to supply him in a Parliamentary way, in a fitting and convenient time.

The Grounds of the Spanish War were these; 1. The recovery of the Palatinate. 2. A fear of the subversion of our civill Estate: Upon which Considerations, a Resolution pass the Council

A Council, for the Fleet to put speedily to Sea, and to conserve strict Amity with France, Denmark, and the united Provinces: with these last the King had entered a League, Offensive and Defensive, against the House of Austria, and promised to assist them in soliciting other Princes to the like confederation; conditionally, that they should bear a fourth part of the Charge of the Fleet. Now were the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland dispatched to the Hague; who, meeting with the Ambassadors of France and Denmark, concluded a League for restoring the Liberties of Germany; the two last being no further Impowred from their Supreams.

Since in this History we meet with frequent mention of the Palatinate which had no small Influence upon the most weighty Transactions of this Nation, by reason of the great Zeal which the King of England had for the Restitution of Prince Frederick, allyed to him by Marriage;
B It will very much conduce to the better understanding of severall passages which herein often occur, to know the Originall Causes and Grounds of that War, which, to be brief, thus hapned.

The Hussites of Bohemia (for so those of the Reformation were call'd from Joh. Huss, one of the first of those that preacht among them a Defection from Romish Superstition) were desirous to build them a Church for the free exercise of their Religion, of which they layd the Foundation at a Town call'd Brunaw, and began another at Clostergrabe; hereat the Emperour Matthias taking distast, in regard these places were not under the Jurisdiction of any of the Reformed States, but belong'd, one of them to the Abbot of Brunaw, the other to the Archbishop of Prague; sent an Express to the Promoters of this Work to desist, which they refusing,
C and still going on in their intended Design, they were forcibly interrupted by the Emperours Order, their new-raised Walls raz'd to the ground, and divers of the Townsmen of Brunaw committed to Prison, for contempt of the Imperial Orders. This was hainously resented by the principal men, and gave occasion of great Uproars; for the people, gathering together into a numerous Company, demanding their just Priviledges, and the Liberty of their Imprison'd Citizens, made toward the Tower of Prague, where divers of the Emperours chief Ministers of State were sitting in Council; Adam a Sternbergh Burgrave of the Kingdome, William Stabata President of the Bohemian Chamber, Jorusslaus Borzita, Count Martinitz, Baro Popelius great Prior of St. Maries, and Philip Fabricius the Secretary: to these the people made their Complaint, and urg'd the Concession of their Demands; but not satisfied with the Answers they receiv'd, and still continuing Importunate, the Matter at length came to that height of provocation,
D that they seiz'd upon three of the Councillors (those that were most violent in opposing their Demands) and threw them out of the highest Window of the Tower, banisht and proscrib'd the Jesuits, set the Imprison'd Brunovians at liberty, and created thirty Directors, or Administrators of the Affairs of the Kingdome. The Emperour having sought in vain by faire means to allay these Commotions, dispatcht Letters immediatly to Maximilian Duke of Bavaria, John George Duke of Saxony, and the rest of the Electors; Also to the Free Citys, and to all his Friends and Allies, to stir them up against the Bohemian Confederates, and sent himself against them a considerable Army, under Henry Count Tampier, and Charles Longeval Count Buquoy, with other Forces, from Albert Governour of the Low-countries, under the Command
E of Henry Julius of Lauenburg, Balthazar Marrade Commander of Malta, Count Buchem, Colalton, and others.

In the midst of these Warlike Preparations, the Emperour Matthias dying without Issue, his Coin Ferdinand the Second, who had before been Crown'd King of Bohemia, and Hungary, was by the common consent of the Electors chosen to the Empire; which he no sooner attained, but he prosecuted the War begun by his Predecessor; nor were the Bohemians backward in the getting together of a powerfull Army; whereof their principall Leaders were Ernest, Count Mansfield, and Henry Matthieu Count de la Tour; to whom were joyn'd the Moravians, and Silesians: Pilsa was taken by Mansfield, and the Count de la Tour having won Lipnit, Olmütz, and other Towns of Moravia, invaded lower Austria, and brought his Army up to the very F Walls of Vienna; but he was soon call'd away by the Directors to defend Bohemia from the Inroads of Buquoy, by whom Mansfield, as he was going to the Assistance of de la Tour, was met with, and absolutely Defeated, he himself having much ado to escape. In the mean time, the Reformed States and Directors at Prague, renouncing all Obedience to the Emperour Ferdinand their King, as not having allowed of his Election; consulted what Prince they should make choice of to offer the Kingdome of Bohemia unto, and at length they resolv'd upon Prince Frederick, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, who Married Elizabeth the Daughter of King James of Great Britain. Frederick was easily perswaded to accept of the Kingdome, and was created supream Captain of the Evangelick Union; but long he enjoy'd not these new conferred Honours; for not only all Bohemia was suddenly reduc'd to the Emperours Obedience by that memorable Battell at Prague; in which the Princes of the Union were overthrowen by John Tserclas Count of Tilly, but also his own Territory of the Palatinate was subdued by the Marquess of Spinola, sent for out of the Low-countries, and confer'd upon the Duke of Bavaria, together with the Electorall Dignity. For the restitution of this Prince, not only the King of England, and the States of Holland, earnestly laboured by frequent Embassies to the Emperour; but Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, made it one of his chief Pretences for the Invasion of Germany; of his success wherein, we shall hereafter have occasion to make mention in this History: and also Christiern King of Denmark took up Armes, though with less Fortune then was hop'd for in the same Cause. This was that Grand Business which was made by King James, one of the main Conditions of the Match with Spain; and the not performance of which, was the cause of the breaking off that Match: and this was that in which his Son King Charles was so earnest and sollicitous, that his continuall craving of Supplies from the Parliament, very much layd open his Necessities, and the lowness of his Exchequer, and was in all probability the very originall Source of those Misfortunes and Calamities that afterwards befell him.

Soon after the dissolution of the Parliament, the King set forth a Proclamation, Commanding the return, by a prefixed time, of all Children of Noble Men, and others of his Subjects as had been sent to be Educated in Seminaries and Schools, where the Popish Religion was profest and taught: That none who had received Orders from the See of Rome, should presume to B confer Orders, or exercise Ecclesiasticall Functions in any of his Dominions. Also that the Statute should be put in execution for the departure of Priests and Jesuits out of his Dominions. Moreover his Majesty, by the advice of his privy Council, streightly commanded all those of his Subjects that were under the pay of the Emperour, the King of Spain, and the Archdutchess, to return speedily to their Native Countries, to be employed as occasion should serve.

The Act of Subsidies being prevented by the dissolution of the Parliament; the King necessitated to take up Money upon Loan, of such persons as were of Ability to lend, directed his Letters to the Lord-Lieutenants of the severall Counties; To return the Names of those Men whom they thought most sufficient, the places of their Habitations, and what Summs each of them might be judg'd able to lend. And to those persons whose Names were returned by the Lord-Lieutenants; Letters were issued forth in the Kings Name, under the privy Seal, by the Lord Controller of his Majesties Household, in manner and form following.

Trusty and well Beloved, &c.

HAVING observed in the Presidents and Customes of former times, that all the Kings and Queens of this Realm, upon extraordinary Occasions, have used either to resort to those Contributions which arise from the generality of Subjects, or to the private helps of some well affected in particular, by way of Loan. In the former of which Courses, as we have no doubt in the Love and Affection of our People, when they shall again Assemble in Parliament; So for the present we are inforced to proceed in the latter Course, for supply of some Portions of Treasure, for divers publick Services, which without manifold Inconveniences to Us and our Kingdomes cannot be defer'd. And therefore this being the first time that we have required any thing in this kind, we doubt not, but we shall receive such a Testimony of good Affection from you amongst other of our Subjects, and that with such Alacrity and Readiness, as may make the same so much the more acceptable; especially since we require but that Summ, which few Men would deny a Friend, and have a Mind Resolved to expose all our Earthly Fortune for Preservation of the Generall. The sum which we require of you by these Presents, is, ——— which we do promise in the Name of Us, our Heirs, and Successors, to repay to you, or your Assigns, within eighteen Months after the payment thereof unto the Collector: The Person whom we have appointed, is, ——— to whose hands we do require you to send it within twelve dayes after that you have received this Privy Seal, which together with the Collectors Acquittance, shall be sufficient Warrant to the Officers of our Reeceit, for the re-payment thereof at the time limited.

Given at, &c.

The Collectors of this Loan were ordered to pay the Summs received into the Exchequer, and to return the Names of such as went about to delay, or excuse the payment of the Summs required.

Upon

A Upon the Eighth of October, the Fleet set to Sea (under the Command of Edward Cecil, Viscount Wimbleton, second Son to Thomas Earl of Exeter, Generall for Land-War, and the Earl of Essex, Vice-admirall at Sea) and were encountered with so violent a Storm, that the greatest part of the Navy, which in all made up eighty Ships (some Dutch) was dissipated and scattered for seven daies together; and a gallant Ship, called the Long Robert of Ipswich, which one hundred and seventy persons in it, were utterly lost; the rest meeting again at the Southern Cape, where they consulted so long about the place of Landing, that the whole Coast Alarm'd by their discovery, had opportunity to prepare for Defence, and render their Shorning much more difficult and dangerous. The Earl of Essex, as we have sayd, was Vice-admiral; who out of a desire to equall his Fathers Glory gotten at Cadix, insisted earnestly upon the assailing of those Ships which lay in that Harbor: But Puntall Castle adjoyning, must first be won, before any good could be done; wherefore twenty English Ships, and five Dutch were ordered to advance against it, which with much ado they did, and came off again after they had, to no purpose, spent two thousand great Shot upon it. This not succeeding, the Generall resolved to try what might be done by Land; to which end Sir John Burroughs a Veterane Commander, was sent with a select Regiment of Foot to force it: against him some Spanish Forces which were come thither for the defence of that part of the Country, drew up: in which Engagement, they were so foyled by the English, that those within the Castle despairing of their own Ability to hold out, hung out a white Flag, and after a short Parley resigned the Fort, with fifteen Barrells of Powder, and eight pieces of Ordnance. And now the Earl of Essex's design of firing the Ships in the Harbour, began to appear more feasible; And Sir Samuel Argall was sent to manage that Business, and the Land-men were ordered to come ashore to refresh themselves, and to take in fresh Water and Forrage the Countries, and to guard those who were otherwise employed. Here the Spaniard might have made good work with them; for they finding the Cellars well provided of that Wine which was more rare with them in their own Country, Congratulated their own Felicities with such large Carowses of Sack, as if the least Intelligence had been stirring, they might have been easily surprized: which the Generall fearing, speedily re-embarked his drunken Soldiers, and put to Sea again in quest of the Plate-Fleet, then expected from the West-Indies. Argall's purpose of firing the Ships was also frustrated, by drawing up the best of them under Port-Royal, and sinking others in the Channell for obstruction.

D Twenty dayes they resolved to ply about the Southern Cape, in hopes of exployting something upon the Plate-Fleet: but the Contagion encreasing, made such a Massacre among them, that they soon wanted Hail-men for the Sails. And whereas some Ships had a greater number of infected persons, then others had: to remedy this, a most preposterous course was taken that every Ship should entertain by lot two sick, in exchange for so many sound; which propagated the Pestilence, and enforced the Generall to an untimely return homewards but four dayes before the Plate-Fleet came. Vicount Wimbleton was presently examined about the whole, and prohibited the Kings presence for many Months after; whereof he complains to the Duke (lately returned from his Negotiation at the Hague) Apologizing for himself, and accusing the Stubborness of others; particularly the Earl of Essex, who might (if he would) have detroyed the Spanish Ships.

Sir Robert Mansell a stout and expert Sea-man, was the man generally lookt upon as fittest to have Commanded in this Expedition; in which, his being neglected, was a thing that gave much discontent to the Mariners; and both that and other miscarriages in this Design, were imputed to the Dukes ill mannagement of Affairs, of which, what the common Censure was, appears by this following Letter of the Lord Cromwells to the Duke himself.

F They offer to lay Wagers the Fleet goes not this year; And that of necessity a Parliament must be: which when it comes, sure it will much discontent you. It is wondered at, that since the King did give such great Gifts to the Dutchess of Chevreux, and those that then went, how now a small summe in the Parliament should be called for at such an unseasonable time: and let the Parliament sit when it will, begin they will where they ended. They say, the Lords of the Council knew nothing of Count Mansfield's Journey, or this Fleet, which discontents even the best sort, if not all. They say it is a very great Burthen your Grace takes upon you, since none knows anything but you: Is it concern'd, that not letting others bear part of the Burthen you now bear, it may ruine you (which Heaven forbid.) Much discourse there is of your Lordship here, and there, as I passed home, and back; and nothing is more wonder'd at, then that one grave man is not known to have your Ear, except my good and noble Lord Conway. All men say, if you go not with the Fleet, you will suffer in it; because if it prosper, it will be thought no Act of yours, and if it succeed ill, they say, it might have been better, had not you guided the King. They say, your undertakings in the Kingdome will much prejudice your Grace; and if God blefs you not in Goodness, as to accept kindly what in Duty and Love I here offer, offer; questionless my freedom in letting you know the Discourse of the World, may A much prejudice me; but if I must lose your Favour, I had rather lose it for striving to do you good, in letting you know the talk of the wicked World, then for any thing else: So much I heartily desire your prosperity, and to see you trample the ignorant Multitude under foot.

All I have said is the Discourse of the World, and when I am able to judge of Actions, I will freely tell your Lordship my mind: which when it shall not alwaies incline to serve you, may all noble Thoughts forsake me.

THe Coronation now drew on, which was to be on the second of February; at what time the King passed not in usuall State through the streets to the Tower, but went by Water from Whitehall to Westminster, for fear of the danger of popular Concourse, by reason that, although the Plague was indeed decreased, yet some Dregs of it still remained. The Bishop of Lincoln as Dean of Westminster, should have performed a main part of this Ceremony, but he being then under displeasure, Doctor Laud Bishop of St. Davids, supplied his place; and the old form of Prayer heretofore layd aside, ever since the time of Henry the Sixth, was again resumed; Viz.

Let him obtain Favour for this People, like Aaron in the Tabernacle, Elizeus in the Waters, Zacharias in the Temple, give him Peters Key, and Pauls Doctrine.

The Ceremony of the Coronation was thus ordered; As the King went from Westminster Hall toward the Abbey, there went first before, the Aldermen of the City of London, usher'd by a Herald; next the Knights of the Bath in their Robes, each of them attended by his Equire, and Page: after them the Judges, the Serjeants at Law, the Kings Attorney-Generall, and the Masters of Request; then the privy Councillors, and the chief Officers of the Kings Household; next the Barons in their Parliament Robes, with Swords by their sides, and bare headed; after the Barons came the Bishops also bare headed, in their Scarlet Gowns and Lawn Sleeves; next them the Viccounts and Earls in their Coronation Robes, and Coronetted Caps; in the last place went the Officers of State for the day; Viz. The Lord Privy Seal, the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Earl of Dorset carrying the first Sword, the Earl of Essex the second Sword, the Earl of Kent the third; the Spurs were carried by the Earl of Montgomery; the Globe with the Cross on it, by the Earl of Suffolk; the Golden Cup and Plate for the Communion by the Bishops of London and Winchester: the Scepter was carried by the Earl of Rutland; the Sword of State naked by the Marquis of Hamilton, the Crown by the Earl of Pembroke; among the Serjeants at Armes, went the Lord Mayor in a Crimson Velvet Gown, each of them carrying a short Scepter; next, immediatly before the King, went the Earl of Arundel, as Earl Marshall of England, and the Duke of Buckingham as Lord High-Constable for that day. The King entered into the Abbey Church, at the West-Gate, under a rich Canopy of State, carried by the Barons of the Cinque Ports, and was himself supported on the one hand by Doctor Neile, Bishop of Durham, on the other hand by Doctor Lake Bishop of Bath and Wells: His Train which contained six Yards of Purple Velvet was held up by the Lord Compton, Master of the Robes, and the Lord Viscount Doncaster, Master of the Wardrobe: he was met by Bishop Laud (who supplied the Deans place) and the Prebends of Westminster in their rich Copes; who delivered into his hands the Staff of King Edward the Confessor, with which he walked up to the THRONE, which was framed from the Quire to the Altar. There were appointed for the King three Chais: 1. The Chair of Repose. 2. The ancient Chair of Coronation. 3. The Chair of State, which was placed upon a square Ascent of six steps. The King, after he had Reposed himself awhile, was by the Archbishop of Canterbury presented bare headed to the Lords and Commons, East, West, North, South; of whom the Archbishop demanded, If they consented to the Coronation of King Charles their lawfull Sovereign? To which after they had exprest their readines by an Acclamation made four severall times, the King betooke himself again to his Chair of Repose, during the time of Sermon; which ended, the King, going to the Communion Table, and kneeling down, the Archbishop askt his Majesty, If he was willing to take the Oath usually taken by his Predecessors? To which he made Answer, That he was willing, arose, and went to the Altar, where severall Interrogations were tendered to him by the Archbishop, to each of which distinctly the King gave his Affirmative Answer.

Archbishop, Sir, Will you grant and keep, and by your Oath confirm to the people of England, the Laws and Customes to them granted by the Kings of England, your lawfull and Religious Predecessors; And namely, The Laws, Customs, and Franchises granted to the Clergie, by the Glorious King St. Edward your Predecessor,

A 'Predecessor, according to the Laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel establishment in this Kingdome, agreeable to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof, and the ancient Customes of the Realm?

'KING, I grant and promise to keep them.

'A. SIR, Will you keep Peace and godly Agreement (according to your power, both to God, the holy Church, the Clergie, and the People?

B 'K. I will keep it.

'A. SIR, Will you to your power cause Law, Justice, and Discretion, to Mercy and Truth to be executed to your Judgment?

'K. I will.

'A. SIR, Will you grant to hold and keep the Laws and rightfull Customes which the Commonalty of this your Kingdome have? And will you defend and uphold them to the honour of God so much as in you lyeth?

'K. I grant and promise so to do.

'Then one of the Bishops with a loud Voice before the People read to the King this following Admonition.

Our Lord and King, We beseech you to pardon, and to grant, and preserve unto us and to the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonically Priviledges, and to do Law and Justice; And that you would protect and defend us, as every good King to his Kingdomes ought to be PROTECTOR, and DEFENDER of the Bishops, and the Churches under their Government.

The King answereth with a willing and devout Heart.

E I promise and grant my Pardon; and that I will preserve and maintain to You, and the Churches committed to your Charge, All Canonically Priviledges, and due Law and Justice: And that I will be your PROTECTOR, and DEFENDER to my power, by the Assistance of God, as every good King in his Kingdome in right ought to Protect and Defend the Bishops and Churches under their Government.

F 'Then the King arising was led to the Communion Table, where laying his Hand upon the BIBLE, He, in the sight of all the People made a solemn Oath (to observe the Premises) which was as followeth;

The Things which I have here promised, I shall perform and keep; So help Me God, and the Contents of this Book.

G 'Afterwards his Robes being taken off, and offered at the Altar, the King stood for a while stripped to his Dublet and Hose, of white Sattin; then led by the Archbishop, and the Bishop of St. Davids, He was placed in the Chair of Coronation, having a close Canopy spread over him, and while the Archbishop Anointed his Head, Shoulders, Armes, and Hands with a costly Oyntment, the Quire sung an Anthem of these words;

Zadock the Priest Annoynted King Solomon. —

‘Thence in his Doublet and Hose, with a white Coif on his Head, he was led back again to the Communion-table, where Doctor Land the Bishop of St. Davids, who supplied the Dean of Westminsters place, Vested him with the ancient Habilliments of King Edward the Confessor, and conducting him back to the Chair of Coronation, presented him with King Edwards Crown, which the Archbishop put upon his Head, and in the mean time the Quire sung this Anthem;

Thou shalt put a Crown of pure Gold upon his Head.

‘After which, the Earls and Vis-counts put on their Coronetted Caps of Crimson Velvet; then every Bishop came severally to the King, and gave him their Benediction, and he rising from his Chair bowed to each of them apart. Next King Edwards Sword was girt about him, which he took off himself, and offer’d at the Communion-table, with two Swords more, in relation to Ireland and Scotland: His Spurs were put on by the Duke of Buckingham, as Master of the Horse; which done, he offer’d first Gold and Silver, then Bread and Wine, to be used at the Communion.

‘Thus compleatly Crown’d, the King was conducted by the Nobility to the THRONE, where he receiv’d the Oath of Homage, (the Quire in the mean time singing TE DEUM) from the Duke of Buckingham, as Lord High-constable for that Day, who also swore the rest of the Nobility at the Kings Knee, to be Homagers to his Majesty; then the Earls and Barons layd their Hands upon the Crown, as it was upon the Kings Head, making a solemn Protestation to spend their Blood to maintain it to him, and his Posterity: the Bishops took no Oath, but kneeling down the King kissed each of them; then the King taking out of his Bosom a Scrowl of Parchment, the Effect of which was, A promise of Pardon under his broad Seal to all that accept it; gave the Scrowl to the Lord Keeper, who read it four times, East, West, North, and South. From the Throne the King went to the Communion-table, and after Prayers had been read by the Archbishop, the Nicene Creed sung by the Quire; and the Epistle and Gospel read by the Bishops of Landaff, and Norwich; his Majesty receiv’d the Communion, the Bread from the Archbishop, the Wine from the Bishop of St. Davids: and at the same time, GLORIA PATRI was sung; which being ended, the Archbishop reading certain Prayers, concluded the Ceremony. After which, the King dis-robed himself in King Edwards Chappell, and came forth girt in a short Robe of red Velvet, lin’d with Ermins, and a lesser Crown upon his Head set with pretious Stones, and taking Barge with all his Train of Nobles at Westminster Stairs, He returned to Whitehall.

Great Forces had been lately raised both for Sea and Land; for whose better Disciplining, an hundred and fifty old Soldiers were commanded home from the Netherlands, by whose Industry the Forces were brought into some good Order, against the sitting of the ensuing Parliament, which Assembled the sixth of February: And Sir Henage Finch was Speaker of the House of Commons; who having made his Excuses, such as are usuall upon the like occasions, addrest himself in a Speech to the King.

In which,

First, He humbly gave thanks to his Majesty for his Favour towards him in approving the Choice which the House had made of him for their Speaker. Next he expressed himself in the praise of Monarchy in generall, but much more largely and particularly of the Happiness of this Nation under the present King, and his Government; speaking also against the Pride and Tyranny of the Spanish Monarchy, and the unjust Invasion of the Palatinate. Lastly, He crav’d leave of his Majesty to present him these four Petitions in behalf of the whole House.

I. That they, and their necessary Attendants might be free both in their Persons and Goods, from all Arrests and Troubles, according to their ancient Priviledges.

II. That

A II. That his Majesty would vouchsafe them liberty and freedom of Speech, so long as nothing should be therein contain'd contrary to their Duty and Loyalty.

III. That when important Occasions requir'd, he would grant them free Access to his Royall Person.

IV. That their Proceedings might be free from mis-constructions, and receive a favourable interpretation at his hands.

B The first thing done in this Convention, was, The rendring of thanks to the King for his gracious Answer to their late Petition for Religion. Next they fell into Debate of publick Grievances; The mis-carrying of the Fleet to Cadiz: The evill Counsellors about the King: Mis-employment of the Kings Revenue: An Account of the Subsidies, and three Fifteens, granted in the twenty first of King James; and in the Committee for Grievances these four Heads were delivered.

Proceeding in Parliament.

Four Heads delivered in the Committee for Grievances.

I. The State of the King in the constant Revenue of the Crown.

C Wherein they considered how much it was abated, from what it had been formerly by, Gifts of Lands, Ex mero motu, by large Grants of Pensions, by encrease of Household, and of Purveyors, by fruitless Embassies, by treble encrease of the privy Purse, by double encrease of the Treasury of the Chamber, and great Wardrobe.

II. The Condition of the Subject in his Freedom.

Wherein were considered the bringing in of new Impositions; the multiplying of Monopolies, and selling them by Grants; the levying of Tonnage and Poundage without any Act of Parliament, and the mis-employment or wast of the Treasure.

D III. The cause of the Nations good Successes in former Times.

Whereby it was fear'd, Victorious, and Renown'd abroad, which, they judg'd, was to be attributed to the Wisdome and Gravity of Councell, who order'd nothing but by publick Debate, from whence there arose a readines in the People to assist their Sovereign in Purse and Person.

IV. The present Condition of the Nation.

E Wherein was represented the loss of its wonted Reputation, through the ill success at Algier, in the Palatinate, in Count Mansfields Expedition, and at Cadiz: and this was imputed to the want of such Councels as were heretofore us'd, forasmuch as men through a diffidence in the success, were backward to adventure either their Persons, or Purse.

In the Committee concerning Religion, and the growth of Popery, Mr. Richard Mountague's two Books: Viz. His Answer to the Romish Gagger, and his Appeal to Caesar; were again brought into question, and severall Articles exhibited against him, whereby he was tax'd of divers passages in the aforesaid Books, tending to the encouragement of Popery, and the drawing away of his Majesties Subjects from the true Religion establish'd, unto Errour and Superstition; with other passages dishonourable to the late King, and full of injurious and railing Language to other persons: As also, that he endeavour'd to raise Factions in the Common-wealth,

Mr. Richard Mountague's Gagger & Appeal to Caesar, again question'd.

F by casting the scandalous Name of Puritans upon such of his Majesties Subjects as conform'd themselves to the Doctrine of the Church of England; whereupon the House of Commons gave their Censure: That he ought to be brought to exemplary punishment, and to have his Books burnt; Nor do we find, that he ever made any Defence, or Answer to these Articles that were brought against him.¹² It is observable, that a little before the meeting of the Parliament, Doctor Land understanding from the Duke, that the King intended to leave Mr. Mountague to a Tryall, was heard to utter these words: I seem to see a Cloud arising and threatening the Church of England, God in his mercy dissipate it. Not long after, the Commons sending for the Earl of Totnes, the Lords, Vere, Brook, and Grandison, Sir Robert Mansell, and Sir John Oyle, who were of the Council of War, that sat upon the Affairs of the Palatinate, question'd them concerning the management of that business; but the rest of them making their severall excuses, Sir Robert Mansell was he only who declared himself ready to render a cleer account of it.

The Palatinate Affairs called into question. Complaint of the Scotch and Irish Nobility, for claiming Precedency of the Peers of England. Matravers marries the Duke of Lennox's eldest Daughter.

G Complaint was also made in the House of severall persons; who by reason of some late created Dignities in Scotland and Ireland, claimed Precedency of the Peers of England: To this Redress was promised, wherewith the House of Lords were for the present satisfied, though soon after, much more dissatisfied by another Occurrent: The Lord Matravers's eldest Son and Heir to the Earl of Arundell, had married the eldest Daughter of the late Duke of Lennox, contrary to the Kings mind; who intended her for the Lord Lorne's Argiles Heir: the King hereat offended,

The Earl of Arundel committed to the Tower.

Sir Richard Weston sent by the King to demand supply for the English and Irish Forces.

Six Quarries by Dr. Turner thereupon.

offended, commits the Earl of Arundell to the Tower, which caused a Petition from the Peers; A wherein they pleaded, That no Peer sitting in Parliament is to be Imprisoned without order from the House of Lords, unless for Felony, Treason, or denial of Security for the Peace. This was disputed for the space of two Months, and then the Earl set at liberty. The Commons were busied in the mean time about searching the Signet Office, for the Originall of a Letter under the Signet, written to the Mayor of York, for relieving certain Jesuits, Priests, and other Recusants, and reported by Mr. Pim Chair-man to the Committee for Religion; but their proceeding was interrupted by a Message from the King, brought by Sir Richard Weston, Chancellour of the Exchequer, demanding supply for the English and Irish Forces. This was so dis-relished, that Mr. Clement Cook one of the Commons, openly protested, That it was better to die by a forrein Enemy, then to be destroyed at home; whom Doctor Turner a Physician seconded with these six Quarries.

1. Whether the King hath not lost the Regality of the Narrow Seas, since the Duke became Admirall?

2. Whether his going as Admirall in this last Fleet, was not the cause of the ill Success, for the Fleet was lately returned again without any considerable performance?

3. Whether the Kings Revenue hath not been impaired by his immense Liberality? C

4. Whether he hath not ingrossed all Offices, and preferred his Kindred to unfit Places?

5. Whether he hath not made Sale of places of Judicature?

6. Whether Recusants have not dependence upon his Mother and Father-in-law?

The King offended.

These Expressions so Irritated the King, that he sent immediately Sir Richard Weston to the House of Commons to require satisfaction. Immediately upon the Kings Message, Doctor Turner made a Speech in his Vindication, and to explain himself, alleading;

Dr. Turner's Vindication.

That what he had said, was for the generall good of the Common-wealib, and not reflecting upon any one in particular. That to accuse upon common Fame, he thought to be a Parliamentary way, and warranted by the Canons of the Church, and the Imperiall Laws, and by ancient Presidents, the Duke of Suffolk in King Henry the Sixth time, having been accused upon common Fame. He added moreover, that Mr. Chancellor himself had presented the common Undertakers upon particular Fame, and that he knew no reason, why he himself might not in that place have as ample a Priviledge. E

And the Debate of that matter being put off to another day, he in the mean time writ a Letter to the Speaker, to excuse his absence, by reason of his Indisposition of Body, and to signifie his desire of putting himself wholly upon the Judgment and Censure of the Parliament.

Sir William Walter delivers his Sence of the Grievances in Parliament.

Sir William Walter delivering his Sence to the House concerning the Grievances, sayd, That the true Cause of them was for that (as was sayd of Lewis the Eleventh of France) All the Kings Councell rode upon one Horse. Wherefore his Majesty was to be advised, as Moses was by Jethro, to make choice of Councillors to assist him that should be thus qualified;

1. Noble, and not Uptarts and of a Nights growth.

2. Men of Courage, such as would execute their own places, and not commit them to undeserving Deputies.

3. Fearing God, not inclining to false Worship, or halting between two Opinions.

4. Dealing truly, not given to flattery, or fawning Courtship, but such as might be safely trusted by the King and Kingdome.

5. Hating Covetousness, and not such as liv'd upon other mens Ruines, or that would take Bribes, or sell places in Church or Common-wealth, or about the King.

6. To be Many, in the multitude of Councillors, there being safety.

7. To judge of small matters, as well as great (the greatest being to be refer'd to the King) much less any one Councillor alone to take upon him the whole management of a Business. G

Is seconded by Sir John Eliot.

8. Elders, not young and unexperienc'd men, through whose rash and unadvised proceedings, great Designs many times miscarry. In this Debate he was seconded by Sir John Eliot who represented to the House, The present State of the Kingdome, the great dishonour the King and Kingdome had sustained in severall mis-carriages, occasion'd through the ill management of things by those in highest trust. He also cited two Presidents, the first in the sixteenth year of Henry the Third, when the Parliament denied the Subsidies that were demanded by the King, untill such time as the great Officers were examined, & Hugo de Burgo found guilty of Corruption was displac'd. The second in the tenth year of Richard the Second, when supply was requir'd, and the Commons complaining

A complaining, that the Earl of Suffolk then over-ruled all, returned answer, That they could not give. Notwithstanding the heat of these debates, the Commons taking into Consideration the Kings necessities, voted three Subsidies and Three fifteens, and that the Act should be brought in as soon as the Grievances, that should be presented to the King, were answered by him. They also took againe into consultation the businesse, concerning the Duke of Buckingham, and the mis-employment of the Revenue, and ordered that the Duke should againe have notice of their intentions, to proceed therein. But the King, not perceiving them to make such hast, as he expected, to answer his last message, summons both houses together, and signifies his resentments to them by the Lord Keeper, Coventry, complaining of them for not punishing Mr. Cooke, and Doctor Turner, and for searching his signet Office; he also justified the Duke to have acted nothing of publique employment without his speciall Warrant, wherefore he forbad them to use any more disquisition of that nature, which he look't upon as libelling against his own government: lastly he came to businesse of Supply, wherein he blamed them for being too sparing and for ordering the bill not to be brought in till their Grievances were heard and answered, which he would not admit of. To all these points their finall answer was expected by Saturday next. This was the Substance of the Lord Keepers Speech, which being ended the King said. He must with all put them in mind that his Father, moved by their Councell, and won by their perswasions, brake the treaty's. In those perswasions he was their Instrument towards his Father, and was glad to be instrumentall in any thing, which might please the whole Body of the Realme; nor was there any then in greater favour with them, than the Duke whom now they so traduced:

C But now finding him so sure intangled in Warr, as he had no honourable and safe retreat, they made his necessity their Priviledge, and set what rare they pleased upon their Supply's, a Practice not very obliging towards Kings. And whereas Mr. Cooke told them it was better to dye by a Forrain Enemy, then to be destroyed at home: Indeed he thought it more Honourable for a King to be invaded and almost destroyed by a Forrain Enemy than to be despised at home. At a conference of both houses in the painted Chamber, the Duke of Buckingham was commanded by the King to explain some things in his and the Lord Keepers speech that might be subject to misunderstanding; which the Duke accordingly did, and afterwards rendred an Account at Large of his negotiation in the Low-countrys. As soon as the Duke had ended his Speech, the Lord Conway, Chief Secretary of State, in farther justification of the Duke and to clear him from the opinion of having unusefully & without Councell expended the Treasure, discours't particularly of the treatie of Denmark, of the Project of count Manifield, of the Treaties with France and the businesse of the Navy, and avett'd that they were not done by single Councell, since King James himselfe commanded it, and then he gave in a punctuall Account of the severall Sums, disbursed for the Warr.

D It was now the year 1626 and the Second year of King Charles, Reigne; when the Commons, in answer to the Kings last Speech, presented him with a Remonstrance to this Purpose:

E That they gratefully received his Majesty's expressions of affection to his people, and Parliament.

That they had taken Mr. Cookes and Doctour Turners words into their consideration, and might have given a good account thereof by this time, if his Majesties message had not interrupted them.

That they had the precedents of former Parliaments for Searching the Letters of his Majesty and his Secretary of State, the Signet Office and other Records upon the like occasions:

F That it was the unquestionable priviledge of Parliaments to complaine of any persons of any Degree, and their proceedings in relation to the Duke should not prejudice either Crowne or Kingdome.

That they were willing to Supply his necessity's liberally and faithfully; if addition might be made of other things importing his Service, then in consultation amongst them.

G The Kings answer was short.

That he would have them in the first place consult about matters of the greatest importance, and that they should have time enough for other things afterwards.

The Parliaments Remonstrance to the King concerning the words spoken by Mr. Cooke and Dr. Turner.

The Earl of Bristol treated by Secretary Conway in order to his releasement.

The Earl of Bristol having been refer'd to be examin'd by a committe of Lords, appointed by the King touching his negotiation in Spain, and upon consultation of the Business, having been committed to Prison, prohibited access to his Majestie and continu'd under restraint ever since his return out of Spain, received a letter from the Lord Conway; wherein in order to his releafe he propounded to him from his Majestie this choise.

Whether he would choose to sit still without being question'd for any errors past in his negotiation in Spain, and enjoy the benefit of the late gracious Pardon, whereof he might take the Benefit; Or whether, being contented to waive the advantage of that Pardon, he would, for the clearing of his innocency (of which he and his friends were so confident) Put himselfe into a legall way of examination for the tryall thereof.

In answer to which he wrote back to the Lord Conway;

That whereas now his proposition was, Whether he would choose to sit still without being farther question'd, &c. his Lordship might remember, that in a former Letter he propos'd whether he desir'd to rest in the security he was in, and to acknowledge the gracious favour of his Majestie that now is, who had been pleased not to question his actions. I wish said he, that your Lordship had more clearly explained the sence of the former Letter, but conferring both together and gathering the meaning by making the latter an explanation of the former, I return unto your Lordship this direct answer; That I doe most humbly acknowledge and accept of his Majesties Grace and Favour and shall not waive any thing that shall come to me by the Pardon of 21 Jacobi Regis, or by the Pardon of his present Majesties Coronation.

He petitioneth the House of Lords about his liberty and that he might be heard against the Duke of Buckingham.

At the same time the Earl Petition'd the house of Lords to intercede with his Majestie, that whereas, being a Peer of this Realm he had not receiv'd a Summons from Parliament, he might enjoy the libertie of a Subject and the benefit of his Peerage after two years restraint, without being brought to a tryall; and that if any charge were brought in against him he might be tryed by Parliament. Hereupon the Earl of Hertford reported from the Committee of Priviledges, to which the businesse was refer'd, that it would be requisite for their Lordships to beseech his Majestie to grant a Writ of Summons to the Earl of Bristol; Which when it was brought to him, there came along with it a Letter from the Lord Keeper signifying unto him.

That though his Majestie had given way to the awarding of the writ, yet notwithstanding his pleasure was that his Lordship should continue still under the same restraint as he did before, and that his personall attendance was to be forborn.

This Letter with his own answer to it the Earl of Bristol sent to the House of Lords together with a Petition wherein he express'd himselfe.

That though he should ever obey the least intimation of his Majesties pleasure, yet he humbly offer'd to their Lordships wise Consideration, as too high a point for him, how farr this might trench upon the Liberty and safety of the Peers, and the authority of their Letters Patents, to be in this sort discharg'd by a letter missive of any Subject without the Kings hand, and besought them that he might be heard both as to the point of his wrongfull restraint, and of what he had to say against the Duke.

The King displeas'd with the Earl of Bristols Petition.

The King much incens'd at this Petition, sent a message to the House of Lords by the Lord Keeper, by which he signified his resentment of it as void of duty and respect to his Majestie; and that it was his royall pleasure that the Earl might be sent for as a Delinquent to answer, in the House, his offences; and his scandalizing the Duke of Buckingham, immediatly, and his Majestie by reflection. The Earl being brought to the Lords Bar, and ready to be impeacht of high treason by the Atturney Generall, besought their Lordships: That as he was a Freeman and a Peer of the Realm unattainted and had something to say of high Consequence for his Majesties service, he might have liberty to speak; which having obtain'd, I accuse, said he, that man the Duke of Buckingham of high Treason; This resolute proceeding of the Earl mov'd the Atturney Generall to hasten his charge against him, which was drawn up into Eleven Articles, to this effect.

Articles against the Earl of Bristol.

I. That falsly & traitterously he inform'd the late King by sundry Letters, that the Emperour and King of Spain would really make restitution of the Dominions and dignity of the Count Electour Palatine, and that the King of Spain did really intend the Marriage between his now Majestie then Prince of Wales, and Donna

“ Maria

A " Donna Maria the Infanta of Spain, whereas neither by the Emperour the said restitution, nor by the King of Spain the said Marriage was ever really intended.

" II. That having receiv'd directions to put the King of Spain to a speedy and punctuall answer, touching the aforesaid treaties, he neverthelesse continued them upon Generalities without pressing the King of Spain to particullar conclusions:

" III. That he did many times both by word and Letters extoll the Greatnesse and Power of the King of Spain, to the intent that he might retard the Late Kings Resolutions, of declaring himselfe an Enemy to the King of Spain.

" IIII. That being told upon his dispatch out of this Realm, that there was little probability of the Success of these Treaties, he reply'd, he cared not what the Success thereof would be, for he would be carefull to pursue his Instructions, and howsoever the Businesse went he would make his Fortunes thereby.

" V. That to advance the Romish Religion, during the time aforesaid, he often by Letters perswaded his Late Majestie to set at Libertie the Priests and Jesuits, and to grant all Papists a toleration of their Religion.

" VI. That by his false Informations and Intelligences given to the Late King, and the Prince, his now Majestie, they were put into hopes, and by long delays into jealousies, concerning the said Treaties, that there was not that sincerity in them which they expected: Whereupon the said Prince, his now Majestie intending either to conclude the Treatie or discover the feigned intentions of the Emperour and King of Spain, was forced to undertake a long and dangerous Journey, to the hazard of his own person, and in him of the Peace and safety of the Kingdome.

D " VII. That at the Prince his first coming into Spain, the Earl asked of the Prince for what end he came thither, who, not conceiving his meaning, answered, you know as well as I, upon which he reply'd, Sr. give me leave to tell you, they say here in Madrid, that you mean to change your Religion, and added, if you will trust me with so great a secret, I will endeavour to carry it the secretest way I can; at which the Prince being mov'd told him, he wonder'd what he had ever found in him, that he should think him so base, as for a wife to change his Religion, to which the Earl desiring his pardon return'd, it was but out of his desire to serve him.

E " VIII. That at another conference he traiterously endeavour'd to perswade him to turn Romish Catholique, using this Argument, That the state of England never did nor could possibly doe any great thing but when Obedient to the Pope of Rome.

" IX. That upon an overture of Marriage between the Prince Palatine, and the Emperours Daughter, and his being brought up in the Emperours Court, upon which consideration he should be restor'd to the Palatinate, when mention was made of the danger of changing his Religion, the Earl said that without some such great action the Peace of Christendome could never be procur'd.

" X. That at the Prince his departure out of Spain, the Powr's of Desponsories being left with the Earl of Bristol, an Express was soon after sent him by the Late King not to deliver them untill a full conclusion were made Concerning the Palatinate, nevertheless contrary to his Duty and Allegiance, he set so short a day for the Desponsories without any assurance or so much as treating of those things to which he was restrained, that if extraordinary diligence with good success in the Journey had not concur'd, the Princes hands might have been bound up and yet he neither sure of a wife, nor the Prince Palatine of restitution.

" XI. Lastly that in a high and Contempruous manner he had prefer'd a scandalous Petition to this Honourable House, in one Article whereof he gave his now Majestie

"the lie by denying and offering to falsifie what his now Majestie had affirmed." A

Upon this impeachment, the Earl affirm'd, that at his importunity the Late King promis'd that he should be heard before himself, and for the Kings Promise he vouch'd the Lord Chamberlaine for a Witnesse. I pray God, said he, that Promise did him no hurt, for he Died shortly after, then he put the House in mind of his Petition, and desir'd that before he were impeach'd, they would receive his Charge against the Duke and the Lord Conway, so having presented his Articles, he withdrew, and it was resolv'd upon the question by the House of Lords, that the Articles against the Duke and the Lord Conway should immediately be read, Being afterwards called to the Lords Bar concerning his Articles against the Duke; he made a long Narration touching the Proceedings of the Duke toward him. Which was,

The Earl of Bristol's narration to the Lords concerning the Dukes proceedings towards him.

That he, conceiving himself bound not to conceal, for any earthly respect whatsoever, the true State of Affaires, wrote severall Letters to his Late Majestie in which he faithfully gave his Opinion, That the Distasts between the Duke of Buckingham and the King of Spain's Ministers, would, if his wisdom prevented it not, utterly overthrow all his Affaires. Of which Letters the Duke coming to the knowledge, and fearing least at the Earls return his Misdemeanours in Spain should come to be discover'd, labour'd by all means possible that his Access to his Majestie might be obstructed, and having in vain solicited the Marques of Hamilton and the Lord Chamberlain to that Purpose, he so contriv'd the matter, that, at the Earls landing at Dover, a Letter was delivered him from the Lord Conway commanding him in his Majesties name to retire himselfe to his House and not to come to Court till he had answered such questions as should be propounded to him by certain Lords of the Councell at his Majesties appointment: this was done as supposing that if his arrest had been defer'd till he had come to London, he would have easily gotten access to the Kings Presence. Upon his frequent importunity to the King that he might be brought to a hearing, he still receiv'd a serious promise confirm'd at last with an Oath, that as soon as he should have answered to certain questions that were to be propounded to him by the Commissioners he should be admitted; these questions he Earnestly urg'd might be sent him, and that speedily, which was likewise promis'd: he added that he was dealt with by one Mr. Clark to acknowledge certain Propositions that were sent him from the Duke, which he refusing, the Duke grew more and more incens'd against him, and his Interrogatories before the Commissioners were by many Artifices still delay'd from time to time, untill the Dukes turn was serv'd in detaining him from the Kings Presence and then the said questions were never more heard of. Also upon the Earls sending of his Answer to all the Commissioners, they having declar'd themselves satisfied and being resolv'd to clear him, were never permitted more to meet. Afterwards the Duke sent him again four or five Propositions and promis'd that upon his acknowledgement of them, he would imploy his Power with the King and Prince, that he might be again received into their Grace and Favour, but those were so unjust that instead of an Acknowledgment he sent him an Answer, which though it satisfied not the Duke, yet his late Majestie was pleas'd to say in the Dukes presence, were to be accounted a Tyrant to enioyne an innocent man to confess faults of which he was not guilty, and sent him word that he would hear him concerning the Duke of Buckingham, as well as the Duke concerning him, and this hapned but a little before his Majesties sickness. Upon his now Majesties coming to the Crown, he in an humble Letter implor'd his Grace and Goodesse, but was still kept in disfavour with him through the meanes and Insigation of the said Duke.

The Earl having thus declar'd his mind concerning these Particulars and again put them in remembrance of his cause presented to them in his Late Petition, he withdrew, and remained in the Custody of Mr. Maxwell the Gentleman Usher.

The twelve Articles which the Earl of Bristol prefer'd against the Duke of Buckingham, were these.

The Earl of Bristol's Articles against the Duke of Buckingham.

I. That the Duke did secretly conspire with the Conde of Gondamar Ambassadors of Spain, before the said Ambassadors last returne into Spain 1621, to carry his Majestie, then Prince, into Spain, so the end, he might be enforced, and instanced in the Romish Religion, and thereby have perverted the Prince, and subverted the true Religion established in England.

II. That

A II. That Mr. Porter was made acquainted therewith, and sent into Spaine, and such message framed at his returne as might serve for a ground to set on foot the Conspiracie: which was done accordingly, and thereby both King and Prince highly abused.

III. The Duke at his arrivall in Spain, Nourished the Spanish Ministers not onely in the Beliefe of his own being Popishly given, by absenting himselfe from all Exercises of our Religion (then constantly used in the Earl of Bristols House) and conforming himself to please the Spaniard, by keeping to and adoring their Sacraments, but gave them hope also of the Princes conversion which caused them to propound worse conditons for Religion, then had been formerly Sealed and Signed by the Earl of Bristol; and Sr. Walter Ashton.

IV. That the Duke did many times, in the presence of the Earl of Bristol, move his Majesty, at the Instance of the Conde of Gondarmer, to write a Letter to the Pope; which the Earl utterly dissuaded; and that, although during the Earles abode in England, he hindered the writing any such Letter; yet the Duke after the Earles returne, procured it wrote,

C V. That the Pope being informed of the Dukes Inclination in point of Religion, sent him a Particular Bull in Parchment, therein perswading him to pervert his Majesty.

VI. That the Duke in Spain, did abuse the King of Spain, and his Ministers so, as they would not admit of a Reconciliation with him: whereupon, seeing the Match would be to his disadvantage, he endeavoured to break it; not for any Service to this Kingdome, nor dislike of it in it selfe; nor for that he found, (as since he hath pretended) that the Spaniard did not really intend it, but out of his Particular ends and indignation.

D VII. That he intended to cross the Match, and made use of Letters of his Majestie, then private, to his own ends, and not to what they were intended; as also concealed many things of great importance from his Late Majesty, thereby overthrowing his Majesties purpose, and advancing his own ends.

VIII. That, For the aforesaid ends, he hath abused both Houses of Parliament, by a Sinister relation of the Carriage of Affairs, as shall be made appeare in every particular of that Relation.

IX. That he employed his Power with the King of Spain, for the procurement of Favours and Offices, which he bestowed upon unworthy Persons, for Recompense and hire of his Lust: Which is a great infamy and dishonour to our Nation; that a Duke, a Privy Counsellor, and Ambassadour, Eminent in his Majesties Favour, and solely intrusted with the Person of the Prince, should leave behind him, in a Forrein Court, so much Scandall by his ill behaviour.

F X. That he hath been a great part the Cause of the Ruine of the Prince, Palatine, and his Estate; in so much as those Affaires concerne this Kingdome.

XI. That he hath in his relation to both Houses of Parliament, wronged the Earl of Bristol in his Honour, by many Sinister Aspersions.

G XII. Lastly, That the Earl of Bristow did reveal to his Late Majesty, both by word and Letter, in what sort the Duke had mis-demeaned himself, and abused his trust: And the King by severall wayes sent him word, he should rest Assured, that he would beare the said Earls due time; and that four dayes before his Sicknes, he signified to the Earl that he would beare him against the Duke, as well as he had heard the Duke against him; And not long after the King dyed, having been much vexed and pressed with the said Duke.

Besides these Articles against the Duke, the Earl of Bristol exhibited Eleven others against the A Lord Conway, which were to this Effect.

His Articles against the Lord Conway.

"1. That the Lord Conway stuck not to send him word, that if Businesse could "not be accommodated between him and the Duke, he must declare him-
"selfe for the Duke, so that, being so great a Servant of the Dukes, he was unfit "to be a Judg in any thing that concerned the Duke or the Earl.

"2. That he acknowled'gd himselfe, under his own Hand, a Secretary of the Duke "of *Buckingham*s creation, and began his Letters to him, in this Form. Most Gra- B
"cious Patron.

"3. That as a Creature of the said Duke he had been the Instrument of keeping the "Earl from the Kings presence, and that the Warrants for his Imprisonment were
"onely under his own hand.

"4. That he had procur'd his restraint upon undue grounds and had continued it for "a years space by misinforming the King, and when it appeard that his Late Majestie
"had freely granted the Earl his Liberty, he reply'd, that, That Liberty expir'd with the C "Kings Death.

"5. That the Earl desiring the Lord Conway to move the King for Leave to see his "Mother who lay sick, he after long delays having spoken with the Duke gave him a "Negative Answer in the Kings Name, of which his Majestie being inform'd, and very "much displeas'd at it, granted free Leave, but the Lord Conway sent after him cer"tain Limitations which were never express't by his Majestie.

"6. That he would not deliver any Message from the said Earl to the King (although D
"it was so order'd by his Majestie) without first acquainting the Duke, and receiving "his Directions.

"7. That he perceiving that the Earl was like to be cleared concerning those Inter-
"rogatories which the Commissioners, appointed by his Majestie to search into his "Proceedings and Imployment, were to propound to him, never moved for any far"ther meeting, whereby the said Earls troubles have been kept on foot, to this pre"sent day. E

"8. That there being some few questions to the Twenty Interrogatories, which "when the Earl should have Answered, his Majestie Solemnly swore that he should "be Admitted to his Presence, the Lord Conway notwithstanding that he acknow"ledg'd under his hand that he had receav'd directions from his Majestie to send those "Articles, and was often Sollicited thereunto, would yet never send them.

"9. That the Earl being set Free by his Late Majestie, and having his Writ of Par"liament sent him without any Prohibition, was wished by his now Majestie to make F
"some Excuse for the present, which he did, and moved he might have a Letter under "the Kings hand, to warrant his absence, but under colour of this Letter of Leave,
"the Lord Conway sent a Letter from his Majestie absolutely forbidding his coming "to Parliament, and therein likewise incerted a Clause that the Earl should remain re-
"strain'd as he did in the time of his late Majestie.

"10. That the Lord Conway, knowing that the Match for the Marrying of the King "of *Bohemia*s Eldest Son with the Emperours Daughter, and his being bred up in the G
"Emperours Court, was allowed and propounded by his Late Majestie, hath yet suf"fered it to be charged as a Crime against the Earl of Bristol, both in the Twentieth
"Interrogatory and his Majesties last Letter, that he should consent to the Breeding "of the said young Prince in the Emperours Court, as if it had tended to the pervers-
"ting of his Religion, when as he knew there was an expresse Clause that provided to "the contrary.

"11. That

A "That the Lord Conway hath been the Cause of all the Earl of Bristol's Troubles, "by his dubious and intrapping dispatches, which contained no such directions as he "Alledg'd were given, and wherein he pretended the Earl had failed.

THE House not judging it reasonable that the Earl should be again committed to the Tower, suffred him to remain with the Usher of the Black-Rod, and order'd that the Kings Charge against the Earl should be heard, before the Earls Charge against the Duke, of which the King, in a Message deliver'd by the Lord Keeper to the House of Lords, observ'd that many of the Articles were such, as he himselfe was able to say more, of his own knowledge, then any man touching the Dukes sincere Carriage in them, and that one of them concerning the Narrative made in Parliament, in the 21. of King James, trencheth as farr upon himselfe as the Duke, for that his Majestie went as farr as the Duke in that Declaration, and that all of them have been closed in the Earls own brest; now for these two years contrary to his Duty if he had known any Crime of that nature against the Duke, and that now he vents it by way of Recrimination, against the Duke whom he knows to be a principall Witnessse to prove his Majesties Charge, and therefore his Majestie gave the House thanks that they gave no way to the Earl of Bristol's unreasonable Motion, of putting the Duke under the same Restraine as they had put the Earl. The e being an indeavour to take the Earls Cause out of the House, and to proceed by way of Indictment in the Kings Bench: the Lords gave their Reasons why they could not give way to that manner of Proceeding, in respect of these dangerous Inconveniences that would follow.

The Lord Keepers Message from the King to the House of Lords concerning the Earls Articles against the Duke.

1. He could have no Councell.
2. He could use no Witness against the King.
3. He could not know what the Evidences against him would be in a Convenient time to prepare for his Defence.
4. The Liberties of the House would be thereby infring'd.
5. The Earl being indicted, it would not be in their Power to keep him from Arraignment, and so he might be disabled to make good his Charge against the Duke; and therefore it was judg'd the most Proper and most Legall way of Proceeding, First to have the Charge deliver'd into the House in Writing, and the Earl to set down his Answer to it in Writing, and that the Witnesses might be Examind, and Evidences on both sides heard, and if upon full hearing the House should find it to be Treason, then to proceed by way of Indictment, if doubtfull in Point of Law, to have the Opinion of the Judges to clear it; if doubtfull in matter of Fact, then to refer it to a Regall Fair.

Reasons why the Lords could not give way to, an Indictment against the Earl at the Kings Bench.

Soon after the charge was given in against the Earl of Bristol, who having his Answer ready to deliver to their Lordships crav'd their attention to some things which he intended to speak by way of Introduction, in which Speech he gave a full account; Of his being brought up in the Protestant Religion, Of his constant adhering to it, and strict profession of it, during the time that he travell'd into France and Italy, Of his Behaviour when he came first to be receiv'd into his Majesties Domestick Service, at which time none of the Kings Servants frequented Sermons more, or oftner receav'd the holy Sacrament, Of his avowing and asserting the Protestant Cause when he was sent Embassadour into Spain about the Treatise of Marriage, and the Faithfull service he did the King his Master in that Embassie, and how that when he was sent for over into England the Conde de Olivares avertild him what was plotted against him here and perswaded him in the Prefence of Sir Walter Aston, to stay there in respect of the Danger, making great Offers of Honour and Preferment, which relying upon his Innocence and integrity he refus'd and came over.

Then the Earl gave in his Answer to each Particular Article of the impeachment.

F "1 WHAT was charg'd against him in the first Article, His dealing unfaithfully in the Business of the Palatinate he utterly denied producing Letters "from the Queen of Bohemia, from the Duke of Buckingham, and from King James "himselfe, in each of which his good Services as to that particular were acknowledg'd, "and very well accepted of: he also clear'd himselfe touching the Match, proving that "it was really intended by the King of Spain.

The Earl of Bristol's Answer to his Charge.

G "2. His continuing the Treatise upon Generalities charg'd against him in the Second Article he also deny'd.

"3. Nor did he ever, as he said, dissuade his Majestie from taking Arms against Spain. As the Third Article infers but advis'd, that all fitting Preparation for War might be made.

"4. That

‘4. That he doubted of the probability of the Match he granted, and said that he A ‘alwaies wish’d and advis’d a protestant Match : he farther acknowledg’d that he might ‘say, he would get his Instructions perfect, but for the other clause of the Fourth Ar‘ticle which tax’t him of saying, he would make his fortunes thereby; he affirm’d it was ‘impossible for him to hold so mean and unworthy a discourse.

‘5. He said he was so farr from moving his Majestie to set Priests at Libertie and ‘grant Papists a toleration, that though his Majestie was ingaged by the Treatie at ‘Madrid and his Promise to Conde Gondomar to doe many things in favour of Papists, ‘yet he the said Earl would not condescend hereunto de bene esse, as may appear by his B ‘Letters to Mr. Secretary Calvert.

‘6. That the Assurances he gave his Majestie concerning the Treaties were no other ‘then what were given by the Emperour and the King of Spain, and that it was nei‘ther those Assurances, nor the jealousies of Spain but other Motives that were the ‘originall cause of the Prince his now Majesties said Journey.

‘7. and 8. His words never tended to the perswading of the Prince to change his ‘Religion, as the Seventh and Eighth Articles imply, and therewith produc’t a Letter C
 ‘of his to his M. that now is, wherein he gave his advice chiefly for a Match with a Pro‘testant Princes but if a Catholick he inclin’d rather to Spain then France, but as to the ‘first he onely told his Majestie that the generall opinion of thar Court was, that the ‘intention of his comming thither was to be a Roman Catholick: as to the Second that ‘upon occasion of a Letter putting his Majestie in mind of the great Actions of his roy-
 ‘all predecessours in the Holy War, the Earl beleveth he might say by way of Dis‘course, that in regard of the difference of Religion, it was of more difficulty to under‘take such great Actions now then in former Ages.

‘9. That he deliver’d not his opinion concerning the Marriage of the Prince Pala-
 ‘tines Son with the Emperours Daughter, and his Education in the Emperours Court ‘otherwise then by way of discourse, and that with regard had to his being bred up in ‘his own Religion, and to shew that King JAMES himselfe was not averse to it, he pro-

‘10. That his forwardnesse to consummate the Match was in respect of a Warrant un‘der his Late Majesties hand, his Commission under the great Seal, positive order from ‘his Majestie by Letters, since it was agreed by Capitulation to be so many days after E
 ‘the dispensation arriv’d, the Proxies were left to that end in his hands, and renewed af‘ter his Majesties return into England.

‘11. Lastly touching his Petition he hop’d to justifie the Contents of it in such sort ‘that it should not displease his Majestie nor deserve that expression which was used in ‘the Charge.

Sir. Dudley Diggs his Prologue to the Articles against the Duke.

While these two Peers were thus contesting, the house of Commons had time to frame their impeachment against the Duke; as hoping that this, joyned with the Earls, might give him a to-tall Rout, it was therefore presented to the Lords on the Eighth of May, and the Cause managed by Master Glanvill, Master Herbert, Master Selden, Master Pim, Master Wansford, Master Sher- land; to whom was added Sir Dudley Diggs, as Prolocutor, and Sir John Elliot brought up the Reare. Sir Dudley Diggs, in his prologue after a complaint made against the Dukes ill ordering the Martiall Affairs, gave the Lords a generall accompt of the impeachment.

First, That the Duke had ingrossed, Bought, and Sold the greatest Offices of the Kingdome.

Secondly, That he had by backwayes and bywayes procured to himself and others the chiefest Honours, which ought to have been the rewards of vertue.

Thirdly, That he had unworthily promoted his own Kindred, to the great Charge and burden of the Crowne. G

Lastly, That he had cast unjust aspersions upon the Late King for excuse of his own exorbitances; After the Prologue the Commons presented their accusation which we refer to the Dukes Answer, a month after, but whilst the Commons dealt with the Lords, for the removing of the Duke from his place and Councell during his impeachment, Sir Dudley Diggs, and Sir John Eli- ot, were committed to the Tower, (yet soone after released,) the Judges giving in their verdict
 That

A that the whole house was arrested in their persons and the Commons remonstrating thereupon.) The Duke being sensible of the number of his adversaries, even in the house of Lords, perswaded the King, by his parent to create three of his confederates Barons, to wit the Lord Mandevill, was created Baron Kimbolton, Grandison Baron Imbercourt and Calton Baron Tregase, and to having augmented the Number of his Friends, he presents his defense to the Lords, and forbore the house in the mean time while his Cause might be determined, which (had he not been well back't) might have gone hard with him, as we may here see by the Commons impeachment against him for Misdemeanours, Murtherous, Offences, Crimes, and other matters comprised in those Thirteen Articles following, setting down the Dukes Answer to each particular.

B First, That he the said Duke, being young and unexperienced, hath of late years with Articles of the house of Commons against the Duke of Buckingham with the Dukes reply to each, exorbitant ambition; and for his owne advantage, procured and ingrossed into his own hands, severall great Offices, both to the Danger of the State, and prejudice of that Service which should have been performed in them; and to the Discouragement of others, who are thereby precluded from such Hopes as their Vertues, Abilities, and publique Employments might otherwise have obtained.

C "Reply, That his late Majestie did of his own Royall motion bestow them upon him and he hopeth, and conceiveth, he may without Blame receive, what his Bountifull Master conferreth upon him if the Common Wealth doth not suffer thereby. Nor is it without precedence that men Eminent in the esteem of their Sovereigne, have held as great and as many Offices as himselfe, but if it shall be proved, that he falsely or corruptly hath executed those Offices, he is and will be ready to resigne them with his Life and Fortunes to his Majesties Dispose.

D Secondly, That in the 16 year of the reigne of the late King, he did give and pay to the then Earl of Nottingham, for the Office of great Admirall of England, and Ireland, and of the Principallitie of Wales, and Generall Governour of the Seas, and Ships of the said Kingdoms, and for the Surrender of the said Offices, to the intent, the said Duke might obtaine them to his own use, the Sum of 8000l. and did also procure for the said Surrender from the late King, an Annuity of 1000l per annum, payable to the said Earle, for which Considerations the said Earle Surrendered the said Office, with his Letters Patents, unto the late King, who granted them to the said Duke for his Life, which is an Offence contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realme, those Offices so highly concerning the Administration and execution of Justice.

E "Reply, That the Earl of Nottingham, then Lord Admirall, being grown much in years, and finding himselfe not so fit nor able to performe what appertained to his place, as formerly, became an earnest Suitor to his late Majestie, to permit him to surrender up his office, who, at length, being overcome by the Earles many Sollicitations, condescend thereunto; and his late Majestie, at the entreaty of others, without the Dukes Privacy, was also perswaded to confer it upon the Duke much against his will, he being no way experienced in those Affaires; So that the Earle did freely Surrender, and the Duke accept the Grant of the said Office without the least contract or Proviso. But true it is, that his late Majestie Out of his Royall bounty, F did grant to the said Earle a pension of 1000l. Per annum, as a recompense for his former Service to the Crowne, and also the Duke himselfe did freely and voluntarily, with his late Majesties approbation, as an Argument of his Honourable respects, to so noble a Predecessor, send the Earl Three thousand Pounds, which he hopeith is not blame-worthy in him.

G Thirdly, That he the said Duke, in the 22. year of the late King, did give and pay unto Edward Lord Zouch, for the Offices of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Constable of Dover Castle, the Sum of one Thousand Pounds, and granted also an Annuity of 500l. Per annum, during his Life; and that for the consideration aforesaid, the said Lord Zouch did Surrender his Offices, and Letters Patents, to the late King, who granted them to the said Duke for his Life, which Offices (so highly concerning the administration of Justice) the Duke hath ever since held against the Laws of the Land.

"Reply, That the Lord Zouch, being growne in years, and unfit to mannage the Office

"Office of the Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Constable of Dover Castle; which A
 "are indeed both but one, discovered a willingness to surrender it, and made sever-
 "all offers thereof to the Duke of Richmond; who at last contracted with the said
 "Lord Zouch, for his surrender, for the consideration of one Thousand pounds in "money, and five hundred pounds Per annum; and the said Duke of Richmond being "prevented by Death, his late Majestie directed the Duke of Buckingham, to go "through with the Lord Zouch for it, upon the same termes; which he was the wil-
 "linger to doe, by reason he had found by experience that the Kings service suffered "much through the Emulation, disaffection and contention, arising between those B
 "two officers; and he hopeth this Act of his, in acquiring this Office, accompanied "with such circumstances, the King also being both privy and directing, will re"ceive a favourable construction, especially, considering he was altogether unac"quainted with any Law to the contrary.

Fourthly; That he hath neglected the just execution of those his Offices, and violated the trust reposed in, and committed to him by them, insomuch as through his neglect the Trade of this Kingdome hath been of late much decayed, and the Seas ignominiously infected with Pirats and Enemies, to the great loss both of Ships and goods, and imminent C
Danger of this Kingdome.

"Reply. That the Loss happening to the Kings Subjects by Pirats and Enemies, "hath not proceeded through the Dukes default, as is suggested; but because the "pirats Ships are built of a mould as fit for flight as for fight; being far too nimble for "the Kings Ships. To prevent which inconvenience for the time to come, there is pre"sent order taken for the building of Ships of the same shape with those of Dunkirk:
 "and for the Pirats of Sally, That provision is taken either to restrain by Treaty,
 "or to repress them by Force, as will give good Satisfaction; and this will clearly ap- D
 "pear upon proof.

Fifthly. *That whereas about Michaelmas last, a Ship called the St. Peter of New haven, laden with many divers Merchants jewels and commodities to the value of 40000l.
 or there about, for the proper account of Monsieur de Villars, then Governour of New-haven, was taken by the Ships of his Majesties late Fleet, and brought into the Port of Plymouth, as a prize, upon probability that the said Ship or goods belonged to the Subjects of the King of Spain: Whereupon there was an Arrest of two English Ships at New-haven in the Kingdome of France: after which intimation was given to the Advocate in E the chief Court of Admiralty, from his Majestie, by Secretary Cooke for the freeing and discharging the said Ship and goods, and thereupon by Commission under Seal, the said Ship and goods were released. The said Duke, notwithstanding any such Order, and Decree, detained still to his own use, the Gold, Silver and Pearls, Jewels and other Commodities so taken out of the said Ship, and unjustly caused the said Ship to be arrested againe, in contempt of the Lawes of this Land, and to the prejudice of Trade.*

"Reply, That complaint being made on the behalfe of some French men at the Coun-
 "cell table, concerning the St. Peter, and some other ships; his Majestie then present F
 "did order, That she and all other should be released, as were found to belong to any "Prince or State in Amity with him, provided, they were not fraudently coloured:
 "And accordingly this ship was by sentence in the Admiralty discharged, but within
 "few days after, new information came to the Lord Admirall, that this ship was la"den by the Subjects of the King of Spain in Spain, that the Admirantess waited her "beyond the North Cape; And that Witnesses were ready to attest as much, upon "which the Duke acquainted his Majestie therewith, and by his command made stay
 "of this ship, as he was assured (by the opinion of the King, and five other advoca- G
 "he might doe: and command was given to the Kings Advocate, to hasten the Exa"mination of witnesses, in pursuance of the new information. But the French Mer"chants, impatient of delays, which the producing many Witnesses would occasion, "complained againe to the Councell board, and obtained an order from thence, for
 "the delivery of the said ship and goods upon security; which security was once offer-
 "red but after retracted; yet upon the consideration of the testimonies produced: the Kings

A "Kings Advocate informing the Duke, that the proof came short for that Ship; The Duke did instantly give order for her finall discharge, and that all her Goods should be re-imbarqued to the Owners, which was done accordingly.

Sixthly, That the East-India Merchants in the 21. of the late Kings Reign, preparing to set forth four great Ships richly laden in their usuall course of Trade, the Duke moved the Lords then assembled in Parliament, to know, whether he should make stay of those ships for the Service of the States: which motion being approved by the Lords, the Duke accordingly did stay those Ships, and after procured a Joynt Action to be entred in the Court of Admiralty, in the Name of the late King, and himself as Lord Admirall, against 15000 l. pretended to be Piratically taken by some Captains of the sayd Merchants Ships, and in the hands of the sayd Captains; and accordingly an Attachment was served upon the sayd Merchants: Whereupon the sayd Merchants being urged to bring in the 15000 l. or to go to Prison, made new sute to the Duke for the release of their Ships; who pretending that the Parliament must be moved therein, the Merchants much perplexed, and considering they should lose much by unlading their Ships, and the loss of their Voyage; resolved to tender to the sayd Duke 10000 l. for his unjust demand, who by colour of his Office extorted, and extracted from them the sayd 10000 l. and upon receipt thereof, and not before, released the sayd Ships.

"Reply, That the motion in Parliament about the stay of the East-India Ships, was only upon apprehension, that they might be serviceable for the defence of the Realm. That the Action entred in the Court of Admiralty against the East-India Company, was not after (as is suggested) but divers Months before that motion in Parliament, yea, before the Parliament began. That the Composition (mentioned in this Article) was not moved by the Duke, but made by the late King; and that the Company without any Menaces or Compulsion, agreed to the Composition, as willing to give so much, rather then to abide the hazard of the Sute. That of the sayd summs, all but 200 l. was employed by his late Majesties Officers for the benefit of the Navy. And lastly, That those Ships were not discharged upon payment of the sayd summe of 10000 l. but upon an Accommodation allowed that they should prepare other Ships for his Majesties service, whilst they went on their Voyage; which accordingly they did.

E Seventhly, That the Duke being great Admirall of England, did by colour of the sayd Office procure one of the principall Ships of the Navy-Royall, called the Vant-guard, and six other Merchants Ships of great burthen, to be conveyed over, with all their Ordnance, Ammunition, and Apparel, into the Kingdome of France, and did compell the sayd Masters and Owners of the sayd Ships, to deliver the sayd Ships into the possession and Command of the French King and his Ministers, without either sufficient security for their re-delivery, or necessary Caution in that behalf, contrary to the duty of his Office, and to the apparent weakening of the Navall strength of this Kingdome.

F "Reply. That those ships were lent to the French King without his privy. That when he knew thereof, he did what appertained to his Office; that he did not by Menace, nor any undue practice by himself, or any other, deliver those ships into the hands of the French. That what Error hath since hapned, was not in the intention any way injurious to the State, nor prejudiciall to the interest of any private man.

G Eighthly, That the Duke knowing that the sayd Ships were intended to be employed against the Rochellers and the Protestants elsewhere, did compell them as aforesayd, to be delivered to the French King and his Ministers, to the end, that they might be employed against those of the reformed Religion, contrary to the intension of our Sovereign Lord the King, and to his former promise at Oxford, and to the great scandall of our Nation.

"Reply, That understanding a discovery, that those ships should be employed against Rochell, he endeavoured to divert the course of such Employment: and whereas

"whereas it is alledged, that he promised at Oxford that those ships should not be so "employed, he under Favour saith, he was mis-understood; for he only sayd, that
 "the event would shew it, being confident in the promises of the French King, and "that he would have really performed what was agreed upon. A

Ninthly, That he hath enforced some who were rich (though unwilling) to purchase Honours; As the Lord Roberts Baron of Truro, who was by Menaces wrought to pay the sum of 10000 l. to the sayd Duke, and to his use, for his sayd Barony.

"Reply, He denieth any such Compulsion of the Lord Roberts to buy his Honour, B "and that he can prove, that as the sayd Lord did then obtain it by the solicitations "of others, so was he willing formerly to have given a great sum for it.

Tenthly, That in the eighteenth year of the late King, he did procure of the late King the Office of high Treasurer of England, so the Viscount Mandevill, now Earl of Manchester, for which Office he received of the sayd Viscount to his own use, the sum of 20000 l. of money; and also did procure in the twentieth year of the late King the Office of Master of the Wards and Liveries for Sir Lionell Cranfield, afterwards Earl of C Middlesex, and as a Reward for the sayd procurement, he had to his own use, of the sayd Sir Lionell Cranfield, the sum of 6000 l. contrary to the Dignity of his late Majesty.

"Reply, That he had not, nor did receive any penny of the sayd summs to his own "use. That the Lord Mandevill was made Lord Treasurer by his late Majesty, with"out any Contract for it; and though his Majesty did after borrow of the sayd Lord
 "20000 l. yet was it upon Proviso of re-payment, for which the Duke at first past his D
 "word, and after entred him security by Land, which stood engaged untill his late "Majesty, during the Dukes being in Spain, gave the Lord satisfaction by Land in "Fee-farm, of a considerable value; whereupon the Dukes security was returned "back: and that the 6000 l. disbursed by the Earl of Middlesex, was bestowed upon
 "Sir Henry Mildmay by his late Majesty (without the Dukes privacy) who had
 "and enjoyed it all entire.

Eleventhly, That he hath procured divers Honours for his Kindred and Allies to the prejudice of the ancient Nobility, and disabling the Crown from rewarding extraordinary E Vertues in future times.

"Reply, That he believeth, he were rather worthily to be condemned in the opinion "of all generous minds, if being in such Favour with his Majesty, he had minded
 "only his own Advancement, and had neglected those whom the Law of Nature had "obliged him to hold most dear.

Twelfthly, That he procured and obtained of the late King divers Mannors, parcels of the Revenues of the Crown, to an exceeding great value, and hath received, and (to F his own use) disbursed great summs of money that did properly belong unto the late King; and the better to colour his doings, hath obtained severall privy Seals from his late Majesty, and his Majesty that now is, warranting the payment of great summs of money by him, as if such summs were directed for secret service of the State; when as they were disposed of to his own use: and hath gotten into his hands great summs, which were intended by the late King, for the furnishing and Victualling of the Navy Royall, to the exceeding diminution of the Revenues of the Crown, to the abusing and deceiving of his late, and now Majesty, and detriment of the whole Kingdome.

"Reply, That he doth humbly, and with all thankfulness, acknowledge his late
 "Majesties bountifull hand to him, and shall be ready to render back into the hands of "his now Majesty, whatsoever he hath received; together with his Life, to do him "service: but for the value suggested in the Charge, he sayth, there is a great mi-
 "take in the Calculation, as he shall make evident in a Schedule annexed, to which "he referreth himself: Nor did he obtain the same by any undue solicitation or pra-
 "dise,
 "Dice,

A "Aice, nor yet a release for any summs so received; but having severall times, and "upon severall occasions disposed divers summs of his late, and now Majesty, by "their private directions, he hath releases thereof for his discharge, which was ho"nourable in them to grant, and not unfit for him to desire, and accept, for his future Indemnity.

Lastly, That he being a sworn Servant of the late King, did cause and provide certain Plaisters and Potions for his late Majesty in his last sickness, without the privy of his Majesties Physicians; and that although those Plaisters and Potions formerly applyd, B produced such ill Effects, as many of his sworn Physicians did disallow, as prejudiciall to his Majesties health, yet nevertheless did the Duke apply them again to his Majesty; whereupon great Distempers, and dangerous Symptomes appeared in him, which the Physicians imputed to those Administrations of the Duke, whereof his late Majesty also complained, which was an Offence and Misdemeanour of so high a Nature, as may be called an Act of transcendent presumption. And the sayd Commons by Protestation, saving to themselves the liberties of exhibiting hereafter any other Accusation or Impeachment against the Duke, and also of replying unto what the Duke shall answer unto the sayd C Article; do pray that the said Duke may be put to answer all and every the Premises, and that such Proceeding, Examination, Tryals, and Judgments, may be upon every of them had, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

"Reply, That his late Majesty being sick of an Ague, a Disease out of which the "Duke recovered not long before, asked the Duke what he found most advantageous
"to his health; the Duke replied, A Plaister, and Posset drink, administred unto "him by the Earl of Warwick's Physitian: whereupon the King much desired the "Plaister and Posset-drink to be sent for, and the Duke delaying it, he commanded D "a Servant of the Dukes to go for it, against the Dukes earnest request, he humbly
"craving his Majesty not to make use of it without the advice of his own Physicians,
"and experiment upon others; which the King sayd he would do, and in confidence "thereof, the Duke left him, and went to London. And in the mean time, he being "absent, the sayd Plaister and Posset-drink were brought; and at the Dukes return, "his Majesty commanded the Duke to give him the Posset-drink, which he did, the "Physicians then present, not seeming to mistake it; afterward, the Kings Health de"clining, and the Duke hearing a Rumour, as if his Physick had done his Majesty
"hurt, and that he had administred Physick without advice; the Duke acquainted E "the King therewith, who with much discontent replied, They are worse then Devils "that say so.

Upon occasion of the Dukes Impeachment, this following Paper was secretly conveyed to the Kings Hands.

F That the great opposition against the Duke, was stirred and maintained by such as seek the destruction of this free Monarchy, because they find it not ripe to attempt against the King himself, they endeavour it through the sides of the Duke, the persons agreeing in this one mischief are of divers sorts and humours.
1. Medling and busie persons who love popular speeches.
2. Covetous Landlords, Inclosers, Depopulators, &c. who being of the Parliament, ease themselves of Subsidies, and lay it on the true Commons, and cry out the Grievances are caused by the Duke.
3. Recusants, who hate the Duke because of the breach of the Spanish Match.
4. Persons indebted, who by priviledge of Parliament avoid payment.
5. Puritans and Sectaries, Haters of Government, who would have the Kings power extinguisht in matters Ecclesiasticall, and limited in Civill.
G 6. Male-contents, who look upon the Duke with an evill Eye, because they themselves are not prefer'd.
7. Lawyers, who are very fit in Parliaments to second any Complaint against both Church and King, and all his Servants; with their Customes, Records, Statutes, and Presidents.
8. Merchants and Citizens, who deceive the King of Custome.
9. Innovators, Plebicola. That since the time of Henry the sixth, these Parliamen-

rary Discouragements were never suffer'd, as being certain Symptoms of sublequent Rebellions, Civill Wars, and the de-throning of Kings, no one Parriot daring to oppose them, least he incur the Reputation of a Coward in his Countries Cause; Kings therefore have ever strengthened themselves with some Favourite, as whom he might better trust then many of the Nobility tainted with this desire of Oligarchy. It behoveth, without doubt, his Majesty to uphold the Duke against them, who if he be but de-couraged, it will be the very Corner stone of that Work, which they intend to lay for the demolishing of this Monarchy; for if they prevail with this, they have hatch'd a thousand other Demands to pull the Feathers of Royalty. They will appoint him Counsellors, Servants, Alliances, Limits of Expences, and account of his Revenue: chiefly, if they can they will now dazle him in the begining of his Reign. Several things, though Actions of the King, are layd as Aspersions upon the Duke, who if he suffer in obeying his Sovereign, the next Attempt will be to call the King to account for any thing he undertakes, which doth not succeed according to all mens expectation and desire.

If it please his Majesty to remove and set aside all these dis-advantages, he shall find the Charge against the Duke, very empty and of small moment; All that hath been by the Parliament objected against him, except two or three things that may receive an Answer, being pardon'd at the Kings Coronation, which benefit every poor Subject enjoyeth.

The Apology of Sir Dudley Diggs, and other Members imprisoned in the Tower, about certain words spoken in the House.

SIR Dudley Diggs, as soon as he was releas'd out of the Tower, had somewhat to do to clear himself of certain words which he was charg'd to have uttered at a Conference, namely, That speaking of the Plaister apply'd to the late King, he sayd, That he forbore to speak farther in regard of the Kings Honour: But after his own solemn Protestation, and that of thirty six Lords, that no such words were spoken, the King remained satisfied.

SIR John Elliot also made his Apology in reference to severall sharp Expressions against the Duke, of which he was taxed in a Speech by the Vice-chamberlain Sir Dudley Carlton, as his comparing him to a strange Beast, when speaking of the plurality of his great and different Offices he us'd the word Stellionatus, from a certain discolour'd Beast call'd Stellio; that he used the phrase, That man, which was to be esteem'd a great Indignity. That he compared him to Sejanus, &c. After he had explain'd his meaning in each of these expressions; the House resolv'd upon the Question, That in any thing that had proceeded from him, he had not gone beyond the Commission given him; the like Vote they pass'd for Sir Dudley Diggs, and the rest of those that managed that Conference.

The Duke of Buckingham chosen Chancellor of Cambridge.

In the mean time, that the Duke stood impeached in Parliament, the Earl of Suffolk dying, and the Vice-chancellorship of Cambridge becoming void by his death; The University understanding it was the Kings pleasure, that the Duke of Buckingham should be chosen Chancellor in his Room, were studious to shew themselves compliant with his Majesties desire in that Election, especially Dr. Maw the Master of Trinity College, who by his own power and interest, procur'd three and forty Votes for the Duke; but there wanted not a strong and resolute party who oppos'd this Election, and made choice of the Lord Thomas Howard, second son to the Earl of Suffolk deceased, insomuch, that the Duke carried it only by five Voyces, there being a hundred and eight for him, and a hundred and three for the Lord Howard, who sent a Letter of acknowledgment to Mr. Granado Chester (who having some dependence upon him, was the principall Stickler in his behalf) desiring him to impart his thanks to his Friends in the University, who had been ready to give their suffrage for him. The House of Commons thinking it not fit that the Chancellorship of Cambridge, should be confer'd upon a person that stood publicly charg'd with high mis-demeanors, were about to have signified by Letter to the University, their dislike of that Election, and the rather, for that in the manner of it there were many passages in contempt of the House; the King hearing of this their intention, forbade them by Sir Richard Weston, the sending of any such Letter; saying, That if any thing in the manner of the Election, were done in contempt of the House, they might inquire after it, and punish the Offenders; but for the Election it self, his Majesty did avow it, and resolv'd to maintain

A maintain the Universities against any that should go about to infringe their Liberties, nor had he ever heard, that upon Accusation only, a man should lose his good Opinion in the World. Presently after he writ a Letter in approbation of the foresaid Election; the Duke also sent a Letter of acknowledgment to the University, in which he expresseth his high resentment of the honour that was done him in that Choice, and how happy he esteem'd himself in being thought well of by men of their Profession and Merit, and promis'd to imploy his utmost endeavours for the maintaining of the Charters and Immunities of the University in generall, and for advancing Students of Merit and Learning in particular.

B About this time, the King earnestly pressed the House of Commons again by their Speaker, Sir Henage Finch, about a speedy supply; letting them know, That if they did not pass the Bill of Subsidy by the end of the week following, it would enforce him to take other Resolutions, and if by their deniall, or delay, any thing of ill consequence should fall out, either at home, or abroad, he called God and Man to Witnes, that he had done his part to prevent it, by calling his People together, to advise with him; whose sitting, if they dispatch'd this according to his desire, he resolv'd to continue for the dispatch of other Affairs, and after their Recess, to bring them again together, the next Winter.

The King
presseth the Parliament for supply.

C The Commons before they sent their Answer to the Kings Message, first drew up a Petition to his Majesty;

That he would be pleas'd to remove from all places of Trust and Authority, all such persons as were either Popish Recusants, or according to direction of former Acts of State justly to be suspected. And therewithall they sent a large Scrowl, containing the Names of all such Noble-men and others, as remain'd in places of high Trust in the severall Countiees of England.

D The Duke of Buckingham having given in his Answer to the late Articles against him into the Lords House, mov'd their Lordships to send to the Commons for a speedy Reply; whereupon the Commons also desir'd to have a Copy of his Answer.

But the Duke fearing the issue of this Business, humbly applyed himself unto the Lords, whom he entreated to allow him the benefit of the free and generall Pardon granted by King James in Parliament, in the one and twentieth year of his Reign; together with that of the present King at his Coronation. Upon the fourteenth of June, the Parliament had drawn up another Declaration of Grievances against the Duke, whom they resolv'd utterly to overthrow, though against the Kings Inclination, who thereat incens'd, the very next day dissolved them, and committed the Earl of Bristol to the Tower, sending forth also a Proclamation for burning of all Copies of the Commons afore-mentioned Declaration. To shew the manner and form of the Kings dissolving the Parliament; I have thought it not amiss to insert the Kings Commission under the Great Seal, to that intent, which ran thus;

The Parliament being resolved to prosecute, the Duke is dissolved by the King.

Severall wayes resolv'd on for the advancing of the Kings Revenue.

Presently after the King set forth a Declaration, in which he made known the Grounds and Reasons of his dissolving this and the former Parliament. Also by the instance and advice of his Councell, taking into consideration the present necessity of his Majesties Affairs; he resolv'd to take some speedy course to advance the impair'd Revenue of the Crown: Whereupon he first declares, That all men of what quality soever, should for two years space, upon pain of high displeasure, forbear to sollicite any Sure for any thing prohibited in the Book of Bounty, publick

A publisher in King James his time. Next, speciall care was taken by the Councell for the laying of Customs and Imposts, upon all such Merchandizes as were Imported and Exported, as being a thing intended to have been settled by the two last Parliaments, but was prevented by their suddain Dissolution: and because the Forfeitures arising to the Crown by the execution of the Laws against Priests and Recusants, had been corruptly extorted and mis-employ'd by inferior Officers, a Commission under the Great Seal was directed to the Archbishop of York, Sir John Savile, Sir Henry Slingsby, and others to compound with the sayd Recusants for Leases of their Lands and Tenements for Forfeitures due since the tenth year of King James, and Sir John Savile, was appointed Receiver of such summs of money as should be paid upon these Leases. Also Privy Seals were issued out, and Benevolence proposed; especially the Nobility were incited by the King to contribute liberally upon the present juncture of urgent Affairs, and the summe required was to be according to the proportion of the foure Subsidies, and three Fifteens intended to have been given by the Parliament. Likewise a Proclamation was set forth, shewing the Kings Intention to make his Revenue certain, by granting his Lands as well held by Copy, as otherwise, to be held in Fee-farm. The severall Maritime Counties and Port-Towns were order'd by the Councell, to set out Ships for the guarding of the Coasts, against the Attempts of Spain and Flanders; in particular, the City of London was charged with twenty of the best Ships upon the River, with all manner of Tackle, and Ammunition, and Victuals for three Months; the City hereupon petition'd for an abatement unto ten Ships, and two Pinnaces, and the Ports of Pool, Lime, and Weymouth, presented an Excuse in behalfe of themselves, and the County, alledging the Case to be without President; to these the Councell answer'd, That State occasions in times of extraordinary danger, were not to be disputed by ordinary Presidents: to the City alledging disability; they answer, That the Charge imposed on them, exceeded not the value of many of their private Estates; they therefore requir'd Conformity, without any excuse, or disputing of the Case. To the Lords Lieutenants of the severall Counties, Commissions were sent to Muster those that were apt for War, and to Array and Arm them, according to their severall degrees and faculties: And for securing of the Coasts, divers of the Kings Ships were employ'd in the River Elbe, to prevent the furnishing of Spain, from those parts with Materials for Shipping: A Royall Fleet was also preparing to be set out, under the Command of the Lord Willoughby of Parham, and the Design given out to be for Barbary.

About this time, there came to the Court of England, the News of a great Overthrow given by Count Tilly, to the King of Denmark, who had taken up Armes against the Emperour in the Cause of the Prince Elector Palatine, upon which the King began presently to advise with his Councell, about some speedy and more effectuall Course for the supplying him with money; then had yet been taken, and upon Consultation, a generall Loan was resolv'd upon as the most convenient way (since the present state of things admitted not of the way of Parliament) and forthwith Commissioners being appointed, had private Instructions given them, how to behave themselves in the management of the business: As,

1. That for a good example to others, they should themselves lend his Majesty the severall summs required.
2. To go according to the Rates at which people were Assessed in the Book of the last Subsidy.
3. To stir up every man to a cheerfull lending, by declaring the unavoidable necessity of raising this course, and using other the most prevalent Arguments they could devise; As the Honour of the Nation, the defence of true Religion, the safety of Prince and People.
4. That they appoint the dayes of payment to be within fourteen dayes.
5. That they treat with every one apart, and not in the hearing of others.
6. That they begin with such as are likely to shew best examples.
7. That they endeavour to discover, whether any by under-hand perswasions, or otherwise go about to hinder the good Intentions of others, and if any such be found, to certifie their Names, Qualities, and Habitations to the Councell.
8. That they signifie his Majesties pleasure to remit upon the lending of these summs, whatsoever hath been desir'd upon the late Benevolence, or privy Seals.
9. That they admit of no Sure to be made, or Reasons to be given for the abating of any summe.

10. That upon their Faith and Allegiance to his Majesty, they keep these Instructions secret to themselves, and not disclose them to any others.
- That which made this Loan the more unwelcome, was, For that at the same time the Soldiers return'd from Cadix, were Billited in severall parts, and their Quarters to be discharg'd by Moneys rais'd out of the Countiees.

Sir Randolph Crew for shewing himself backward and cold in promoting this Business of the Loan, was displaced from his Office of Lord chief Justice, and Sir Nicholas Hide advanced in his room; the Bishop of Lincoln also had an Information prefer'd against him at the Councell Table by Sir John Lamb, and Doctor Sibthorp, for publicly speaking certain words concerning the Loan, in dis-advantage of the King and his Government, and for favouring that sort of men call'd Puritans, and Non-conformists; and afterwards for the same things an Information was given in against him at the Star-chamber, not long before which, Bishop Laud hearing that the News brought to the Court of the King of Denmark Overthrow.

A Commission granted by the King for the raising of a general Loan.

Bishop Laud's Deam concerning the Bishop of Lincoln

sayd Bishop Williams endeavoured to re-gain the Favour of the Duke, dream'd the same Night A that he received this News; That the Bishop of Lincoln came with Iron Chains, but returned freed from them: That he leaped upon a Horse, departed, and he could not over-take him. This was by him interpreted, to betoken that which afterwards fell out concerning the Bishop of Lincoln taking Armes for the Parliament in Wales, and his being at liberty, when he himself was Imprison'd. Besides the cause of the Prince Palatine, there were other important Reasons of State, which exacted these great Supplies of money, the chief whereof was a War now Commencing with France upon this occasion.

The occasion of a new War began between England and France.

Lewis the Thirteenth, King of France, had borrowed of his Brother-in-law, King Charles, the Ship, called the Vaunt-guard, and six Merchants Ships, in pursuance of a Design against Italy, and the Valtoline, but with this Condition, They should not be employed against the Rebellers, between whom, and the French King, an Accord had been lately made by Mediation of the English Ambassadors. Monsieur de Soubize the Staziarch, having gotten together a scattered number of small Ships, took advantage of the French Armies Advance towards Italy, and brake the Agreement unawares, surprizing the Isle of Rhe, and some Ships in the Harbour, and had also taken Fort Lewis, if not prevented by the Duke of Vendosme. Lewis stomaching their Infidelity, turns his whole Designe for the Valtoline upon Reckell, and with the seven English Ships under Admirall Pennington, and twenty Dutch under Admirall Halstein, and the French Navy Conducted by Momorancy, brake furiously in upon Soubize, forceth him from his fastness, Reprizeth sundry Ships, and chaseth him to the Isle of Oleron. King Charles reſented this Action of the French Kings as a Violation of his royall Paroll, and therefore sent him an expostulatory Meſſage, requir- ing his reason for his miſ-employing of his Ships, and speedy reſtitution of them. And when Lewis deferred to give ſatisfaction of these particulars, the King ſeized here a rich Ship of New-haven, and the French King Arrested the Goods of the English Merchants in France, to the value of three hundred thousand pounds: but at length a Reconciliation was made, and the French had their Goods re-imbarqued to them; and on the other ſide, the English Ships and Goods were releaſed. Thus all was calm again for the preſent, untill the insolent Deportment of the Queens French Attendants produced a new Rupture; her Priest and Confeſſor had impoſed upon her to go bare-foot, to Spin, to wait upon her Servants at their ordinary repaſts, and to trace on foot in the Mire, on a rainy Morning, from Somerſet-houſe to St. James's (himself riding by her in the Coach) and to progreſs her Ambulations as far as Tyburn-Gallows, to offer up her Prayers for the Souls of Jesuits Martyrs formerly truſted up there for Treason.

The King diſ-charges certain of the Queens Servants, by reason of their inſolent carriage.

The Bishop of Ments had ſhewed himself too buſie in conteſting with the Earl of Holland about the Queens Dowry-Mannors, to the diſgrace of the King, who had conferred that Stewardſhip upon the Earl: And the Lady St-George had been proved to have raiſed ſuſpicion in the young Queen, of the Kings diſ-aſſection to her, and over-much Favour to the English Ladies; and that through a cauſleſs taking diſtaſt at a Repulſe, from riding in the Coach with both their Majelties, Ladies of greater Eminency worthily claiming Preferment. Theſe, and many other Arrogancies had been juſtly layd to the charge of the Queens French Domesticks, which appearing altogether intolerable, the King thought good to diſcharge them all, and paying them all their Dues, with large Rewards, the whole amounting to twenty two thousand pounds, and eight hundred pounds Sterling, Commanded them all home to their own Country; where making their Complaint to the French King, they induced him to ſend over an Ambaſſador on purpoſe to demand their Reſtitution, whoſe Negotiation yet proved ineffectuall, by reaſon that the Parliament of Rean had in the mean time Arrested the English Wine-Merchants Ships at Blay Caſtle, upon the Gironde: a thing ſo ſtomached by King Charles, that he reſolved upon Hoſtility with France.

In the mean time, the Proteſtants Affairs in Germany were at a low Ebb, and danger from thence ſeemed to threaten us at our own Homes, which appeared alſo the more portentous to us, for that about the ſame time, our Fleet under the Command of the Lord Willoughby, and the Earl of Denbeigh, which had been ſent out to the Aide of the Rebellers, had met with ſo terrible a Storm, as they were all ſcattered, and found much difficulty to gain ſafe Harbour.

The Aſſeſment of the Loan generally oppoſed, upon which divers Gentlemen are Imprisoned.

This grand Aſſeſment of the Loan meeting with much oppoſition from people of all ſorts and degrees, thoſe of lower Rank were order'd to appear in the Military Yard near St. Martins in the fields, before the Lieutenant of the Tower, to be by him there Liſted for Soldiers, it being thought fit, that thoſe who reſus'd to aſſiſt with their Purſes in the common defence, ſhould be forc'd to ſerve in their perſons; thoſe of higher Quality were bound over by Recognizance to appear at the Council-Table, which accordingly they did, and ſeverall of them were committed cloſe Priſoners to the Fleet, Marſhalſie, Gatehouſe, and other Priſons; among theſe imprison'd Gentlemen, Sir John Elliot being one, ſent a Petition to his Majesty, in which he quoted many Preſidents of former Kings Reigns, to ſhew, that all manner of Aides and Taxes never us'd to be levied but by the generall conſent of the Nobility and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, and gave other Reasons and Motives of his forbearance, to contribute to the ſayd Loan; Notwithſtanding this Perition, he remained a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe, till the generall Order of Diſcharge.

Sir Peter Hayman upon the ſame occaſion being charg'd by the Lords of the Council with Refractorineſs

A Refractoriness and unwillingness to serve the King, was Commanded to go upon his Majesties Service into the Palatinat; which Command, having first set his Estate in order, he obey'd.

It had been long since that George Abbot Archbishop of Canterbury had been under a Cloud, and little set by at Court; but now at length an occasion hapned which brought him into utter disfavour with the King, which was this; Doctor Sibthorp, and Doctor Manwaring two Court Orators, having zealously preach'd up the Duty and Necessity of the Loan, the first affirming;

Archbishop Abbot incurs the Kings displeasure for refusing to licence Dr. Sibthorp's Sermon in behalf of the Loan.

That the Prince hath power to direct his Councill, and to make Laws; and that Subjects if they cannot exhibit active obedience, in case the thing commanded should be against the Law of God, or of Nature, or were impossible, yet nevertheless they ought to yield a passive Obedience; and in all other Cases they were bound to active Obedience.

The Second maintaining;

That the Kings royall Command in imposing of Loans and Taxes, though without Common Consent in Parliament, doth oblige the Subjects Conscience, upon pain of Eternall Damnation.

C These Sermons were entertain'd at Court with generall Applause, that of Doctor Sibthorp especially call'd Apostolick Obedience, which was licenc'd and approv'd by the Bishop of London; also the King sent an expreis Command to Archbishop Abbot, to licence this Sermon, which he refusing, was for a time suspended from his Archiepiscopall See, and a Commission was granted to the Bishop of London, Durham, Oxford, Bath, and Wells, to execute for the present time that Jurisdiction.

D The Archbishop, that the truth and reason of these things might be manifested to the World, left a large Narrative of them written with his own hand; wherein he declar'd, That being of sixty five years of Age, when these things befell him, and having liv'd so long, for ought he knew, untainted in a place of high Trust, he thought it fit, that the reason of his removal should be understood, lest it might turn to the scandall of his Person and Calling: That his absenting himself from Court and publick Services, however finitely interpreted by his Enemies, was occasion'd only through his indisposition of body, and not any wilfull neglect, or Contumacy. That the cause of the Dukes displeasure toward him, was not upon any just ground, but for being one that cared not to stoop to him, so as to become his Vassall. That it was the Dukes design to urge the licencing of this Book upon him, thereby to reduce him to this streight, that either by doing it he might discover a great deal of baseness and unworthiness, or by refusing it, he might incur the Kings Indignation: Then he related by way of Dialogue, all the passages and discourses that hapned between Mr. William Murry of the Bed-chamber, who was sent to him from the King with his own Objections and Reasons why he could not licence the Book. He gives a Character of Doctor Land then Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was employ'd to answer his Objections; his unworthy manner of life before his Rise, his Ambition and Ingratitude to his Benefactors: he repeats Doctor Lauds Answer, and shews the Invalidity of it; then he relates the discourse between him and Secretary Conway, who came to Croyden to him with a Message from the King, commanding his retirement to Canterbury. And lastly, He rehearseth the manner of the Dukes being first brought into Favour with King James, and how mainly Instrumentall he was in that business, by the power and credit he had with Queen Anne, for which he then profess'd himself infinitely obliged to him, and seriously promis'd to follow the wholesome Councells which he gave him.

The Archbishop's Narrative, concerning the cause and manner of his suspension.

F Of those Gentlemen that were in Custody for Refractoriness in the business of the Loan, five; Namely, Sir Thomas Darnell, Sir Walter Earl, Sir John Corbet, Sir John Heveningham, and Sir Richard Hamden, brought their Habeas Corpus, and came to their Tryall before Sir Nicholas Hyde chief Justice: After the Cause had been long argued between Sir Robert Heath the Kings Attorney-generall, and those that were Councill for the Prisoners; as Serjeant Brampston for Sir John Heveningham, Mr. Selden for Sir Edward Hamden, Mr. Noy for Sir Walter Earl, and Mr. Calthrop for Sir John Corbet; the Lord chief Justice at last concluded, that since they were committed by the Kings Authority, the Court could not free them, so that for that time they were re-manded, till such time as the Order came out for a generall Release.

The 5 Gentlemen imprison'd about the Loan, have their Habeas Corpus granted, and are brought to their Tryall.

G The Irish Papists now hoped to make their Markets, and therefore in lieu of some Favour to them in the penall Laws, offered to furnish the King at their own charge with a constant Army of five thousand Foot, and five hundred Horse; and a large Contribution to the safe-guard of the narrow Seas. This Motion was oppos'd in England by Sir John Savill, who put the State upon Collecting the Arrears of Recusants Thirds, due to the King by Law; and in Ireland, by the Lord Primate of Armagh, the Bishop of Derry, and divers others, who publicly Protested against it, as a Course likely to preserve the Papists Interests, and to sink the Protestants; whereupon the Lord Deputy resorted to the Primate, and minds him, that as a privy Councillor, he was concerned to promote the Kings Affairs, and so moved him to try how far he could could prevaile with the Protestants for some competency to the Kings necessities; which he did A in a very learned speech, though the success answerd not his expectation.

It was now the third year of King Charles's Reigne, when Rhe action was agreed on, and though money came not in so plentifully as was hoped, yet the Duke of Buckingham desirous to wipe away the imputation of negligence in relation to his Admirallship, had which much adoe completed his navall Forces consisting of six thousand horse and Foot in Ten Ships Royall and nynie Merchant-men, with which he sets saile from Portsmouth the Twenty seventh of June, and published his Manifesto the Twenty first of July following, declaring at large the Kings affection to the reformed Churches in France, and his displeasure at the last mis-employing of his ships against the Rochellers. The first designe of this Fleete was intended against Fort Lewis wherein prevented by the Duke of Angoulesme, they resolved upon the Ile of Rhe, Twelve ships therefore were sent to guard the Entry of Port Breton, the rest sailed on to a Forte of the Ile of Rhe called de la Prie making their approaches with their Cannon so neere, that Monsieur Toras Governour of the Citadell of St. Martin perceiving their intention, sent out his Forces to the Number of one Thousand in seven partitions Horse and Foot to impede their shoaring: These were encountred by twelve Hundred English, whom Sir John Burrough, Sir Alexander Brett, Sir Edward Conway and Sir Charles Rich, had landed by the advantage of their great Ordnance. The Fight was sharp and quick; wherein many brave Gentlemen lost their Lives on both sides; of the French; Monsieur Restringler Brother to Toras, Chascolois Canfer, Navall, Tatlian, Mountaine, Heussey, Boisoneer, Condamine, sundry captaines, Lieutenants and Ensignes, most of the Officers of better note wounded; of the English, Sir Thomas York, Sir William Hegden, Sir Thomas Thornay, Sir George Blundell, Courtney, Glin, Whaley, Powell, Woodhouse, Goring, &c. Kinsman of Sir George Blandels, with Monsieur de Blancard, agent from the Duke of Roane and the Protestants: and of the wounded were, Rich, Conway, Hawle, Greenville, Abraham Rainford, Wellome, Thorp, Maryles, and Bennet: the Victory uncertaine. The English Generall removes his Camp to make good his publication there in French, of the reasons of the War, and, intrenching, dispatches Soubiz and Sir William Beecher to Rochell who returned with five Hundred Foot, and found the Duke before St. Martins Castle (the Chiefe strength of the Island) notwithstanding the disuasion of his Councell, who advised him first to attempt the other Castle called the Mede, which they might in all likelihood have carried, and would have proved an handsome and safe place of Retreat in their future necessity. Buckingham falls to circumvallation ording the Ships to incompass the Island without, to hinder all provision and supply from Toras; by which meanes the besieged were for the space of two months greatly distressed, in which time there hapned a hot conflict between both parties and that with equall success; and by a Letter of Toras to Monsieur Bellimounts, their extremitie appears to be such that (as he there saies) The Mills could not long stand, all their Corne spent, enforced their Souldiers to feede on their store of Bisket not lasting above Ten dayes: hereupon Buckingham summons Toras, who refusing to falsifie his trust, the English now strengthened with fresh auxiliaries from England and Ireland under command of Sir Ralph Bingles and Sir Pierce Crosby set themselves to invent new sorts of Engines to batter the Citadell, all which were rendred fruitless by wind and waves. And now Abbot Marscilane procures Monsieur Valin to undertake the conveying of Twelve Pinnaces laden with provision to the Relief of Toras and his Souldiers, which he prosperously achieved, and at his returne carried back with him their sick and wounded and women to the Duke of Orleanse. In the mean time scarcity afflicts the English Campe, and Sir John Burroughs, viewing the Workes, is shot through, whereof he shortly dies; the French King comes from Court to the Campe and thrice in Ten daies attempts to send over some aides to the Castle; but the English ships repelled them, and three daies after slew Monsieur: Brother to Toras and put to flight his Squadron: and now the Souldiers of the Castle were reduced to greater hardship then before, their Bread not for Fowr daies furnishing; wherefore having no other way left Toras resolved to win time by treating with Buckingham about surrender, hoping in the interim to have some better newes from his associates, which accordingly fell out; for Monsieur Mauaise who with other Pilots, heretofore, had founded the shelves and designed the station for the ships, contrived a way to bring them succour in despite of the English; it was in the Winter, the nights long and darke, by which advantage he had opportunity to pass by them with a Fleet of 35 saile, 150 Mariners, 300 souldiers, 160 of the chiefe Nobility and many Noble Commanders, with great store of viands and other Provision, having before sent some dissembling Renegadoes to tell the English that he passed a contrary way: so that when Buckingham expected a surrender they boundly shewed him their Rundlets of Wine, Turkies, and Capons upon the heads of their pikes and speares.

The Duke hereat dismaied spends the night in Councell and determines with all speed to raise the siege and be gone, but the Rochellers intreaties and Dolbiers Arrivall from England with assurance of Auxiliaries unhappilie prevailed with him for a longer stay, during which the fame of fresh Supplies to the besiegers published over all France, to be coming under command of the Earl of Holland, hastened the French to send forth another Fleet, consisting of fifteen good Ships, and Thirteen smaller Boats; part to St. Martins, and the rest to the Meadow Castle, besides Seaven others which got to the Meadow Fort by Bellamonts command, and now the French King resolves to dis-lodge the English, and dispatches over an Army of Four Thousand Foot and two Hundred Horse besides volunteers, under the Command of the Marshall of Schomberg, with Marylane his Lieutenent General, to whom came al the besieged and greatest part of the Islanders, being in all above Eleven Thousand men, after which another Army under Command of Bascompiere,

A piere, and Haliere with Eight hundred of their Kings Lifeguard, a Hundred and Fiftie of the Countrey thereabout, 30 of the Kings horfe, and Three great brafs pieces land at the Meadow Caſtle. Againſt theſe laſt Buckingham marches with five hundred Foot and Forty horfe, and forceth them to retreat to the Caſtle, and returning to his Campe finds the Trenches poſſeſſed by another Par- tie of the French Army; Stanley is ordered to beat them out againe, which he doth by main Force, though not without loſs, and the Lord Montjoy ſeized a ſmall Troop of French; him they endeavour'd to ſurpriſe with fix horſe in ſhow; whom he chaſed ſo far that he had almoſt come in danger of their Ambuſcado; one dark night a party of Engliſh fell upon a party of French, and not well diſcerning each one another, ſo nungled, that by miſtake the Engliſh falling into the French campe became a prey to them; nor did Warre only afflict the Engliſh but alſo ſickneſſe and want, whereby their Souldiers and Seamen were generally enfeebled, which put the Duke upon his ſmall Reſolution of taking his Farewell of the Iſland, with one more aſſault to Sr. Martines Caſtell. Tomas had intelligence of it, and therefore he managed his buſineſſe accordingly, and gave them ſo hot a welcome, as being oppreſſed and ſeld to the ground with ſhot, they dropt in heapes, and after a great loſs received, the General commands a Retreat by ſound, and ſoon after demolish'd his works, rais'd his ditches and levels his trenches, in order to his departure; Schomberg and Marſilane purſue; following to them in a Bravado and brandiſhing their drawn Swords. The Engliſh thinking the Ene- mie would then have charged them drew up in Bataillia, but they, knowing what advantage, the way would ſhortly give them, made a halt, whereupon the Duke marches on in military order untill they came to the Village Carda, where they made another ſtand, and by an Ambuſcado of muſqueteers placed behind the old wals, walks, Hedges, and Ditches, compelled the French to retreat, but the whole Army coming up, followed them ſlowly for three Miles, till they came to the Anſerine Cauſway, which was ſo narrow that they could only march fix a breſt, with Ditches on either ſide, moſtly ending in ſalt pits; and now Schomberg, eſpying his expected opportunity, powred forth a great volley of ſhot againſt them, and then the Engliſh began to march as faſt as poſſibly, but the Lord Montjoy's troops unable to endure the charge of the French horſe turned tayle and riding in amongſt the other Ranks put them into ſuch a diſorder as enabled the French eaſily to break in upon them and rout them with no ſmall ſlaughter, overthrowing ſome into the Ditches, and ſalt pits piercing others as they lay in the Dirt, nor was flight any whit more auſpicious to them, for thoſe who conſuſedly ran away, and, caſting away their arms, leaped into the water, were alſo cut off. Cunninghams horſe fought it out nobly unto the laſt man. Montjoy was taken priſoner, and civilly uſed. The reformadoes by uneven and turning patches made their way to the further bridge, with much danger, where joyning with Conway, Croſby, Fryar, and Hackſvil, and their forces, made good that paſſe by repulſe of the Ene mie and leaving a guard of Muſquetters there all day, ſet the Bridge on Fire, and lodged that night. In the looſe, Buckingham, the next day, demanded and obtained the dead Bodies, and then went on board.

Great was this days loſs, viz, about fifty officers, among whom were Sir William Cunningham, Sir Charles Rich, and Sir Alexander Brett, and neere two Thouſand common Souldiers ſlain, thirty Priſoners of Note, and Forty four Collours, taken; of the French, not above three Hundred loſt. The Duke hoſtes ſaile, and meets the Earl of Holland with his unſeaſonable recruits neere the Weltem coaſt of England, and at his return finding a favourable reception at the Kings hands lodges the loſs of the deſigne upon the Earle not ſeconding the expedition: but at Sea, things went ſomewhat better where Captain Trettor in his returne from Hambury ſeized by Command a great French Ship at the Texell in Holland, named the Sanct Spirit, with Twenty braſſe Culverines two braſſe ſeniculverins, two other great baſſ Guns, ſixteen large iron Guns, and two leſſer; in the hold for ballaſt, twelve great guns, Armes, for eleven Hundred Souldiers and eighteen barrels of powder, and Sir John Renington vice Admirall took Thirty four of their rich Marchant men home- wards bound, all which were ſafely brought unto England, to ſweeten, though not countervail, the loſs received. The poor remaines of this Army, moſtly Iriſh and Scots and conſequently rude and boiſterous were billited in villages to the great Diſguſt of the Countrey people.

The Kings condition at this time was ſomewhat low, his exchequer poor, and his reputation impaired by the improſperous enterprizes for the Aſſiſtance of the Rochellers now more then ever diſtreſſed, his confederate the King of Denmark vanquiſht by the Emperour, and the Engliſh Garrifon of Stoad reduced to great extremicie, the cauſes of which evils were gravely repre- ſented in Sir Roberts Cottons ſpeech of advice to certain Lords of the Councell when he was cal'd to deliver his opinion; upon theſe and the like conſiderations it was reſolv'd on, by the Councell, That a Parliament ſhould be ſummond; and immediatly Writs were Iſſued forth: alſo a Commiſ- ſion paſt under the great Seale to levie monies throughout the Nation by Impoſitions in nature of an Excife, and the Lord Treſurer was ordered to pay 30000 l to Phillip Burlamac a Dutch Mer- chant to be by him return'd over into the low Countreies to Sir William Balfour and John Dalbier for the raiſing of a Thouſand Horſe, and hereupon there were ſtrange ſuſpicions and Jealouſies entertain'd by many men as if the intent of raiſing theſe German horſe had been to bring them o- ver hither to enforce the payment of this Excife. There likewiſe began a conſultation about ad- vancing of the Kings Revenue by levying of ſhip-money upon the Countreies but the councell thought fit not to goe on with it in regard of the approaching Parliament. Not long before the beginning of which convention, there were apprehended a company of Jefuits in Clarksnewell at a houſe deſigned for a Colledge of that order, and among the reſt of their papers there was found the Coppy of a Letter, writen to their Father Reſter at Bruxells wherein the Author of it ac- quainted qualified Father Refector with all the subtle plots and contrivances their society had laid for the A imbroyling of this state; and for the erecting of an Universall catholick Monarchy; and to this end he said they chiefly made use of Arminians and Projectors, and that both these factions should cooperate to destroy the Parliament, and to introduce a new form of Government, that is to say Oligarchy, and that their chiefe care was to stave off the Puritans for having any influence upon the Duke; least they should negotiate a reconciliation between him and the Parliament: alio how that many times, obbing their purposes about, they took upon them the semblance of Puritans; that this impost of Excite was indutiously promoted by them, and the bringing in of a forraign Army of horse and foot to enforce it, which Army must needs prove insupportably burthensome to the Country and eat up the Kings Revennue, and that by this meanes they should be the better able to bring about their grand design, which was, To work the Potestants as well as the Catholicks to welcome in a Conquerour.

The Parliament Assembled.

The 17 of March being come, the Parliament assembled, and Sir John Finch chosen Speaker for the house of Commons, the King salutes them and tells them that the greatness of the common danger was such as required a speedy supply, and therefore they may rest assured, that it was the principall cause of their Convocation, wherein he hoped they would shew themselves, such true Patriots of the true Religion, the Lawes and liberties of this State, and just detence of their friends and Allies, now in such hazard by Popish Enemies, as not to deceive his expectations which were very great, though indeed somewhat nip't by remembrance of the distractions of the last Meeting. After the King, the Lord Keeper addrest his Speech to them, wherein he inslag'd himself upon all that the King had briefly intimated to them before, and earnestly press't them to consider of some speedy way for the supplying of his Majesties necessities. No sooner was this Parliament met, but presently before any thing had been begun to be debated among them, there came a Letter directed to the Members of the House of Commons, concerning the Grievances and manifold inconveniences of the State, from one who had been a Member of the former Parliament. This Letter was called, a Speech without doores, and first laid open the abuses of unlawfull Elections, when many times the Country by a threatening Letter from the Lord Leiftenant was forc't to chosse onely those whom he appointed, were the party never so ignorant or corrupt; the ill consequences of prohibiting freedom of speech, since there could be no redress of Enormities or injuries, if Men might not dare to complain freely of them; nor could the truth of any passage or transaction be brought to light if men were discourag'd from revealing the whole circumstance of what they knew: next it took notice of the severall sorts of greivances as well those which concern'd the Nation in generall as in particular. As

A letter directed to the house of Commons call'd a Speech without doores laying open the miscarriages of the Kingdome.

1. The attaining to Honours by base and mercenarie ways, without any merit or vertue in the Persons so advanc't,

2. The ill carriage of the Wars; and the consuming of a Mass of treasure to no purpose, which was caus'd by that sort of men which may be well term'd abusers of Princes, perswading them to war and to become poor, when they might live in Peace and become rich: and for this the Parliament had an unjust aspersi'on cast upon them, as if they had been a cause to draw his Majestie into a War and had failed on their parts to contribute to it; the disorders and outrages committed by the Souldiers in the Country when as there was no occasion nor any Enemy appearing.

Lastly, It exhorted them to manifest to the King their willing minds to repair and fit to Sea his Majesties Navies, which might be term'd the wals of England, and themselves to have power, with the advice of experienced men, to make them able and serviceable.

The case of the imprison'd Gentlemen debated.

The first thing taken into consultation was the opening of the Grievances of the Kingdome, and the First Grievance they debated on was, the case of those Gentlemen, who, having resus'd the Loan, were, notwithstanding their Habeas Corpus, commanded to Prison: this business took up a long and earnest debate, which was chiefly manag'd by Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir Benjamin Rudgard, Sir Edward Cook and Sir Robert Phillips, all of them eagerly contending for the Liberties and priviledges of the Subject, against the illegality of the Loan, and the imprisoning of men without alledging just cause: onely Sir John Cock, Secretary of State, argued for the King, and affirmed it to be more proper that supply's should be first taken into consideration and afterwards the redress of Grievances; We should begin, said he, with the King and not with our selves. Afterwards at another debate the Judges of the Kings Bench, Judge Whitlock, Judge Doddridge, and the Lord chief Justice Hide being desired to declare themselves upon this business, spoke in justification of their proceedings upon the Habeas Corpus, and that if they had granted them bail upon the Habeas Corpus, it must needs have reflected upon the King, as if he had unjustly imprison'd them; in conclusion it was resolv'd upon the question, no man Gainsaying;

1. That no freeman ought to be restrain'd by the command of the King or Privy Council, without some cause of the commitment,

2. That the writ of Habeas Corpus, ought to be granted upon request to every man that is restrain'd, though by the command of the King, the Privy Council, or any other.

3. That

A 3. That if a freeman be imprison'd by the command of the King, the privy councill, or any other, and no cause of such commitment express'd, and the same be return'd upon a Habeas Corpus granted for the said party, then he ought to be delivered or bailed.

The Parliament next proceeded to the drawing up of a Petition against Recufants.

1. That all laws and statutes against Jesuits and popish Priests be put in full power and execution.

The Parliament draw up a Petition to the King against Recufants.

B 2. That a strict course be taken for the discovery and apprehending of them.

3. That all popish recusants be prohibited from coming to Court or within Ten miles of London.

4. That no place of trust or authority should be committed to them; with other particulars, to the like effect.

This Petition was solemnly presented from both houses by the Lord Keeper to the King, who gave to every Article a positive and satisfactory answer: There had lately been presented to the House of Commons by secretary Cook, certain propositions from the King touching supply's and the setting forth of Ships and Men for forraign service; these propositions after some little consultation about them were laid aside and the debate concerning grievances resum'd, Sir Francis Seymour urg'd that the late supply which had been given had purchas'd nothing but dishonour, and that what the subject gave unless his Majestie employ'd men of integrity and experience would be but as thrown into a bottomless bag. Sir Thomas Wentworth said, unless we can be secured for our Liberties we cannot give, but at length after two other messages from the King, Mr Pym mov'd for a quick dispatch, and presently Five Subsidies were granted. The granting of these five Subsidies gave the King such satisfaction therein, that he sent them word by secretary Cooke, that he would deny them nothing

Five Subsidies granted to the King.

D of their liberties which any of his Predecessors had granted. This encouraged them to fall afresh upon the peoples liberties, and Sir Edward Cooke, Sir Dudley Diggs, Mr. Selden and Mr. Liston, delivered the opinion of the house to the Lords, where at first it found some opposition in consideration of the dependence of their interests upon the prerogative, which by this meanes would be too much invalidated; but at length it was carried by the popular partie, the opposites not daring to enter their protestations upon Record, for fear of incurring the publique hatred. Personall libertie thus settled, and a Petition presented to the King against the billeting of Souldiers in the Countrys (to which he promis'd an answer in convenient time) the house fall next (by the perswasion of Sir Edward Cooke) upon that memorable Petition of Right, and having Magna Charta, and six other Statutes explanatory of it, on their side, delivered their petition to the

E Lords, at which conference the Kings Councill Sir Robert Heath Attorney Generall, and Serjeant Ashley being permitted to argue against the propositions that were tendered by the Commons in order to this Petition of Right, Serjeant Ashley said, That they tended rather to an Anarchy then to a Monarchy, That if they be yealded to, it is to put a Sword into the Kings hand with one hands and to take it out with the other, That they must allow the King to govern by Acts of State otherwise he is a King without a Councill, or, which is as bad, hath a Councill without power, That the question is too high to be determin'd by Law where the Conquerour or conquer'd will suffer irreparable loss; For these expressions the Serjeant being call'd to the Barr by the Lords and committed to custody was driven at length to recant what he had said. At another conference the Lords propounded their Addition to be made to the Petition of Right. We present this our humble Petition to your Majestie with the care not

F only of preserving our own liberties, but with due regard to leave intire that sovereign power wherewith your Majestie is trusted for the protection, safetie and happiness of the people; but after that divers of the Commons had delivered their opinions at large why this clause could not be added, the Lords concurre'd, that without any addition or preface the Petition should be presented to the King, the effect of which Petition was as followeth.

First, They doe pray your most excellent Majestie, That no man hereafter be compelled to make, or yeild any Guift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or such like Charge, without common consent by Act of Parliament, and that none be called to make answer, or G to take such Oath, or to give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise be molested, or disquieted concerning the same, or for refusall thereof.

Thirdly,

Secondly, And that no freeman be taken, and imprison'd, or be disceis'd of his freehold or libertie, or his free customes, or be out-lawed, or exiled, but by the lawfull Judgment of his Peers, or by the Laws of the Land.

Thirdly, And that your Majesty would be pleased to remove the Soldiers, and A Mariners now Billited in divers Counties, and that your People may not be so burthered in time to come.

Fourthly, That the late Commissions for proceeding by Martiall Law, may be revoked and annulled, and that hereafter no Commission of like nature may issue forth to any person or persons whatsoever to be executed, least by colour of them, any of your Majesties Subjects be destroyed and put to death contrary to Law, and the Franchises of the Law.

All which they most humbly pray of your most excellent Majesty, as their Rights and Liberties; according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and that your Majesty would also vouchsafe to declare, That all Awards, Doings, or Proceedings, to the prejudice of your People, shall not be drawn hereafter into Consequence, and Example.

About the same time that the Addition which the Lords propounded was in Debate, there came a Letter from the King to the House of Lords, in which among other things;

He declar'd it to be his Royall Pleasure, which, God willing, he would ever continue and constantly maintain, that neither he, nor his privy Councell should or would at any time hereafter command to Prison, or otherwise restrain the persons of any, for not lending money; nor for any cause which in his Conscience did not concern the publick good, nor would he be drawn to pretend any Cause, wherein his Judgment was not fully satisfied.

This Sir Thomas Wentworth sayd, Was a letter of Grace, but that the People were not to be satisfied but by a Parliamentary way; That the Debate would spend much time: That it was not directed to the House of Commons; And that the Petition it self would rectifie all mistakes.

Nor did the frequent Messages of the King for the expediting of those Subsidies lately granted, take any effect untill this great Debate was ended. After the Petition of Right was presented to the King, presently this Answer was return'd;

The Kings
first Answer to the Petition of Right not satisfactory.

*The King willeth that Right be done, according to the Laws and Customes of the Realm; and that the Statutes be put in due execution, that his Subjects may have no cause to complain of any Wrong or Oppressions, contrary to their just Rights and Liberties:
To the preservation whereof, he holds himself in Conscience as well obliged, as of his E Privilege.*

A Declaration drawn up by the Parliament against Dr.
Manning, about two scandalous Sermons which he had formerly preachd.

There had been lately a Charge brought in by Mr. Rows against Doctor Edward Manning, in reference to certain Sermons before mentioned, which the House of Commons taking into Consideration, drew up a Declaration against him, shewing, That in the foresayd Sermons, called Religion and Allegiance, he maintain'd: That the Kings Royall Command in imposing Loans, Taxes, and other Aydes upon his People, though without consent in Parliament, did oblige them upon pain of eternall Damnation: That those of his Subjects who refus'd the Loan aforementioned, in such manner as is before recited, did therein offend the Laws of God, and were guilty of Rebellion and Disobedience: F That Authority of Parliaments was not necessary for the raising of Aides and Subsidies: That the slow proceedings of such Assemblies, are not fit for the supply of the urgent necessities of State.

Sentence is pass'd against him, notwithstanding his submission.

This Declaration was presented to the Lords at a Conference, and Mr. Pym appointed to manage that Conference; whereupon he made a large Discourse upon each particular Article, aggravating the hainousness and danger of such Opinions, and the ill Consequences that would arise from the suffering and allowing of them. Not long after by consent of both Houses, Judgment pass'd against the Doctor, notwithstanding his solemn submission made after a most humble manner; That he should be Imprison'd, Fin'd, disabl'd from ever having any Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction, and from preaching at Court: That he should be suspended from his Cure G for three years, and that his Books should be burnt.

The Kings Answer to the Petition of Right being read in the House of Commons, was judg'd too scant in respect of the time and pains that had been employed in the contriving of it: but that which brought a far greater Consternation and sorrow among them, was a Message that came awhile after from his Majesty; wherein, signifying the resolution he held for the concluding of that present Session, he requir'd them not to enter upon any new Business, which might spend greater time, or lay a Scandall or Aspersions upon the State-government or Ministers thereof:
this sharp Message caus'd the House to turn into a Grand Committee, to consider what was fit to be

A be done; and at last upon their humble Petition for a clear and satisfactory Answer to the Petition of Right, the King sent them a short, but full Answer in this form;

The Kings last Answer to the Petition of Right, which gives satisfaction.

SOIT DROIT FAIT COME IL EST DESIRE.

This Answer was received with the generall Acclamations of both Houses, and the Citizens for joy thereof made Bonfires, and rung their Bells; and the King for further satisfaction received into his favour, Abbot the Archbishop of Canterbury, Williams Bishop of Lincoln, the Earl of Essex, Lincoln, Warwick, Bristol, and the Lord Say; all which had heretofore lain under a Cloud of the Kings displeasure: and suffered the Commiſſion of Loan and Excise to be cancelled in his own presence; so that now there appeared not the least wrinkle of discontent on either side.

B It was now the fourth year of King Charles's Reign when the Parliament not well digesting their dis-appointment in their former Accuſation of the Duke of Buckingham, drew up another Remonstrance against him, and Bishop Neale, and Bishop Land, which they presented, together with the Bill of Subsidies, to the King, in the Banqueting-house of Whitehall, to which he answered; That he expected not such a return for his favourable Answer to their Petition of Right; and as for their Grievances he would take time to consider of them.

The Parliament frame a Remonstrance against the Duke of Buckingham, Bishop Neale, and Bishop Land.

C There having also been exhibited in the Star-chamber, an Information against the Duke for severall Offences and Mis-demeanours; an Order was made in that Court, that the said Bill, or Information, and all Proceedings thereupon should be forthwith taken from the File, according to the Kings express will and pleasure. Moreover, it having been given out by Mr. Christopher Eukner, a Member of the House of Commons, that the Duke at his Table should utter these words; Tush, it makes no matter what the Parliament doth, for without my leave and Authority, they shall not be able to touch the haire of a Dog. He made a Protestation in the House of Lords, That he never had those words so much as in his thoughts: which Protestation the Lords commanded to be entered upon Record; he also taxed one Mr. Melvin of certain Aspersions and Scandalls of a high Nature, which he had cast upon him.

D The Lords about this time took offence at the Commons for omitting their Names, which should have been expressed in these words; The Lords Spirituall and Temporall: which the Commons excused, as a thing not intended, and which, if their Lordships pleased to return the Bill, should be amended: But the King absolutely resolving to hold up the Duke, had framed so tart an Answer to the last Remonstrance, as provoked the Commons to double upon him against Tunnage and Poundage, which being a matter of too great a value and consequence to be so hazarded, the King determined to prevent, by adjourning the Parliament unto the twentieth of October, which he accordingly did. In this Session were enacted these Laws.

The Parliament adjourned.

1. For further reformation of divers Abuses committed on the Lords day, commonly called Sunday.
2. To restrain the passing or sending of any to be Popishly bred beyond the Seas.
- E 3. For the better suppressing of unlicensed Alehouse-keepers.
4. For continuance and repeal of divers Statutes.
5. For the establishing the Estates of the Tenants of Bramfield, and Yale, in the County of Denbigh, and of the Tenures, Rents, and Services thereupon reserved, according to a late Composition made for the same, with the King, then Prince of Wales.
6. For the confirmation of the Subsidies granted by the Clergy.

And 7. For the grant of five intire Subsidies granted by the Temporality.

F About this time, or a little before, Doctor Lamb, a Favourite of the Dukes (who had been formerly twice Arraigned, once for Necromancy, and another time for a Rape) was killed in Losbury by the enraged multitude, who hated him both for his own sake, and the Dukes, (whose Devill he was called) and flying at him, though guarded with four Constables and their Retinue, struck him down and grievously mawled him, beating out one of his Eyes and leaving him half dead on the place; and being from thence carried to the Poultry-Counter, he dies, pittied of few, and loved of none, according to his own prediction the year before.

Dr. Lamb was upon by the People, and killed.

Not long after him Doctor Preston that famous Preacher departed this life, a man as famous for his goodness, as the other was infamous for his lewdness.

This year Sir Charles Morgan Commander of the English Forces under the King of Denmark, in Germany, having a long time bravely defended Stood against the Imperialists, was necessitated to surrender it, upon Condition that the Garrison Soldiers should never bear Armes against the Emperour, but at the Command of their own King.

G This year Dr. Land Bishop of Bath and Wells, was advanced to the Bishoprick of London. Two Barons were also made, the Lord Weston Lord Treasurer of England, and the Lord Wentworth, Lord President of the North; the same, who afterwards succeeded Favourite in place of the Duke of Buckingham, whose end we now come to relate.

During the last Session, the Earl of Denbigh as Admirall, conducted a Fleet of fifty Sail to the Relief of Rochell, but was repelled with much loss; so that finding no hopes of prevailing, he made a speedy return to Plymouth: hereupon, another Expedition is agreed upon, which took up the whole Vacation in equipping a more formidable Fleet, whereof the Duke himself intended to appear as Generall, hoping to repair his own and his Brother-in-laws ill success, by notable performances, and such was the diligence of those employed about it, that a most considerable son.

Armado was gotten together; to view which, the King and the Duke came down towards A Portsmouth, and kept his Court within four miles of the Town: Buckingham was very busie in halting his design, treating frequently with his Commissioners of Rochell, and Soubiez (now once more shifted over into England) in order to his passage into France, which was yet anticipated by his passage into another World. For on the twenty third of August, the Duke coming down the Stairs from his upper Chamber with Sir Thomas Fryar to Breakfast in a lower Parlour (turning in at the foot of the Stairs in a narrow Entry) and at the Door embracing Fryar, was stabbed to the heart by one John Felton (a Lieutenant of foot in Sir John Ramseys Regiment) with a back-blow of a Cuttill Knife, which the Murderer flying left sticking in his Body till the Duke himself drag'd it out; whence issued such a stream and emission of Spirits, that instantly he expired; his Servants and Retainers pursued, and soon apprehended Felton, B whom Stanford would have immediately slain, but others would have him reserved for publick Justice; in order whereunto, he was clapt into a small Centry-house upon the Guard, horribly laden with manieled Irons, neither to sit nor lye down, but to be Criped against the Wall; where being afterwards asked, what invited him to the Action? he boldly answered, He killed him for the Cause of God, and his Country: he had also tack'd a Paper in the Crown of his Hat, wherein he declared, that his only motive to the Fact was the late Remonstrance of the Commons against the Duke, and that he could not sacrifice his life in a nobler Cause then by delivering his Country from so great an Enemy.

The Dukes Bowels were interred in Portsmouth, by his Sister the Countess of Denbigh, and a Memoriall there erected for him, his Body was brought to York-house, where he lay some time C in State, and was afterwards Intombed at Westminster in St. Edwards Chappell: Felton was Arraigned and found Guilty, at the Kings-bench Bar, and hanged at Tyburne, and his Body sent to Portsmouth, and Gibbited in Chains without the Town.

Concerning the Dukes untimely End (dying in his thirty sixth year) there were severall Presages ventilated;

As first, That his Picture fell down in the High-commission Chamber at Lambeth, on the same day that Lamb was slain.

And secondly, That the Lady Davies, who was reputed a great Prophetess, had in June fore- told, that the Dukes fatall time would not come till August.

And thirdly, That one Mr. Tower son an Officer in the Custome-house, was charged by a Phau- tasme, resembling the Dukes Father, to tell him, That if he changed not his courses, he would D shortly become a great Faring to the City of London, which afterwards was thought accom- plish'd by his death hapning the day before Bartholomew Fair.

The Earl of Lindsey sets sail towards Rochell.

In the Eight of September the fleet (much forwarded by the Kings presence) set saile under the Command of the Earl of Lindsey, an able Souldier, and came to the Barr of the Haven of Rochell, where he found a monstrous work attempted and finished by Cardinall Richtien with Boome and Barracado and Traverse crosse the Channell 1400. yards, leaving a convenient space for the flood and Ebb of Tides, (a thing not paralleld by any History) all which nothing danting the Admirals courage, he made many brave ventures at it, passed the out-forts and bulworkes E even to the very mouth of the Barr, when unexpectedly the wind turning crosse, drove them dan- gerously foule upon each other. This ill success of the Fleet made the Rochellors despayr of fur- ther success, and that despair produced a present Surrender, which the Earl of Lindsey perceiving, brought his Fleet safe home againe. On the Twentieth of January the Parliament assembled a- gain which should have met upon the Twentieth of October, but that upon occasion of some bad news brought to the King during this Expedition, he readjourned them untill this time; in the mean time the Merchants had refused to pay Tunnage and Poundage, whereupon their goods were seised: complaint whereof was made to the Parliament; the King therefore summons the Houses to his Banqueting house at Whitehall and requires them to pass their promised Bill. For clearing his former and future Actions especially in this time of great Necessitie, seeing Tunnage and Poundage was too precious a Jewell of his Crown to be so lightly forgotten. The Commons F answered, That Gods cause was to be preferred, before the Kings, and therefore they would in the first place consult about Religion, and accordingly appointed two committees, one for Religion and another for Civill Affairs, the proceedings of the first we shall refer to a more proper and distinct place: The other brought in a complaint, that the Petition of Right had been Printed with the Kings first Answer which had been excepted against; and not his last which was taken as satisfactory. Another complaint was upon the seizing of the Merchants Goods who had refused to pay Tunnage and Poundage one of whom was Mr. Rolles a Parliament man to whom, it is reported, that some of the Officers of the Custome house should say, Though all the Parlia- ment were in you we would take your Goods, another was Mr. Richard Chambers, who was committed to Prison for saying at the councill Table, That such great Customes and Impositions were re- G quired from the Merchants in England as were in no other place, and that they were more scrow'd up then under the Turk. Afterwards having a form of Submission drawn up and sent him from the Scar- Chamber whereunto he was to subscribe his name he instead of acknowledging it underwrit these words. All the abovesaid contents I Richard Chambers do utterly abhor and detest as most unjust and false, and never to death will acknowledge any part thereof, and cited also severall places of Scripture that condemn Opression and Injustice. For the first complaint the Printer was questioned who transford the fault to the Kings Attorney Generalls order. For the later, Sir John Worsholme, Far- mer

A mer of the Custome, Mr. Dawes, and Mr. Carmarthen his Assistants were called to account, whom the King excused as acting by his Command, which not being cleere to the Parliament, they would have dealt with them as wick Delinquents. But that the King certified them by Secretary Cooke, that in honour he could not, would not give way thereunto: This so incensed the Parliament that immediately they Adjourned for some dayes; and then Meeting againe the King Adjourned them till the first of March. Hereat Sir John Elliot stands up and accuses the Lord Treasurer Weston as an Enemie to the English Trade, which he desired to transfer to Foreiners, the end of whose Speech was attended by a Messige of longer adjournment till the Tenth of March. The Commons hereat intraged Check the Speaker for admitting the Messige and bid Sir John to read his Remonstrance (the Speaker and Clerk refusing) which was to this effect, That they had considered of the Bill for Tunnage and Poundage, but being over pressed with other Businesse, and that, of it selfe so perplex, would require much leisure to discharge, which at that time they could not, this present Sessions moving hastily to an end; and lest his Majesty should hereafter, as he had done heretofore incline to evill Spirits, or be abused to believe, that he might justly receive the Subsidies of Tunnage and Poundage, (which they humbly declare to be against the fundamentall Law of the Nation, and contrary to the Kings late Answer to the Petition of Right) And therefore they crave thit his Majesty would for the future forbear such Taxes, and not to take it ill if his Subjects refuse, what is demanded by Arbitrary and Unwarrantable Power.

C A Report being made from the Committee of Pardons concerning the Pardons obtained by Dr. Sibthorp, Dr. Manwaring, Mr. Cosens, and Mr. Mountague, Mr. Oliver Cromwell, one of that Committee, informing the House that Dr. Neal Bishop of Winchester was the main Instrument in procuring the Kings hand to their Pardons and that the said Bishop preferr'd Dr. Manwaring, notwithstanding that the last Parliaments Censure had disabled him from ever holding any Ecclesiasticall Dignity, to a rich living, and moreover that he was a Countenancer not onely of Arminianism but of Flat Popery; If these, said he, be the steps to Church Preferments, what may we expect?

D The house having prepared their Remonstrance concerning the Bill for Tunnage and Poundage would have had the Speaker to put it to the Vote, whether it should be presented to the King or no, but he refused and would have left the House as he had been Ordred by the King: but Mr. Hollis would not suffer him to rise till himselfe had read the Commons Protestation digested into these three Articles.

The Comons prepare a bill against Tunnage and poundage.

First, Whosoever shall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by Favour seeke to introduce Popery, or Arminianisme or other opinions disagreeing from the true and orthodox Church, shall be reputed a Capitall Enemie to this Kingdome and Common-Wealth.

Their Protestation read in the house by Mr. Hollis.

E Secondly, Whosoever shall counsell or advise the taking or levying of the Subsidies of Tunnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or shall be an Actor or instrument therein, shall be likewise reputed a capitall Enemie to the Common-Wealth.

Thirdly, If any man shall yeild voluntarily, or pay the same not being granted by Parliament, he shall be reputed a betrayer of the Liberties of England, and an Enemie to the Common-wealth: This was received with generall applause of the Members; but not of the King; who presently sent for the Serjeant of the Mace, but he was not permitted to goe out, and Sir Miles Hobart, a Member, taking the Key of him locks the Door.

The King dissolveth the Parliament by force.

F The King now angry sends Maxwell Usher of the black Rod to dissolve them, who being excluded, the King with his Pensioners and guard, resolves upon forcing the entrance, which they understanding suddenly avoided the House; and such was the end of this Parliament. In the mean time there hapned a lamentable Fier in the Strand which consumed the Vicount Wilburlous House (at that time) the Lodging of the Dutch Embassadour; and not long after comes News of the Death of Frederique Henry, Eldest Son to the King of Bohemia drowned in the Mere of Harlem; which put the Court all into Mourning.

The King after the Dissolution of the Parliament publishes a Declaration of the causes thereof, and then falls upon questioning the Refractory Members at the Councell Table; namely Mr. Hollis, Sir John Elliot, Sir Miles Hobart, Sir Peter Hayman, Sir John Barrington, Mr. Selden, Mr. Stroud, Mr. Corison, Mr. Valentine, Mr. Long, Mr. Kirton, all which were committed to severall Prisons. The Marquess of Huntly hereditary Sheriff of a great part of Scotland, neglecting the order of the Council at Edenborough for the apprehending of certain Priests and Jesuits who openly said Mass at Aberdeen, and committed other insolences, was summoned to appear before the Councell together with the Earls of Aros, Athol, Niddesdale and Abercon, who joyned with him in his contempt; and upon both their refusalls to appear, and their giving notice to the said Priests and Jesuits to escape, they were proclaim'd rebels to the King and Kingdome, and a strict course taken for the apprehending of them, whereupon they took their flight into England. This year Petrus Paulus Ruben, the Famous Painter of Antwerp, Secretary to the Arch-duchess was sent over Agent into England, to solicit a Peace with Spain, who it seems was at this time at so low A an Ebbe that Pasquin posted him up at Rome in a Fryars habit together with Marforius, who the question being askt why he was Painted in that Habit, answer'd, That it was, because he had lately taken Three vows upon him: one of Poverty ever since the Hollanders took the West-India Fleet. The other of Obedience since the French made them quit Casal and Montferrat: and Lastly of Chastity when the Conde de Olivares shall give him leave. This peace was not concluded till there came over another Em-bassadour more fully empowrd. In the fifth year of King Charles, The Emperour sends over an Am-bassadour, into England and offers here to pay to the Queene of Bohemia, Thirty thousand pounds per annum, with convenience of Reception, within the Palatinate upon condition that her Eldest Son living should marry one of the Emperours Daughters, and be educated at that imperial Court; which motion was magnanimously rejected. In Italy the wars had been hot, to little purpose, B with the loss of a Million of Mortals, between France and Spain, about the Dukedome of Mantua, wherein at length Charles Consega, Duke of Nevers was invelted. But the French having weakned themselves in this War and gotten no great bargaine by it, desired new Alliances, to attach the Spaniards and Austrians, and by the mediation of the Venetians, propose and conclude a Peace with England, upon these Articles.

Articles of Peace between England and France.

First, That the two Kings shall renew former Alliance, inviolable, with free commerce, and in this particular, such things may be proposed to add or diminish, as either part shall Judge convenient. C

Secondly, That for what is past, during the late difference, no satisfaction shall be demanded on either side.

Thirdly, That the Articles of Marriage of the Queene of great Brittain, shall be confirmed, and concerning her Domesticks to propose Expedients to be added or diminished.

Fourthly, All former Alliances between the Crownes shall stand good unless changed by this present Treaty. D

Fifthly, The two Kings being thus remitted to their former Affections, shall respectively Correspond towards the assistance of their Allies (so far as the condition of Affairs, and the Generall good shall permit) for procuring of the repose of the Troubles of Chris- tendome.

Sixthly, Ambassadors on either part to be despatcht for ratification; and Residents in either Court. E

Seventhly, Touching Ships at Sea, with Letters of Marque on either side, that for Two Months following, shall not prejudice this agreement, provided, to restore eithers prize, after that time, upon demand.

Eighthly, These Articles to be joyntly signed the Fourteenth of this present April, and instantly then to be Consigned into the Hands of the Lords Ambassadors of Venice, to be delivered to each King, at a day prefixt; all Acts of Hostility to cease, and to be proclamed in both Kingdomes, the Twentieth of May following. F

And shortly after Sir Thomas Edmonds controler of the Kings House was sent from England, and the Marquess of Chasteau-neuf from France, for the solemn confirmation of the Articles by Oath.
In the beginning of November the Earls of Bedford, Summerset, and Clare with some others were committed, upon information given, That they had disperfed severall coppies of a Book of Projects, instructing the King to augment his Revenues without the help of Parliaments: but they were cleared from that Suspicion by Sir David Fowler, who discover'd upon Oath, that it was contrived about sixteen yeares ago by Sir Robert Dudley, eldest Son to the late Earl of Leicester then living at Florence under the Title of Duke of Northumberland. On the first of January Don Carlo de G Colonas came Embassadour from Spain to England to treat of Peace between the two Crownes, and six daies after had his first Audience;

Libells found against Bishop Laud and the Lord Treasurer Weston.

By the dissolving the last Parliament, the Popular Odium was more then ever stirr'd up against the Great and Powerfull Ministers of State, as appeared by certain invective Libells disperfed about; whereof there was one against Bishop Laud to this purpose.

Laud, look to thy selfe, be assur'd thy life is sought: as thou art the Fountain of Wickednesse, repent of thy monstrous sins, before thou be taken out of the World, and assure thy self neither God nor the world can indure

A endure such a vile Councillor, or Whispher. This Libell was found in the Dean of Pauls Yard, with another no less bitter against the Lord-Treasurer Weston: Others there were more zealous for the advancement of the Kings Prerogative, who considering how little Success his Affaires had by this and his two former Parliaments, advis'd his Majesty never for the future to call any more Parliaments; and for the better carrying on of such a Design as this, the aforesayd Book of Projects was publisht and dispers'd in severall places, containing, A Proposition addrest to the King, how he might so order the matter as not to be troubled for the future with the Impertinencies as he called it, of Parliaments; Instancing the Example of Lewis the Eleventh of France, who pretending that the third Estate representing the Commons did inroach too much upon the Clergy and Nobility, dissolv'd that Parliament of the three Estates, and never after had a free Election of the third Estate; but instead thereof, ordaind an Assembly of certain Eminent Persons of his own Nomination, which is called L'Assemblé des Notables: The wayes proposed for the avoiding this Impertinency of Parliaments were in brief these;

A Paper of Advice presented to the King to rid himself of Parliaments.

1. To have a Fortres in every considerable Town.
2. To cause High-wayes to be made through such Towns.
3. To choose the Fortresses of such Towns, no Inhabitants of the place.
4. To let none pass through such places without a Ticket.
5. To have the Names of all Lodgers taken by Inn-keepers.
6. To impose a generall Oath upon the Subjects, for the avoiding of all Rubs that might hinder the conclusions of these Busineses.

C Advice was;

1. To demand a Decima, or tenth part of mens Estates.
2. To buy all Leases upon the Crown-Lands.
3. To take the benefit of Salt into his own hands.
4. To demand a Rate for Sealing the Weights every year.
5. To demand an Impost for Wools.
6. To put a Tax upon every Lawyers Fee.
7. To put a Tax upon Innes and Victualling-houses for a Licence.
8. To put a Tax upon all Cattell, Flesh, and Horses sold in the Marquer.
9. To put a Tax upon all Lands alienated.

10. To demand a Rate upon all Offices in his Majesties Grant.
11. To reduce his Majesties Household to Board-wages.
12. To demand a Rate for Licence to eat Luticinia, or White-meats upon fasting dayes.
13. To take an Imposition upon the Catholicks Lands.

14. At the Princes Marriage to make Earls Principi, Barons, Earls, two hundred of the richest men of England that were not Nobles Titulate, Gentlemen of low Quality, Franklines, and rich Farmers, Esquires; each paying for their Honours according to their severall Degrees.

Lastly, To prohibit costly and gorgeous Apparell to be worn by any, but Persons of considerable Quality, which would save the Gentry of the Kingdome much more money then what they were taxed could amount unto.

E About this time, certain Gentlemen of the Temple attempting the rescue of one Bellingham, a Captain in the late Isle of Rhe Expedition, who was Arrested in Fleetstreet, and divers of them in the Fray being wounded and carried to Prison: the Business at length came to that heighth, and the Concourse of the Templers so far encreas'd, that they made a Barricado about St. Dunstons Church, and the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London coming against them with a Company of the Train-bands, they being about six hundred in number made a bold Resistance, killed five, and wounded near a hundred. Hereupon the Lord chief Justice was sent for up to London, and an extraordinary Session kept at Guild-hall, for the tryall of the chief Offenders, in which Captain Ashhurst, and Captain Stamford being found guilty, were condemned and Executed at Tyburn, notwithstanding, that for the saving of Stamfords life, great Intercession was made to the King, who answered, That since he had been formerly pardoned for a Murder, and had committed another, a course ought to be taken to prevent a third.

Captain Ashhurst, and Captain Stamford hang'd. The death of William Burt of Pembroke.

It was now the sixth year of King Charles's Reign, being the year 1630. which began with the death of William Harbet, Earl of Pembroke, a Person truly Generous and Heroick, a great Enemy to the Spaniard, and Disliker of forrein Men, Manners, and Modes; he died in the fiftieth year of his Age, after which his Brother the Earl of Montgomery obtained of the King the disposition of his Councell.

G On the twenty ninth of May the Queen was brought to Bed of a young Son, which was Baptized at St. James's, on the twenty seventh of June, and named Charles; his Godfathers were the King of France, and Prince *Electo*r, represented by the Duke of Lenox, and the Marquis of Hamilton; and his Godmother was the Queen-mother of France, represented by the Dutches of Richmond. It is observed, that at his Nativity at London, was seen a Star about Noon-time; what it portended, good, or evil, we leave to the Judgment of the Astrologers. In the mean time, the Affairs of Germany did necessarily require a generall Diet to be kept at Reisbone; whither the Prince *Electo*r was invited, to put in his Plea for his Restauration to the Palatinates; whereupon he sends his Agent thither, and procures King Charles to send Sir

Robert Anstruther as Ambassador to the Emperour in his behalf; who having received fair Re- A spects from the Emperour and States, at length returned re infecta: About this time Doctor Leighton was sentenced in the Star-chamber to have his Body whipt, his Forehead stigmatiz'd, his Ears Crape, and his Noie slit, for exhorting the late Parliament to smite the Bishops under the fifth Rib; and for calling the Queen, the Daughter of Hesh, a Cananite, and Idolatress, in his Book, called Sions Plea, which was accordingly inflicted.

Don Carlo de Colonas had so effectually plyed his Business, that in November Peace was concluded between England and Spain, upon the same Articles that had been agreed upon between King James and Philip the Third, and the Spaniards, to dispose all his Interest in the Emperour, for the Prince Electors Restitution: The Peace was proclaimed on the twenty seventh of November; And now the old Prerogative Statute for Knighthood comes in place, whereby those B who had Estates of forty pounds per annum, were summoned to appear a little before Christmas, to be Knighted, and upon default to be fined: By which means, about one hundred thousand pounds were brought into the Exchequer.

In Ireland, the Romish Catholicks upon St. Stephens Day, while the Lords Justices were at Church in Dublin, took the boldness to Celebrate Mass, of which the Lords Justices having speedy notice, sent the Archbishop of Dublin, the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Recorder, to apprehend them; their Crucifixes and Paraments of the Altar were taken away, and the Priests delivered into the Custody of Pursevants; Also eight Popish Aldermen were clapt up in Prison for not assisting the Mayor. A Company of people gathered together in a Tumult, and rescu'd the Priests C out of the Pursevants hands, but the Guard being sent among them, forc'd them to deliver them up again. Upon Information sent to the King and Councell of this Rior and Insolency, fifteen Houses were by a speciall Order from the Councell seised upon to his Majesties use, and the Priests and Fryars so far molested and prosecuted, that two of them hang'd themselves: nor were the Catholicks in England and Ireland free from Jars among themselves, there hapning a notable Contett between the Jesuits and secular Priests, upon occasion of the Usurpation of one Richard Smith, who in the year 1625. having been sent into England by Pope Urban the Eighth, to reside as chief Superintendent of his Emissaries here, under the Title of Bishop of Chalcedon, took upon him so far, as that he challeng'd to himself the sole Authority of approving such regular Priests as were to be standing Confessors: This the Jesuits judg'd to be so D great an Intrenchment upon their Jurisdiction, that they contriv'd a Declaration against his pretended Authority, under the Names of the most noble and eminent Catholicks, which they presented to the Spanish Ambassador, just upon the time of his departure out of England for Spain, and by all other wayes they could invent, so prosecuted the Bishop, that he was forced to make his escape into France.

This year Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, made his famous Irruption into Germany (being invited by the Protestant Princes, who were headed by the Duke of Saxony:) To his aid, King Charles sends over the Marquis Hamilton, with three hundred thousand Dollers, and an Army of six thousand Foot; the greatest part whereof perished in that War, and Hamilton himself returned in glorious and stain'd with Treason, as having designed by this Expedition to endear E himself to the Scottish Officers, and by their help hereafter to make himself King of Scotland; the truth whereof was evidenced by the Lord Rey and Uchiltry, and Major Borthwick, against his Engines Ramsay, and Meldram. Some two years ago, the Fort Kobeck upon the River of Canada, in the North-part of America, had been taken and Garrison'd by Captain Kirk, it being a great Staple for Bever and Otters; The King of France therefore detains four hundred thousand Crowns, part of the English Queens Portion, and a greater Breach likely to ensue;
but this year put an end to the difference, the Fort delivered, and the money paid.

The Earl of Essex having many years ago marri'd the Lady Frances Howard, and (upon her com- F plaint of his Insufficiency for Conjugall Duties, which the business being brought to a full Try-all, was evidenc'd by the Verdict of a Jury of Midwives, and the Earls own Confession; That he never could, and believ'd never should carnally know her: Sentence of Divorce having been pro-nounc'd by the Bishops between him and his Ladies (who afterwards marri'd the Earl of Somerset) and ratified by a Commission under the great Seal, the Earl of Essex betook himself to the Wars in the Low-countries, and the Palatinate; where having given Testimony of Military Fortitude, and won the Reputation of a Soldier, willing also to approve himself as much Man as Soldier, and as true a Son of Venus as of Mars, he return'd into England, and married Elizabeth, the Daughter of Sir William Paulet, a Wiltshire Knight; But long this new Marriage G had not been consummated, ere the objecting the same Cause of Complaint against him as his former Lady had done, and having been taken over free in the bestowing of her Favours upon one Mr. Udall, the Earl was easily induc'd to consent to a Disarraetion as well with this as his former Lady.

In the seventh year of King Charles, being the year 1631. Merwin Lord Audley, was arraigned for Rape and Sodomy before his Peers, upon the Petition of his own Son and Heir, where it was proved against him, That he had caus'd his Wife to be Ravished by one Ampill his Page, and another of his Servants named Brodway, whilst he himself held her: and had forc'd both his own

A own Daughters, and also his Sons Wife to lye with another of his Servants, called Skipwith; and it was likewise proved that he had committed Sodomy with Amptill, Brodway, Skipwith, and Fitts-patrick; For which he received his Sentence to be hanged, but was afterwards by Favour Beheaded at Tower-hill, the fourteenth of May. He was of Noble Extraction, bred up a Protestant, but after turned Papist for more liberty in evill: He kept Bandina a common Whore in his house for all Commers; at some times four of them, each after other, and himself the last, Spectators all.

And so pleased himself with his Enormities, that he impudently sayd in presence of some Lords; As others had their severall Delights, some in one thing, some in another, so his whole Delight was in damning Souls, by enticing men to such Acts, as might surely effect it.

B A little while after this, Sir Giles Allington who had married with his own Niece, was Convented before a Court of eight Bishops, and four other Commissioners, by whom he was fined 12000 l. to the King, and forced to give Bond of 20000 l. never to co-habit, or to come in private with his sayd Niece; to be Imprison'd, or put in sufficient Bail, till they had both done Penance at St. Pauls Cross, London, or great St. Maries at Cambridge, at the day assigned.

And of Sir
Giles Allington.

About this time the King of Sweden won the memorable Battell of Lypsick, and grew so considerable, that King Charles thought him the likeliest man to restore his Brother to his Principality, and so sends an Ambassador to him, to congratulate his Success, and to mediate the Palsgraves Restitution with the Suede (who now had gotten the greatest part of the Palatinate in his hands) which he seemed willing to grant, but upon such hard Conditions as were dishonourable both to the King and the Prince; and so ended this year, nothing memorable happening at Court, save only the Birth of the Princess Mary, upon the fourth of November: And the Difference between Donnald Lord Rey, and David Ramsay; the last whereof was Hamiltons Instrument for his treacherous Design in Germany, and the former his Accuser: But Ramsay denying what he was charg'd with, they were admitted to a Tryall by Combate, which was order'd after this manner;

C The Birth of

The tryall between the Lord Rey and David Ramsay.

‘Upon the day appointed, which was the twenty eighth of November, they were to appear in the Painted Chamber, before Robert Earl of Lindsey, Lord High-Constable for the time being, Thomas Earl of Arundell, Earl-Marshall of England, the Earls of Pembroke, Dorset, Carlisle, the Vi-counts, Wimbleton, Falkland, with other Earls and Lords: At the upper end four foot high was erected a Bench for the Constable, Marshall, and Lords Assistant; under them was plac'd a square Table with Seats about it for the Heralds and Serjeants at Armes: just under the upper Bench sate Doctor Dethick the Register, and over against him Doctor Duck the Kings Advocate for the Marshals Court; the Earl-Marshall bearing a Truncheon of Gold tip'd with black, and Usher'd by nine Heralds, and three Serjeants at Armes, conducted the High-constable into the Court, together with Sir William Seager King of Heralds, and presented the Constable with his Commission, which was deliver'd to the Register to read, the effect whereof was;

That his Majesty being inform'd by Donnold Lord Rey, of divers Treasons plotted against him by David Ramsay Esquire, the one accusing, the other denying; doth therefore Authorise the sayd Robert Barty Earl of Lindsey, to call unto him Thomas Earl of Arundell, Earl-Marshall; and with him such other Peers as he thought fit to hold a Marshals Court, for the sifting out the truth between the sayd Parties.

F Then the King of Heralds deliver'd to the Constable his silver Verge, headed with a Crown of Gold; then the Herald receiving a Key from the Earl-Marshall, went and Usher'd in the Appellant, who was attir'd in black Velter, trim'd with silver Buttons, his Sword hanging in a silver embroider'd Belt, and accompanied with his Sureties, Sir Peirce Crosby, Sir Walter Crosby, Sir William Forbiez, Sir Robert Gordon, and Sir William Evers: The Defendant likewise in Scarlet lac'd with silver Lace, and lin'd with Sky-colour'd Plush, but unarm'd was Usher'd in by another Herald. The Earl-Marshall told them the substance of the Commission, the Power and Legality of the Court, and that to prevent any Combate, he hop'd the truth would be brought to light; after the Earl-Marshall the Kings Advocate spake to the same purpose, in justification of the warrantableness of the Court, and brought many Presidents of tryall by Combate in cases of the like nature: Afterwards the Appellant was order'd to deliver in his Charge against the Defendant, which he did by Bill: This Charge imported certain words spoken by Ramsay to the Lord Rey, when they were together in the Low-countries, against the State and Church of England; and, That he was privy, as he himself boasted, to a design of the Marquis of Hamilton, to convert those Forces which the King had promis'd him for forrein Service (with the Wines-Customs of of Scotland for their Maintenance) against England; that their Friends in Scotland A had provided Armes and Ammunition, and more were expected from Sweden and other parts, and that he himself was earnestly solicited by Ramsey, and Alexander Hamilton, to combine with them in this their Design. And added, that if Ramsey would deny it, he was a Villain and a Traytor, which he would prove, and therewith cast him his Glove: Ramsey on the other side deni'd all, and sayd, Rey was a Lyar and a barbarous Villain, and threw down his Glove, protesting to Gar him to die for it, if he had him in a convenient place; Then Rey temperately demanding an Answer to his Bill, Ramsey alledg'd the impossibility of the Charge, since there were but six thousand raw Soldiers expected, and that the Marquis was not so weak, as to think, that if with those B Forces he could surprize the King: That he could also secure himself against his Children and Kindred. But being told by the Earl-Marshall, that he must answer the Bill of Form according to Law; He acknowledg'd the substance of the Discourse alledg'd by Rey, with the circumstances of time and place, but deni'd that any Treason was intended, or utter'd: then the Court was Adjourn'd till the fifth of December, at which time the two Adversaries entred again, Rey habited as formerly, Ramsey in a Suit of black Sattin: he presented his Answer in writing; wherein having mention'd the six thousand men under the Marquis of Hamiltons Command, to be imploy'd in C the King of Swedens Service, he confess'd; That speaking in generall of matters amiss in England, Rey answer'd, God amend all, to whom Ramsey reply'd, By God Donnold we must help him to amend all, and to all other things he utterly gives his denial, and craves revenge upon Reys person by Dint of Sword. Both Parties having Council assign'd them, Doctor Eden who was Council for Ramsey affirm'd; That the Defendant might according to Law decline the Combate:

1. Because no man can be charged as a Traytor by one that is guilty in his own particular.

2. Because of the doubtfulness and uncertainty of the charge,

3. Because the Appellant refers the Combate to the last, in case the charge cannot be D prov'd by any other wayes; but the Defendant saith, That though in Law he might, yet in Honour, and for the justifying of his Innocence, he will not decline the Combate.

Time being given to Rey for his Replication, he appears at the day appointed clad as before, Ramsey also appears habited in an Ash-colour'd Sute and Scarlet Cloak, both overlayd with silver and sky-colour'd Lace; the Sute opened with Scarlet, the Cloak lined with Ash-colour'd Velvet: The Appellant presented his Replication to the High-constable, wherein he aver'd; That the Defendant had sunningly over-slept E a part of the charge; then he repeated the severall parts of the charge, and the strength of them, with the Defendants defects in not clearing the chief Points. Ramsey's Council urg'd against the Replication; the Lord Reys intention therein to have recourse to Proofs: whereas, sayd he, This Court of Honour and Chivalry was appealed unto for the hazarding of their persons by Combate, which intends a tryall without proof. Doctor Duck the Kings Advocate, and Doctor Reeves, who were F Counsell for the Appellant, mov'd for the continuance of the Replication, which was granted; and upon another appointed day the Exceptions thereunto were made by the opposite Party.

Thus the Councell on both sides having argued for a long time Pro & Con, the Court Adjourn'd till another day, when no further proofs being brought, it was determin'd, that the Matter should be refer'd to the Kings Will and Pleasure, which was so far prevail'd upon by the great power the Marquis had with his Majesty, that after a greedy expectation in both Parties of the Result, his favour was found chiefly to incline to Ramsey, which as soon as it was known, the Lord Rey sufficiently satisfied in his mind to have done the duty of a faithfull Subject, stayd not long in the Kingdome, but forthwith betook himself to the Swedish Army, where he had a considerable Command. This Story we thought fit to set down the more at large, since it will give much light to the truth of the Scottish Affairs.

G King Charles in his eighth year, sends Colonel Sanderson with two thousand men out of England, and a like number of Scots under Colobel Lefly, to help the Muscovite in his Wars against Poland, who with an Army of an hundred and twenty thousand men, besieges Smolensk; during which, the two Colonels quarrell, and Lefly basely murdering Sanderson, was committed to the Guard: so that the Scots and English having lost their Commanders, and grown jealous of one another, were less usefull in that great Battell presently after ensuing, wherein the

A the Muscovite received a shamesfull over-throw. This year died five noble Personages; first Sigismund King of Poland. Secondly, Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, slain at the Battell of Lutzen. The third Papenheim slain also at the same Battell. The fourth, Frederick King of Bohemia, and Prince Elector of the Rhene, who deceased at Mentz, eight dayes after the recovery of his most considerable Town of Frankendale. The fifth, Sophia Queen Dowager of Denmark, to condole whose death with the then King her Son, the Earl of Leicester was sent over; as also to demand one hundred and fifty thousand pounds (due by her death as a Portion to the Heirs of her Daughter Anne, late Queen of Great Britain) which was then promised, though never payd.

In Ireland things began to look troubled, the Protestants grumbling that the King should charge the Papists from paying the State-penalty of twelve pence a Sunday, for absence from Church, whereby they were excessively encreased. These Distempers began to swell, which the King minding to allay, recalled the Lords Justices, who then had the Government of the Land, and sent Vi-count Wentworth thither as Lord Deputy, thinking that their humours would better settle and repose under a single Government.

Vicount Wentworth made Lord Deputy of Ireland.

The King, as soon as he was recovered of a fit of sickness, the small Pox (which seiz'd on him the twenty second of December, but soon, and favourably left him) dispatch the Earl of Arundell to the Hague, to the Princess Elizabeth his Sister, to Condole the death of her Husband, the Prince Elector Palatine, and to invite her and her Children over into England; but C the returning thanks for the Complement and the Invitation, desir'd to be excus'd from the trouble of so tedious a Journey. The Cathedrall Church of St. Paul having borne the Shock of times Injury for many Generations, and contracted the Decayes and Ruines of Age, the King, desirous to promote so good a Work, as the repairing and re-imbellishing of so stately a Monument, recommended to the Nobility and Gentry of the Kingdome, the raising among themselves a large Contribution towards it: this Motion, though many repin'd, was so far entertain'd by the Generality, that a considerable sum was gathered, and the Work had a faire progress, till the coming on of the late Troubles put a stop and period to it. At the same time the Earl of Bedford obtained leave of the King to build up that part of the Suburbs of London, commonly called Covent-Garden, a place full of stately and proud Structures, and not inferiour D to many famous Cities: but while Buildings and publick Adornments went on in some places, lamentable Ruines and Devastations hapned in others; witness, that wide breach and discontinuance of Houses upon London Bridge, which is to be seen there at this day, caus'd by a violent and raging fire.

In the ninth year of King Charles's Reign, being 1633. preparation was made for a Journey into Scotland, where his presence had been humbly intreated for to comfort them with his Court, and honour them with his personall Coronation, which he now resolves upon; and May 13. sets forward, attended by the Earl of Northumberland, Arundell, Pembroke, Southampton, Salisbury, Carlisle, Holland, Monmouth, and Newcastle; the Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer, E Secretary Coke Vice-chamberlain, with many Gentlemen of Quality, and comes to Edinburgh, the tenth of June, and eight dayes after is Solemnly Crowned there. As soon as that Celebrity was finished: he calls a Parliament, passes an Act of Ratification of the old Acts, notwithstanding some there were, who asserted that hereby was ment a Confirmation of Episcopacy, and for that reason opposed it, though in vain; and not long after became Heads of the Covenanters; But the King having visited Falkland, Sterling, Dunfermling, and some other places, takes leave of Scotland, and comes home to Greenwich the twentieth day of July.

The King takes a Journey into Scotland, to be Crowned there.

In this Scottish Parliament, that Nation discovered some Seeds of dis-affection to the King, for his Renovation of things alienated from the Crown in his Fathers Minority, and for his Commillion of Surrenders of Superiorities and Tithes, whereby Ministers and Land-Owners were F freed from the Clientele and Vassalage of the Nobility and Laick Patrons: for the Lord London opposed the ratifying of an Act, formerly granting power to King James and his Successors, to ordain Habits for the Clergy and Judges professing, and made a great stir before it could be carried on the Kings side. And the Generality of the people deterred the Bishop of Dumblain, Dean of the Kings private Chappell, from observing his Orders there: for performing Prayers twice a day after the English manner, for receiving the monthly Communion on their Knees, and for Officiating on Sundays and Holy-dayes in a Surplice.

A little before the Kings Journey into Scotland, his Majesty, willing, if it had been possible, to have spar'd that trouble, writ to a Lord of that Nation, to whose Custody the Crown of Scotland was entrusted, to bring it into England, that he might be Crowned here, but the Lord returned this Answer; That he durst not be so false to his trust, but if his Majesty would be pleased to accept thereof in Scotland, he should find those his people ready to yield him the highest honour; but should he long defer that duty, they might perhaps be inclined to make choice of another King.

In England about this time died George Abbot Archbishop of Canterbury, into whose place William Laud Bishop of London was elected.

October the thirteenth, the Queen was delivered of her second Son, who was Baptized ten dayes after, and named James, and design'd Duke of Tork; And a little after the young Prince Electer by the Proxy of the Duke of Lenox, and the Earl of Dover was made Knight of the A Garter.

On Candlemas Night the four Inns of Court united all together, to present the King and Queen with a stately Masque, which was attended with a Train of Christian Captives lately set at liberty, by Cidan King of Morocco, who had long kept them in slavery, and now presented to King Charles as a gratefull acknowledgement for the Loan of a part of his Fleet, by whose assistance he had taken Sally, and destroyed that execrable Nest of Pirats. This Revell found such acceptation at Court, that it was again with much Applause exhibited a Fortnight after, when the King and Queen were magnificently entertained by the City at the House of Alderman Freeman, then Lord Mayor.

Ship-money designed by Noy the Kings Attorney-Generall.

It was now the year 1634. and the Tenth of King Charles's Reign, when the English Coasts being infected by Pirates, and the Fishing almost usurped and ingroffed by the busie Hollander, the design of Ship-money was set on foot; for the King wanting mony to regain his absolute Mastery of the British Seas, consulted about it with his Attorney-generall Noy, who finds out of old Records an ancient President, of raising a Tax upon the Nation, for setting forth a Navy in case of danger, by sole Authority of the King; this Tax brought into the Kings Cofters about twenty thousand pounds per mensem, which was raised by Writ, not without muttering both of Clergy and Laity: and soon after the Attorney having enabled the King to provide a potent Armado, sailes himself out of the narrow Seas of this life, into the Ocean of Eternity.

The Sweeds did not lose their Hopes, although they lost their King, but having Crowned Christiana, Gustaves Daughter, applyed themselves to the prosecution of their German Quarrell, and send Ambassadors to all their Allies for Assistance, among whom, the Son of Axel Oxestern, came into England with Credentials from his Queen and the Councell, and was splendidly entertained by the King, but yet departed in some Disgust, because his Answer was not so satisfactory as he expected.

In Ireland the Lord Deputy called a Parliament about the business of supply for the Kings Necessities in relation to that Kingdome, which being urged home, and prudently managed, found answerable success.

A Parliament
and Synod called in Ireland.

There was also a Synod held there at the same time, in which a Canon was agreed upon, declaring the consent of that Church with the Church of England, in the profession of the same D Christian Faith, which Canon was as followeth;

For the manifestation of our Agreement with the Church of England, in the Confession of the same Christian Faith and Doctrine of the Sacraments, We do receive and approve the Book of Articles of Religion agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops, and the whole Clergy in the whole Convocation holden at London, A. D. 1562. For the avoiding of diversities of Opinions, and for the establishing of Consent touching true Religion; And therefore, if any hereafter shall affirm, that any of those Articles are in any part superstitious or erroneous, or such as he may not with a good Conscience subscribe unto, let him be Excommunicated, and not absolved before he make a publick Revocation of his Error.

In Scotland Discontents began to arise, and out comes a Book, charging the King with indirect proceedings in the last Parliament, and a tendency to the Romish Belief, and to blow up the Scottish fire Coals into a flame, Cardinal Richieu sends over his Chaplain Chambers, and after him Monsieur Montriol to work upon the discontents of that Nation. The Author of the forementioned Book was inquired after, and found to be one William Hagge, abetted by the Lord Balmerino, the treacherous Son of a perfidious Father, who was thereupon (the other escaping) Arraigned, by his Peers found guilty, and sentenced to death, but pardoned by the King.

This year died Sir Richard Weston, Earl of Portland, Lord Treasurer, and Sir Edward Coke, formerly Queen Elizabeth's Attorney-generall, and chief Justice of the Kings Bench; but now out of favour, by reason of his too great freedom of speech: and in Scotland died the Earl of Kenoule, Lord Chancellor of that Kingdome, a great Enemy to the Lord Balmerino, in whose place succeeded Archbishop Spotswood of St. Andrews, aged about sixty years, one justly commended for three excellent Qualities, Learning, Moderation, and Wildome.

This year was unfortunate to the Swedish Party in Germany, where Generall Arnhem was constrained to retire out of Bohemia into Saxony; the Town of Ratisbone was re-gained by the Imperialists, Generall Aldring slain at Lansbut, and the whole Sweedish Army totally defeated by G the King of Hungary, and the Cardinal Infanto, at the famous Battell of Norlingen; after which ensued the Surrender of that Town, and the Conquest of the Dukedome of Witttemberg, whose Duke fled to Strasburg: this success produced a short Peace the next year, which was afterwards broke by means of the French.

to decide the difference be-

After the departure of Smith, the Bishop of Calcedon, out of England; Gregory Panzani, a Priest and Civilian was sent hither by the Pope with a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, to decide the difference between the Regular and the Secular Priests, this Panzani insinuates himself into

And into the favour of the Lord Cottington, and Secretary Windebank, seeks to discover by his Agents at Court, how far the Kings mind might be wrought to a toleration in matters of Concernment to the Romish Religion; as the giving way to a Nuncio from the Pope to the Queen, and the allowing of a Catholick Bishop for the English Nation to reside here, who should be nominated and limited by his Majesty; and at last, having brought about an indifferent fair Correspondence between the Regulars and the Seculars, he returned home, and committed the transacting of the rest to Signor George Com, whom he left in his room.

It was now the year 1635, when a gallant Fleet was set out, by the aide of Ship-money, forty Sail, with the Earl of Lindsey Admirall, and twenty others, under the Earl of Essex Vice-admirall, who secured the Seas from Pirates formerly molesting, whereby our Commodities were safely transported, and the English Puissance rendred so considerable in the eyes of foreign Princes, that the King of Spain thought it his safest course to entrust his Bullion in our Bottoms, which was Coynded in England, to the great benefit of the Kings Mint, and of all the Merchants also, whose Commodities were exchanged thereby, and the rest of the mony payed over by exchange to Flanders. At this time the French and Hollanders had confederated themselves to infest the Spaniard in Flanders, the one by Land and the other by Sea, but the English Fleet removed the Hollanders from before Dunkirk, and the Natives discontented by the Infolencies of the French, rose up in Armes against them, and joyned with the Spaniard to expell them out of the Country.

There was brought up to Court by the Earl of Arundell, as the Miracle and Rarity of these times, for the wonderfull provexity of his Age, one Robert Parr, a Shropshire man; who had reacht almost his 160 year, and might in all likelyhood have out-liv'd that time some years, had not the incommodiouness of so long a Journey to a man so aged, the removall of him from his own proper Sphear, the Country, and the change of his wonted course of Dyet, haistned on the period of his dayes.

Charles Prince Elector, finding small hopes of Restauration from the mediation of Neighbour States, came over into England to crave Assistance of the King, and was received with all the Carelles of Courtisie and Complement, and lodged in Prince Charles's Quarter at Whitehall: And soon after Arrived his Brother Prince Rupert.

The twenty eighth of December, the Kings second Daughter was born, on the fifth of January was Baptized, and named Elizabeth: To Congratulate the Queens happy Delivery, over comes an Ambassadour from Holland, who to work the more into favour, brought with him a Present of an immense value, a massie piece of Ambergreece, two fair, and almost transparent China Basons, a rare Clock of excellent Art, being the Workmanship of Rodolphus the Emperour, and four very admirall Pieces of Painting, the Originals of Tintoret and Titian, those admired ancient Artizans: And now the King began to bethink himself of a new Treasurer, that Office having been managed by Commissioners, ever since the death of the Earl of Portland: but some differences arising between them, so incommodated the Kings Affairs, that he resolves again to put it into the hands of one; and so, March the sixth, commits the Staff of that Office to Doctor William Juxon, Bishop of London.

Now more then ever began to rise Divisions about Ecclesiasticall matters which were mainly encreast by the present Archbishop of Canterbury, his strict and zealous maintaining of certain Ceremonies of the Church, as the placing of the Communion-table at the East end of the Chancel, upon a Graduell Ascent in the manner of an Altar, with a Traverse of Rails before it, with other things formerly not so strictly insisted upon, and now vehemently oppos'd by many, who commonly went under the name of Puritans, and Non-conformists; nor were there wanting some of the Episcopall Party, who asserted by Writing, that the Communion-table ought to stand according to the Primitive example in the Nave or middle of the Quire: to this purpose a Book was publisht, written as some think by the Bishop of Lincoln, though owned by another person.

The King considering the good effects of his late Fleet, sets out another, consisting of three-score Sail of good Ships, under the Command of the Earl of Northumberland, in 1636. being the twelfth yeat of his Reign; who going Northwards, scouted the Seas of the Dutch Buffes, seizing some, sinking others, and enforcing the rest to fly; so reducing them all to a precarious Condition of entreating the favour of fishing by the Kings Commission, which he was the readier to indolge them, because he looked upon them as the likeliest means of his Nephews Reinduction, which he so passionately desired; that understanding that an Imperiall Dyet was indictet at Ratisbone, September the sixteenth, for the Electing a King of the Romans, he dispatcht thither the Earl of Arundell, as Ambassadour to the new Emperour (who had lately succeeded his Father by the name of Ferdinand the Third.) The Earl arriving at the Imperiall Court, presented his Masters request in behalf of the Prince Elector, and was answered, That he might be considered for enjoying the lower Palatinates, but as for the other, it was in the power of the Bavarian, and therefore it would concern the Ambassadour to treat with him, and with the Emperours Deputies. Some of them were well inclined toward the Palgrave; but others were so hot against him, that they could hardly refrain from offensive Contumelies; and the Bavarian sayd plainly, That what he had won by the Sword, he would hold by the same as long as he was able. The Earl foreseeing what small success his Negotiation was like to have, would not not mispend his own time, and his Majesties money in the Treaty, but hasted away, and that A (the more to shew his Indignation) without taking any leave, having before sent the King an account of his Transactions; nor could he be perswaded to stay one month longer, by all the Intreaties of the Spanish and Polish Ambassadors, whom the Emperour sent after him to appease him with promises of better effects, if he would return, but home he comes and finds the King so angry, at his being neglected, that he resolved to shew the like contempt to the Emperours Agent, which came over to palliate the business, and to propose some terms of Accommodation: but though the Prince Electors hopes seemed now to be dashed, yet another occasion of reviving them, seemed to present it self; namely, an Overture of a Marriage between his Sister and the King of Poland, which was almost effected by the Legation of Prince Radziwil here in England, and consented unto by the Polish Peers and People, but obstructed by the Clergy, who pitcht upon Cecilia, second Sister to the Emperour, and made up the Match between her and their King, leaving the poor Palgrave in his former state of desperation. Anne.

Master Hamden of Buckinghamshire, and divers other Gentlemen of Quality, had refused to pay the Tax of Ship-money, whereupon this Michaelmas Term, the King refers the Cause to the Censure of twelve Judges, Bransford, Finch, Davenport, Denham, Hutton, Jones, Crook, Trevor, Vernon, Barkley, Crawly, Weston; all which except Hutton, and Crook, gave Judgment against Hamden and his Associates, and subscribed their Names to be inrolled in all Courts at Westminster-hall. This year March the seventeenth, the Princess Anne, the Kings third Daughter was born. C

Dr. Bastwick,
Mr. Pryn, and Mr. Burton
censured.

In the year 1637. being the thirteenth year of the Kings Reign, a heavy Censure was past upon Doctor Bastwick, Mr. Pryn, and Mr. Burton, for writing Books against Episcopall Government and Bishops; all three were sentenced five thousand pounds Fine to the King, to lose their Ears in the Pillory, and to be imprisoned; the Papists also suffered at this time under a severe Animadversion, it being observed that they made numerous resorts to private Conventicles at the houses of forrein Ambassadors, and especially to the old Chappell at Somerset-house, of whom Mr. Walter Mountague, Sir Toby Matthews, and the Queens Officers, were most notorious.

June the twenty sixth, Charles Prince Electors, and his Brother Prince Rupert departed for Holland; upon a design of effecting somewhat in reference to the recovery of their Patrimony, and the next year by assistance of the Kings Purse and Credite, with the Prince of Orange, and some of the States, gathered together a considerable beginning of an Army, with which, and the hopes of encreasing in their Advance, and entrance into their own Country, they marched into Westphalia, and besieged Lemgea; but Count Hatzfeld, one of the Emperours Generals, having notice of it, came suddenly upon them, and brought them to a necessity of a Bartell, wherein they lost two thousand, and Prince Rupert, and the Lord Craven were taken Prisoners, the Electors himself hardly escaping by flight to the Hague. for certain Misdemeanors

Williams Bishop of Lincoln comes now to his second Declension, for his first was in the Kings E first year, when the great Seal was taken from him, and given to the Lord Coventry; this he so deeply resented, that he set himself to meditate revenge, and under-hand fomented all malevolent and popular disaffections, till at last, being narrowly watcht, he was found to vent some dishonourable Speeches of the King, for which he was put into a Bill in Star-chamber, where after some years Hesitation, he was committed upon those words; and further for indirect practices used for his Purgation: (For one Prideon the main man that witnessed for him, being charged by an Order of the Justices at Lincoln, with a Bastard layd to him by Elizabeth Hudson; he fearing least his Witness should be made invalid by this disgrace, procured by means of his two Agents Powell and Owen, the Order to be repeal'd, and the Child to be Fathered upon one Boon, F and Pridion acquitted) and was therefore this year sentenced, ten thousand pounds Fine to the King, Imprisonment in the Tower during pleasure, suspension Ab officio & beneficiis, and to be referred to the High-commission for what concerned that Court. Scotland was now the Scene of Action, for the King reviving his Fathers Design, would needs impose the English Liturgie, and Sacerdotall Habiliments upon that Nation, beginning at his own Chappel, and this year to be proclaimed to be used in all Churches, and the Bishops were well contented therewith, but nor the Ministers of the Kirk; and the People generally so enraged at it, that when the Dean of Edenburgh so attired, began to read the Common-prayer in St. Giles Church July 13. therein countenanced by the Council, Bishops, Lords, and Magistrates; the Women first and meaner men, with cursing and clapping their hands, and such like Actions, raised such a Hubbub, that nothing could be heard save their noise; the Bishop of Edenburgh who was to G preach that day, steps up into the Pulpit and reproves them for their irreverent behaviour in the Church, but was assailed (by them now more furious) with a whole shower of Stones, Seats, Stools, Cudgells, and what ever came next to hand; to the great hazard of his life, the Archbishop of St. Andrews Lord Chancellor offering to interpose, had been as rudely handled, if he had not called down from the Gallery the Provost and Bayliffs, and other civill Magistrates, who with much ado excluded the Tumultuants, and so the Dean proceeded in his reading of the Service-book, not without molestation by the multitude abroad: and this hapned in in Scotland.

A In other Churches also; but the After-noon such order was taken, that it was then read with less disturbance, and the Magistrates seemed so offended at these proceedings, that making enquiry after, and finding out some of the principall Actors, they inflicted punishment (though not very severe) upon them, and encouraged the Ministry to read the Book by an Act Obligatory for their safeguard and maintenance. Thus all seemd appeased, hush, and quiet for the present, untill October following, when Harvest and Vacation taking end together, there was such a confluence of persons of all sorts from all parts of the Kingdome to Edenburgh, as put the Councell into a just feare of an Insurrection: to prevent which, they issued out these three Proclamations the seventeenth of that Month.

B "First, That no Church-matters should be resolved, but that all Persons depart home, unless they shew some cause to the Councell, upon pain of Rebellion.

"Secondly, For removing the Session (or Term) from Edenburgh to Lithgow for the present, and afterwards the succeeding Sessions to Dundee, till further pleasure.

"Thirdly, For calling in, and burning a Seditious Book, Entituled, A Dispute against the English Popish Convention, obtruded upon the Kirk of Scotland.

C But all this had so little prevalence upon the People, that next day the Bishop of Galloway passing to the Councel-chamber was by them pursu'd thither, and assaulted in the very Councel House, and being difficultly drawn in from their rage, the House was immediatly beset, and his Person demanded with such out-rage, as necessarily called to his Succour the Earle of Traquair, and Wigton, who forced their passage in, with much trouble and little profit; for the Multitude encreasing, encompassed the House, that they were forced to require Aide of the Provost and City-Councell, who being in the like Condition, were glad to preserve themselves by subscribing:

D First to joyn in opposition to the Service-book, and in petitioning to that purpose.
Secondly, To restore Ramsay and Rollock, two silenced Ministers, and Henderson a silenced Reader. This being related to the Councell, the two aforementioned Earls went in person to the Town-house, where they found the Uproar something moderated by the Concessions of the Magistrates; but returning by the great Street, they were furiously assaulted; and Traquair Lord-Treasurer was trodden under foot, his Hat, Cloak, and white Wand taken away, and himself haled to the Councel-house: and so the Lords weighing their own Danger, sent privately to some Noblemen and Gentlemen (who were disaffected to the Service-book, and then assembled on behalf of the Common Cause against it) by whom they and the Bishop of Galloway were guarded thence through the Croud to their severall Lodgings: And now thinking themselves safe, they make Proclamation for breaking up all Conventions, and keeping the Peace, but instead of Obedience to it, they are re-encountred with two Petitions; The first from the medly of Men, Women, and Children: The second in the Name of the Noblemen, Gentry, Ministry, and Burgeses, both against the Service-book, and Canons, and these were sent to the King, who displeased thereat, adjourned the Term to Sterling, and published a Proclamation, forbidding upon the extreamest penalty, such tumultuous Resorts: against this the Earle of Hume, the Lord Lindsey, and divers other made Protestation, and agreeable to it erect four Tables, one of the Nobility, another of the Gentry, a third of the Barons, and a fourth of the Ministers; all to prepare and digest Propositions for the generall Table, which was formed of severall Commissioners chosen from the rest.

F In the year 1638. the generall Table entred into a solemn Covenant to preserve their Religion there professd, and resolved to maintain it, sent for Generall Lesly, and other Commanders and Officers from beyond the Seas, and provided themselves with Armes and Ammunition, whilst Hamilton who was delegated High-commissioner to pacifie these Distempers, under-hand fomented them, trifling away the time for almost the space of a year, with Declarations, Proclamations, Messages and Letters. Nor was it a small advantage to the Covenanters, that the Countesse of Roxborough, Lady of the Bed-chamber, and Governesse to the Princess Mary, and in great Favour with the Queen, was a great Well-willer to their Designs, and did continually give her Husband, and he to them, Intelligence of the Court-Designs.

G Hamilton having lost the Scottish Army for the Suedes Aide, and perceiving his Design that way frustrate, falls upon new Ones, cunningly induces the Duke of Lenox to favour him, and partly by his means and advice to the King, had procured to himself the Office of High-commissioner for the Scottish Affairs, although the King was advised by the Earle of Sterling, Secretary of the State, the Bishops of Ross, and Breken, privy Councillors, Sir Robert Spotswood, Lord President of the Colledge of Justice, and Sir John Hay, Master of the Rolls; rather to make choice of Marquis Huntley, a known Enemy of the Covenanters, whereas Hamilton was suspected to hold correspondence with them. When he was come to Dalkieth (impowred with a Commission to use the utmost of his Interest for the settling of Peace) he abod there many dayes before the confederate Lords would take any notice of it (the Business being so managed, that they A should shew him a seeming dis-respect at his first coming) and then he had an Invitation to Edenborough, which he accepted; the first thing he did, was to expostulate with them concerning their late Actions, and what they would further have; to which they plainly answered him, That nothing but a generall Assembly and Parliament would satisfie them, and that they had not any wayes turned from their Loyalty, so needed not return to it, and that they would rather renounce their Baptisme, then their Covenant; and so doubled their Guards.

From Edenborough the Marquis removes to Dalkieth, and there publishes the Kings Declaration, for relieving of their Grievances, and professing, his Majesties forwardness for maintaining the Religion there professed, and his resolution not to press the Service-book and Canons upon them, but in a legall way of proceeding, and his Order given for the discharge of all Acts B and Councells concerning them: but this would not please, so he sends into England and obtains leave from the King to recall the Terms to Edenborough, and to commit the publick Affairs to the secret Councell, which grants, drew a Letter of thanks from the Covenanters, who were hereby encouraged to demand Sir Robert Spotswood, the President of the Councell, and Sir John Hay, Master of the Rolls, to be removed out of the Session, Protesting, in case of denyall, to account all Acts to be null, if they two were present: But here they suffered a Repulse, and the Marquis leaving them jarring, comes privately to the King, and presently returns again; And treating with the Covenanters after long disputation concerning the Condition of the Members of their Assembly, at length contracts all his Propositions into these two.

His Propositions to the Confederates, in order to the calling a Parliament, and general Assembly.

First, If the Lords and the rest will undertake for themselves, and the rest, that no Laiques C shall have Votes in choosing the Ministry, to be sent from the severall Presbyteries to the generall Assembly, nor none else but the Ministry of the same Presbyteries.

Secondly, If they will undertake that the Assembly shall not go about to determine of things established by Act of Parliament, otherwayes then by Remonstrance to the Parliament, leaving the determining of things Ecclesiasticall to the generall Assembly, and things settled by Acts of Parliament to the Parliament.

Then I will presently Indict a generall Assembly, and promise upon my Honour, immediately after to call a Parliament.

The Covenanters flew high, and threatned that if they could have an Assembly upon no other Terms then these, they would call one themselves; wherefore to stop their impetuous Current, the Marquis makes another Journey to the King, and so works upon him and his Councillors, (meer Novices in the Scottish Affairs) that the whole unlimited management of the Business is committed to him, to order things as he should see most convenient; with which Authority he comes back to the Confederates, and finds them over-forward to order their own Election of Assembly-Members, which he puts a stop to for the present, by acquainting them with a Declaration, that he had procured from the King in their Favour to this purpose;

He obtains from the King a Declaration in favour of Covenanters.

That he did discharge the Service-book, Book of Canons, and High-commission; and also, That he did annull and rescind all Acts for establishing of them, and did discharge all persons from urging the practice of the Five Articles of Perth (so difficultly by King James obtained in Parliament) that all persons whomsoever, shall be lyable to the Censure of Parliament, generall Assembly, or any other Judicatories, competent to the nature of the Offence: That no other Oath be Administred for the free entry of Ministers, then that which is contained in the Act of Parliament. That the ancient Confession of Faith and Band annexed, should be subscribed and received, as in the Fathers time. That a generall Assembly be holden at Glasgow, the one and twentieth of November, 1638. and a Parliament at Edenburgh, the fifteenth of May, 1639. all former Offences pardoned, and a generall Fast appointed.

This Declaration being published, the Marquis and Councell subscribed the Covenanters F Confession of Faith, then followed the Proclamation for the generall Assembly and Parliament; and lastly, an Act of the Councell for a generall Subscription to the sayd Confession, and a Commission sent to those who were to take the Subscriptions. Yet something still remained matter for a new Protestation, which was read by one Johnson; wherein the people were moved to consider with whom they were to deal, and exceptions made against Bishops, and Bishops Voting in the Assembly.

The Covenanters except, and declare against Bishops.

The next thing was to proceed in the electing Commissioners for the Assembly; where having fitted themselves, not without some brawling between the Presbyters and the Lay-Elders, they move the Commissioner to cite the Arch-bishops and Bishops to appear there as guilty persons, which he refusing, they presented a Bill of Complaint against them to the Presbytery at Edenborough, who accordingly warned them to appear at the next generall Assembly.

The generall Assembly meets, and what was there Acted.

Upon the meeting of this Synod, the first thing that was done after the reading of the Marquis's Commission, was the putting in of the Bishops Protestation against the Assembly, which the Covenanters vouchsafed not to read, and Hamilton seemingly incensed, hastily enters a Protestation against their refusal; And then Alexander Henderson was chosen Moderator. And lastly, they presumed to prohibit six Lords of the Kings privy Councell (though by him nominated) to be Assessors at their Assembly; but the King having an inkling of their proceedings

A Kings as to Bishops and other matters, and doubting the Event, ordered his Commissioner to dissolve the Assembly, which was accordingly done upon November the twenty ninth, and the Covenanters after their usuall mode, instantly sent forth their Protestation against it, and withall, declared six former meetings (obstrusive To their wayes) to be void and of none effect; and soon after abolished Episcopacy, and (Hamilton returning to England) prepared for War, as knowing that the King was determined to maintain the Bishops, and to call them to an account, for all their late Transactions.

The Assembly dissolved by the Kings Order.

Cardinall Richelieu, whose plot it was to raise the Fortunes of France, by the Dissentions of her Neighbours, puts in for his share, and sends over one Chamberlain his Chaplain and Almoner, to encrease the difference, and to widen the Orifice of the now gaping Wound, by promising them Assistance from his Master the ancient Confederate of that Kingdome, whereupon a Letter was sent to the King of France to implore his Aide in these termes.

Cardinall Richelieu sends over his Almoner to foment the differences in Scotland.

SIR,

Y Our Majesty being the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes and States, we have found it necessary to send this Gentleman, Mr. Colvil, to represent unto your Majesty, the Candor and Ingenuity, as well of our Actions and Proceedings, as of our Intentions, which we desire to be Engraven and written to the whole World, with a Beam of the Sun, as well as to your Majesty. We therefore most humbly beseech you, Sir, to give Faith, and Credit to him, and to all that he shall say on our part, touching Us, and our Affairs, being almost assured, Sir, of an Assistance, according to your wonted Clemency heretofore, and alwayes shewed to this Nation, which will not yeild the Glory to any other whatsoever, to be eternally — your Majesties most humble, most obedient, and most affectionate Servants,

A Letter sent by the Scots to the King of France, to implore his Assistance.

October the last, Mary de Medicis Queen-Mother of France, came into England, having already rendred her self odious to her own Country, by her Designs for the Advancement of her Favourite Marquis d' Ancre, and her impetuous combining with her younger Son, the Duke of Orleanse; but finding her self over-matched by the strength and policy of the Cardinall, she makes an escape from them in the year 1631, into Brabant, and was there honourably entertained by the Cardinall Infante, till going about to raise the same stirs there, which she had raised in France, she became the Butt and Mark for all the common peoples Imprecations to be levell'd at; and so she brings her trouble with her to the Prince of Orange, in the year 1637. and there stayed till she received an Invitation from her Daughter, hither she comes to the great regret of the King, who desired not her ominous presence.

The Queen Mother comes over into England.

The Scots by this time had gotten together a competent Army, and were upon their March, when the King having also prepared his Forces, committed them to the charge of the Earl of Arundell, as General, the Earl of Essex as Lieutenant-Generall of the Foot, and the Earl of Holland of the Horse; and a considerable Fleet under the Command of Marquis Hamilton: And upon the seven and twentieth of February, out comes the Kings Declaration, wherein the Scots were charged to have dispersed seditious Pamphlets against Regall Authority, and for inciting severall persons against the King, by the private meetings of their Agents at London, and other places, for their Protestations against his Commands, for executing their own Tables, Councells, and Committees by their own Authority, and for refusing the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, because they had taken their Covenant: And lastly, That he was resolved to maintain Episcopacy there; in rejoinder to this, March the two and twentieth, is published an Ordinance of their generall Assembly, the Kings declaring against them, and cursing themselves if they meant any harm to England, concluding their Wars to be merely defensive, and grounded upon the Law Naturall, and Civill.

The King prepares an Army against the Scots.

G It was now the year 1639. at the fifteenth year of King Charles's Reign, the King set forward with his Army, March the twenty seventh, and next month comes to Tork, and the month following to Barwick, where both Armies had an interview: In this mean time Hamilton Anchors his Fleet in the Frith of Edenburgh, receives a Visit from his Mother a rigid Covenanter, who in the War (like a Virago) rid about the Army with Pistolls at her Saddle-bow, to testify her zeal to the Cause, and the Scots themselves were heard to say, That the Son of so good a Mother would do them no hurt, as indeed he did not; for having loyured there some time, as soon as he understood of the Treaty of Pacification at Barwick, he gets on Land, and posts thither immediately to be Present at it, to carry on something there which might serve his own Interest: While the King stayed in York, the Earl of Roxborough, and Traquair came thither under Pretence of Treating; but it appearing that their main purpose was to tamper with the English Lords, and to take off the Edge of their Animosities against the Scots (by telling them that the Scots Ruine would enable the King to be more Imperious, even to the English, then they would be well able to bear) they were both Committed, yet soon after Released and dismissed, having done their principall Buiness, and taken order for the mutuall Intelligence and Correspondency with the English Lords; so that when they came to Barwick, it was evident that they had no mind to fight, although every way superiour to the Scottish Army: The English were Encamped neer Barwick, and the Scots at Dunslow, when by the mediation of some, a Treaty was begun, which ended in a short-lived Peace upon these Articles, on the Kings part.

First, That his Majesty confirm what his Commissioner promised in his Name.

Secondly, That a generall Assembly be indited to be kept at Edinburrugh, August the sixth, and a Parliament at Edinburrugh, August the tenth.

And lastly, That upon their dis-banding of their Forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring to the King all his Castles, Forts, and Ammunition, as also his Royall Honours, and to every one of his good Subjects their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained since the late pretended generall Assembly; the King will presently thereafter recall his Fleet, and retire his Forces, and cause Restitution of their Ships and Goods since the aforesayd time: This the King to do by Declaration. On the Scots Part the Articles were;

First, The Forces of Scotland to be dis-banded within eight and forty hours after Publication of the Kings Declaration.

Secondly, They to render up after the sayd Publication, all Castles, Forts, Ammunition, of all sorts, so soon as the King shall send to receive them.

Thirdly, They to hold no Meetings, Treatings, nor Consultations, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

Fourthly, They to desist from all Fortifications, and those to be permitted to the Kings pleasure.

Fifthly, They to restore to all the Kings Subjects, all their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and means, taken, or detained from them, since the second of February last. Upon the eighteenth of June the Kings Declaration was signed, and the Scots Articles.

The Kings Declaration was no sooner published, but the Covenanters produce another Protestation for adhering to their late Assembly at Glasgow; for adhering to their Covenant; and for prohibiting all Members of the Colledge of Justice from attending the Session or Terme. Toward the latter end of July the King, who had intended to be present at their generall Assembly, now finding the Scots not punctuall in the Performance of their Articles and perceiving that they intended to fall upon those things which would prove distastefull to him, he therefore thinking he could better bear their Proceedings at a distance, pyles him home to England, and upon the Sixth of August the Assembly meets at Edinburrugh and sits till the 24. and aboliseth Episcopacy, the Five Articles of Perth, the high Commission, the Liturgy and Book of Canons; and so they take End; and the Parliament (prorogued to August the last) begin and spend their first Four daies in debating the election of the Lords of the Articles. And having at last agreed among themselves touching that Particular, they formed these Demands to be made to the King.

First, That Coin be not medled with, but by Advice of Parliament.

Secondly, No Stranger to command, or to inhabid in any Castles of the Kinges, but by their Advice.

Thirdly, No Honour to be granted to any Stranger, but such as have a Competency of Land-rent in Scotland.

Fourthly, No Commissioner or Justiciary or Lieutenancy but for a limited time; and next they Protest against Precedency of the Lord Treasurer and Lord Privie Seale, as not warranted by a positive Law.

These things coming to the knowledge of the King together with a Pamphlet prevaricating the Conditions of the late Treatie, their Letters to the King of France for Aid, their Provisions for Armes, their levying Taxes of ten Markes per Centum and continuing their Officers and Fortifications, induced him by his Commissioner the Earl of Traquair to command the Adjournment of their Parliament untill the second of June next, upon pain of Treason: against which Command the Covenanters declare and send a Remonstrance to the King by the Earl of Dunfermling, and the Lord London, who coming without Warrant from the Kings Commissioner Traquair, were sent back without audience, after them comes Traquair himselfe, and he and Hamilton consult together privately about representing the Matter to the Councell; which begat a debate whether or not the Presence of the King were expedient for their Reduction; this was canvassed on both Sides with Arguments of Policy, and at length resolved in the Negative, That they were not to be redced to their duty, but by force of Armes; and soon after this Dunfermling, and London returne from Scotland in the quality of Commissioners, and with them Sir William Douglas and Mr. Robert Birkley who after a long Speech for the Justification of the Scottish Transactions, desired

begins.

A desired, that the King would ratifie and confirme their Proceedings, and that their Parliament might proceede to determine of all Articles (or Bills) brought to them, to the establishing of Religion, and Peace; but instead of an Answer to their Requeits, the King charged them with the afore-mentioned Pamphlet (which he had caused to be burnt by the hands of the Hangman,) to which they made no Answer: but afterward the State of Scotland did, in their grand Declaration, excuse it, as related to them by their Commissioners, as being the cheifest cause of the Pacification, and the only Lenitive which made the People digest his Majesties Declaration. As for the Letter to the French King, the Original of it came to the Kings hands, and the Character was found to be the Lord Lowdens, who was thereupon Committed for a short time, but Released upon the mediation of Marquis Hamilton, and then he and Dunfermling presented their Remonstrance to the King, and Traquair comes also to give an Account of all, before the whole Body of the Councell; where things were handled with so much Acrimony, that both Parties were thereby exasperated into a greater dislike of one another.

During these Jarrs and Discontents between King Charles and the Covenanters, about the middle of July, the Prince Eleffour (who the yeare before had lost both his Army and his Troopes in West-Phalia) came over againe into England; for Duke Bernard of Saxon-Weimer a Commander very eminent in the German Wars and a great Sackler against the Emperours, died about this time; and the Prince of Orange counselled the Palgrave to goe into England to his Uncle the King and to procure from him that Assistance and countenancing which might get him the Command of that Dukes Army: but King Charles had his hands full of Scottish Troubles, and therefore advised him to apply himself to the King of France, and to that end deales with the French Ambassadour here residing, to perswade his Majestie to joine in League with him; Rich. liou the grand Director of the Gallick affairs, bore no great good will to the English King, upon the Ile of Rhe account; and consequently disaffected toward his Nephew, sets some of his Engines on worke to perswade the Prince to pass through France disguised to the Swedish Army; which he imprudently attempted, but, discovered all the way by the great Respect shewed to him from the English Fleet as he passed neer them, and from the Ship which landed him at Boulen; from whence he went to Paris and thence to Lions where he was seised (and denying himselfe) as dealing perfidiously in a time of Treaty, was committed to a guard of Horse and Foot for the present.

This year was remarkable for the great Sea-fight between the Spaniards and Hollanders in the Downes. Don Antonio D'Oquendo, conducted a Fleet of neer Seventy sail with about Twenty Five Thousand men to be landed at Dunberk for a Recruit for Flanders. These met with the Dutch Vice-admiral in the way with Seventeen sail of good Men of War; by whom they were forced to an Engagement upon the Seventh of September; in which the Hollander coming by the worst, with the loss of two ships sunk, got to wind-ward, going along with them towards Dunberk, continually firing their Ordnance upon them to give warning to Vantrump the Dutch Admirall, who lay before the Town. The Admirall heares the Reports and comes up with Ten ships; and, joining forces with the Vice-admirall, encounters the Spaniard in a sharp fight between Dover and Callays for almost half a day, having much the better, taking two gallions, and forcing the rest (sorely shattred) on the English Coast neer Dover, and so bore off towards France; till they might consult what was next to be done. The Spanish Resident desired the King to Protect them from the Hollander for two Tides, that they might have convenience to get back to Spain; but the King, in Amity with both, would not meddle in the business; but injoynd those English who had agreed privily to transport their Souldiers and Treasure to Dunberk, to desist from any such Enterprises, by reason of the Dutch Ambassadors Complaint, and gave order that no Spaniard should be suffered to pass unlicensed beyond Gravesend; and so the Spaniard, being left to his own wits, took Advantage of the Night, and by a Stratagem conveyed to Dunberk Fourteen Ships with four Thousand men and Four Hundred Thousand pounds. But the King, unwilling to have them ingage in his Seas, desired the Spanish Admirall, by the Earl of Arundell, to retreat upon the first fair Wind: but the wind continuing contrary, longer then ordinary, held them there so long that the Hollander (who waited his coming out) now increasing by daily Supplies (to the number of an Hundred compleat ships,) resolved to fall upon them, as they did, upon the Eleventh of October, charging them with Cannon and Fire-ships, in such furious manner; as they, unable to endure the Shot, cut their Cables and twentie three of them ran ashore, whereof two there perished, one of which was a great Gallion of two and fifty brasse peices of Ordnance commanded by the Vice-Admiral of Gallizia, don Andrea de Castro; the Spaniards of the rest fled to Land, leaving their Ships to be man'd by the English for safeguard from the Dutch. Admirall O'quendo and Lopez of Portugall, with Thirtie Ships went to Sea, keeping in close order till they were covered with a great Fogge, by advantage of which, the Dutch interposed between the Admiralls and their Fleet, and fired the Admirall of Portugall, besides other Damage; which O'quendo perceiving (the Foggs then cleering up) he with some few other Ships bent their Course to Dunberk. Of these Thirty, Eleven were taken and sent into Holland; Three perished upon the coast of France; One neer Dover, and Five sunk in the fight. What the designe of this Spanish fleet was, remains yet in uncertainty: various Descants were differently passed upon it; For Five and Twenty thousand men to be imbarqued for a Recruit seemed to most men unlikely, and the Refusal of the Admiral of Naples to shew his Commission, when required by the King, was very suspicious; and, That the Dunberk should a while dispute the Reception of those Four Thousand which were conveyed thither, did cause no little wonder; inso-much that many there were, who judged the principall Designe of this Fleet to be against our King, for distempers beginning to arise about this time in England and Ireland as well as in Scotland, it was not altogether improbable that the Spaniards might have had those Correspondents in some one of those Countries, which should have furnished them at their landing (wheresoever it was to have been) with armes and Ammunition, whereof they stood in to great neede in the time of their fighting with the Dutch, that five and twenty ships were able to deale with their whole armado of neere seventy saile; however it was, the Kings reputation was hereby greatly impaired, for suffering the Hollanders to fall upon the Spaniards in his Seas, and the Hollanders doubting that he might resent the affront offered to him in that action, were willing to keep him so busied that he should not have opportunity of revenge, and to that end, accommodated the Scots with all manner of warlike provision.

This year died Sir Thomas Covenry on the tenth of January; he was privy counsellour to the King, and had been Lord Keeper of the great Seale of England for the space of fiftene years, who deceased with the greater commendation by reason of the eminent delinquency of his two immediate Antecessors the Viscount St. Albans and the Bishop of Lincoln; and to him succeeded Sir John Finch.

makes new preparations against the Scots.

One Bagshaw, a reader of the middle Temple, was about this time silenced for speaking too boldly against prelacy; and was therefore shrewdly checkt by the Lord Keeper Finch and the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and forced for a while to absent himselfe from London. The Scots Commissioners having delivered their message return home to Edenborough, November the 19, the same night that a greate part of the Castle Walls fell downe being the just Annivertary of the Kings Birth day. For the reparation of them the King sent the Lord Estrich, Collonell Rusher and others, who were resisted by the Covenanters, because they thought not the Lord Estrich to be a fit Governour of that Castle, as the King had designed him. The Kings anger was now growne to the height and therefore he resolves upon forcible courtes; and to that end considers of raising Men and money to bring them into order; a secret Cabinet Councell is call'd consisting of but three (the rest being excluded under the nickname of hunting Lords) these three were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and Hamilton, who drove designs by himselfe; amongst these it was agreed that a Parliament must be called, in England, and another in Ireland for the Kings supply; but because the King feared that the Parliament would be tedious in their debate before they would agree upon any subsidies for him; it was resolved that the Lords should for the present subscribe some Loans; the Lord Lieutenant subscribed 20000*l* the Duke of Richmond as much; Hamilton kept his monys for other ends and therefore pretended povertie; most of the Lords, Judges, Officers and dependants of Courts of Judicature, and generally the greatest part of the Gentry, even the recusants contributed according to their Abilities. About this time the Scots perceiving what a storm was like to fall upon them, made perparation for defence, and to that end entertained treaties with severall forrain Princes and States; as Denmark, Sweden, Holland, and Poland; and as for the Jesuits they thought it would be no veniall Sin if they should not have a hand in fomenting the differences, to which end, Con, the Popes Agent and Chamberlaine, Richelieu's Chaplaine, Sir Toby Matthews a Jesuited Priest of the order of Politicians, Captain Read, and one Maxwell a couple of Scots, bestire themselves very diligently, to reinforce the sence of every injury, and to excite the people to beleive that the King chiefly aimed at a Tyrannicall subjugation of them to his own arbitrary will. These their practices were discovered by Andreas Habernsfield, a Nobleman of Bohemia then become Phisician to the Kings Sister, the Paligraves Relict, who made it also apparent that many of the Nobility of England, and chief favorites at Court (among whom were the Earl and Countess of Arundell, Secretary Windebanke and Endymion Porter), were acquainted and consenting with their transactions. Con did directly imitate the waies of his President Richard Smith, the titular bishop of Chalcedon; who resided here in England under the Queens protection, meertly to performe the part of a Boute-few and incendiary as likewise did (all his successors) Banzani, Con and Rosetti; this Con had formerly offered in the Popes name a Cardinalis Cap to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

A Parliament
assembleth at Westm.

April the 13 in the year 1640 and the 16 of this Kings Reign, the Parliament assembled, and Mr John Glanvill Speaker of the House of Commons: In this Parliament the Earl of Strafford was greatly honoured, being led into the House of Lords by two Peers, in honour of his Good service in Ireland in obtaining the grant of four Subsidies to maintaine Ten Thousand foot and fiftene hundred horse; and this for a pattern to England. And that England might the more Cheerfully write after the Irish copy, the King sends to the Parliament to tell them that if they would supply him with a sufficiency for the suppressing of the Scottish insolencies he would acquit his claime of Ship-moneys and give satisfaction to their just demands. By these proposalls the Parliament perceived the extremity of the Kings exigences; and therefore they would be first satisfied in these three points.

First, For clearing the Properties of the Subject.

Secondly, for establishing true Religion.

Suddenly dissolved by the King.

Thirdly for Priviledges of Parliament; But whiles they were debating whether the Kings Supplies or the subjects Sufferings should be first considered, and things were brought to a hopefull posture, Secretary Vane spoiles all, either purposely or fortuitously, by telling them that the King demanded twelve Subsidies, whereas he required but six, and hereby put them into such a heat against the King, and rendred things so desperate, that the King by the advice of his Junco dissolved the Parliament May the Fifth after two and twenty dayes Session: nor was this onely the Advice

A of the Junto but also of the privie councill who were ascertained that the animosities of the Commons were so great, as they intended that very day to have Voted against the war with Scotland; whereby the King would have been left in a worle case then he was before their sitting.

About this time the convocation of Bishops sat with Commission to act, propose, deliberate and conclude such Cannons and Constitutions, as they conceived conducive to the peace of the Church; amongst other things they imposed that Oath known by the name of the &c as an Anti-Covenant to that of the Scots;

A convocation of Bishops sit and consult about the Affairs of the Church.

I A. B. Do Swear, That I doe approve the Doctrine and Discipline of Government established in the Church of England, as containing all things necessary to Salvation, and that I will not indeavour by my selfe, or any other, directly or indirectly, to bring in any Popish Doctrine contrary to that so Established, nor will I ever give my consent to alter the Government of this Church by Arch-Bishops, Deans, and Arch-Deacons, &c. as it stands now Established, and as by Right it ought to stand: nor yet ever to subject it to the Usurpations and Superstitions of the See of Rome; and all these things do I plainly and sincerely acknowledge and Swear according to the plain and common sense or understanding of the same words without any Equivocation or mentall evasion or secret Reservation whatsoever: and this I doe heartily, willingly and truly, upon the Faith of a Christian, So help me God in Jesus Christ.

This was the main Businesse of the Convocation, which ended May the 29. The Archbishop had been very firy in acting against the Puritans and compelling men to a compliance and Conformity with the old (but newly by him reinforced) Ecclesiastical Ceremonies whereby he incurred a great deale of hatred from the Common man, especially the Londoners who had a particular disgust against him for his severe animadversion upon Burton, Prinn, and Bastwick: so that May the 9 a Paper was posted upon the Old Exchange exhorting Apprentices to rise and sack his House at Lambeth next Monday, which they were the more forward to doe, because it was rumord that the was a prime instigator of the King to dissolve the Parliament; but he had notice of their intent, and provided against their coming; on Monday following in the dead of the Night, five hundred of them beset his House, striving to force their Entrance, yet were repulsed, and glad to depart, having in some measure vented their anger against him, in words, and in breaking his glass windows. The next day many of them upon inquiry were apprehended and imprisoned, but three days after forcibly rescued from thence by their Companions who broke open the Prison doores, for which one of their Ringleaders were hanged drawne and quartered, and his Limbs set upon London Bridge.

The King grew daily more and more offended at the Scots, and calls a select Junto to consult about them, where the Earl of Strafford delivered his minde in such terms, as afterward proved his destruction; War was resolved upon, and money to be procured either by fair means or foule. The City of London was invited to a Loan but refused and pleaded poverty, being, as it seemed, distastd that the Star-Chamber had sentenced her plantation of London-Derry in Ireland to be forfeited for some alleaged misdemeanours, and the undertakers fined, yet the Citizens were content to offer an ample sum towards the building of a magnificent Palace for the Kings Court in St. James's Park according to Inigo Jones's Modell, but it took not effect. The Gentry contributed pretty freely, so that with their aids the regall Army was compleated, and the King himselfe was Generalissimo, the Earl of Northumberland Generall, and the Earl of Strafford Lieutenant Generall; Northumberland falls sick and therefore the King takes the Command upon himselfe, and sends away part of the Army, horse and foot, under the Lord Conway into the North. July the 20 the Queene was delivered of a Son who was Christned Henry, after created Duke of Gloester; And August the 20 The King with the rest of the Army sets out of London, and comes to North-Allerton. In the mean time the Lord Conway had but ill success; he had drawn about 1200 horse and 3000 foot to secure the passes upon the River Tine, neere Newborne; Thither was the Scottish Army advanced with their Generall Lefly, better provided then the time before. August the 27 Lefly desires leave of Conway for his whole Army to pass to the King with their Petition, but is denied; three hundred Scottish horse attempted to cross the River, and are repelled by the shot of the English musqueteers who were placed under the Shadow of the brell-workes; Lefly makes a large Requittall for that, by playing upon them with his nine Pieces of Ordnance which he had placed on the other side of the River, and blinded them with the Bushes; The English Infantry terrified with the unexpected charge of the Cannon (for they were mostly raw Souldiers) forsooketh their ports, cast down their Armes, and fled; Lefly comes on with his horse, and charges commissary Generall Wilmot, who with the Cavalry stood stoutly to it, till over-born with Multitude and Cannon, they were put to a disorderly Retreat: the Lord Conway seeing A both Horse and Foot worried, hasts to the King to carry him the unwelcome Newes of the defeat; and Sir Jacob Ashley Governour of New-Castle knowing the Place not tenable, deserted it, sinking the Ordnance in the River, and so both New-Castle and Durham came shortly into the Scots hands. Now comes Strafford with whom the King retreats to Torke, and stay's there, while the Earl (who now had the Command of the Army) charges the whole Miscariage upon Conway, and he as stoutly denies it.

The Earl of Haddington and others slain by an accident.

In Scotland the Earl of Haddington, who commanded the Forces in Louthian and Merse having recovered from the Souldiers of Berwick Garrison, the pieces of Ordnance (which Lestly had left behinde him at Dunfe) and brought them to Dunglasse, was the next day slain with Twenty more Knights and Gentlemen in the midst of his Court, by the Stones that flew from the Vault near B adjoining; which was then blowne up with the Magazine that lay in it.

The King had formerly declared the Scots to be Rebels and Traitors by Proclamation, and commanded that Publick Prayers should be put up against them in all Churches: but at this Time is contented to Treat with them, and to that end receives from them a Petition stuf with Complaint of their Grievances; to which he answers by his Secretary of Scotland the Earl of Linrick that he expects their Particular Demands, and them he receives within three dayes, all tending to requiring a Parliament to be called for England; without which there could be no satisfactory Redresse for them; They had likewise published a little before their marching into England a Declaration, called, The Intentions of the Army, Viz: Not to lay down Armes till the Reformed Religion were settled in both Nations upon sure grounds; the Cauters and Abettors of their present Troubles C (viz. the Archbishop and Lord Deputy) be brought to Publike Justice, and that in Parliament. Conformably to this, Twelve English Peers, Bedford, Hertford, Essex, Warwick, Mulgrave, Bristow, Bullingbrookes, Say and Seals, Mandavill, Edward Howard, Brook, Paget, drew up a Petition to the King and had it delivered, After which others of the like Nature were brought from the Londoners and other Parts of the Kingdome; all consenting most harmoniously in this, That nothing could relieve the Pressures of this Kingdome, but a Parliament: To this the King in part condescends, giving hopes also of further satisfaction ere long, and for the present summons the Lords to appear at Tork the 24 of September, which they did: and on the first day of their Meeting, it was Agreed, That a Parliament should be called, to convene November the Third, and then, for relief of the North, sorely suffering under Lestly's Army (Durham Bishop-ricke being then taxed 350 l and Northumberland 300 l Per diem) it was resolved that a Treaty should be set on foot, and so Sixteene English D Lords, Viz. Earls, Bedford, Barkshure, Hertford, Salisbury, Essex, Holland, Bristow, Warwick, Barons, Mandevill, Howard, Paget, Paullet, Savile, Brookes, Dunsmore, Wharton; should meet with so many Scots Lords, the Place Tork: but that refused, as not safe enough for the Scots Commissioners, by reason of the presence of the Lord Deputy, who had proclaimed them Traitors in Ireland, and was now in great Authority, as having the chief Command of the Kings Army, a Capitall Enemy of their Nation, and against whom they had matter of high Complaint; hereupon it was concluded that the Treaty should be held at Rippon.

A Treaty agreed upon between the Scots and English.

The First thing that was here proposed was a Cessation, but the Scots thought other things were to be considered of in the First place, for as they would Obey the King in his late Command E which he had laid upon them, To advance no further; so neither would they Returne until they had obtained the Effects of their Errand, and therefore they required to know.

First how their Army should be maintained till the Treatie was ended and Peace secured.

Secondly, That, if more Commissioners be required, then a safe Convoy be granted for them.

Thirdly, A safe Convoy for all Letters between Them and the Parliament.

And Fourthly, That, for the Benefit of both Kingdomes, there may be a free Commerce and that the Common Trade of New-Castle be not hindered, but especially for Victuals.

These Articles were at length agreed unto, although the First did seeme both unreasonable and dishonourable to the English Nation; and indeed the Earle of Strafford was so offended there- F at, that he craved leave of the King to give them Battell, and was willing to undertake (as he wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury) upon the Perill of his head, with his Army of English Grashoppers, to beat those Sons of Anak home again: for so much superiour were the Scots then accounted to the English, as to matter of Souldiery: and, upon the 16 of October, the English Commanders, (some through Feare, some through Favour, and others out of a Politicall Maxime not to strive against the Streame) condescended to these ensuing Articles, which were afterwards produced and then Signed by the King himselfe.

The Articles of Agreement.

First, That there be a Cessation of Armes, both by Sea and Land, from this G Present.

Secondly, That all acts of Hostilitie do henceforth cease.

Thirdly, That both Parties shall peaceably returne during the Treaty, whatsoever they possesse at the time of the Cessation.

Fourthly

A 'Fourthly, That all such persons who lived in any of his Majesties Forts beyond the River of Teed, shall not exempt their Lands which lye within the Counties of Northumberland and the Bishoprick, from such Contributions as shall be laid upon them for the Payment of Eight Hundred and Fiftie Pounds Per diem.

'Fifthly, That none of the Kings Forces upon the other side of Teed shall give any Impediment to such Contributions as are already allowed for the Comperency of the Scottish Army, and shall fetch no Victualls, nor forage out of their Bounds, except that which the Inhabitants and Owners thereof shall bring voluntarily unto them, and that B 'any Restraints or Detention of Victualls, Cattell, or Forage which shall be made by the Scots within those Bounds for their Maintenance shall be no Breach.

'Sixthly, That no Recruit shall be brought into either Armies, from the time of the Cessation, and during the Treatie.

'Seaventhly, That the Contribution of Eight Hundred and Fiftie pounds Per diem, shall be only raised out of the Counties of Northumberland, Bishoprick, Town of Newcastle, Cumberland and Westmerland: and that the not Paiment thereof shall be no C 'Breach of the Treaty, but the Counties and Townes shall be left to the Scots Power to raise the same, but not to exceed the Summ agreed upon, unless it be for charges of driving, to be set by a praizer of the Forrage.

'Eightly, That the River of Teed shall be the bounds of Both Armies, (excepting alwaies the Towne and Castle of Storkton, and the Village of Eggsbiff) and the Counties of Northumberland and Bishoprick be the Limits within which the Scottish Army is to reside, having liberty for them to send such Convoys as shall be necessary for the gathering up only of the Contribution, which shall be unpaid by the Counties of Northumberland and Cumberland. D

'Ninthly, That if any Person commit any private Insolence it shall be no breach of our Treaty, if upon Complaint made by either Partie, Reparation and Punishment be granted.

'Tenthly, If Victuall be desired upon the Price which shall be agreed upon, and Ready money offered for the same, and refused, it shall be no Breach of Cessation to take E 'such Victualls payng such Prices.

'Eleventhly, No new Fortifications to be made during the Treaty, against either Partie.

'Twelfthly, That the Subjects of both Kingdomes may in their Trade of Commerce freely pass to and fro without any Stay at all: but it is Particularly Provided that no Member of either Army, pass without a formall Pass under the hands of the Generall, or of him that Commands in Chief.

F T His Treaty of Rippon was but previous to another Treatie of higher Importance to be had at London for a Generall concluding and making up all Differences between the King and his Subjects of Scotland. The Earl of Strafford is here censured for Imprudence either in not foreseeing or else in not preventing that Danger then hanging over his head by the Scots Commissioners Treating at London in the time of a Parliament, and that at such time as he lay under the hatred of the Citizens in Generall, and likewise of the greatest and most prevalent part of the Members, for he knew that the Scots were resolv'd to make it one of their chief Errands to put up a Complaint against him, nor could he be ignorant of what kind Acceptance such an Accusation would find amongst Persons so disaffected towards him: from all which he might have secured himselfe, had he either returned to his Government in Ireland, or transported himselfe for Refuge to some other foreign Land; during this Treaty at Rippon, James Earl of Montrose made severall applications to the King by Letters, testifying his Faith and Loyaltie to him, and his Dislike of the Scottish Proceeding, but those his Letters were stolen out of the Kings pockets and copied out and conveyed to the Covenanters by the means of Hamilton, who also had been the cause of his first Confederating himselfe with them, by perswading him, (at such time as he came out of France where he had been Captaine of the Scots Guard) that the King had intents of reducing Scotland into a Province under England and of Oppressing that Nation; and to colour his lie the better he induced the the King to shew him an unkind dis-respect when he came to kiss his Hands. The Covenanters A thus by the discovery of these Letters, understanding his mind, forsook not themselves, but used all convenient means to render the Earl odious to the People, and so unserviceable to the King : And before this time the Kings Secrets had been discovered through the rifling of his Pockets by his corrupted Bed-chamber men ; and now the Peoples Desires were to receive satisfaction by the Convening of a Parliament which was summoned to meet at Westminster, by a fatall oversight of the King, who had sufficient Presidents from the Histories of former times, to have caused them to have met at York, or some other place in the North, more neer the Scene of Action, and that Danger which was the Occasion of their Assembling ; but this was not all the Errour, to Westminster he calls them, neer London, whose Citizens he had found by experience to be disgusted for the most part, both at him, and his Favourites : And moreover, the Scots Commissioners must come thither, and at such a season have an Opportunity put into their Hands, to work upon the discontented Humours of the Londoners. B

A Parliament again Assembled.

Tuesday November the third, the Parliament met, having for Speaker of the House of Commons Mr. William Lenthall, one of the Benchers and Readers of Lincoln-Inn (this is that long Parliament so much talked of) the King comes to them and tells them, That the Scottish Troubles were the Causes of their present Meeting, and therefore requires them to consider of the most expedient means for the casting them out ; and then promises them, that he will heartily and cleerly concur with them for the satisfying their just Grievances : after that he propounds to them his want of money for the maintaining of his Army, and how dishonourable it would be to the English Nation, if his Army should be disbanded, before the Scots were C put out of the Kingdome ; and that they would take into Consideration the Oppression of the Northern-Countries by the Scots, during the time of Treary, and withall find out some means for Redress ; and so concluded his Speech, with desire that all reciprocal suspicion might be removed.

That the King should call the Scots Rebels was ill-resented by many ; Whereupon he took occasion to tell them, That he must needs call them Rebels, so long as they have an Army that do invade England.

Monopolies Voted down.

The first Week was wholly taken up with settling Committees for Grievances, and in receiving Petitions, partly from Counties concerning Exorbitancies of Church and State, and partly from some private persons who had felt the Lash of the Star-chamber, Councell-table, and High-D Commission Court ; And Monopolies were Voted down.

November the tenth, Complaint was made in the House of Lords, that Sir William Beecher Clark of the Councell, had violated their Priviledges, in searching the Earl of Warwick, and Lord Brook's Studies, Cabinets and Pockets, upon the breaking up of the last Parliament : Whereupon he was committed to the Fleet-Prison, notwithstanding his alledging the Command of the Secretary of State for his so doing.

The Earl of Strafford impeached of High-treason, and Committed.

The Earl of Strafford is now in his Wane, him the Commons are resolved to Charge through and through with their Accusations ; and Mr. Pym is sent to the House of Lords with an Impeachment of High-treason against him, upon which he is Sequestred from the House, and also his intimate Friend Sir George Ratliff, is sent for out of Ireland, by a Serjeant at Armes : Strafford is committed to the Usher of the Black Rod, in order to his ensuing Tryall ; yet obtains the Assignation of Councell, and a Solicitor for the better managing of his Defence : In the mean time, the Bishop of Lincoln is set free from the Tower, and for a while becomes the great Favourite of both Houses of Parliament, and Mr. Prin, and Mr. Burton are conducted into London, in great State and triumph, and upon the third of December presented their Petition against their Prosecutors, to the House of Commons. E

The Bishop of Lincoln released. Prin and Burton brought to London in triumph. Justice Howard stab'd in Westminster-hall. Secretary Windebank flies.

But the Papists began to fear a Cloud, for Justice Howard was to deliver up a Catalogue of all Reculants within the Liberties of Westminster, to prevent which, he was stabbed by one Mr. John James in Westminster-hall, for which Fact the Assailant was Imprisoned in the Gate-house, in F order to a more severe punishment.

But Sir Francis Windebank Secretary of State, fearing to be called to an Account by the Parliament, for reprieving Jesuits and Priests, which he knew would be produced against him, if not worse matters, warily shifted over Sea into France.

December the seventh, the House of Commons Voted the Assesment of Ship-money, together with the Opinions of the Judges, and the Writs for it, and the Judgment of the Exchequer against Mr. Hambden, to be all illegall ; and the Arguments of the two Justices, Crook, and Hutton, for the illegality thereof to be Printed. As for the other eight Justices, a Committee was appointed to draw up a Charge of High-treason against them, and to begin with the Lord-keeper Finch.

The Citizens present a Petition against Church-Ceremonies.

December the eleventh, Alderman Pennington, with some hundreds at his Heels, presented to the House of Commons a Petition from the Citizens of London (subscribed by fifteen thousand) against the present Church Discipline, and Ceremonies, but that was for that time layd aside, and the Parliament animated by the Congruity of the peoples Inclinations, took the late Convocation and Canons into Debate, and upon the fifteenth of December Voted ; G

That the Clergy in a Synod, or Convocation, hath no power to make Canons, Constitutions, or Laws, to bind either Layety, or Clergy, without a Parliament, And next day it was Voted ;

That

A That the Canons are against the Fundamentall Laws of this Realm, against the Kings Prerogative, Property of the Subject, the Right of Parliaments, and do tend to Faction, and Sedition.

The Earl of Strafford had already felt some Blows of the Parliament's Displeasure, the Archbishop of Canterburie turn is next, against whom a Committee is ordered to draw up a Charge, as principall Framer of the Canons, and for other Delinquencies: This Impeachment was brought up to the House by Mr. Hollis, and seconded with another from the Scotts Commissioners, upon which he was committed to the Black Rod, and ten Weeks after Voted guilty of High-treason, and sent to the Tower.

The Archbishop of Canter- bury committed to the Black Rod.

B The Scotts also prefer a Charge against the Earl of Strafford (then in durance) and desired Justice upon them both, as the great Incendiaries and Disturbers of the Church and State; and Sir George Ratliff the Ears trusty Achates, was encountred with this Impeachment.

First, That he had conspired and joyned with the Earl of Strafford, to bring into Ireland an Arbitrary Government, and to subvert Fundamentall Laws.

Secondly, To bring an Army from Ireland, to subdue the Subjects of England.

Thirdly, That he joyned with the Earl to use Regall Power, and to deprive Subjects of their Liberties and Properties.

Articles against Sir George Ratliff.

Fourthly, To take out Forty Thousand pounds out of the Exchequer in Ireland, and bought Tobacco therewith, and converted the same profit to their own uses.

C Fifthly, That he hath trayterously confederated with the Earl to countenance Papists, and built Monasteries to alienate the Affections of the Irish Subjects from the subjection of England.

Sixthly, To draw the Subjects of Scotland from the King.

Seventhly, That to preserve himself and the said Earl, he had laboured to subvert the Liberties and Priviledges of Parliament in Ireland.

The Lord Keeper Finch was now the next man that should fall under their Censure; and therefore prepares to be before hand with a set Speech in his own Vindication, and Courts them highly; but it would not avail, for even that very day he was Voted a Traytor, upon these Accounts.

D First, For refusing to read the Remonstrance against the Lord-treasurer Weston, 4. Car. when the Parliament desired it.

Secondly, For solliciting, perswading, and threatening the Judges to deliver up their Opinions for levying of Ship-money.

Thirdly, For severall illegal Actions in Forrest-matters.

Fourthly, For ill Offices done, in moving the King to dissolve the late Parliament, and causing his Majesties Declaration thereupon to be set forth. Next day he was accused before the Lords, but he wisely fore-saw the Storme, and withdrew himself to the Harbour of Holland.

He flies over into Holland.

E The Parliament having now removed their Enemies, and encreasing in Reputation, and sensible of their own power, were modelling a Bill for a Trienniall in Parliament; for the promoting of which, Petitions came thick and threefold, one whereof subscribed with above eight hundred Presbyters was directly against Episcopacy, which the King took notice of, and doubting the Parliaments forwardness to entertain it, he calls both Houses together the three and twentieth of January, and tells them of their slow proceedings, and inconveniences thereby, in maintaing two Armies in the Kingdome: After which, he told them of two Rocks which he would have them to avoid; the one concerning the Hierarchy of Bishops, which he was willing to reform, but not to alter; the other concerning frequent Parliaments, which he liked well, but not to give his power to Sheriffs and Constables.

F About this time one Goodman a Priest having been condemned at the Sessions at London, was reprieved by the King, upon which both Houses petitioned to be informed who were the Instruments of it, and receiving an unsatisfactory Answer, they Remonstrated against the toleration of Papists, and the Popes Nuncio Rosetti, and this Goodman who they desired might be left to the Justice of the Law. The King makes answer, That the increase of Popery and Papists in his Dominions, is extremely against his mind, and that he would use all possible means for the restraining of it.

ment expos-
ture with the

As for the Popes Nuncio Rosetti he hath no Commission but only to preserve Correspondence between the Queen and the Pope, which was allowed her by the Articles of Marriage; notwithstanding he hath prevailed with her for his removall, and is content to remit the particular Cause of Goodman to both Houses.

G Five Months had the Scotts been quartered in England, during which, a Cessation had been concluded at Rippon, but the plenary Pacification was reserved for London, in pursuance of which, the former Lords (who treated at Rippon) or any ten of them were impowred, November the twenty third, to treat with the Scotts Commissioners, or any seven of them, being the Earls of Rothsay, and Dunferling, the Lord London, Sir Patrick Hepburn, Sir William Douglas, William Drummond, John Smith Bayliff of Edinburgh, Alexander Wedderburn, Hugh Kennedy, Alexander Henderson, and Archibald Jonson, to consider of their Demands.

Lords appointed to treat with the Scotts Commissioners in order to a full Pacification.

The Commissioners sat on both parties; the Demands of the Scotts, and the Answer thereto were as followeth. The Scotts demand;

'First,

The King's Demands, with the Answers to each Demand.

First, That his Majesty would be graciously pleased to command, that the Acts of the late Parliament, may be published in his Highnesses Name as our Sovereign Lord, with the consent of the Estates of Parliament, Convented by his Majesties Authority.

To this it is answered and agreed the 30 of December, 1640. That forasmuch as the Kings Majesty at the humble desire of his Subjects, did call and Convene a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the second of June, 1640. wherein certain Acts were made and agreed upon, which Acts his Majesty is pleased to publish in his own Name, with the Consent of the Estates; and therefore commands that the said Acts, bearing date the second day of June, 1640. be published with the Acts to be made in the next Session of the same Parliament; and that all the said Acts, as well of the precedent, as of the next Session to be holden, have in all time coming the strength of the Laws, and to be obeyed by all the Subjects of the Kingdome of Scotland.

Secondly, That the Castle of Edinburgh, and other strengths of the Kingdome, should with the Advice of the States of Parliament, according to their first Foundation, be furnished and used for defence and security of the Kingdome.

(Answer) It is agreed unto.

Thirdly, That all Scottish men within his Majesties Dominions of England and Ireland, may be freed from censure for subscribing the Covenant, and be no more pressed with Oaths and Subscriptions unwarranted by their Laws, and contrary to the Nationall Oath and Covenant approved by his Majesty.

(Answer) It is agreed, December the 8. 1640. That all those who in his Majesties Dominions of England and Ireland, have been Imprisoned or censured any way for subscribing of the Covenant, or for refusing to take any other Oath contrary to the same, shall be freed of these Censures, and shall be fully restored to their Liberties, Estates, and Possessions; and for time coming, that the Subjects of Scotland, as Subjects of Scotland, shall not be constrained to any Oath contrary to the Laws of that Kingdome, and the Religion there established; but such of the Kingdome of Scotland, as shall transport themselves into the Kingdome of England, or Ireland, and there be settled Inhabitants, either by way of having Inheritance, or Freehold, or by way of settled Trades, shall be subject to the Laws of England, or Ireland, and to the Oathes established by the Laws and Acts of Parliament in the said Kingdomes respectively wherein they live. And the English and Irish shall have the like Priviledges in Scotland.

Fourthly, That his Majesty would be pleased to declare, That whosoever shall be found upon tryall and examination by the Estates of either of the two Parliaments, (they judging against the persons subject to their own Authority) to have been the Authors and Caufers of the late and present Troubles and Cumbustions, whether by labouring to make and foment Division between the King and his People, or between the two Nations, or any other way, shall be lyable to Censure of the sayd Parliaments respectively.

Answer, It is answered Decemb. 11. 1640. That his Majesty believeth he hath no such doubt; therefore concerning that Point, he can make no other Declaration, then that he is just, and that all his Courts of Justice are to be free and open to all men. Our Parliament in this Kingdome is now sitting, and the currant Parliament of Scotland, neer approaching the time of their meeting: In either of which respectively, he doth not prohibit the Estates to proceed in trying and judging of whatsoever his Subjects. And whereas it was further demanded, that none after the sentence of the Parliament should have Access to his Majesty, or be maintained, or enjoy Places, or Offices, and have Credit, or Authority, to inform or advise his Majesty. It is declared in his Majesties Name, Decemb. 30. 1640. That he will not employ any person, or persons, in any Office or Place, that shall be judged incapable by sentence of Parliament: nor will he make use of their Service, without the consent of Parliament, or grant them Access to his Person.

Fifthly, That their Ships and Goods, and all Damages thereof may be restored.

Answer

A Answer, It is agreed January the 7, 1640. That all Ships taken and stayed should be reciprocally restored on both sides. And that, the Scottish Commissioners having informed, that about eight Ships of Scotland are yet stayed in Ports, and are like to suffer much loss if they shall not be delivered into some hands, who may have care of them; It is agreed, that Warrants shall be presently granted for delivery of all their Ships; And that four thousand pounds be presently advanced for Calking, Sails, Cordage, and other Necessaries, for helping the present setting forth of the sayd Ships.

Demand. 'Sixtly, They desire from the Justice and the Kindness of the Kingdome of England, Reparations concerning the Losses which the Kingdome of Scotland hath sustained, and the vast Charges they have been put unto, by occasion
B 'of the late Troubles.

Answer, That this House thinks fit, that a friendly Assistance and Relief shall be given towards supply of the loss of the Scots: And that the Parliament did declare, That they did conceive that the sum of three hundred thousand pounds is a fit proportion for the friendly Assistance and Relief, formerly thought fit to be given towards supply of the loss and necessities of their Brethren of Scotland, and that the Houses would in due time take into consideration the manner how, and the time when the same shall be raised.

Demand. 'Sevently, That as his Majesty hath appointed the Acts of the late
C 'Parliament, wherein all such Declarations, Proclamations, Books, Libells, and Pamphlets that have been made, written and published against his loyall and dutifull Subjects of Scotland are recalled, and ordered to be suppressed, recalled, and forbidden in England and Ireland; and that the Loyalty, Integrity, and faithfulness of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland, towards his Majesties Royall Person and Government, may at the closing of this Treaty of Peace, and at the time of publick Thanksgiving for the same be made known in all places, and all Parish-Churches 'of his Majesties Dominions.

D Answer, It is agreed upon the tenth of February, 1640. That all Declarations, Proclamations, Acts, Books, Libells, and Pamphlets that have been made and published against the Loyalty and Dutifullness of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland, shall be recalled, suppressed, and forbidden in England and Ireland; and this to be reciprocally in Scotland if any such have been made or published there, in prejudice of his Majesties Honour: And this upon diligent enquiry to be done by Authority of Parliament next sitting in Scotland, of which the Commissioners of Scotland do promise to have an especiall care. And we do also agree, That when it shall please Almighty God to grant an happy Close of this Treaty of Peace, the Loyalty of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland shall be made known at the time of publick Thanksgiving in all places and particularly in the Parish-Churches of his Majesties Dominions.

E 'Demand, That all Monuments, Tokens, and Shews of Hostility upon the Borders of the two Kingdomes, may be taken away. That not only the Garisons of 'Barwick, and Carlile may be removed, but that the Works may be slighted, and the 'places dismantled.

Answer, The House of Commons Concur with their Lordships, that when a Peace shall be established, all things reciprocally be reduced in the terms they were before the Treaty. And do agree with their Lordships, that the Scottish Commissioners shall set down all their particular Heads and Demands at once together, that so their eight Articles which they propound for establishing a Peace, may with all speed be concluded; that being done, this House shall willingly Concur with their Lordships to settle all things for F their just satisfaction: After which, the Scots brought in their fifteen remaining Heads to their eight Demands, all for Priviledges to their own Nation; and presented their great Account, which was five hundred, and fourteen thousand one hundred twenty and eight pounds, nine shillings, besides the loss of their Nation, to four hundred and forty thousand pounds. This Reckoning startled the English Commissioners, untill the Scots told them, they did not give in that Account with an intent to demand a totall Reparation of their Charges and Losses, but were content in some measure to bear a Remnant, hoping for the rest from the Justice and Kindness of England. Some of the Commons allowed of their Demands, but Sir Benjamine Rudyerd was of another mind, and judged them altogether unreasonable, they being G wholly contradictory to their own Remonstrance at their first coming in; wherein they professed, That they would take nothing of the English, but for Money, or Security, whereas they had been hitherto defraidd, to the great impoverishing of Northumberland, Newcastle, and the Bishoprick of Durhams, which places would not recover what they then lost in the space of twenty years. That the English had, formerly established the Scots Reformation, and yet bare their own Charges; Whereas the Scots presumed to require a greater sum, then ever was given to the King. Many thought that Sir Benjamins Arguments were compleat and weighty, howsoever Money were raised for the present by way of Loan from the City of London (for supply of both the Northern Armies) as once before this Parliament had done.

A Match proposed between the Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary, approved by the Parliament.

Some Overtures had been made by the Dutch Ambassadour, of a Match between William the young Prince of Orange, and the Princess Mary, the Kings eldest Daughter, which he well liked, and Communicated it to the Parliament, with whom it found a generall and unanimous Reception, in regard of the Alliance to be thereupon concluded with the Prince his Father, and the united Provinces being of the same Protestant Religion with England; and so it was soon concluded. But presently after four Members of the Commons delivered a Message to the Lords, of a Popish Design of levying an Army of fifteen thousand in Lancashire, and eight thousand in Ireland; the main Promoters whereof were the Earls of Strafford and Worcester: and Sir Robert Barkley one of the Ship-money Judges, was accused in February of High-treason, and committed Prisoner to the Black Rod.

The King gives his assent to the Bill for a Trienniall Parliament.

The Bill for a Trienniall Parliament was now perfected and had passed both Houses, and nothing wanted to the Consummation, but the Kings Assent, which was also granted upon the sixteenth of February: and the King, to let them know what value he put upon this his great Favour, told them, That hitherto they had gone on in those things which concerned Themselves; and now he looked that they should proceed to those things which did concern Him: And then he signed the Bill of Subsidies, and gave them such universall Content, that Sir Edward Littleton Lord-Keeper, was ordered to return the humble Thanks of both Houses to his Majesty at White-hall, with Bone-fires and Bell-ringing throughout the City, as formerly at the granting of the Petition of Right.

The Archbishop of Canterbury accused by the Commons of High-treason, and ordered to the Tower.

February the twenty sixth, the Archbishop of Canterbury was accused of High-treason by the Commons, whereupon he was ordered to the Tower, but upon humble Suit, reprieved till the First of March, in the mean time, to be under the Black Rod. And now Episcopacy it self was called in question; and although the Lord Digby made a witty and weighty Speech in defence of it, and the Archbishop of Armagh being by them consulted about that and the Liturgy, had delivered his Judgment for the Moderation and Emendation, not Extirpation of them; yet the Wings of Episcopacy were shrewdly clipt; for the Commons, March the tenth, Voted, that no Bishop shall have any Vote in Parliament, nor any judiciall Power in the Star-chamber, nor bear any sway in temporall Affairs, and that no Clergy-man shall be in Commission of Peace.

Bishops Votes in Parliament voted down. The Earl of Strafford brought to his Tryall. The Articles against him, with his Reply to each.

The Earl of Straffords Tryall was next, which after various Debates was agreed to be tryed in Westminster-hall, the King, Queen, and Prince present, and the Commons to be present as a Committee, at the managing of their Accusation: the day Monday; the Earl of Arundell was Lord High-steward, and the Earl of Lindsey Lord High-constable: the Earl of Strafford (though he had but short warning) yet had gotten his Defence ready against the time; The Accusation was managed by Mr. Pym; the Articles and Replies were as followeth:

The first Article was not insisted upon.

Secondly, That shortly after the obtaining of a Commission, dated the One and Twentieth of March, in the eighth year of his now Majesties Reign (to wit) the Last day of August then next following; he the sayd Earl, to bring his Majesties Liege-people into a dislike of his Majesty, and of his Government, and to terrifie the Justices of the Peace from executing the Laws: (He the sayd Earl being then President of the Kings Councell in the Northern-parts of England, and Justice of Peace) did publicly, at the Assises held for the County of York, in and upon the sayd last day of August, declare and publish, before the people there attending for the Administration of Justice according to the Law, and in the presence of the Justices sitting, That some of the Justices were all for Law, but they should find that the Kings little Finger should be heavier, then the Loyns of the Law.

Testified by Sir David Fowles, and others.

‘Reply, That Sir David Fowles was his profest Enemy, that his words were cleerly inverted; that his expression was, That the little Finger of the Law (if not moderated by the Kings gracious Clemency) was heavier then the Kings Loyns. That these were his words, he verified;

‘First, By the occasion of them, they being spoken to some whom Favour had then enlarged from Imprisonment at Tork, as a motive of their thankfulness to his Majesty.

‘Secondly, By Sir William Pennyman a Member of the House, who was then present, and heard these words: which Sir William declaring to be true, the House of Commons required Justice of the Lords against him, because he had Voted the Articles as a Member of the House: Whereupon Sir William wept:

A 1641. Thirdly, That the Realm of Ireland having been time out of mind annexed to the Imperiall Crown of this his Majesties Realm of England, and Governed by the same Laws: The sayd Earl being Lord-Deputy of that Realm; to bring his Majesties Liege-people of that Kingdome likewise into dislike of his Majesties Government, and intending the Subversion of the Fundamentall Laws, and seiled Government of that Realm, and the Distraction of his Majesties Liegepeople, there, did upon the Thirtieth day of September, in the Eleventh year of his now Majesties Reign, in the City of Dublin, (the chief City of that Kingdome, where his Majesties privy Councell and Courts of Justice
B do ordinarily reside, and whither the Nobility and Gentry of that Realm do usually resort for Justice) in publick Speech before divers of the Nobility and Gentry, and before the Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder, and many Citizens of Dublin, and other of his Majesties Liege-people, declare and publish. That Ireland was a Conquered Nation, and that the King might do with them what he pleased: And speaking of the Charters of the former Kings of England made to that City; He further sayd, That their Charters were nothing worth, and did bind the King no further then he pleased.

C 'Reply, That if he had been over liberall of his Tongue for want of Discretion, yet could not his words amount to Treason, unless they had been revealed within fourteen dayes, as he was informed. As to the Charge he sayd, True it is, he sayd 'Ireland was a Conquered Nation, which no man can deny, and that the King is the 'Law giver in Matters not determined by Acts of Parliament; he conceived all 'Loyall Subjects would grant.

Fourthly, That Richard Earl of Cork, having sued out Proccesses in Court of Law, D for recovery of his Possessions from which he was put, by colour of an Order made by the sayd Earl of Strafford, and the Councel Table, of the sayd Realm of Ireland: The sayd Earl of Strafford upon a Paper-petition, without legal proceedings, did the twentieth day of February, in the eleventh year of his now Majesties Reign, threaten the sayd Earl of Cork (being then a Peer of the sayd Realm) to Imprison him, unless he would surcease his Suit, and sayd; That he would have neither Law, nor Lawyers dispute, or question any of his Orders. And the twentieth of March, in the sayd eleventh year, the sayd Earl of Strafford speaking of an Order of the sayd Councel-Table of that Realm, made in the time of King James, which concerned a Lease which he the sayd Earl
E of Cork claimed in certain Rectories, or Tithes, which he the sayd Earl of Cork alledged to be of no force; sayd, That he would make the sayd Earl, and all Ireland know, so long as he had the Government there, any Act of State there made, or to be made, should be as binding to the Subjects of that Kingdome, as an Act of Parliament: And did question the sayd Earl of Cork in the Castle-chamber, upon pretense of breach of the sayd Order of Councel-Table; and did sundry other times, and upon sundry other occasions, by his words and speeches arrogate to himself a power above the Fundamentall F Laws, and established Government of that Kingdome, and scorned the sayd Laws and established Government.

'Reply, It were hard measure for a man to lose his Honour and his Life, for an hasty
'word, or because he is no wiser then God hath made him: As for the words, he 'confessed them to be true, and thought he sayd no more then what became him,
'considering how much his Majesties Honour was concerned in him; that if a 'portionable Obedience was not as well due to Acts of State, as to Acts of Parliament,
'in vain did Councels sit. And that he had done no more then what former De-G puties had done, and then what was agreeable to his Instructions for the Councel-
'Table, which he produced. And if those words were Treason, they should have 'been revealed within fourteen dayes.

Fifthly, That according to such his Declarations and Speeches, the sayd Earl of Strafford did use and exercise a power, above, and against, and to the subversion of the Fundamentall Laws and established Government of the sayd Realm of Ireland; extending such his power, to the Goods, Freeholds, Inheritances, Liberties, and Lives of his Majesties Subjects of the sayd Realm; Viz. The said Earl of Strafford, the twelfth day of December, An. Dom. 1635. in the time of full peace, did in the said Realm of A Ireland, give, and procure to be given against the Lord Mount Norris (then, and yet a Peer of Ireland, and then Vice-treasurer and Receiver-generall of the Realm of Ireland, and one of the principall Secretaries of State, and Keeper of the privy Signet of the said Kingdome) a Sentence of death by a Councell of War called together by the said Earl of Strafford, without any Warrant or Authority of Law, or Offence, deserving any such punishment. And he the said Earl did also at Dublin within the said Realm of Ireland, in the Month of March, in the fourteenth year of his Majesties Reign, without any legall or due proceedings, or Tryall, give, or cause to be given a sentence of death against one of his Majesties Subjects, whose Name is yet unknown, and caused him to be^B put to death in execution of the said Sentence.

‘Reply, That there was then a standing Army in Ireland, and Armies cannot be ‘Governed but by Martiall Law; That it hath been put in constant practice with ‘former Deputies; That had the Sentence been given unjustly by him, the Crime ‘could amount but to Felony at the most, for which he hoped he might as well expect ‘pardon from his Majesty, as the Lord Conway, and Sir Jacob Astly had, for doing the ‘like in the late Northern Army. That he neither gave Sentence, nor procured it C ‘against the Lord Mount Norris, but only desired Justice against the Lord for some ‘Affront done to him, as he was Deputy of Ireland. That he the said Lord was ‘judged by a Councell of War, wherein he sate bare all the time, and gave no suffrage against him: That also to evidence himself a party, he caused his Brother Sir ‘George Wentworth, in regard of the meerny of Blood, to decline all acting in the ‘process. Lastly, Though the Lord Mount Norris justly deserved to die, yet he obtained his Pardon from the King.

Sixthly, That he the said Earl of Strafford, without any legall Proceedings, and D upon a Paper-petition of Richard Rolstone, did cause the said Lord Mount Norris to be disseised and put out of possession of his Freehold and Inheritance of his Mannor of Tymore, in the County of Armagh, in the Kingdome of Ireland, the said Lord Mount Norris having been two years before in quiet possession thereof.

‘Reply, That he conceived the Lord Mount Norris was legally divested of his Possessions, there being a Suit long depending in Chancery, and the Plaintiff complaining of delay; he upon the Complainants Petition, called unto him the Master of the E Rolls, Lord Chancellor and Lord chief Justice of the Common-pleas, and upon Proofs in Chancery, Decreed for the Plaintiff: Wherein he said, he did no more than what other Deputies had done before him.

Seventhly, The said Earl of Strafford in the Term of Holy Trinity, in the thirteenth year of his now Majesties Reign, did cause a Case, commonly called, the Case of Tenures, upon defective Titles, to be made and drawn up without any Fury, or Tryall, or other legall Process, and without the consent of Parties, and did then procure the F Judges of the said Realm of Ireland, to deliver their Opinions and Resolutions to that Case, and by colour of such Opinions, did without any legall proceeding, cause Thomas Lord Dillon, a Peer of the said Realm of Ireland, to be put out of possion of divers Lands and Tenements, being his Freehold, in the County of Mago and Roscomer, in the said Kingdome, and divers others of his Majesties Subjects to be also put out of possession, and disseised of their Freehold, by colour of the same Resolution, without legall proceedings, whereby many hundreds of his Majesties Subjects were undone, and their Families utterly ruined.

‘Reply, That the Lord Dillon with others, producing his Patent according to a G ‘Proclamation, on the behalf of his Majesty, the said Patent was questionable, upon which, a Case was drawn, and argued by Councell, and the Judges declared their ‘Opinions: But the Lord Dillon, or any other was not bound thereby, nor put out of their Possessions, but might have traverst the Office; or otherwise have legally proceeded, notwithstanding the said Opinion.

Eighthly,

A Eighthly, That he the sayd Earl of Strafford upon a Petition exhibit^d in October, 1635. by Thomas Hibbors against Dame Mary Hibbors Widow, to him the sayd Earl of Strafford, recommended the sayd Petition to the Councell-table of Ireland, where the most part of the Councell gave their Vote and Opinion for the sayd Lady, but the sayd Earl finding fault hitherto, caused an Order to be entred against the sayd Lady, and threatned her, That if she refused to submit thereunto, he would Imprison her, and Fine her five hundred pounds. That if she continued obstinate, he would continue her Imprisonment, and double her Fine every Month by Month, whereon she was enforced
B to relinquish her Estate in the Land questioned in the sayd Petition, which shortly was conveyed to Sir Robert Meredith, to the use of the said Earl of Strafford. And the sayd Earl in like manner did Imprison divers others of his Majesties Subjects, upon pretence of disobedience to his Orders and Decrees, and other illegall Commands by him made for pretended Debts, Titles of Land, and other Causes, in an arbitrary and extrajudiciall course, upon Paper-petitions to him preferred, and no other cause legally depending.

‘Reply, That true it is, he had Voted against the Lady Hibbors, and he had reason so to do, the sayd Lady being discovered, by Fraud and Circumvention, to C ‘have bargained for Lands of a great value, for a small summe: And he denied that the sayd Lands were after sold to his use, or that the major part of the Councell board Voted for the Lady, the contrary appearing by the Sentence under the hand of the Clerk of the Councell, which being true, he might well threaten her with Commitment, in case she disobeyed the sayd Order. Lastly, Were it true, that he were ‘Criminall therein, yet were the Offence but a Misdemeanour, no Treason.

D Ninthly, That he the said Earl of Strafford, the sixteenth day of February, in the year of his now Majesties Reign, assuming to himself a power above and against Law, took upon him by a generall Warrant under his hand, to give power to the Lord Bishop of Down, and Conner his Chancellor, or Chancellors, and to their severall Officers there to be appointed, to Attach and Arrest the Bodies of all such of the meaner and poorer sort, who after citation should either refuse to appear before them, or appearing, should omit, or deny to perform, or unaergo all lawfull Decrees, Sentences, and Orders issued, imposed, or given out against them, and them to commit and keep in the next Goal, until they should either perform such Sentences, or put in sufficient Bail, to shew some reason before
E the Councell-Table of such their contempt and neglect: And the said Earl, the day and year last mentioned, signed and issued a Warrant to that effect, and made the like Warrant to send all other Bishops and their Chancellors in the said Realm of Ireland, to the same effect.

‘Reply, That such Writs had been usually granted by former Deputies to Bishops ‘in Ireland, nevertheless, being not fully satisfied with the convenience thereof, he ‘was sparing in granting of them, untill being informed, that divers in the Diocess of ‘Down, were somewhat refractory; he granted Warrants to that Bishop, and hear-
F ing of some Disorders in the Execution, he called them in again.

Tenthly, That the said Earl of Strafford being Lord Lieutenant, or Deputy of Ireland, procured the Customes of the Merchandize exported out, and imported into that Realm, to be Farmed to his own use. And in the ninth year of his now Majesties Reign, he having then Interest in the said Customes (to advance his own Gain and Lucre) did cause and procure the Native Commodities of Ireland, to be rated in the Book of Rates for the Customes (according to which the Customes were usually gathered) at far greater value and prizes, then in truth they were worth; (that is to say)
G Every Hide at twenty shillings, which in truth was worth but five; every Stone of Wooll at thirteen shillings four pence, though the same ordinarily were worth but five shillings, at the utmost but nine shillings; by which means, the Custome which before was but a twentieth part of the true value of the Commodity, was enhanced sometimes to a fifth part, and sometimes to a fourth, sometimes to a third part of the true value, to the great oppression of the Subjects, and delay of Merchandize.

Reply, That his Interests in the Customes of Ireland, accrued to him by the Assignment of a Lease from the Dutcheſs of Buckingham; That the Book of Rates by which the Customes were gathered, was the ſame which was eſtabliſhed by the Lord Deputy Faulkland, in 1628. ſome years before he was imployed thither. That as he hath been juſt and faithfull to his Maſter the King, by encreaſing his Revenue, ſo hath he alſo much bettered the Trade and Shipping.

Eleventhly, That he the ſaid Earl in the ninth year of his now Maſtieſties Reign, did by his own will and pleaſure, and for his own lucre, reſtrain the exportation of the Commodities of that Kingdome without his licence, as namely, Pipe-ſtaves, and other Commodities, and then raiſed great ſumms of mony for licencing of Exportation of thoſe Commodities, and diſpenſation of the ſaid Reſtraints impoſed on them, by which means, the Pipe-ſtaves were raiſed from four pounds ten ſhillings, or five pounds per thouſand, to ten pounds, and ſometimes eleven pounds per thouſand; and other Commodities were enhanced in the like proportion, and by the ſame means, by him the ſaid Earl.

Reply, That the Pipe-ſtaves were prohibited in King James's time, and not exported but by licence, paying ſix ſhillings eight pence a thouſand, and that he had not raiſed ſo much thereby to himſelf, as his Predeceſſors had done for ſuch Licences.

Twelfthly, That the ſaid Earl being Lord Deputy of Ireland, on the ninth day of January, in the thirteenth year of his Maſtieſties Reign, did then under colour to regulate the Importation of Tobacco in the ſaid Realm of Ireland, iſſue a Proclamation in his Maſtieſties Name, prohibiting the Importation of Tobacco without licence of him and the Councell there, from and after the firſt day of March, An. Dom. 1638. After which Reſtraint, the ſaid Earl, notwithstanding the ſaid Reſtraint cauſed divers great quantities of Tobacco to be imported to his own uſe; and that if any Ship brought Tobacco into any Port there, the ſaid Earl and his Agents uſed to buy the ſame to his own uſe, at their own price, and if the Owners reſuſed to let them have the ſame at under values, then they were not permitted to vent the ſame: by which undue means the ſaid Earl having gotten the whole Trade of Tobacco into his own hands, he ſold it at great and exceſſive prizes, ſuch as he liſt to impoſe for his own profit.

And the more to aſſure the ſaid Monopoly of Tobacco, he the ſaid Earl, on the twenty third day of February, in the thirteenth year aforeſaid, did iſſue another Proclamation; Commanding that none ſhould put to ſale any Tobacco by whole-ſale, from and after the laſt day of May then next following, but what ſhould be made up into Rolls, and the ſame ſealed with two Seals by himſelf appointed, one at each end of the Roll: And ſuch as was not ſealed, to be ſeiſed, and appointed ſix pence the pound for a Reward to ſuch perſons as ſhould ſeiſe the ſame; and the perſons in whoſe Cuſtody the unſealed Tobacco ſhould be found, to be committed to Goal, which laſt Proclamation was covered by a pretence of the reſtraining of the Sale of unwholſome Tobacco, but it was truly to advance the ſaid Monopoly: Which Proclamation the ſaid Earl did rigorouſly put in execution, by ſeiſing the Goods, Fining, Imprifoning, Whipping, and putting the Offenders againſt the ſame Proclamation on the Pillory; as namely, Barnaby Hubbard, Edward Coven, John Tumen, and divers others; and made the Officers of State, and Juſtices of Peace, and other Officers to ſerve him, in compaſſing and executing theſe unjuſt and undue Courſes. By which Cruelties and unjuſt Monopolies, the ſaid Earl raiſed 100000 l. per annum Gain to himſelf: And yet the ſaid Earl though he enhanced the Customes, where it concerned the Merchants in generall, yet drew down the Impoſt formerly taken on Tobacco, from ſix pence the pound, to three pence the pound, it being for his own profit ſo to do. And the ſaid Earl by the ſame, and other rigorous and undue means, raiſed ſeverall other Monopolies and unlawfull Exactions for his own Gain; Viz. On Starch, Iron, Pots, Glaſſes, Tobacco-pipes, and ſeverall other Commodities.

Reply, That before his time the King had but 10, or 20 l. per annum, for that Cuſtome, which now yeildeth 20000 l. for the Proclamation, it was not ſet out by his means principally, or for his private Benefit, but by conſent of the whole Councell. And this he conceives cannot be made Treason, were all the Articles granted, but only a Monopoly, for which he was to be Fined.

Thirteenthly,

A Thirteenthly, That Flax being one of the principall and Native Commodities of that Kingdome of Ireland, the sayd Earl having got great quantities thereof into his hands, and growing on his own Lands, did issue out severall Proclamations; Viz. One dated the one and twentieth day of May, in the eleventh year of his Majesties Reign, and the other dated the one and twentieth day of January in the same year, thereby prescribing and enjoyning the working of Flax into Yarn and Thread, and the ordering of the same in such wayes, wherein the Natives of that Kingdome were unpractised and unskilfull. Which Proclamations so issued, were by his Commands and Warrants to his Majesties Justices of the Peace, and other Officers, and by other rigorous means put in execution, B and the Flax wrought and ordered in other manner then as the sayd Proclamation prescribed, was seised and employed to the use of him and his Agents. And thereby the sayd Earl endeavoured to again, and did gain in effect the sole sale of that Native Commodity.

* Reply, That he did endeavour to advance the Manufacture of Linnen, rather than of Woollen, because the last would be the greater Detriment to England. That the Primate of Ireland, the Archbishop of Dublin, Chancellor Loftus, and the Lord Mount Norris, all of the Councell, and Subscribers of the Proclamation were C as lyable to the Charge as himself. That the reducing of that Nation, by Orders of the Councel board, to the English Customes, from their Savage Usages, as drawing Horses by their Tayles, &c. had been of former practice. That the Project was of so ill Avail to him, as he was the worse for the Manufacture thirty thousand pounds at least, by the Loom he had set up at his own Charge.

The Fourteenth Article was not urged.

D Fifteenthly, That he the sayd Earl of Strafford trayterously and wickedly devised and contrived by force of Armes, in a War-like manner, to subdue the Subjects of the sayd Realm of Ireland, to bring them under his tyrannicall Power and Will, and in pursuance of his wicked and trayterous purposes aforesayd, the sayd Earl of Strafford in the eighth year of his Majesties Reign, did by his own Authority, without any Warrant, or colour of Law, Tax and Impose great Sums of money, upon the Towns of Baltemore, Bandenbridge, Talow, and divers other Towns and Places in the sayd Realm of Ireland, and did cause the same to be levied upon the Inhabitants of those Towns, by Troops of Soldiers with force and Armes, in a War-like manner. And on the ninth day of March, in the twelfth year of his now Majesties Reign, trayterously E did give Authority unto Robert Savill a Serjeant at Armes, and to the Captains of the Companies of Soldiers, in severall parts of that Realm, to send such numbers of Soldiers to lye on the Lands and Houses of such as would not conform to his Orders, untill they should render Obedience unto his sayd Orders and Warrants, and after such Submission (and not before) the sayd Soldiers to return to their Garrisons. And did also issue the like Warrants unto divers others, which Warrants were in War-like manner, with Force and Armes, put in Execution accordingly; and by such War-like means did force divers of his Majesties Subjects of that Realm to submit themselves to his unlawful Commands. And in the sayd twelfth year of his Majesties Reign, the sayd Earl F of Strafford did trayterously cause certain Troops of Horse and Foot Armed in War-like manner, and in War-like Array, with Force and Armes, to expell Richard Butler from the possession of Castle-cumber, in the Territory of Idough, in the sayd Realm of Ireland, and did likewise in like War-like manner, expell divers of his Majesties Subjects, from their Houses, Families, and Possessions; as namely, Edward Brenziman, Owen Oberman, Patrick Oberman, Sir Cyprian Horsfield, and divers others, to the number of about an hundred Families, and took and Imprisoned them and their G Wives, and carried them Prisoners to Dublin, and there detained them, untill they did yeild up, surrender, or release their respective Estates and Rights. And he the sayd Earl in like War-like manner hath, during his Government of the sayd Kingdome of Ireland, subdued divers others of his Majesties Subjects to his Will, and thereby, and by the means aforesayd, hath levied War within the sayd Realm, against his Majesty and his Liege-people of that Kingdome.

Testified, Serjeant Sanil.

* Reply,

‘Reply, That nothing hath been more ordinary in Ireland, then for the Governours ^A
 ‘to put all manner of Sentences in execution by the help of Soldiers; that Grandison, ‘Falkland, Chichester, and other Deputies frequently did it: (Sir Arthur Teningham
 ‘to this Point deposed, That in Falkland’s time he knew twenty Soldiers assailed upon
 ‘one man, for refusing to pay sixteen shillings;) That his Instructions for executing ‘his Commission, were the same with those formerly given to the Lord Falkland, and ‘that in both there is expresse Warrant for it. That no Testimony produced against ‘him, doth evidently prove he gave any Warrant to that effect, and that Serjeant ‘Savil shewed only a Copy of a Warrant, not the Originall it self, which he con- ^B ‘ceived could not make Faith in case of Life and Death, in that High-Courr, espe‘cially it being not averred upon Oath to agree with the Originall, which should be ‘upon Record. That he conceived; he was for an Irish Custome to be tryed by the ‘Peers of that Kingdome.

Sixteenthly, That he the sayd Earl of Strafford, the two and twentieth of February, in the seventh year of his now Majesties Reign, intending to oppress the sayd Subjects of Ireland, did make a Proposition, and obtained from his Majesty an Allowance; That no Complaint of Injustice, or Oppression done in Ireland, should be ^C received into England against any, unless it first appeared, that the Party made first his Addresses to him the sayd Earl: And the sayd Earl having by such usurped tyrannicall and exorbitant Power, expressed in the former Articles, destroyed the Peers, and other Subjects of that Kingdome of Ireland, in their Lives, Consciences, Lands, Liberties, and Estates; the sayd Earl to the intent the better to maintain and strengthen his Power, and to bring the People into disaffection of his Majesty as aforesayd, did use his Majesties Name in the Execution of his sayd Power. And to prevent the Subjects of that Realm of all means of Complaints to his Majesty, and of Redress against him and his Agents, did issue a Proclamation, bearing date the 17 day of September, in the eleventh year ^D of his Majesties Reign; thereby commanding all the Nobility, Undertakers, and others, who held Estates and Offices in the sayd Kingdome (except such as were employed in his Majesties Service, or attending in England by his speciall Command) to make their personall Residence in the sayd Kingdome of Ireland, and not to depart thence without Licence of himself. And the sayd Earl hath since issued other Proclamations to the same purpose; by means whereof the sayd Subjects of the sayd Realm are restrained from seeking Relief against the Oppressions of the sayd Earl, without his Licence; which Proclamation the sayd Earl hath by severall rigorous wayes, as by Fine, Imprisonment, ^E and otherwise, put in Execution on his Majesties Subjects; as namely, one Parry, and others, who came over only to complain of the Exorbitancies and Oppressions of the sayd Earl.

Testified by the Earl of Desmond, the Lord Roch, Marcattee, and Parry.

‘Reply, That the Deputy Falkland had set out the same Proclamation; That the ‘same Restraint was contained in the Statute of 25 of Henry 6. upon which the Pro- ^F ‘clamation was founded. That he had the Kings expresse Warrant for the Procla‘mation. That he had also power to do it by the Commission granted him, and that ‘the Lords of the Councell, and their Justices, not only yielded, but pressed him ‘unto it. That it was done upon just Cause, for had the Ports been open, divers ‘would have taken liberty to go to Spain, Doway, Reimes, or St. Omers, which ‘might have proved of mischievous Consequence to the State, That the Earl of ‘Desmond stood at the time of his Restraint, charged with Treason before the ‘Councell of Ireland, for practising against the Life of one Sir Valentine Coke. That ‘the Lord Roch was then a Prisoner for Debt in the Castle of Dublin, and therefore ‘incapable of a Licence. That Parry was not Fined for coming without Licence, but ^G ‘for severall Contempts against the Councell-board in Ireland, and that in his ‘Sentence he had but onely a Casting Voyce, as the Lord-Keeper in the Star- ‘Chamber.

The seventeenth and eighteenth Articles were not insisted on.

Nineteenthly,

A Ninetcenthly, That the said Earl having Taxed and Levied the said Impositions, and raised the said Monopolies, and committed the said Oppressions in his Majesties Name, and as by his Majesties Royall Command, he the said Earl, in May, the fiftenth year of his Majesties Reign, did of his own Authority contrive and frame a new and unnsuall Oath, by the Purport whereof, among many other things, the Party taking the said Oath, was to Swear, That he would not Protest against any of his Majesties Royall Commands, but submit themselves in all Obedience thereunto. Which Oath he so contrived; to enforce the same on the Subjects of the Scottish Nation inhabiting in Ireland, and out of a hatred to the said Nation, and to put them to a Discontent with his Majesty and his Government there, and compelled divers of his Majesties said Subjects there to take the said Oath, some he grievously Fined and Imprisoned, and others he destroyed, and Exiled; and namely, the tenth of October, An. Dom. 1639. he Fined Henry Steward and his Wife, who refused to take the said Oath, five thousand pounds apeece, and their two Daughters, and James Gray three thousand pounds apeece, and Imprisoned them for not paying the said Fines. The said Henry Steward, Wife, and Daughters, and James Gray, being the Kings Luge-people of the Scottish Nation, and divers others he used in the like manner. And the said Earl upon that Occasion did Declare, That the said Oath did not only oblige them in point of Allegiance to his Majesty, and acknowledgment of his Supremacy only, but to the Cerimonies and Government of the Church established, or to be established by his Majesties Royall Authority; and said, That the Refusers to obey, he would prosecute to the Blood.

* Reply, That the Oath was not violently enjoined by him upon the Irish Scots; but framed in compliance with their own exprels Petition, which Petition is owned in the Proclamation as the main Impulsive to it. That the same Oath not long after was prescribed by the Councell of England. That he had a Letter under his Majesties own-hand, ordering it to be prescribed as a Touch-stone of their Fidelity. As to the greatness of the Fine imposed upon Steward, and others, he conceived it was not more then the hainousness of their Offence deserved; yet had they Petitioned, and submitted the next day, that would wholly have been remitted.

Twentiethly, That the said Earl in the fiftenth and sixteenth years of his Majesties Reign, and divers years past, laboured and endeavoured to beget in his Majesty an ill Opinion of his Subjects, namely those of the Scottish Nation; and divers and sundry times, and especially since the Pacification made by his Majesty with his said Subjects of Scotland in Summer, in the fiftenth year of his Majesties Reign; he the said Earl did labour and endeavour to perswade, incite, and provoke his Majesty to an Offensive War, against his said Subjects of the Scottish Nation. And the said Earl by his Counsel, Actions, and Endeavours hath been, and is a chief Incendiary of the War and Discord between his Majesty and his Subjects of England, and the said Subjects of Scotland; and hath declared, and advised his Majesty, that the Demand made by the Scots in this Parliament, were a sufficient cause of War against them. The said Earl having formerly expressed the height and rancour of his Mind towards his Subjects of the Scottish Nation; Viz. The tenth day of October, in the fiftenth year of his Majesties Reign, he said, That the Nation of the Scots were Rebels and Traytors; and he being then about to come into England, he then further said, That if it pleased his Master (meaning his Majesty) to send him back again, he would root out of the said Kingdome (meaning the Kingdome of Ireland) the Scottish Nation both Root and Branch. Some Lords, and others who had taken the said Oath in the precedent Article only excepted. And the said Earl hath caused divers of the said Ships and Goods of the Scots to be stayed, seised, and molested, to the intent to set on the said War.

* Reply, That he called all the Scottish Nation Traytors, and Rebels, no one proof is produced, and though he is hasty in Speech, yet was he never so defective of his Reason, as to speak so like a mad man; for he knew well his Majesty was a Native of that Kingdome, and was confident many of that Nation were of as Heroick Spirits, and as faithfull and loyall Subjects as any the King had. As to the other words of rooting out the Scots Root and Branch, he conceives a short Reply may serve, they being proved by a single Testimony only, which can make no sufficient Faith in cause of Life. Again, the Witness was very much mistaken, if not worse, for he deposeth A that these words were spoken the tenth day of October in Ireland, whereas he was able to evidence, he was at that time in England, and had been so near a Month before.

The One and Twentieth and Two and Twentieth Articles were not urged.

Three and twentiethly, That upon the 13 day of April last, the Parliament of England met, and the Commons House (then being the Representative Body of all the Commons in the Kingdome) did according to the Trust reposed in them, enter into Debate and Consideration of the great Grievances of this Kingdome, both in respect of Religion, and the publick Liberties of the Kingdome: and his Majesty referring chiefly to the said Earl of Strafford, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, the ordering and disposing of all Matters concerning the Parliament; He the said Earl of Strafford, with the Assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty, by sundry Speeches and Messages, to urge the said Commons House, to enter into some Resolution for his Majesties supply for Maintenance of his War against his Subjects of Scotland, before any course was taken for the relief of the great and pressing Grievances, wherewith this Kingdome was then afflicted; Whereupon, a Demand was then made from his Majesty of twelve Subsidies, for the release of Ship-money only: And while the said Commons then Assembled (with expression of great Affection to his Majesty, and to his Service) were in Debate and Consideration of some Supply, before Resolution by them made: He the said Earl of Strafford, with the help and assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty to dissolve the last Parliament, upon the fifth day of May last, and upon the same day, he the said Earl of Strafford did treacherously, falsely, and maliciously endeavour to incense his Majesty against his loving and faithfull Subjects, who had been Members of the House of Commons, by telling his Majesty they had denied to supply him. And afterward upon the same, did treacherously and wickedly Counsell and Advise his Majesty to this effect; Viz. That having tryed the Affections of his People, he was loose and absolved from all Rules of Government, and was to do every thing that Power would admit; and that his Majesty had tryed all wayes and was refused, and should be acquitted both of God and Man; and that he had an Army in Ireland (meaning the Army above mentioned, consisting of Papists, his Dependents, as is aforesaid) which he might employ to reduce this Kingdome to Obedience.

Reply, That he was not the principall Cause of Dissolving the last Parliament, for before he came to the Council-table, it was Voted by the Lords to demand Twelve Subsidies, and that Sir Henry Vane was ordered to demand no less; but he coming in the Interim, he perswads the Lords to Vote it again, Declaring to his Majesty (then present) and them, the danger of the Breach of Parliament: Whereupon it was again Voted, That if the Parliament would not grant Twelve Subsidies, Sir Henry would descend to Eight, and rather then fail to Six. But Sir Henry not observing his Instructions, demanded Twelve only, without abatement, or going lower; that the height of this Demand, urged the Parliament to deny, and their Deniall moved his Majesty to dissolve the Parliament; so that the chief occasion of the Breach thereof was, as he conceived, Sir Henry Vane. He confesseth that at the Council-table he advised the King to an offensive War against the Scots; but it was not untill all faire means to prevent a War had been first attempted. Again, Others were as much for a Defensive War, and it might be as free to Vote one; or the other. Lastly, Votes at a Council-board are but bare Opinions, and Opinions if pertinaciously maintained, may make an Heretick; but never can a Traytor. And to Sir Henry Vane's Deposition, he sayd, It was only a single Testimony, and contradicted by four Lords of the Junto Tables Depositions; Viz. The Earl of Northumberland, the Marquis of Hamilton, the Bishop of London, and Lord Cottingham, who all affirmed, That there was no question made of this Kingdome, which was then in Obedience, but of Scotland that was in Rebellion: And Sir Henry Vane being twice examined upon Oath, could not remember, whether he sayd this, or that Kingdome; and the Notes after offered for more proof, were but the same thing, and added nothing to the Evidence to make it a double Testimony, or to make a privy Councillors Opinion in a Debate at Council, High-treason.

The Four and twentieth Article was not urged.

A Five and twentiethly, That not long after the Dissolution of the last Parliament (Viz. In the Months of May, and June) he the said Earl of Strafford did advise the King to go on rigorously in levying of the Ship-money, and did procure the Sheriffs of severall Counties to be sent for, for not levying the Ship-money, divers of which were threatned by him to be sued in the Star-chamber, and afterwards by his Advice were sued in the Star-chamber for not levying the same; and divers of his Majesties loving Subjects were sent for, and Imprisoned by his Advice, about that and other illegall Payments. And a great Loan of an hundred thousand pounds was demanded of the City of London: and the Lord
 B Mayor, and the Aldermen, and the Sheriffs of the said City, were often sent for by his Advice to the Council-table, to give an Account of their Proceedings, in raising of Ship-money, and furthering of that Loan, and were required to certifie the Names of such Inhabitants of the said City as were fit to lend, which they with much Humility refusing to do, he the said Earl of Strafford did use these, or the like Speeches; Viz. That they deserved to be put to Fine and Ransome, and that no good would be done with them, till an Example were made of them, and that they were layd by the Heels, and some of the Aldermen were hanged up.

C Reply, That there was a present Necessity for money, that all the Council-board had Voted with, yea, before him. That there was then a Sentence in Star-chamber upon the Opinion of all the Judges, for the Legality of the Tax of Ship-money, and he thought he might advise the King to take what the Judges had declared was by Law his own. He confessed that upon refusall of so just a Service, the better to quicken the Citizens to the payment of Ship-money, he sayd, They deserved to be Fined; which Words might perhaps be incircumspectly delivered, but (conceives) cannot amount to Treason, especially when no ill consequence followed upon them: and it would render men in a sad Condition, if for every hasty Word, or Opinion given in D Councell, they should be sentenced as Traytors. But that he sayd, It were well for the Kings Service, if some of the Aldermen were hanged up, he utterly denieth. Nor is it proved by any, but Alderman Garway, who is at best but a single Testimony, and therefore no sufficient Evidence in case of Life.

Six and twentiethly, That he the said Earl of Strafford, by his wicked Counsell having brought his Majesty into excessive Charges, without any just Cause; he did in the Month of July last (for the support of the said great Charges) Counsell and Approve two dangerous and wicked Projects; Viz. To seise upon the Bullion, and the Money in the Mint: And to imbase his Majesties Coyn with the Mixtures of Brass. And accordingly he procured 130000 l. which was then in the Mint, and belonging to divers Merchants, Strangers, and Others, to be seised on, and stayed to his Majesties Use. And when divers Merchants of London, Owners of the said Bullion, came to his House to let him understand the great Mischief that Course would produce here, and in other Parts, what Prejudice it would be to the Kingdome by discrediting the Mint, and hindring the Importation of Bullion: He the said Earl told them, That the City of London dealt undutifully and unthankfully with F his Majesty, and that they were more ready to help the Rebels then to help his Majesty, and that if any Hurt came to them, they might thank themselves, and that it was the Course of other Princes to make use of such Moneys to serve their Occasions. And when in the same Month of July, the Officers of his Majesties Mint came to him, and gave him divers Reasons against the Imbasing of the said Money; he told them, That the French King did use to send Commissaries of Horse, with Commission to search into mens Estates, and to peruse their Accounts, that so they may know what to levy of them by force, which they did accordingly levy; And turning to the Lord Cottington then present, sayd; That this was a Point worthy his Lordships Consideration.

G Reply, That he expected some Proofs to Evidence the two first Particulars, but hears of none. For the following Words he confessed, probably they might escape the Door of his Lips; Nor did he think it much amiss, considering their present posture, to call that Faction Rebels. As for the last words objected against him in that Article, he sayd, That being in Conference with some of the Londoners, there came to his Hands at that instant a Letter from the Earl of Leicester, then in Paris, wherein were the Gazets enclosed, relating that the Cardinall had given order to levy money by Soldiers; this he only told the Lord Cottington standing by, but made not the least Application thereof to the English Affairs. Seven

Seven and twentiethly, That in, or about the Month of August last, he was made A Lieutenant-Generall of all his Majesties Forces in the Northern parts against the Scots, and being at York, did in the Month of September, by his own Authority, and without any lawfull Warrant, impose a Tax on his Majesties Subjects in the County of York, of 8 d. per diem, for maintenance of every Soldier of the Trained Bands of that County; which Summs of Money he caused to be levied by force; And to the end to compell his Majesties Subjects out of Fear and Terrour, to yeild to the Payment of the same: He did declare that he would Commit them that refused the Payment thereof, and the Soldiers should be satisfied out of their Estates, and they that refused it, were in very little better Condition then of High-treason. B ‘Reply, That at his Majesties coming to York, it was thought necessary, in regard the Enemy was upon the Borders, to keep the Trained Bands on foot for Defence of the County, and therefore the King directed him to write to the Freeholders in Yorkshire to Declare, what they would do for their own Defence; That they freely offered a Months Pay, nor did any man grudge against it. Again, It was twice propounded to the Great Councell of Peers at York, that the King approved it as a just and necessary Act, and none of the Councell contradicted it, which he conceived seemed a Tacite C Allowance of it. That though his Majesty had not given him speciall Order therein, nor the Gentry had desired it, yet he conceived he had Power enough to impose that Tax, by vertue of his Commission. But he never sayd, that the Refusers should be guilty of little less then High-treason; which being proved by Sir William Ingram, he was but a single Testimony, and one who had formerly mistaken himself in what he had deposed.

Eight and twentiethly, That in the Months of September, and October last, he the said Earl of Strafford being certified of the Scottish Army coming into the Kingdom: And he the said Earl of Strafford, being Lieutenant of his Majesties Army, did not provide for D the Defence of the Town of Newcastle, as he ought to have done, but suffered the same to be lost, that so he might the more incense the English against the Scots; And for the same wicked purpose, and out of a malicious Desire to engage the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, in a Nationall and bloody War; He did write to the Lord Conway the Generall of the Horse, and under the said Earls Command, that he should fight with the Scottish Army, at the passage over the Tync, whatsoever should follow; notwithstanding that the Lord Conway had formerly by Letters informed him the said Earl, that his Majesties Army then under his Command, was not of force sufficient to encounter the Scots, by E which Advice of his, he did contrary to the Duty of his Place betray his Majesties Army then under his Command, to apparent Danger and Loss.

‘Reply, That he admired how in the third Article he being charged as an Incendiary against the Scots, is now in this Article made their Confederate, by betraying Newcastle into their hands. But to answer more particularly, he sayd, That there was at Newcastle the 24 of August, ten, or twelve thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse, under the Command of the Lord Conway, and Sir Jacob Ashly, and that Sir Jacob had written to him concerning the Town of Newcastle, that it was Fortified, which also F was under his particular Care, and for the passage over the River of Tine, his Majesty sent speciall Directions to the Lord Conway, to secure it; and therefore that Lord is more (as he conceives) responsible for that Miscarriage then himself.

The Testimony of the Parliament of Ireland, produced against the Earl of Strafford.

THE Commons were resolved to prosecute him to the utmost, and therefore had procured the Parliament of Ireland to prosecute him there also, guilty of High-treason, which being unexpectedly produced to the Earl, extorted from him this passionate Expression; That there was a Conspiracy against him to take away his life: Whereupon the Commons cryed out against him as one who standing Impeached of High-treason, durst accuse the Parliament of two Kingdomes G of Conspiracy against him; and besides his great Charge, three other Articles were put to him.

‘First, That he had withdrawn four and twenty thousand pounds, and more, from the Exchequer in Ireland, and converted them to his own Use.

‘Secondly, That in the beginning of his Government, the Garrisons of Ireland had been maintained by the English Treasury.

Thirdly,

A 'Thirdly, That he had advanced Popish and Infamous Persons; as the Bishop of Waterford, and others, to the prime Rooms in the Church of Ireland.

The other Articles against him, with his Answers.

To which he gave these Answers:

First, That England was indebted to Ireland so much, which he took up upon his own Credit, and paid it in again, producing the Kings Authority and Letter for the same.

Secondly, That the Garisons had been formerly burthensome to England, which he so found, and had so improved the Kings Revenues there, that they were not burthensome B at all.

Thirdly, That he never preferred any, but whom he conceived Conscientious and honest, not being able to Prophesie of mens future Conditions: And as for the Bishop of Waterford, he had satisfied the Law.

But besides all these, Secretary Vane had Communicated to the House of Commons the Transactions of the Earl, at what time the King made up a Junto of select Counsellors, to consult about his second Expedition against the Scots; where it was proved, That Strafford had then given the King Advice, to borrow of the City an hundred thousand pounds, to levy Ship-money rigorously, and that his Majesty C having tryed the Affections of his People, was absolved and loosed from all Rules of Government, and might do, what Power would admit; and having an Army in Ireland might employ it for the reducing of [This] Kingdome, which he was sure could not hold out five Months; and London being full of the Nobility, the Commission of Array to be put on foot, and Opposers thereof too smart for it.

His Reply to Secretary Vane's Accusation.

The Earl replied, That he conceived it lawfull for a Privie Councillor to have freedom of Voting with others. and as to the matter of the Irish Army, he thought that the single Testimony of one man (Secretary Vane) was not of Validity in Law in a D Cause of Debt, much less in Life and Death, and that the Deposition of Secretary Vane was dubious, as appeared at his severall Examinations, and that there were present at the Debate but eight privy Councillors, whereof two were not to be produced and four others Declared upon their Honours, that they never heard him speak those words, or any like them. And lastly, That if he had spoken them (which he yet granted not) that the word (THIS) could not imply England (the Debate being concerning Scotland) and there being not the least Intention of Landing the Irish Army in England. And lastly, Concluded his Defence, with telling the Lords that he was accused as guilty of Treason, for endeavouring to subvert the Fundamentall Laws of the

E Land, but it seemed strange to him that this should be Treason together, which was not Treason in any part. And lastly, Desired the Lords to consider how their own Priviledges, and other Ministers of State would suffer by his Condemnation. The Commons must now justify their Charge by Law, to which end they produce the Salvo annexed to the Statute of 25 of Edward the Third, the words were these; Because all particular Treasons could not be then defined, therefore what the Parliament should declare to be Treason in time to come should be punished as Treason: And so this

F Salvo was to be the Ground-work of the Bill of Attainder. The Earl being put upon a Point of Law, moved for Counsel, which after three dayes Canvassing, was granted to him; And April the 17. the Earl by his Counsel (which were Mr. Lane the Princes Attorney, Mr. Gardiner Recorder of London, Mr. Lee, and Mr. Lightfoot) answered, That the Statute which they cited was but a Declarative and a penall Law, and would neither-wise admit of such Consequential and Inferentiall Constructions: And that the Salvo was Repealed by Act of Parliament, in the sixth of Henry the Fourth; And so the Court Adjourned, without prefixing any time of meeting: for the Commons fell to speeding their Bill of Attainder, and April the 19. Voted the Earl guilty of G High-treason upon Evidence of Secretary Vane and his Notes; And upon the 25 day of the same Month, they read the Bill engrossed, and after that went to the Poll, and carried it that way, notwithstanding the discenting of the Lord Digby, and divers others; and that very Afternoon transmitted the Bill to the Lords, to whom it seemed so perplex a Business, that the Commons were faine to send Mr. St. John the Kings Solicitor to confer with them about it, who gave them such satisfaction, that thence forward they shewed greater Propensity to the Earls Condemnation.

He hath Councill assigned him.

The Commons pass the Bill of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford. And send up to the Lords for their Concurrence.

In the mean time the Commons Petitioned the King;

The Commons Petition against Papists with the Kings
Answer,

- 'First, For removing of all Papists from Court.
- 'Secondly, For disarming of them generally throughout the Kingdome.
- 'Thirdly, For disbanding the Irish Army.
- 'The Kings Answer was;

First, They all knew what Legall Trust the Crown bath in that particular, therefore he shall not need to say any thing to assure them that he shall use it so, as there shall be no just Cause of Scandall.

Secondly, He is content it shall be done by Law.

Thirdly, And for the last, He had entred into Consultation about it, finding many difficulties therein; and doth so wish the disbanding of all Armies, as he did Conjure them speedily and heartily to joyne with him in disbanding those two here, Scots, and English.

It will not be amiss here, to set down a Copy of the Bill of Attainder, which was read in presence of the Earl at the Bar.

the Bill of Attainder.

W Hereas the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of the House of Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, have in the Name of Themselves, and of all the Commons of England, Impeached Thomas Earl of Strafford, of High-treason, for endeavouring to subvert the ancient Fundamentall Laws and Government of his Majesties Realms of England, and Ireland; and to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannicall Government against Law, in the sayd Kingdomes; and for exercising a tyrannous and exorbitant Power over, and against the Laws of the sayd Kingdomes, over the Liberties, Estates, and Laws of his Majesties Subjects: And likewise for having by his own Authority, Commanded the laying and Assessing of Soldiers upon his Majesties Subjects in Ireland, against their Consent, to compell them to obey his unlawfull Commands and Orders, made upon Paper petitions, in Causes between Party and Party, which accordingly was Executed upon divers of his Majesties Subjects in a War-like manner, within the sayd Realm of Ireland; and in so doing, did levy War against the Kings Majesty, and his Liege-people in that Kingdome.

And also for that he upon the unhappy Dissolution of the last Parliament, did slander the House of Commons to his Majesty, and did Counsell and Advise his Majesty, that he was loosed and absolved from Rules of Government, and that he had an Army in Ireland, which he might imploy to reduce this Kingdome; For which he deserves to undergo the Pains and Forfeitures of High-treason.

And the sayd Earl had been also an Incendiary of the Wars between the two Kingdomes of England and Scotland: All which Offences have been sufficiently proved against the sayd Earl upon his Impeachment.

Be it therefore Enacted by the Kings most Excellent Majesty, and by the Lords and Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, and by Authority of the same, That the sayd Earl of Strafford, for the hainous Crimes and Offences aforesaid, stand and be Adjudged and Attainted of High-treason, and shall suffer such pain of Death, and incur the Forfeitures of his Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, and Estate of Freehold, or Inheritance in the sayd Kingdomes of England and Ireland, which the sayd Earl, or any other to his Use or in Trust for him, have, or had at the day of the first sitting of this present Parliament, or at any time since.

Provided, That no Judge, or Judges, Justice, or Justices whatsoever, shall adjudge, or interpret any Act, or Thing to be Treason, nor hear, nor determine any Treason, nor in any other manner then he, or they should, or ought to have done before the making of this Act, and as if this Act had never been had or made, preserving always unto all and singular Persons and Bodies Politick and Corporal, their Heirs and Successors (others then the said Earl and his Heirs, and such as claim by, from, or under him) all such Right, Title, and Interest, of, in, and to all and singular such of the sayd Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, as He, They, or any of Them had, before the first day of this present Parliament, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

'Provided,

A ' Provided that the passing of this present Act, and his Majesties assent thereunto, shall not be any determination of this present Sessions of Parliament, and all Bills and Matters whatsoever depending in Parliament, and not fully Enacted and determined, And all Statutes and Acts of Parliament, which have their continuance untill the end of this present Session of Parliament shall remaine, continue, and be in force, as if this Act had not been.

B The King fearing the Conclusion, and willing to doe some Good Office to the Lord Lieutenant calls both Houses together, May the First, and makes a Speech to them telling them,

That he had been Present at the hearing of that great Cause, and that in his Conscience Positively he could not Condemn him of High Treason; And yet could not Cleare him of Misdeamenours, but hoped a Way might be found out to Satisfie Justice and their Fears without Oppressing his Conscience. And so Dismissed them with their great Discontent.

May the Second, the Prince of Orange (who had tarried here ever since the Twentieth of Aprill) Married the Princess Mary at White-Hall, with all the Solemnities appertaining to that Ceremony.

The Prince of Orange married to the Princess Mary.

The Parliament had taken Offence at the Kings last Speech in Defence of the Earl of Strafford, And this Distast was now propagated so far that, May the Third, the Citizens to the Number of Six Thousand most Armed with Swords, Cudgells and Staves came thronging down to Westminster, Crying out for Justice against the Earl of Strafford, Specially applying themselves to the Earl of Montgomery then Lord Chamberlain, by whose Perswasions and Promises their Heat was somewhat allaid. But yet they posted upon the Gate of Westminster a Catalogue of Names of those who would have acquitted the Earl, and these they Styled Straffordians.

Petitioners against the Earl of Strafford throng to Westminster.

The Parliament upon Information given that some Endeavours were used to breed a Disgust of their Proceedings in the English Northern Army; Framed and took a Nationall Protestation to Maintain and Defend with Life, Power, and Estate, the true Reformed Protestant Religion; Expressed in the Doctrine of the Church of England against all Popery and Popish Innovations; this was ordered to be Printed and Dispersed over all England. May the Fifth the Lords, certified, the Commons that they thought it the safest Course to lay aside the Bill of Attainder because it brought the King in for Judge; And next day they fell upon the severall Articles of his impeachment, and Voted the Earl Guilty of High Treason upon Two of them; viz. The Fifteenth for levying of Monies in Ireland by Force in a Warlike manner; And the Nineteenth for imposing an Oath upon the Subjects in Ireland.

The Parliaments Protestation to defend the Protestant Religion.

The House of Commons had been busie about a Bill for the Continuation of the Parliament which by this time was Compleated; and being approved by the Lords, was rendered to the King to be signed together with the Bill of Attainder; who Answered that on Monday following he would satisfie them. Sunday following the King spent the whole day in Consultation about the Earl of Strafford's Case with the Judges, and Bishops. The Judges told him that in point of Law (the Oath made by Sir Henry Vane of the Earls Advice, to raise Horse to Awe this Nation,) the Earle was guilty of Treason; but when he would have hid them Descend to the Particulars of this Accusation he found them shy in it, and all that he could get from them was, that upon the whole matter he was Guilty. In the Evening the Five Bishops of Armagh, London, Durham, Lincoln, and Carlisle, were called in to the King to Satisfie his Conscience about the thing, all which Agreed that the King might shew Mercy without any scruple, and that he could not Condemn the Earl if he did not conceive him Guilty; And this as to Matter of Fact; but as for matter of Law he was to rest in the Opinion of the Judges. At the Close of this Conference it was observed that the Bishop of Lincoln conveyed a Paper into the Kings Hands, which what it did containe the rest knew not; but some have Since believed it to be the Paper-promise which the King had formerly pass't under his Hand to the Earl to save him by his Prerogative; for Bishop Williams was observed to tamper with the Lieutenant of the Tower and some other Persons about the Earl. That they should tell his Lordship, that the King did believe him Guilty of High Treason, but yet was Bound by his Conscience from condemning him by a Promise made to him, (which indeed the King mainly insisted upon) for the Bishop knew the Earl to be of so high a Spirit as to Disdaine after so many Services done, to hold his Life upon no other Merit then a bare Promise; and thus was Strafford drawne both to acquit the King from his Promise by Letter, and to part with the Originall into such Hands as delivered it to his most Dangerous and Closest Enemy, the Bishop of Lincoln, by whom delivered to the King.

The King consults with the Judges about the Case of the Earl of Strafford as to matter of Law, and with the Bishops as to matter of Conscience.

Munday the Tenth the King authorised the Earl of Arundell, the Lord privy Seale, the Lord Chamberlaine and others for the passing of the two Bills, the one for the continuation of the Parliament During the Pleasure of both houses; the other the Bil of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford

The King gives Commission to severall Lords to pass the Bills for continuance of the Parliament and of Attainder against the Earl.

and the same Day he sent Sir Dudley Carleton Secretary of State to acquaint the Earl with what was done and the Motives thereunto, whereat he was greatly astonished; but the next day the King being troubled about the Earl writes a Letter with his own Hands, and sends it by his Son the Prince of Wales to the Lords, telling them, That whereas Justice had been satisfied in his Condemnation an intermixture of Mercy would now be not Unseasonable, and therefore he desired them that if it might be done without Discontentment of his People, the Earl of Strafford might be permitted to fulfill the Naturall Course of his Life in close Imprisonment, sequestred from all Publick Affaires, provided he never attempt to make an Escape; however he thought it a worke of Charity to Reprieve him till Saturday; but nothing could be Obtained in Favour of him, but one-ly this, That the Lords said their purpose was to be Suters to his Majestie for Favour to be shewed to his innocent Children, And if himselfe had made any provision for them, that the same might hold.

A design laid for the Earls escape out of the Tower.

Some Designs had been laid for the Earls Delivery, and Captaine Billingsley should have been received into the Tower with an Hundred men for the better Securing that place as was pretended, but indeed to have Conveyed the Earl into some more habitable Region, for which purpose his Brothers Ship was then in Readiness not far off. Besides the Lord Deputy had offered to give his Daughtre in Mariage with Twenty Thousand Pounds portion to Sir William Balfores Son upon Condition that he being then Lieutenant of the Tower would assent to his Escape, But Billingsley's entry being Opposed by Sir William, and all other endeavours proving Fruitless May the Twelfth the Earl of Strafford was conveyed from the Tower by a Court of Guard consisting of the Trained Bands, Marshalls Men, Sheriffs Officers, Warders of the Tower; before him went his Gentleman Usher bareheaded, then followed he himselfe with the Arch-Bishop of Armagh and others. As he went to the place of his Execution passing by the Arch-Bishop of Canterburies Lodging and spying him in the Window he called to him for his Prayers and his Blessing; but the Prelate at the sight of him in that Condition was so Dismaid that for a good while he could not recollect himself; but being told of it and reprehended by his Friends as one who had shewed himselfe Guilty of an undecent Pusillanimity, he replied, That he doubted not but when that bitter Cup came to his turn, he should tast it with a most Christian Courage.

The Earle being come to the Scaffold Adressed his Speech to the Arch-Bishop of Armagh to this Effect.

The Earle of Strafford beheaded at Tower-Hill.

*That he was come to pay the last Debt he owed to Sin, with a good hope of rising again to Righteousnesse, that he Died willingly, forgave all and Submitted to Justice, but professed his intentions innocent from perverting, that he wished nothing but Prosperity to King and People and acquitted him from the Guilt of his Death, as having acted therein no otherwise then as constrained; Advised his Adversaries to Repent of their violent Proceeding against him, withall telling them that he thought it a strange way to write in Bloud the beginning of Reformation and Settlement of the Kingdome; however he wished that his Bloud might rest and not Cry against them. Declared that he Died in the Faith of the Church of England, For whose Happiness he Prayed, and so Concluded that his last Speech, with intreating the Standers by, To Pray for him; After he had ended, he Kneeled downe to Prayer, and then rising up againe, he took his last Leave of all his Friends and particularly of his Brother Sir George Wentworth; by whome he sent his Love to his Wife, and his Blessing to his Children, with a most Strict Injunction to his only Son William Wentworth, Never to meddle with the Patrimony of the Church. And then giving the Token to the Executioner had his Head severed from his Body at the First stroak. After his Death this Petition of his was Found directed to the Lords Spirituall and Temporall, in Gratitude for their good will to his Children, manifested in their fore-mentioned Answer to the Kings Letter.*

The Coppy of his Petition to the Lords.

The humble Petition of Thomas late Earle of Strafford,

Sheweth,

‘That seeing it is the good will and Pleasure of God, that your Petitioner is shortly to pay that Dury which we all owe to our fraile Nature; he shall in all Christian Patience and Charity conforme and submit himselfe to your Justice, in a Comfortable Assurance of the great Hope laid up for us in the Mercy & Merits of our Saviour, blessed for Ever. G ‘Only he humbly craves to returne your Lordships most humble Thanks for your noble Compassion toward those innocent Children; who now with his late Blessing he must commit to the Protection of Almighty God, Beseeching your Lordships to finish your pious Intentions towards them: and Desiring that the Reward thereof may be fulfilled in you by him that is able to give above all that we are able either to aske or think.

wherein

A Wherein I trust the Honourable House of Commons will afford their Christian Assistance, And so beseeching your Lordships Charity to forgive all his Omissions and Infirmities, he doth very heartily and truly recommend your Lordships to the Mercies of your Heavenly Father, and that for his goodness hee may perfect you in every good Worke.

B This was the end of that great States-man, who is reported, when he heard that the King had signed the Bill of Attainder to have lift up his eyes to Heaven and clapping his Hand upon his Heart to have Cried out (perhaps in Imitation of Cardinall Wolseys complaint) Put not your trust in Princes nor in the Sons of Men, For in them is no Salvation.

The Death of this powerfull Man so started the other great Officers of State that, hoping for more security in retirednesse, many of them resigned their Places; the Lord Cottingham Master of the Wards to the Lord Say, and Bishop Furton Lord Treasurer to Five Commissioners; the Earl of Leicester was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; And Marquis Herford was made Governour of the Prince, and the Earl of Essex Lord Chamberlaine of the Kings House-hould instead of the Earls of New-Castle and Pembroke.

The Lord Treasurer and other great Officers resign up their places,

C In the mean time discontents arose between the Parliament and the English Army in the North, and that upon this occasion. The chief Commanders and Field Officers being at Westminster and Members of either Houses, Sir Jacob Ashley had the Command of the Army. It was Voted the Nineteenth of June that the Scots should receive one Hundred Thousand Pounds (of their Three Hundred Thousand Pounds) at Midsummer next, 1652: And the rest at Midsummer, 1644; but they pretending present Wants required by Writing Twenty Five Thousand Pounds (Tenn Thousand Pounds more then was in readinesse for them) whereupon the Parliament deducted Tenn Thousand Pounds (out of the Fiftie Thousand Pounds which was designed for the English Army) to be sent unto them, to the great Discontent of the Lord Percy, Commissary Generall Wilmot, and Collo-nell Alburnham (Officers of the English Army, and then Members of the House) so that Wilmot openly said that if such Papers of the Scots would produce Monys, he doubted not but the Officers of the English Army would soon do the Like; but notwithstanding the Parliament continued in their Resolutions, and the English Army thinking themselves neglected, constantly affirmed that the Parliament had disobliged them. The forenamed Officers combining together and Swearing mutuall secrecy made up a kind of a J unto among themselves, drawing up a Petition to King and Parliament, Discontents arise between the Parliament and English Army in the North.

E First, for Mony for the Army.
Secondly, for not Disbanding before the Scots.
Thirdly, for preserving Bishops Votes and Functions.
And Fourthly, for settling the Kings Revenue.
The Army whose Minds and Affections were not Different from this J unto, Met at Burroughs-Bridge and drew up a Petitionary Letter to this Effect.

F That all good men ought to thank God for directing the Kings heart to satisfie the desires of his Parliament, by delivering up into their Hands the chiefest of his Councillours and Servants, and many other things, to gratify them, never done by any of his Ancettors; by Petition of Right, Trienniall Parliament, and such like; yet that some turbulent Spirits backt by rude and tumultuous Mechanicks, seemed not to be satisfied without the totall subversion of the Government of State, &c. That therefore the Army, so orderly Governed, though without Martiall Law, nupayment, and few Officers, might be called up to attend the safety of the Kings person and Parliaments Security, or that both Armies should be Disbanded for the Ease of the Kingdome; with a desire, to procure the Officers Hands thereunto; These Actions were advantageous to the King (had they succeeded) and therefore it was thought that he was neither ignorant of, nor averse from them; but alwaies abortively desired and prevented the chief Acto:rs. Sir James Ashley, Sir John Conniere, Sir Foulk Hunk, Colonel, Vavisor, Chudleigh, William Legg, Onals, and others all examined about it; but none suffered for it; Jermin had a hand in this Business, but he was conveyed over Sea by the Kings Command.

G The payment of Tunnage and Ponnage had been stomached ever since the year 1628. (at what time a sharp Remonstrance was drawn up against it) but now the King at the Request of the House of Commons was content to relinquish his Claime to it, and after that, passed the Three Bills the one for Imposing the Tax of Poll-Money upon the people; and the other two for Putting down the Courts of the Star-Chamber and High Commission; the First he did willingly, the other Two not without such reluctancy as produced some daies delay.

Tunnage and Ponnage relinquish by the King and three other Bills pass,

The Queen Mother of France having troubled England long enough, takes Leave and is conveyed over into Holland by the Earl of Arundell, who being a Roman Catholick and finding his own Country too hot for such, procured himselfe that imployment together with leave to remain beyond Seas during his own pleasure; from Holland, they came at length to Cullen in Germany where both the Earl and that unfortunate Aged Prince's ended their Lives.

The Queen mother departs out of England,

The King sent Sir Thomas Roe to the Diet at Ratisbone to assist his Nephew.

This year the King with consent of Parliament published a Manifesto in favour of the Prince A Electour Palatines Cause and intrusted it to his Ambassadour Sir Thomas Roe whom he sent over into Germany to assist his Nephew at the Diet of Ratisbone.

Both Armies are disbanded by the Parliament.

And now comes the time for the Delivery of the Northern Counties, the Parliament Agreeing to Disband both Armies there; wherefore in February it was Agreed, That the Scots Ships taken since that War should be restored and Four Thousand Pounds given towards a Supply of the Losses and Necessities of their Dear (or rather Deer) Brethren of Scotland; for all which the Scots return Thanks, but especially for the Honour and stile of Brethren which the Parliament had given them, but notwithstanding all this Care taken, such Occasions intervened that they stayed in England till there was an Arreare due to them of an Hundred and Twenty Thousand Pounds over and above the aforesaid sum; and then, August the Sixth, both Armies were Disbanded, but the B Scots better payed, and so for present they escaped (as we say) Scotfree; but afterwards they made Amends for all and payed a sufficient Reckoning.

Bishop Wren committed to the Tower together with the Five Judges that were for Ship-Mony.

December the Twentie Eighth last past, Doctor Wren Bishop of Ely and Dean of the Kings Chappell had been Charged with Treasonable Misdemeanours in his Diocese; And July the Fifth the Charge was perfected against him by the Committee, and reported to the House of Commons who thereupon Voted him unworthy and unfit to hold or exercise any Office or Dignity in the Church or Common-Wealth, and moreover desired the Lords to joine with them to request the King for his Removall from his Service, and so he was Committed to the Tower; and the Five Ship-Mony Judges, Judge Bramston, Barron Trevor, Barron Weston, Barron Davenports, and Judge C
Crawley, were now Questioned for their severall Opinions about that Business, but to Judge Barkleys Charge was laid High Treason.

Sir Robert Harlow appointed to pull down Superstitious Pictures.

About this time Sir Robert Harlow was employed by the House of Commons for the putting downe and Defacing all scandalous Pictures Crosses and Figures within the Churches and upon Signes and Sign-posts.

The King takes a Journey into Scotland.

Peace being made with the Scots, the King resolved to ingratiate himselfe with that Nation and (if possible) to make himselfe some Friends there which might be usefull to him in case a Breach should happen at home; and therefore gives notice to the Houses of his Intention to Journey to Scotland and to set out upon the Tenth of August, which he did, having first passed the Bill for Knighthood and free-making of Salt-peter and Gunpowder, and for the Earl of Essex to be Generall of all his Forces on this side Trent, with power to raise Souldiers in case of Necessity; but D Pembroke and Salisbury could not obtaine their desired Places of high Steward and Treasurer.
And because the great Affaires of State necessarily required so speedy a passing of some Bills as would not admit of tarrying his Returne, he therefore commissioned the Lord Keeper, the Lord privy Seale, the Marquels of Hertford, the Earles of Lindsey, Essex, Dorset, and Bath; to signe Bills in his Absence. The day before his Journey the Parliament was taken up with such Importtant Business that they were Necessitated to sit all Sunday from Morning to Night, but to shew that they meant it not for a president they publisht it in print, That for many urgent Occasions they thought it Necessary to sit, and do declare so much, that no inferiour Court or Councill, or any person may draw this into Example for their Encouragement in neglecting the due observation of the Sabbath; and then adjourned till the Twentieth of October, appointing a Committee E of Fifty Commons.

Lords Justices manage the Affairs of Ireland.

This year was unlucky to the King, for in it were the seeds of our unparelled intestine War first sowne; and the Irish Rebellion Commenced, though designed some years before as we shall come to Relate.

Sir William Parsons and Sir John Borlace had been made Lord Justices of Ireland upon the Im-prisonement of the Earl of Strafford late Lord Lieutenant, and the Death of Mr. Wandford his Deputy.

A Bloody Rebellion breaks forth in Ireland.

These applyed themselves to give contentment to the Irish by all gentle meanes, encouraging the Parliament then sitting there to indeavour the Redressing of their Grievances and particularly they abated the Subsidies from Forty Thousand pounds (as they were in Straffords time) to Twelve Thousand pounds; and also were content by Act of Parliament to settle all Estates of Land in the Kingdome which had been quietly enjoyed for the space of sixteen yeares; and to relinquish to them the right and title which the King had to the Four Counties in Connaght and some other Territories in Mounster and the Countie of Clare; Acting wholly by advice of the Councill, without admitting any paper Petitions or Bills in civill Causes. But the Irish plainly shewed by their subsequent courses the baseness and Turbulence of their Natures which were not to be gained upon by sweetness and Lenity; for towards the latter end of October they had confederated themselves so strongly and so handled their Matters that all was ready to burst out into a Flame; and they had almost made themselves Masters of the greatest part of the Kingdome before the Lords Justices were aware of it; And the Castle of Dublin it selfe should have been seized upon the Twenty third of October, 1641. upon which day this Horrid Rebellion broke forth. Sir William Coale had before suspected some such thing, and therefore had written to the Lords Justices certifying the great resort made to Sir Phelim O'neale in the Countie of Tiron, and to the Lord Mac Guire in the Countie of Fomanaigh, and that Mac Guire had been frequently with the English Catholicks of the English pale, and was ever Busied in Letters and dispatches. The same Sir William also acquainted the Lords Justices, October the 21 of their Design to Murder the Lords Justices and Councill of Ireland and the rest of the Protestants there, to seize upon the Castle and City of Dublin, and then upon all the other places of strength in the Kingdome.

But

A But this Intelligence came not to their Hands nor any other till the Evening of the day of Rebellion. That day the Conspirators met at Dublin at the Lion Tavern, where they consulted about their Plot and dranke Healths upon their Knees to the good Success of it; but while they were so Joviall and confident, Owen O Conally a Gentleman of a meere Irish Family, but a retainer to Sir John Clotworthy, discovers their Rebellion to the Lord Parsons about nine of the Clock at Night, but in such a broken manner that little could be gathered out of his Relation, whereupon he was sent back to learn from Mac Mahon (with whom he had been before) something further about it; where he so played his part that he returns (though with a great deal of Hazard) with sufficient instructions: but the double diligence of the Watch had like to have marred all; for as Conally was coming back they seized him and would have lodged him in the Prison that Night, had he not been Rescued by one of the Lord Parsons Servants who was purposely sent out to see what might be the Reason of his tarrying longer then his prefixed time.

B Being admitted into the presence of the Lords Justices, and Sir Thomas Rotherham, and Sir Robert Meredith (for the Lord Parsons after he had heard his first Newes had ordered strong Guards in every corner, and had sent for the two last who were Members of the Councill to meet him at the Lord Borlases House) he gave in this Account upon Oath,

C That being at Monimore, in the County of London-Derry on Thursday last, he received a Letter from Colonel Hugh Oge Mac Mahon desiring him to come to Connaght in the County of Monaghan, and to be with him on Wednesday or Thursday last. Whereupon he this Examinant came to Connaght on Wednesday night last, and finding the said Hugh come to Dublin, followed him thither, He came about six of the Clock in the Evening and forthwith went to the lodging of the said Hugh, to the House neere the Boat Oxman Town and there he found the said Hugh, and came with the said Hugh into the Towne, neere the Pillory, to the lodging of the Lord Mac Guire, where they found not the Lord within, and there they drank a Cup of Beer, and then went back again to the said Hugh his lodging. He saith that at the Lord Mac Guire his lodging the said Hugh told him, that there were, and would be this Night great numbers of Noblemen and Gentlemen of the Irish Papists from all the parts of the Kingdome in this Towne, who with himsele had determined to take the Castle of Dublin, and possess themselves of all his Majesties Ammunition there to morrow morning, being Saturday, and that they intended first to batter the chimnies of the said Towne, and if the City would not yeild, then to batter down the Houses, and to cut off all the Protestants that would not joyn with them. He further saith, that the said Hugh then told him that the Irish had prepared Men in all parts of the Kingdome, to destroy all the English inhabiting there to morrow morning by tenn of the Clock, and that in all the Sea-Ports, and other Townes in the Kingdome, all the Protestants should be killed this Night, and that all the posts that could be, could not prevent it: and further saith that he moved the said Hugh to forbare executing of that Businesse, and to discover it to the State for the saving of his own Estate, who said he could nor help it. But said that they did owe their Allegiance to the King, and would pay him all his Rights, but that they did this for the tyrannicall Government that was over them, and to imitate Scotland, who got a priviledge by that Course.

O'Conally's relation concerning the Plot,

F And he further saith, when he was with the said Hugh in his lodging the Second time the said Hugh swore that he should not go out of his lodging that Night but told him that he should go with him the next morning to the Castle, and said if this matter were discovered some body should dye for it. Whereupon this Examinant feigned some necessity for his Easement, went downe out of the Chamber, and left his Sword in Pawn, and the said Hugh sent his Man down with him, and when this Examinant came down into the yard, and finding an opportunity, he this Examinant leaped over a wall and two pales and so came to the Lord Justice Parsons.

G This was a seasonable discovery; for the greatest part of the Conspirators were then gotten into the City and should have had for their assistance Twenty from each Countie in Ireland; and all the Lords and Gentlemen of the Kingdome that were Papists were engaged in the Plot; so now it was high time for the Lords Justices to look about them, whereupon they set a Watch privately upon the lodgings of Mac Guire and Mac Mahon and sat up all that Night in consultation, and early the next Morning came to them severall others of the Privy Councill. The first thing was to seize upon Mac Mahon and his Man; Hugh without much difficulty acknowledged the whole matter; telling them that upon that very day all the Forts and strong places in Ireland would be taken, impossible to be prevented, and however they used him now in their Power, his Bloud would be revenged.

Mac-Guire, and Mac Mahon seized on.

Then

Then order was taken for apprehending the Lord Mac Guire and others then in the City to the number of Thirty, the rest being befriended by the Citizens, escaped over the River, among whom were Hugh Birn and Roger More, and Plunket, and Fox. The next day the Lords Justices and Council (who had for better Security removed into the Castle) proclaimed the Discovery of this Notorious Plot, requiring all good Subjects to prepare for Defence and give them Advertisement of all Passages happening in their respective Counties, and to take care that no Levies be made under pretence of forraign Service, nor any suffered to March upon any such Account. And to close the day the Lord Blaney comes to Dublin and brings Newes that the Rebels were already Risen in Monaghan and had surprized his House with his Wife and Children; and next day Sir Arthur Teringham gives them Notice of the taking of the Nenry; after which messengers upon messengers bring Relations of the increase of the Rebels in Visster and their horrible massacres of the English in all Places where they came. Dublin it selfe began now to tremble for fear of them, which was increased by false Rumors spread abroad, (some through mistakes, others on purpose,) of their Multitudes and near Approaches to the City; the Council therefore first makes Sir Francis Willoughby Governour of the Castle and then took into their Consideration how they were provided of Mony, Armes, and Munition, for the first, it was soone found that there was no Mony in the Exchequer, but for Armes and Munition the Stores were indifferently furnished at this time; there being Armes neere for Ten Thousand men, Fifteen Hundred Barrells of Powder with match and lead proportionably, besides severall Peices of Artillery of diverse sorts.

Forces raised to goe against the Rebels.

The whole standing Army in Ireland consisting onely of 41 Companies of Foot, each Company containing 44 Souldiers; and 14 Troopes of Horse each Troop containing Fifty Eight Troopers, only the Lord Lieftenant and the Earl of Ormond had one Hundred and Seventeen apiece. But these forces were so disperced up and downe the Land in Garrisons so remore from one another, that it was impossible to draw a considerable number together without apparent danger of their being intercepted by the Rebels before they could unite with one another. Yet invincible necessity forced the Council to send for some companies and Troopes to march up from their severall quarters to the Defence of the City of Dublin. And having so done then sent away dispatches to the King (then in Scotland) by Sir Henry Spotswood; and to the Lord Lieftenant then in London, by Owen O Conally; certifying them of the Rebellion and ill state of the Kingdome, and that they depended on the assistance of God and the old English Pale, and of help from England; and how they were necessitated to prorogue the Parliament and Adjourn the Terme; they also requested that Owen O Conally might be nobly Rewarded for his faithfull Service in discovering the Plot.

The Earl of Ormond and others receive Commission to raise more forces.

The Earl of Ormond lying at his House at Carick was sent for with all hast to repair to Dublin with his Troop and the Vicounts of Clandeboy and Ardes, and Sir William Stewart, and Sir Robert Stewart, and other Gentlemen of quality in the North had Commissions sent them by sea for raising the Scots there inhabiting with Power either to destroy the Enemy or receive them to Mercy.

The Lords of the English Pale at the Council Board made great Protections of their Faith and Loyaltie to the King, & of what they would do for him in this War; yet some of them being Papists came thither two or three daies after and told the Lords Justices and the Council, That they thought those Words in the late Proclamation of the discovery, Viz: That Conspiracy of evill affected Irish Papists, did reflect upon them; wherefore they required that those Words might be better explained for their Satisfaction and that by Proclamation; which was accordingly done, to remove all pretence of Quarrell.

The Chief heads of this Rebellion.

All Visster (except the Cities London-Derry and Colraingne, and the Towne and Castle of Enckillen) was by this time gotten into the hands of the Rebels, whose chiefe Commanders were these Sir Phelim O Neale (the chief of that Sept and nearest Heir of the late Rebellious Earl of Tyrone), Turbogh O Neale his Brother, Rowry Mac Guire Brother to the Lord Mac Guire, Phillip O Rely, Mulmeere O Rely, Sir Conno Mac Gennis Cal: Mac Briam, and Mac Mahon. Sir Phelim O Neale was Generalissimo, a Man of the same parts with Phocas the Tyrannicall Emperour of Constantinople, neither Valiant nor Mercifull, a bloody minded man and false of his word; for whosoever yeilded to him though upon promise of fair quarter, were surely murdered in cold Blood. With the Scotch Planters he colluded, till the English were extirpated out of the Province, and then marched towards their chiefe Plantation neer Lisnagarry and utterly destroyed it. He had left sufficient Forces to fall upon Dondalke in the Countie of Louth within the Pale, and tooke it; yet long they stayed not there, but pierced further into Louth, coming within seven Miles of Tredagh.

The Lord Moore keeps Tredagh against the Rebels.

Here was the First Check given to the Rebels; hither to all places had yeilded to them, and so might Tredagh have been compelled to have done, had not the Lord Viscount Moore (hearing at Mellifont the Newes of the Surprisall of his Sister the Lady Blaney and her Children) retired thither for safety with his Troop of Horse and two Companies of foot at midnight: being there he joines in Council with the Maior to prevent Mischiefe both from abroad and within, for even there also was Danger, for besides sundry ill affected Persons in the Towne, Sir John Netherwile who commanded one of the Fore-named companies had a Designe to begin a Munity that Night he was to be upon the Watch; but prevented by his Lordships Prudence. The old Pieces were drawne out and scowred and planted at severall Gates, and four others were heaved out of a Marchants ship of the Harbor with some Powder; The Lord Moore makes a Journey to Dublin where

A he declares the weak Condition of the Towne and the disloyaltie of the Inhabitants to the Lord Justices: whereupon it was resolved that a Regiment should be raised for the relief of the Town; in the mean time the place was greatly distressed by the Rebels who after taking of Ardee, Dro-miskin, and other holds thereabouts were come nearer unto it.

A solemn Fast is therefore kept, after which some Forces make a stout Salley upon a party of the Rebels whom they routed, and brought away with them many Plundered Goods and Cows, with Two Hundred and Eighty Prisoners; and made a shift to defend themselves till Sir Henry Tichborne came from Dublin with a Commission to be Governour of the Town, who brought with him an Hundred Horse and a Thousand Foot which had been raised there at the instance of the Lord Moore, and that, by a happy Opportunity of the Vice-Treasurers having Three Thousand Pounds in readines in his hands, to be at the Time sent over into England for the satisfaction of a Publike Ingagement there, and soone after this the State added three Companies of Foot more, so that besides the Town Armes, they were compleat, (The Lord Moore's Forces being reckoned in) Fifteen Hundred foot and a Hundred and Sixty horse, which was but cold comfort to Sir Phelim O Neale and his Complices. The Rebels were at first so confident of Successe that they had framed a Declaration, which should have been published after they had done the Worke; In it after a great Profession of their constant Allegiance to the King and his Success, they fall foul upon the Parliament of England; which, as they said, had designed the Ruin both of the King and them.

Sir Henry Tichborne made Governour of that Town.

The Declaration of the Rebels.

First Of the King, by drawing his prerogative out of his hand.

C Secondly Of the Irish, by plotting to extinguish their Religion, and to raze the Name of Catholiks and Irish out of the whole Kingdome, by sending over the Scottish Army into Ireland; wherefore they the said Irish resolved to perfect the Advancement of Truth and Safety of their Country, and endeavour the Regainning of his Majesties Prerogative. This Declaration was found in Tredagh dropt in the Street in the Night-time.

At Dublin the Lords Justices and Councell gave a Commission to Sir Charles Coote to raise a compleat Regiment of a Thousand Men, which in a short time they did; the greatest part Those who came up from the North stripped and spoiled by the Rebels, and lifted themselves out of a desire of Revenge.

D November the fifth, the Lords and Councell of Ireland sent their second Letter to the King in Scotland and to the Parliament and Councill and Lord Lieftenant in England; so that now both King and Parliament had received two Dispatches from them concerning the Originall and Growth of this Rebellion.

The first arrived at London the last of October and was that Evening delivered, and next Morning were brought down from the house of Lords to the house of Commons by the Lord Keeper; the Lord privy Seal, Lord high Chamberlain, Lord Admirall, Lord Marshall, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Barth, Earl of Dorset, Earl of Leicester, Earl of Holland, Earl of Berke, Earl of Bristol, Lord Viscount Say, Lord Mandevill, Lord Goring, Lord Wilmot, all of them being of the Kings privie Councill. Chaires were provided for these Lords to sit while the Letters were read, and then giving what information they could concerning the Irish Affaires they departed, leaving the Commons to consider further of them, who instantly Ordered,

Letters dispatched away to the King and Parliament for Supply.

E That the House be presently resolved into a Committee, to take into Consideration the matter offered concerning the Rebellion in Ireland. As likewise, To provide for the safety of the Kingdome of England. And then falling into a serious debate Voted,

The Parliament take Care to send over Money and men into Ireland.

That Fifty Thousand Pounds be forthwith provided.

That the Lords be moved, that Members of both Houses may declare to the City of London the present necessity to borrow Fifty Thousand Pounds to be secured by Act of Parliament.

That a Committee of both Houses consider of the Affairs of Ireland.

F That Owen O Conally, the discoverer, shall have Five Hundred Pounds presently, and two Hundred Pounds Per Annum Pension till provision of Land of Inheritance of a greater Value.

That the Persons of all Papists of Quality in England be secured.

That no Persons (except Marchants) shall pass to Ireland without a Certificate from the said Committee.

To all which the Lords Consented.

G Then the House of Commons Voted, Twenty Thousand Pounds for present supply. A convenient number of Ships for guarding the Sea-Coasts of Ireland.

That Six Thousand foot, and Two Thousand horse be forthwith raised for Ireland and Officers to be appointed over them.

That Magazines of Victuals be forthwith sent to Westchester to be sent to Dublin, as Occasion shall require.

That the Magazines at Carlisle be forthwith sent over to Knock-Fergus in Ireland.

That

That the Kings Councill consider of a Pacification for Rewards to such as shall do Service A in Ireland and for a Pardon to such Rebels as shall submit within a time, and of a Sum of Mony for Rewards to bring in the Heads of the principall Rebels.

That Letters of thanks be returned to the Lords Justices there.

That the Committee do consider how and in what manner to make use of Scotland here.

And a Bill to be prepared for Pressing of Souldiers for Ireland.

An Ordinance passed, For the Lord Lieutenent of Ireland to raise Three Thousand five Hundred foot, and six Hundred horse, and not to press our dear Brethren of Scotland any further then for one thousand foot to pass from Scotland to the North of Ireland. And B Armes to be delivered out by the Master of the Ordinance out of the store for Ireland for Eight Thousand Foot an a Thousand horse.

This was the Effect of the First Letter.

Upon which the Parliament Voted Two Hundred Thousand Pounds; and passed this following Order.

The Lords and Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, having a due regard C to the good affections of the City of London, expressed upon sundry occasions, by the Advancing and Lending of great Sums of Mony for the service of the Commonwealth: and particularly the Sum of 50000 l. Lent for the Irish Affaires, and the Sum of 50000 l. more Lent by the said City, unto the Peers attending his Majesty in the Northern parts before the beginning of this present Parliament, which are not yet payed or otherwise secured, shall be fully satisfied and repaid unto the said City of London, with interest of 8 l. per Cent. for one yeare, out of such monies as are or shall be raised by authority of Parliament. And for that purpose an Act of Parliament D to be passed with all expedition. Provided alwaies that this present Ordinance shall not in any waies be prejudiciall to any Members of the said House of Commons, who have formerly Lent any Sums of Mony to this Parliament, nor to the Northern Counties, nor to any persons whatsoever, to whom both Houses of Parliament, or the said House of Commons have formerly Ordred the paiment of any Sums of Mony, nor any Security given to them, before the making of this Ordinance.

The Lords Justices issue out Commissions of Marti- all Law,

In Ireland the Lords Justices and Councill were very carefull about Victualling the Castle of Dublin and issued out Commissions of Marti- all Law to severall persons of Lamister though Papi- E sters, delivering them Armes and Ammunition, as to the Lord Vicount Gernonston and others whom they would seeme not to suspect, hoping thereby to oblige them to be faithfull; but in vaine, for they appeared afterwards not only actuall Abettors of the Rebellion but also principall Contrivers of it. Yet were they for the present impowred, to use Fire and Sword for the destruction of the Rebels and their Adherents, and also to preserve the Lives of any of them and to receive any of them into his Majesties Mercy and Favour.

Dublin in some fear of Surprizall,

Dublin it selfe was about this time indangered, by reason that Four Hundred Irish Souldiers under the Command of Colonel John Barry lay imbarqued within the Harbour of Dublin under Pretense of setting saile for the King of Spaines Service. These Men should have been assistant at the Surprizall of the City and Castle, which sayling, they still continued hovering there to the great Terror of the Protestants within the City; and their Victuals being now spent they desired leave F to land to get Provision, which was at length granted to them, but both they and all other suspected persons were forbidden to come to Dublin or continue there without just and necessary Cause. The City by this time was indifferently well strengthened with the Regiments of Sir Charles Coote and the Lord Lambert and the Troopes of the Earl of Ormond, Sir Thomas Lucas, Captain Armstrong, and Captain Yarnier, and care was taken for the raising of a Regiment which was to be commanded by Collonel Crawford a Scottish-man who was recommended to them by the Prince Electour.

The Parliament of Ireland sit, but presently adjourn.

November the 17 the Parliament of Ireland sat and made a Protestation against the Catholikes, G whom the Papi- sters Members would not endure to stile Rebels, scarcely giving way that they should be called ill affected to the Peace, and men who traiterously and Rebelliously had raised Armes. And it was ordered, they should be treated with, but they growing proud with their Northern Successes contemptuously tore the Order and Letter of the Parliament and sent back a most insolent Answer, and after two daies Session this Parliament was Adjourned.

The private designs of the Popish Lords.

The Lord Dillon of Costelloe, and the Lord Taff had been delegated by the Parliament-Lords to carry over to the King their Advice concerning the readiest means for Quenching the present Irish Flames: they had also some other Instructions (more private) from the Popish Lords, to Negotiate the.

A the stopping of those Forces which were to be sent out of England; in their Passage a S.orne tooke them and drove them into Scutland; from whence they poisted towards London; but for all their Cunning and specious Artifice the Parliament had gotten some inkling of their Treachery, and therefore caused their Papers to be seized at Ware and their Persons to be committed; yet afterwards (dissension arising between the King and Parliament) found meanes to escape, and they with one Burk (who came over for the same purpose) followed the Court at Tork, where insinuating into the Kings Favour they perswaded him to hope for great matters from the Irish and to think better of them.

B The Earle of Leicester, as we have else-where said, was after Straffords death made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; to him the Lords Justices and Council, having lately made Sir Charles Coote Governour of Dublin, send now more particular Account of the Irish Affaires; who Answers them that he had acquainted the King at Edenburgh with all their dispatches, and that the Parliament by order from the King had undertaken the charge and Mannagement of the War, and had appointed three severall Ports of England Viz: Bristol, Westchester, and one other in Cumberland for Magazines and store-houses for severall parts of Ireland; and that they would hasten their Succours and likewise intreat his Majesty to encourage all such as shall upon their own Charges advance any Forces for the Service, by rewarding them honourably with Lands of Inheritance there; and that the Heads of the principall Traitors might be Prized.

C After this the Lord Lieutenant yet not willing to go to his Government in Ireland Commissioned the Earle of Ormond to be Lieutenant Generall of the Forces there which charge was confirmed to him by the King in Scotland and for his greater Incouragement Twenty Thousand Pounds were sent over to him.

November the 21, Sir Henry Tichburne Governour of Tredagh sent an Expreß to Dublin to give Notice that the Rebells were within sight of the Town by whom he expected a present Siege. The Irish sent one Captaine Stanley and the Countie Sheriff as Commissioners to Treat with the Town, as was pretended, but indeed to espy their Actions; yet were they received, for protracting the time till retournes came from Dublin. These comming to the Lord Moor made large expressions of the Generall affection which the Catholicks bore to him, Councelling him to retreat to his House Mellefont, profering to make him Generall of all Meach and Louth, and to satisfy him and his Tenants for all Damages received, upon Condition that he would side with them, which yet he nobly refused, and having intelligence of the Treachery of some of the Lords of the pale prevented about a Thousand Armes in their way which were directed to them by the Lords Justices, who were ignorant of their Projects, and Five Hundred Armes which had been granted to the Lord Gormonston upon his Petition being way-laid by the Enemy, were rescued by the Lord Mainman and brought into Tredagh, with a fortnights pay for the Regiments; after which the Lord Moor came to Dublin and offered to raise Six Hundred men with Clothes and pay till Supplies from England, upon condition that Four Companies in Tredagh not yet belonging to any certain Regiment might be added to his, to compleat the number of a Thousand.

E These passages of his so enraged the Rebells that they presently sent a party of thirteen Hundred foot to Mellefont, who after a pretty stiff Resistance from fifteen Troopers and four and twenty Musqueteers, and the loss of a Hundred and Forty of their Men, mastered the House, which they plundered and defaced to the loss of two Thousand Pounds, murdered an Old Gentleman of Eighty years of Age and a blind Man, and stripped the Women and so departed. And when the Parliament sent to treat with them, their Conditions were so high and insolent as shewed that they had no thoughts of Peace, desiring among other things, That they might have a Deputy of their own Nation.

F The rumour of the O Relys rising in the County of Cavan and advancing towards Tredagh, joyned with the consideration of Sir Henry Tichburnes late Letters, so wrought upon the Councell of Dublin that the designed Supplies were hastned, being Six Hundred Foot commanded by Maior Rosper, and Fifty Horse of the Earle of Ormonds Troop, commanded by Sir Patrick Weames, who making less speed then was convenient, both mist the opportunity of meeting with Sir Henry Tichburne (who was marched out of Tredagh to secure their march) and by reason of a fog stumbled upon two thousand of the Enemy near Gillingston Bridge, whom they descried not, till they were within Musquet shot, Sir Patrick Weames not trusting to the carriage of the new raised and inexperienced foot, and perceiving the Enemies to be treble their number, wheeled about with his party of horse and came safe to Tredagh; but Maior Rosper fought and was over powred, yet he and one Captaine More escaped thither also with a Hundred of their men. This Victory so much bragged of, was achieved by the Rebells under the conduct of Roger Moor, Hugh Birn, and Phillip O Rely, upon the 29 of November.

G Hitherto the Lords of the Pale had pretended great Loyalty and Affection to the Kings Service; but now they began to shew themselves open Correspondents with the Irish. Gormonston summons the County to a Generall meeting at Dulick, and after to the Hill of Croßy where all the Lords and Gentry met to the number of a thousand, and spending two or three houres in Consultation, there came towards them Colonel Mahon, Phillip O Rely, Hugh Boy-Rely, Roger Moor, Hugh Birn and Captaine Fox, attended on with a Guard of Musquetiers who in the names of the Northern Irish entered into an association with them to live and die in the same Cause; and after this they met againe at the Hill of Taragh where they deliberated about answering the Summons sent them from Dublin for their appearance there. And thus was the confederation perfected, which had been long hammered hammered between the Lord Gormanston and Roger Moor. The Northern Rebells encamped within the River of Boyn and stopt all intercourse between Tredagh and Dublin so that the City being greatly distressed the Council assembled and sent to the Lords of the Pale to desire them to repair thither to confer about the present State of the Kingdome and its safety, but the Lord of Gormanston in the name of the rest returns Answer.

'That understanding Sir Charles Coote the Governour had declared his intention at the Council-Board to execute a generall Massacre upon those of their Religion, they were constrained to stand upon their guard, for they knew Sir Charles's mind, by his late Cruelties at Wicklow, and Santry.

'Indeed Sir Charles about the time of Gillingham Fight had marched into the County of Wicklow against the Birnes and the Tooles (who had committed severall outrages upon the English inhabitants, and possessed themselves of the chief Forts and Places of strength thereabouts) And entering the Towne of Wicklow, executed some few Men and one Woman for Murders proved upon them; and in his returne beate Luke Toole, who with a Thousand Irish would have intercepted him: and the businesse of Santry was this;

'The Officers of the Army were enformed of a certaine Robbery committed by some of the Rebells within five miles of the City, and of the Murder of one Mr. Derrick Herbert a Dutch Merchant, whereupon two Officers with forty foot were commanded out against those Rebells having the informer for their guide, who led them directly to Santry, where finding some strangers with Weapons lodged in suspicious places, they slew four of them, and this was termed a Massacre.

The Lord Gormanston having sent in the forementioned Answer to the Lords Justices, the Gentlemen of the Pale assembled in Armes and gathered great numbers of Men unto them, the command of whom was conferred upon Luke Nestervill, second Son to the Lord Nestervill, who presently quarters his Shouldiers at Swords within six miles of Dublin: the Lords of the Council issue out an Order December 9. for their separating, with a Command that Nine of the principall of them should repair to them by Ten of the Clock the next day.

They refuse

These Summons they not only refused to obey, but also threatned to come downe and encamp at Clontarf a little Village standing upon the very Harbour of Dublin, most commodious for the blocking it up, and stopping all relief from England from coming to that City. By these Actions the inclination of the Pale, was manifested; so now the maske is taken off, The Lord Gormanston is declared Generall of the Forces within the Pale; Hugh Birn Lieutenant Generall, and the Earle of Fringale Generall of the horse; and all things there tend to the forming of a considerable Army.

The Lords
Justices desire 10000 Men to be sent them out of Scotland.

About the time of the Kings returne from Scotland the Lords Justices sent fresh Advertisements of their condition and of the daily encrease of the Rebells, to the Lord Lieutenant, with their desire, that seeing Scotland had been lately in Armes, and consequently was well provided for war; Ten Thousand Men might be sent from thence to their Reliefe. Commissioners out of Scotland came to London to treat with the Parliament about it, who made offer of Ten Thousand Men upon condition of Thirty Thousand Pounds advance Mony, Ships for their transportation and a Hundred Horse to be ready to joine with every Thousand Foot of theirs at their landing, and to obey the Order of the Scottish Generall.

Which at length is resolved on

These propositions were readily assented unto by the house of Commons and by them sent up to the house of Lords, who were content to agree to them, provided that the House of Commons would give Assurance for the sending over Ten Thousand English at the same Time. This tooke up some Debate between the two Houses, but in Conclusion the Lords yielded to the desires of the Commons; and great hopes there was that Succour should have been seasonably sent into Ireland; when on a suddain all was dashed, by quarrels arising between King and Parliament about priviledges; by these means many who had hitherto kept themselves Neuters were encouraged to declare for the Rebells; and about the middle of December the whole province of Munster revolted, and began to spoyle the English; and although a party of them had been routed neare Waterford by the Lord president, yet he having no other forces at Command, then his own Troop, and some few Country Gentlemen that sided with him, was not able to hinder their joining againe in greater bodies, so that now they grew more formidable, and made themselves Masters of all the province excepting onely Cork, Youghall, Kingsale, and some few other places. Thus were the Rebells strengthened by the accession of Leinster and Munster, and Dublin it selfe greatly distressed. Luke Nestervill with his undisciplined Regiment, had removed his quarters from Swords to Santry nearer Dublin, and another party of them was come within two miles of it to Finglas with great boast and threatsof what they would doe; but Nestervill was beaten back to Swords by Sir Charles Coote, and the others were dislodged by Collonell Cranford. Yet the City continued shrewdly straitned and surrounded on every side by the Enemy, nor had they any considerable help from strength.

A from England till the last day of December, and then Sir Simon Harcourt being by the Parliament designed Governour of Dublin arrived there with his Regiment. The Rebells Army consisted of 20000: besides stragling Parties which infested the Country in all places where the English had any thing to doe; and now they Stiled themselves the Catholick Army.

They besiege Tredagh.

The maine body sits downe before Tredagh blocking it up on all sides; hereupon the Governour bestirs himselfe, increases the fortifications of the Towne and so orders all things that the Irish had little or no hope of taking it otherwise then by famining; long they stayed not before they had occassion to make tryall of one anothers mettles; for the Towne having sent out some carriages for Corn from the green Hills, halfe a mile off, Three hundred and fifty foot and two Troopes of horse were ordered to sally out for the security of them; these were incountred in the middle way, by Three thousand Irish, at whose sight and shout the horse were so dismayed that they instantly fell back to the Gates leaving the foot to shift for themselves, where they had all perished, but that the Governour Tichburne courageously led out a party himselfe to their succour who had already stood too charges of the Enemy with great resolution, and now the Governour comming on to their rescue, the Rebells betake themselves to their heeles with the loss of two hundred men, and the English had the chase for a mile or more within sight of the Town walls and rook a competent booty of Mony Cloathes and Armes.

They are repuls'd by the Governour sallying out upon them.

After this the Enemy sent Father Darcy a Fryer lately, a Prior, as their Ambassador to the Town to require an absolute surrender of it: But the Governour told him that they were better able to keepe the Towne, then the Country was to keepe them, and that neither their Spirits nor their Power was so meane as to entertaine so unworthy thoughts: with this Answer the Fryar takes leave, leaving with them for their greater Terror the Coppy of an Oath taken by the Lords of the Pale and the rest of the Papists English and Irish.

Their Summons with the Governours Answer.

The Maior and Aldermen of the Towne refused this Oath as fearing thereby, to hazard the favour of fair quarter; and some of the Aldermens Wives hired a boy to advertize the Enemy of an opportunity of coming unexpectedly upon the Towne by night time, by reason that the River Boyne was frozen hard enough for their passage; but the Enemies diffidence to the Womens advice and the suddain thawing of the River was the cause that this Plot tooke no Effect, and the C Souldiers no whit daunted in their resolutions, upon New-years day agreed amongst themselves, to beat up some quarters Northwards; but the Gates were so frozen as not to be conveniently opened, yet one companie got over the Walls, killed fiftene Irish and a Centinell, fired a Village and returned; and a week after a greater party of Three Hundred foot and Eighty horse made another successfull sally, killed an hundred and forced as many into the River, where they were drowned and among them Arte Ro Mac Moghen a principall Ringleader; and so returned safe with the acquett of fifty Armes, some Cows and other pillage. Yet these small games could not keep the Towne from being in distress, Provision now growing short, and Souldiers and Townsmen beginning to droop in their Spirits; but just then as it were at the last gaspe comes Reliefe to the Towne in some small Vessels laden with Bisket and Munition which put the poore besieged into D such a fit of Jollity, as was like to have cost them deere. For the Souldiers out of Joy gave themselves so liberally that night to drink strong Ale, which the Popish Aldermen out of a design invited them to, that Watches, Centinells and all became less serviceable in case of invasion from the Enemy; who receiving Advice from their secret Friends within, tooke the offered opportunity, and early that morning made a Breach in the Wall, at which Five hundred of the chiefe Commanders entered (who looked upon it as a great peice of Gallantry, not doubting Success) these for an houre and halfe passed undescried, till giving their accustomed shout as a Token to their Complices, the Governour himselfe perceived the danger, and hastning to his own Company which then was the main Guard and causing the Drums to beat, he put his Forces into as good a posture as the suddenesse of the Alarum would permit, and so marching against the Enemy E gave so fierce a charge upon them that they began presently to shrink; by this time Lord Moor came in which fiftene horse and assisted the Governour in chasing the Irish up the Hill. Thus was the Towne cleared and the Irish who made cock-shure of their enterprize were repelled with the loss of Two hundred slayn, and such a number taken as Glutted the Prisons. The besieged waxing more carefull, now sent out a Pinnace for more Provision; and meditating revenge upon the Irish for their late attempt made three severall successfull Sally's in which they routed divers parties of the Enemy, brought in some stacks of Corne, about eight Cowes with other Provision and Apparell and some Prisoners.

Generall O Neale was come to the siege from the North, and resolves upon storming the Town; but just the day before, being Sunday, two Pinnaces, six Gabbards, three Frigots and a Shallop arrived safely from Dublin within the Barr, bringing with them, three months provision, and a F Prize taken from the Rebels laden with Herrings, besides so urcompanies of fresh men sent for the compleating the Lord Moor's Regiment, so that now they feared not any undertakings of their Adversaries. Monday following O Neale falls to storming, and having applyed his scaling Ladders to the Wall near St. Lawrence Gate, the Irish began to climbe (and the Centinel missing fire) got up to the top whence he knockt them down with the butt-end of his Musket and then calling for more helpe, they were glad to fly leaving thirteen scaling Ladders behind them. The next thing done in Tredagh was the publishing of a Proclamation from the State brought with the reliefe from Dublin, wherein the Heads of the chiefe Rebels were prized, O Neales at a Thousand Pounds, others at Eight hundred and others at Four hundred Pounds; each according to their quality. Many tricks were used by the Rebels for the redeeming of the Lord Mac Guire; G as the exchange of the Lady Blaney and her Children and Sisters and all their Prisoners in Ulster for him and two other Prisoners at Dublin, but whether the Lords Justices, and Councill durst not trust such perfidious dealers, or what ever was the matter, the motion did not take effect; The Pinnaces which brought the late Supply were sent back again for more; yet left such Courage in the Relieved that they would needs goe out and try the temper of their Enemies weapons. Hereupon Two hundred and twenty foot and an Hundred and twenty horse issued out and marched to Smiths Towne

A Towne, burning Bambeck in their way; here they met with Five Companies of the Irish whom they charged and vanquish't, killing Three hundred and taking two Collonels and an Hundred and Sixty Cowes, Preston himselfe, being hard put to it by Sir Patrick Weims, left his Baggage and Good booty, and fled; and here were Letters taken by which divers Lords of the English Pale were discovered to be Traitors.

Severall other succesfull sally's upon the Enemy.

The Lord Moor and the Governours, finding the success of this sally to be so good, made another with four Companies, and met with two companies of the Rebels, routed them flew, thirteen, tooke a Captaine of O Neale's Prisoner, compelled the rest to fly to Stamms, tooke the Castle of Calpe, and put Four and twenty therein to the Sword. After this they made many other bold attempts upon the Enemy, among which that of the Lord Moors upon Mac Brian at Tallagh Hallon, deserves to be mentioned; he had but Four hundred Foot and Eighty Horse, the Enemy thrice the Number; yet wanting in Valour what they exceeded in multitude were easily put to flight, and Moyle Mac Mogham carried Prisoner to Tredagh. These and other fortunate achievements, together with the great store of Corne which they brought in daily, and fresh provisions by Sea, to heartned the English, and amazed the Spirits of the Besiegers, that Generall O Neale, despairing of taking the Towne, privately raised his Siege and retired to Dundalk, and then the Governour opened the Gates and marched out, firing and pillaging round about where ever the Enemy had any thing to do. And thus was Tredagh delivered, March the Twentieth. After which the Market was abundantly increased (to the great refreshment of the Souldiers) by the coming of the Country people with Provisions. Lieutenant Generall Ormond had now gotten together a considerable Army of Three thousand Foot and Five hundred Horse, with which he sets forward to find out the Enemy, burning the County of Meath and so comes to Tredagh, the Irish dispersing all the way before him; there he calls a Councill of War, where it was resolved, That the Rebels should be pursued and unkenelled from their lurking holes; but the Earl of Ormonds presence could not be spared so long from Dublin: wherefore he returns and leaves the performance of that exploit to the Lord Moor and the Governour Tichburne.

The Siege of Tredagh ray'd

The first of these Marches out with a Thousand foot and Two hundred horse, and finds the Enemy in two divisions neer a Town called Aberdee, each division consisting of Twelve hundred men, between these and the Towne a party of horse placed themselves, and another gets between them and a bog to hinder their escape that way; in the mean while a forlorn of an hundred scoures the Ditches, beats out the Ambuscado which was laid for them, and then the English, falling upon their body, discomfit them and kill Four hundred. And now these two noble Commanders bend themselves to the attempting of Dundalk it self, their Recepracle and Magazine, well fortified with double Walls, double Ditches, marches on the one side and the Sea on the other. The cowardly Irish presently clap up the Protestant Prisoners close, meaning, if the Towne came to hazzard, to sacrifice all those poore Soules to their Revenge. The English come on, their forlorn gives fire at the Gate, yet could not enter till Lieutenant Colonel Waman with three hundred men pick-axed the Wall and forced his passage through the breach and made way for the Horse, and on they go, but comming against three brass-pieces maintained by Five hundred men they were faine to retire and take another way; so firing the Houses about the Castle, by advantage of the smoke got undescried under the walls to the very Gate, which they blew open and entered at it into the Castle and made themselves masters of it, and leaving a sufficient number of Musquetiers to man the Streets drew up the Ordinance against the inner Gate and discharged them in such a manner that the Enemy astonished at their hardy Resolution, betook themselves to their heeles leaving their Guns loaden.

He and Tichburne besiege Dundalk.

Generall O Neale seeing all in confusion steales away over the River, while Sir Henry Tichburne and the Lord Moor enter at severall waies, and take possession of the Towne, with the death of an hundred Papists, and of their own side but fourteen; viz. Ensigne Fortescue eldest Son to Sir Faithfull Fortescue, and three other Officers, and Ten common Souldiers, all slain by shot from the Castle. O Neale in his flight, out of Revenge, Burns Bally Muscumilen, a Castle of the Lord Moors, who in requitall for his Losses, and for his good Services, is by the Lords Justices Commissioned to be Governour of Dundalk. And thus the Protestants becoming Masters of the Field in those parts, the Action between Papists and Protestants in Ireland tooke end for this year.

And take the Town.

During the Kings abode in Scotland the two Maquisses of Hamilton and Arguile, being informed that there were some Plots upon their Persons, for some daies forbore their appearance in Parliament and absented themselves from Edenburgh. This comming to the knowledge of the Parliament, in England wrought in them such Jealousies and feares of the Kings designs, that immediately the Committee, during the recess, and then the Houses tooke order for a Guard, for the defence of London, Westminster and the Parliament. In this discontented humour, the King finds them at his returne which, was about the latter end of November; the Citizens feast him Magnificently and at Hampton Court are Banqueted by him and diverse Aldermen Knighted.

The Parliament entertain jealousies of the Kings designes.

The King returns from Scotland.

December the Second the King Summons both Houses together, and tells them;

'That he had tarried in Scotland longer then he was expected, yet not fruitlessly, for he had given full satisfaction to that Nation, but cannot chuse but take notice of, and wonder at the unexpected distractions which he finds at home.

'Lastly, he commends to them the State of Ireland, minds them of their slowness in sending ‘ sending reliefe thither, and desires them to appoynt a Committee to consider with ‘ two Scottish Commissioners whome he had brought along with him to treat with the ‘ Parliament about transporting Auxiliaries out of Scotland, as was desired by the Lords ‘ Justices of Ireland.

The next thing the King did was to publish a Proclamation for Obedience to the Laws (then in force) concerning Religion, and the performance of Divine Service without Innovation of Rites and Ceremonies,

He causeth the two Houses to appear before him to consult about severall affaires.

The Parliament take exceptions at some things in the Kings Speech and draw up a Petition and Remonstrance to be presented to him.

Then he issues out a Command for compeering of all Members of both Houses of Parliament at or before the Twentieth of January; and being come, upon the Fourteenth of December, he reminds them of the Irish Affaires and conjures them by all that is or can be dear to them or him to hasten that Businesse with all possible Speed; but withall he takes notice of a Bill for pressing Souldiers for Ireland, depending in the House of Lords, in Reference to which, because some Dispute had been started concerning Bounds of Prerogative therein, he was content for avoiding such Debates, that the Bill should pass so it were with a Salvo Jure both for King and People. This provisionall Item caused a conference between both Houses; wherein it was agreed that a Petition should be presented to his Majesty to acquaint him with the disgust of his Parliament at the breach of their Priviledge in taking notice of the forementioned Bill for impress, which he ought not to have done otherwise then by their Information; and for putting in that provisionall clause of Salvo Jure, before it was presented; desiring to know the names of those who had so unduly given him such Information, that they might be brought to condigne Punishment.

The Petition was ill resented by the King, yet they resolved not to desist till they had obtained a satisfactory Answer; Whereupon a select Committee was ordered to draw up another Petition and a Remonstrance for the further prosecution of the Businesse. The Petition was thus;

Most Gracious Sovereign.

Your Majesties most humble and Faithfull Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament, do with Joy acknowledge this Favour of God for your safe returne into England, when the Dangers and distempers of the State, have caused them to desire your presence and Authority to your Parliament for preventing of eminent Ruine and destruction to your Kingdomes of England and Scotland, somented by a malignant party for alteration of Religion and Government, the increase of Popery by the practice of Jesuits and other Engineers and Factors of Rome, corrupting the Bishops and privy Council. They being the cause of the late Scottish War and the Irish Rebellion: now, for prevention, they pray that your Majesty would concur with your Parliament, to deprive the Bishops of their Votes, To take away Oppression in Religion, Church Government and Discipline; To purge your Councils of such as are Promoters of these Corruptions, And not alienate any escheated Lands in Ireland by reason of the Rebellion. And these being granted they will make him happy.

After this comes out the Remonstrance very long and prolix setting downe all the Mistakes and misfortunes and pressures which had happened since the beginning of his Reigne; As

First, the roote and ground of these Dangers and Evils;

Secondly, their Maturity and ripenesse;

Thirdly, the effectuall means used for their extirpation and the progres therein made;

Fourthly, the Obstructions and oppositions interrupting; And Fifthly, the best Meanes for removing these Obstacles, and for accomplishing the Parliaments good Intentions, for the restoring of this Nation to its antient Renoune.

The Acters and Promoters of these Evils were described to be;

First, the Jesuited Papists;

Secondly, the Bishops and corrupted Clergy; And Thirdly, Interrested Councillors and Courtiers.

The roote of the mischief was the Malignant party whose principles were branched into Four particulars.

First, to soment differences and discontents between King and people about Prerogative and Priviledge, for their own principall Advantages;

Secondly, to suppress the purity and Power of Religion;

Thirdly, to unite and conjoine Papists, Arminians and Libertines, and out of them all to compose a body sufficient for the carrying on of their Designs; And Fourthly, to disaffect the King to the Parliament by Slanders, and by putting him upon other waies of Supply then Parliamentary Subsidies; And that the ends of these Malignants were to subvert the fundamental Laws and Principles of Government.

Then the Remonstrance charges this Malignant party more particularly, as main Causers of the dissolution of three severall Parliaments without Relief of Grievances, imprisoning and fining some of the Members; raising great sums of Mony by Loan, Privy-seales and Excise; and blasfing the Petition of Right.

The Substance of the Parliaments Remonstrance,

A Successless attempts upon Spain and France and Peace made with the former without content of Parliament. The loss of Rochell occasioned by the Loan of part of our Fleet to the French King. The deserting the Palsgraves cause; Charging the Kingdome with billeted Souldiers; and the designe of German Horse to inflave this Nation to Arbitrary Contributions.

And then the Remonstrance falls upon Scandalous Declarations published against the Parliament, injustice, oppression, violence, illegall enlargements of Forreits, Coat and Conduct money, Corrupt Councillis and Designs, projects, Monopolies, and Mis-actions of Courts of Judicature and Councill-Table; Then it chargeth the Bishops with many Enormities, particularly for contributing towards the raising of an Army for the contraining of the Scots to a conformity with their Superstitious Ceremonies; And Lastly, mentions

B What they had done for the Reformation of the said Abuses.
To their Petition the King returns this Answer,

That he knowes not any wicked or malignant Parsons whom he doth either Countenance or imploy;

The Kings Answer to the Petition,

That he would concur with his people in a Parliamentary way against all Popish designs, but would not consent to the depriving of the Bishops of their Votes
C in Parliament;

That he Judged the power of the Clergy sufficiently moderated by the taking away of the High Commission Court, so needed no further abridgement;

That he was willing to concur with them for the removall of any innovations in Religion by a Nationall Synod.

That he had no Counsellors or Ministers of State whome he will not at any time expose to tryall and leave to the Law, but cannot agree that any others should have D the Choice of them but himselfe.

That he concurs with them for the not altering the forfeited Lands in Ireland, but thinks it not seasonable to resolve before the Event of War be seen; And doubts not of their loyall endeavours for the support of his Royall Estate.

In Answer to the Remonstrance the King issues out a Declaration to his Subjects, the sum of which was,

His Answer to the Remonstrance,

E That he thought he had given sufficient Satisfaction to his Peoples Feares and Jealousies concerning Religion, Liberty, and Civill Interests by the Bills which he had passed this Parliament; desiring that misunderstandings might be removed on either side, and that the bleeding Condition of Ireland might perswade them to unity for the reliefe of that unhappy Kingdome.

F Soon after this hapned the insolent Mutiny of the London Prentices, who in a tumultuary manner resorted to White-Hall and Westminster to the great affrightment of the King, who thereupon commanded the Maior and Common Councill to take order for a double Watch and Guard to keep the riotous rabble in better order for the future and especially the ensuing Christmas Holydayes.

The tumultuous Concur of the London Apprentices,

December the Twenty Eighth the King sends a Message to the House of Lords to signifie to them that he would raise ten thousand Volunteeres for the Succour of Ireland if the Commons would undertake to pay them and upon New-years day comes out a Proclamation of the Irish Rebellion wherein the Irish (then in Armes) with all their Adherents and Abettors were denounced Rebels and Traitors.

The Irish proclaimed Rebels and Traitors,

G But two daies after the King upon Information given that the Lord Kimbolton and Five Members of the House of Commons viz: Mr. Hollis, Sir Arthur Hazelrig, Mr. Pim, Mr. Hambden, and Mr. Stroudes, had designed a Correspondence with the Scots and countenanced the late City Tumults; Ordred Sir William Killegrey and Sir William Fleming to seale up their Trunks, Studies and Chambers and to seize their persons; for the latter they were prevented, for the Members having timely notice of it had conveyed themselves away; the former was done and their Truncks and Papers seized; against wick the House the same day Voted;

The Kings proceedings against the 5 Members,

That if any Persons should attempt to seize the Persons or Papers of any Parliament men; such Members shall require the Aide of the Constable to secure such Persons till further order of the House; and that it is lawfull for any person to assist the said Members, and that the said Members may stand upon their Guard and make resistance according to the Protestation for defence of A the Priviledges of Parliament.

The King Fears of this, and speeds these Articles against the Five Members, and the Lord Kimbolton.

First, That they have traiterously endeavoured to subvert the Fundamentall Laws and Government of this Kingdome, and deprive the King of his legall power, and to place on Subjects an Arbitrary and Tyrannicall power.

Secondly, That they have endeavoured by many foul Aspersions upon his Majesty and his Government to Alienate the affections of his People, and to make his Majesty odious unto them. B

Thirdly, That they have endeavoured to draw his Majesties late Army to Disobedience to his Majesties Commands, and to side with them in their trayterous Designs.

Fourthly, That they have traiterously invited and encouraged a Forreign Power to invade his Majesties Kingdome of England. C

Fifthly, That they have traiterously endeavoured to Subvert the very Rights and Being of Parliament.

Sixthly, That, for compleasing of their traiterous designs, they have endeavoured, as far as in them lay, by Force and terror to compell the Parliament to joine with them in their traiterous Designs, and to that end have actually raised and countenanced Tumults against the King and Parliament. D

Seventhly, That they have traiterously Conspired to levy, and actually have levied War against the King.

The King comes to the House of Commons with a company of Armed Men to Arrest the 5. Members.

The next day the King attended with his Guard of Pensioners and some Courtiers almost five hundred, went to the House of Commons to arrest the Five Members, at whose entrance the Speaker arises and the King sits downe, views the House round, and perceives that the Birds he looked for were all flowne; for, being forewarned, they had withdrawne themselves into London; hereupon he tells them, That he came to looke for those Members whom he had accused of High Treason, and was resolved to have them wheresoever he found them, and expected to have them sent to him as soone as they should come to the House; but would not have them think that this Act of his was any Violation of Parliament.

The House very much distressed at this Act adjourn'd and publish a Declaration concerning it

And so failing of his purpose departed, leaving the House so extreemly distast'd at his Proceeding that the very next day January the Fifth they Voted it a Breach of Priviledge and adjourned till Tuesday following, appointing in the mean time a Committee to sit at Guildhall to consider of the most effectuall meanes for their Vindication and Security, with power to advise any Person or Persons, and to send for parties, Witneses, Papers and Records.

It was also ordered; That the Committee for the Irish Affaires should meet in the same Place at what Time they should think best; and both Committees to report their Results to the House.

And then they publish their Declaration,

THAT whosoever shall arrest any Member of Parliament by Warrant from the King only, is Guilty of the Breach of priviledges of the Parliament, and likewise that all those who attended the King when he came to demand the Five Members were guilty of a traiterous Designe against the King and Parliament; That the Proclamation for apprehending and imprisoning the said Members, was false, scandalous and illegall, and not of validity enough to hinder them from attending the House; and that the publishing of severall Articles of High Treason was a Breach of priviledges: wherefore they intreat his Majesty to discover the Names of those Informers and evill Counsellours, declaring all such Persons to be publike Enemies to the King &c. G

The Londoners throng to West. With Petitions against the Bishops.

In the mean time the Londoners came thronging to Westminster with Petitions and were over lavish of their tongues, bitterly inveighing against severall Peers whom they judged bad Advisers to the King, but more especially against the Bishops whom some of them affronted going to and coming from the House, which put them into such a fright that they sequestered themselves from the Parliament and drew up an inconsiderate Protestation against all Lawes, Orders, Votes, Resolutions

A Resolutions and Determinations, as in themselves nul and of none effect which had passed or should pass during the time of their forced absence, desiring that their Protestation might be entered by the Clarke of the House of Peers. This was signed by Twelve of them, and proved afterward a maine Break-neck of Episcopacy in England; for presently upon it at a Conference between both Houses it was agreed, That this Protestation of the twelve Bishops was extending to the deep intrenching upon the fundamentall Priviledges and Being of Parliament.

12 Bishops absent themselves from the House and protest against their Actions.

And not long after they were accused of High Treason, seized and brought on their knees to the Lords Barr, Ten of them committed to the Tower, and the other Two, in regard of their age, to the Black Rod.

They are charged with Treason and committed, 10 of them to the Tower and 2 to the Black rod.

B The House of Commons, upon suspicion of some designs upon their Persons, Petition the King for a Guard to be commanded by the Earl of Essex; which the King denied as not willing to have them too strong; Yet promised to take such care for their Security from violence as he would for the Preservation of Himselfe and Children.

The Parliament Petition the King for a Guard. And are backed by a Petition out of the City.

But that Answer being unsatisfactory, the City joyned with them and in their Common Council drew up a Petition wherein they complaine;

C That the Trade of the City was decayed to the utter Ruine of the Protestant Religion and the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects; by the designs of Papists, forrainers and Domesticks, more particularly their fomenting the Irish Rebellion; by changing the Constable of the Tower, and making preparations there; by the fortifying of Whitehall, and his Majesties late Invasion of the House of Commons; wherefore they pray, That by the Parliaments advice the Protestants in Ireland may be relieved, the Tower be put in the hands of Persons of trust, a Guard appointed for the safety of the Parliament, and that the Five Members may not be restrained nor proceeded against, but by the Priviledges of Parliament.

Before this, the King riding in his Coach into the City, Citizens by heaps flocked to his Coach side as he passed along the Street, beseeching him to agree with his Parliament and not to violate their Priviledges.

To their Petition the King returned Answer.

D That he could not express a greater sence of Ireland then he had done. That meerly to satisfie the City he had removed a worthy Person from the Charge of the Tower, and that the late Tumults had caused him to fortifie White-Hall for the security of his own Person.

The Kings Answer to the Petition.

E That his going to the House of Commons was to apprehend those Five Members for treason to which the Priviledges of Parliament could not extend, and that yet he would proceed against them no otherwise then Legally.

Soone after this the County of Buckingham Petition the King for Mr. John Hambden their Knight of the Shire.

The County of Buckingham Petition in behalf of Mr. Hambden.

That he and the Rest that lie under the Burden of Accusation may enjoy their just Priviledges.

The King removes to Hampton Court.

F And now such increase and numbers of ordinary people gathered together in a tumultuous manner about White-Hall and Westminster that the King mistrusting their Intentions, and fearing some danger from them thought good to retire to Hampton Court taking with him the Queene, Prince and Duke of Yorke, where he had retinues and Guard quickly increased by the Accession of divers of the Gentry. But the next day the Five Members were triumphantly guarded to Westminster by Water by a great number of Citizens and Sea-men, with Hundreds of Boats and Barges with Gunns in them Braving and Threatning as they passed by White-Hall; and making large Protestations at Westminster of their constant Fidelity and adherence to the Parliament.

G The King now at Hampton Court gives the like Answer to the Buckingham Petition as he had given to the City; but in the mean time the Parliament receives information, that the Lord Digbey and Colonel Lunsford were gathering some Troopes of Horse at Kingston, where the County Magazine was lodged; Whereupon they order, That the County Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace and the Trained Bands shall take care to secure the Counties and their Magazines, and to suppress all unlawfull Assemblies; And so Lunsford was apprehended and committed to the Tower, but Digbey escaped over Sea. The Court removing now to Royston, the Attorney Generall Sir Edward Herbert is summoned to appear at the Lords Bar to answer concerning the Articles against the Five Members, where it had gone hard with him if the King at his earnest Supplication had not taken him off by his Letter to the Lord Keeper Littleton (who succeeded Finch) wherein he clears the Attorney Generall and takes the whole businesse upon himself; Yet concludes, That finding cause wholly to desist from proceeding against the Persons accused, he had commanded his Attorney Generall to proceede no further therein, nor to produce nor discover any proof concerning the same. And so this Breach between King and Parliament was for a while stitched up. January the

Thirdly, That for erecting Mannours, creating Corporations, and regulating of plantations, A Commissioners shall be empowered by Parliament.

Fourthly, All undertakers to subscribe before severall daies prefixt in reference to the distance of abode from London.

Fifthly, Their Monies to be paid into the Chamber of London at four payments, Viz: a Fourth part in ten daies after subscribing, and the Third payment at three Months.

Sixthly, At subscribing to pay downe the twentieth part of his totall sum, and if he faile of his residue of the first fourth part within ten daies, he shall forfeit the twentieth part of the totall deposited; and so much more of his fourth payment, to be added thereto, as shall make up the one moiety of the said first payment. And if he faile in any other of the three payments, he shall then forfeit his entrie first fourth part, and all his Subscription to accrue to the common Benefit of the rest of the undertakers: Which the King confirms, February 26.

And the Committee of the Irish affaires issue out their Warrants to the severall parishes for the sending a Certificate of what sum of Mony they collected, and for the bringing of the said Monies to them; and indeed the people were generally free in their Contributions.

The King now returning to Greenwich considers of the Parliaments Petition about the Business of the Militia, and sends them this Answer.

That he is willing to condescend to all the Proposals concerning the Militia of the Counties and the Persons mentioned. But not of London and other Corporations, whose Government in that Particular, he thought it not either Justice or Policy to alter. But would not consent to derest himselfe of the Power of the County Militia for an indefinite time but for some limited space.

This Answer satisfied not, so that the Breach growing daily wider, the King declines those parts and the Parliament, progressed and to Theobalds, taking with him the Prince and Duke of York.

March the first, He receives a Petition from the Parliament, wherein they require the Militia more resolutely then before, affirming;

That in case of deniall the eminent dangers would constraine them to dispose of it by Authority of Parliament, desiring also that he would make his abode neere London and the Parliament, and continue the Prince at some of his Houses neere the City, for the better carrying on Affaires; and preventing of the peoples jealousies and feares: all which being refused, they presently order, That the Kingdome be put into a posture of defence in such a way as was agreed upon by Parliament, and a Committee to prepare a publique Declaration from these two heads.

First, the just causes of the feares and jealousies given to the Parliament and to cleere them from any jealousies conceived against them.

Secondly, to consider of all matters arising from his Majesties Message, and what was fit to be done.

And now began our Troubles; such preparations were made by Sea and Land all of a suddain. And the Earl of Northumberland Admirall of England is commanded to rigg the Kings Ships and fit them for Sea; and likewise all Masters and Owners of Ships were perswaded to doe the like; the Beakons were new made up; Sea-markes set up, and extraordinary posting up and down with paquets, all sad prognosticks of the civil War ensuing.

To Royston (whither the King was now come) the Earles of Pembroke and Holland bring the Parliaments Declaration and read it to him, March the Ninth, wherein they represent unto him some of his former misactions: As, The Attempts to incense the late Northern Army against the Parliament; The Scottish troubles, Jermines Treasons, and transportation by the Kings Warrant, the Petition delivered to Captain Leg with the Kings own hand, with the direction signed C. R. The Business of the Lord Kimbolson, and the Five Members, the suspitions designing a guard about his Person

The Kings Answer to the Parliaments Petition concerning the Militia.

The King goes to Theobalds where he receives another Petition about the Militia.

The Parliament set forth a Declaration and make preparations for War both by Land and Sea.

The Parliaments Declaration brought to the King to Royston by the Earls of Pembroke and Holland.

A Person, and under-hand promoting the Irish Rebellion; the ordering of Sir John Pennington to Land the Lord Digby beyond Sea, from thence to alienate the King from his Parliament, and to procure forein Forces for his Assistance, which now appeared more credible, by reason of his removall with the Prince, and the manifold Advertisements from Rome, Venice, Paris, and other parts, certifying, that the Popes Nuntio had solicited the King of France and Spain, to lend his Majesty Four thousand men apeece, in reference to some Design against Religion, and the Parliament.

And lastly, They desire him to turn away his wicked Counsellors, and put his Trust in Parliament, which if he would do, they would sacrifice their Lives, Fortunes, and utmost Endeavours, to the supportation of his Sovereignty.

B The Lords after the reading of the Declaration, would have perswaded the King to come neer the Parliament, and to grant the Militia for a time, which was refused; and then he told them in short, that their Fears, and Doubts, and Jealousies were such as he would take time to satisfy the whole World of: but that his own were not triviall, occasioned by so many scandalous Pamphlets and seditious Sermons, sundry publick Tumults hitherto uninquied into, and unpunished: but sometime after he publishes a Declaration in answer to theirs, and to the people.

The Summe of which was;

C * That he had no evill Counsellors about him, but leaves such to their Censure where they should find them.

* That he desired the Judgments of Heaven might be manifested upon those, who had any Design against the Protestant Profession.

* That the Scottish Troubles were buried in perpetuall silence by the Act of Oblivion passed in Parliaments of both Kingdomes.

* That their charging him with any Inclining to the Irish Rebels, was a high and causeless Injury to his Royall Reputation.

D * That he never intended to exasperate the late Army, or in any wise to use them against the Parliament.

* That Captain Leg's Petition was brought to him Subscribed by the Officers of the Army, desiring that the Parliament might not be hindred from Reforming the Church and State, to the Modell of Queen Elizabeths Dayes; And was Advantagious unto them, and to assure Sir Jacob Asbly of his Opinion therein, he writ C. R

* That the Lord Digby, and Mr. Fermin, neither were at White-hall, nor had any Warrant from him after the Restraint.

E * That he had given sufficient Answers about Kimbolton, and the Five Members.

* That the Care of his own Safety caused him to raise a Guard at White-hall, and to receive the Royall Tender which the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court did make him of their Service: And that he looked upon their forein Advertisements by them mentioned, as meerly wild and irrationall.

The Kings Answer to the Parliaments Declaration.

The Kings Message to the Parliament from Huntington.

The Parliament declare against the Kings absence, & impute it to evil Council.

The King arriving at Tork repeals his Grant to the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage.

The King removes on his way Northward, whilst in the mean time the Parliament Voted the Ordinance for the Defence of the Kingdom, no whit prejudiciall to the Oath of Allegiance, but to be obeyed as the Fundamentall Laws. And that the Kings Commands for Lieutenancy over the respective Counties, to be illegall and void: But he coming to Huntington, sends them a Message, March the Fifteenth, That he means to make his Residence at Tork, and desires them to hasten their Succours for Ireland, and not upon any pretense of Order or Ordinance, (to which he is not a Party) of the Militia, or any other thing, to do or execute against the Laws, which he himself was to keep, and his Subjects to obey; declaring his Subjects not to be obliged to obey any Act, Order, or Injunction, to which he hath not given Consent.

In answer to which, they resolve that the Absence of the King so far from his Parliament was Obstructive to the Relief of Ireland: And therefore all those Counsellors which advised him to it, are to be suspected as Favourers of that Bloody-Rebellion; as likewise those who perswaded his Majesty to question, or contradict their Votes, which was a high breach of Priviledge of Parliament.

March the Sixteenth, The King at Stamford Proclaims for putting the Laws against Papist-Recusants in Execution; And from thence proceeded North-wards till he came to Tork, and there March the Twenty Fourth, Repeals his Grant for the passing of the Bill against Tonnage and Poundage, June the twenty Second last past, Commanding payment thereof for the future, according to the Act 1 Jac. and so ends this year.

The King and Parliament differ about who should be chief Commander at Sea.

It was now the Eighteenth Year of King Charles his Reign, being the year 1642. which Commenced with a fresh Difference between King and Parliament. The Earl of Norshumberland Admirall of England being indisposed, the King Ordered Sir John Pennington Vice-admirall, to take the Charge of that Summers Fleet for the Narrow Seas, but the Parliament earnestly desired that it might be conferred upon the Earl of Warwick, but were refused by the King, which bred more ill Blood.

The people of Yorkshire Petition the King to endeavour an Agreement with the Parliament.

During the Assises at York, the Gentry, Ministers, and Free-holders of that County, April the Fifth, presented the King with a Petition, Wherein they humbly Requested Him to Declare the best Expedients for the taking away all Mis-understandings between Him and the Parliament.

To this he Replies (after a profession of his good Will) in severall Particulars, That the only way of good Understanding, was, For the Parliament to consider of his Message the Twentieth of January last, and find out some way for settling the Militia by Act of Parliament, without prejudice to his Honour, or the Safety of the Kingdome; Advised them to apply to the Parliament for the Good of All, April the Seventh: And next Day certifies the Houses by Message, that he intended to raise his Guard out of the Counties neer Chester, Two Thousand Foot, and Two Hundred Horse, to be supplied with Armes from the Magazine at Hull, taking the Oath of Supremacy and Allegiance; That if the Parliaments Undertakings for that War, would not suffice to defray the Charges of Raising and Paying them, he would pawn, or sell his Land, or Houses; desiring them withall to quicken their Levies for Munster and Connaugh, as the Scots already did theirs of Ulster, and offers his Person against the Rebels.

The Parliament oppose the Kings Designs for the raising of a Guard, and sending the Magazine of Hull. Sir J. Hotham is sent down to keep Hull for the Parliament. The Parliament disallow of the Kings intention to go in Person into Ireland.

The Parliament who did all along suspect his Journey North-wards to be out of a Design of seizing the Magazine at Hull, thought it neither safe for them now to let him bring that about, nor yet to trust him with an Army; and therefore pray, that, that Magazine might be removed from thence to the Tower of London, as a Place of more safety, and easier Transport for Ireland. And that the Reprieve for the six Priests in Newgate may be taken away, and they Executed: and to make the surer Work, Sir John Hotham a Member of the House of Commons, is sent down to take upon him the Government of that Place, who coming thither sooner then he was expected, excluded the Earl of Newcastle, to whom the King intended that Prefecture; Whereat he being Irritated, sends a sharp expostulating Letter to them about it, to know the Reason why they should presume to make themselves their own Carvers, and to act things in such a manner without his Privy; yet in the end of it he leaves the six Priests to Justice, the time of their Reprieve being expired; But continues his Resolution for a Personall Voyage into Ireland. To put him off from which, they Petition him not to hazard his own Person, whose Absence would only interrupt the Proceedings of Parliament here. That they must suppress all Levies otherwise raised then they should Advise and direct, and could not submit to any Commissioners, but must Govern by Consent of Parliament, till his Return.

This was ill taken, and the King tells them, That though he regards them as his great Council, yet they must know, they were called by his Writ and Authority to Council, and not to Command him who was not Devested of any Right he had before their Sitting; that their Reasons did not satisfy him, nor their Menacing Advice deter him from his settled Determinations. Which coming to the knowledge of the Lords Justices, Parsons, and Burlace, and the Council of Ireland they returned him their Humble Thanks, to the great Discontent of the Parliament.

The King encouraged by a Petition from the County of York, that the Magazine might not be removed from Hull; Taking with him his Guard, mostly consisting of Lords and Gentlemen, came thither in Person the Twenty Third of April, where he finds the Gates shut upon him, and the Bridges drawn up: But from the Wall Hotham appears, and upon his Knees entreats his Majesty not to Command that, to which, without the breach of his Trust he could not yeild Obedience: Whereupon the King finding his Entrance prevented, caused Hotham instantly to be Proclaimed Traytor, and sent up to the Parliament to demand Justice against him, and Commanded the Mayor and Fraternity of Kingston upon Hull, and the Garrison therein not to adhere to Hotham, nor permit any part of that Ammunition to be removed without his Assent. Then stomaching his Affront, he again demands Justice upon Hotham from the Parliament, and the delivery of the Town and Magazine, till both which be done, he would intend no other business: But receiving no Answer, Scouts are said to intercept Letters and Messengers between Hull and the Parliament, which they Voted to be a high breach of their Priviledges, and ordered the Sheriffs and Justices of the Counties of York and Lincoln to suppress all Forces that should be levied against Hull.

The King denies to signe the Bill for the Militia.

The Bill of the Militia was now passed in Parliament and presented to the King, who refused absolutely to sign it, because of some alterations in it, from what he had designed to be done by his Council.

The Parliament justify Sir John Hotham's keeping the King out of Hull.

The next thing by them done to Answer the Kings Message concerning Hotham, whose Commission and Action they justified as necessarily occasioned by the desperate Designs of Papists, and other Jealousies grounded upon the Lord Digbeys intercepted Letters, and the Suspitions of the coming of Captain Leg, the Earl of Newcastle and the King himself to that Town, concluding it a breach of Priviledge in Proclaiming Hotham Traytor, without a Legall

A Form, and resolved to send a Committee of Lords and Commons to reside there, for the better securing Hull, and Him.

Hotham had already a thousand in Garrison, yet the Parliament doubting that Number would not be sufficient for the Defence of the Place, Authorise him to encrease his Strength by the Counties Trained Bands, or other Levies; Whereupon he issues out his Warrants: In Obedience to which Divers of them march thither with their Armes, some of whom he retains, others he Disarmes and sends back; the King declares these Proceedings of the Parliament, and Hotham, utterly Illegal, and Commands the high Sheriffs to take care that no Soldiers, or Trained Bands, Muster, or March without his Immediate Warrant.

B And forthwith he summons the Knights and Gentry of the County of York, to whom he Declares some Reasons, why it was necessary for him to encrease his Guard, and thoroughly perswaded them of it; that they were willing to Contribute their best Assistance thereunto, whereby the King had pretty well strengthened himself, and more had done, had not those Members of Parliament (who came with the last Message to the King to York, and did still reside there in Quality of a Committee) prevailed with some of the Free-holders to Protest against it. And the Parliament Declare, That the Subjects unless bound to it by special Service, could not without Transgression of the Laws Attend him at his Pleasure, but if they did, were Disturbers of the Peace, and ought to be suppressed by the Sheriff, with the Power of the County.

The King summons the Gentry of York shire to his assistance.

C In the mean time, Sir Thomas Gardner, who had been Recorder of London for six years, being Impeached by the Parliament, and in danger of Hanging, was glad to snuff for himself, and by Flight escaped to the King: who using all waies and means of his Prerogative for adjourning the next Term to York, was obstructed by the Parliament, who Voted it illegal, and forbad the Lord Keeper to Issue out Writs, or Seal any Proclamations to that end.

The Recorder of London impeached by the Parliament, escapes by flight to the King at York.

About this time the Parliament began to put the People into a Military Posture, requiring all persons in Authority, to put their late Ordinance of the Militia in Execution, which the King by Edict forbids. But for the peoples satisfaction, the Parliament publish a scurrilous Declaration to the same Effect, with their former Remonstrance, only one Thing was added; Viz. That the King at his being in Scotland had Countenanced the Irish in their Rebellious Designs, and that his Connivance was manifested by his tedious with-holding the Proclamation (whereby they were Declared Traytors) till the Second of January (being almost a Quarter of a Year after the breaking out of the Rebellion) and then had appointed but Forty Copies to be Printed, and none of them to be Published without his Pleasure signified; Whereas his Proclamations against the Scots had been dispersed throughout all the Kingdome with publick Prayers and Execrations.

The Parliament publish another Declaration.

The King makes Answer speedily to it, not much differing from what he had sayd before; yet tells them, That as to the Business of the Irish, that his Councill in Ireland had desired the Proclamation no sooner, nor so many Copies by Twenty, as he had Signed and sent them.

Which is answered by the King. The Kings Letter to the Councill in Scotland. With their answer perswading him to adhere to his Parliament.

E His Majesty had written a Letter to his privy Councill in Scotland, to take away from them all Suspicion of those Imputations so frequently laid to him at Home; as Namely, to be Papishly Affected, to be Guilty of the Blood-shed in Ireland, to bring in Foreign Forces. Wherewith they seemed to be so satisfied; that they returned a most respectfull Answer, and forthwith interposed their Mediation, to heal the Breach, before it grew deeper; humbly Desiring the King to hearken to his Parliament, as his greatest, his best, and most unparalleled Councill, and discouraging him from any personall Journey into Ireland: And with this Message was sent the Earl of Lowdon, Chancellor of Scotland; and after this, the Scots Petition the Kings privy Councill there, not to meddle with any Verball, nor reall Engagement for the King against the Parliament of England.

F Hereupon the English Parliament publish a protestation, wherein they Vindicate their own Proceedings, and Declare the great Sense they had of the Affection of their Scottish Brethren, manifested unto them in so many Particulars, and more especially in the late mentioned Petition.

The parliaments Protestation.

The Earl of Brissoll an old Experienced States-man, prudently foresaw that such unlucky Beginnings must necessarily come to no less an unlucky Issue, and therefore was willing and ready to labour a timely Accommodation; and to that end states the Case to the Lords, and laies down the Offers of the King on the one side, and the Professions of the Parliament on the other side; and shews them the Effects of a Civill War (then likely to ensue) by the Example of Germany, and the late expensive Troubles with Scotland. And so he proceeds to propose some waies for prevention of the Dangers imminent.

The Earl of Brissoll labours to bring about an accommodation between the King and Parliament.

G First, A select Committee of Parliament, truly to state the matters in Difference, with the most probable waies of Reconciling them.

Secondly, To descend into the Particulars which may be expected, either in point of supporting the King, or relieving his People.

And lastly, How these Conditions agreed upon may be secured. And to shew the Necessity of this Course, he summs up these Reasons; The Deplorable Estate of Ireland, The Debts, and Necessities of the Crown, The Distractions likely to produce Confusion of Religion, most dangerous and destructive to a State; besides the generall Distraction of the Subjects, who between Commands and Countermands, know not whom to Obey.

This was admitted as good and solid Reason, but Divine Justice would not so permit the Sins of the English Nation to go unpunished; and Brisfolls Speech though well received, yet proved ineffectuall.

Much Clashing between the King and Parliament, by Declarations, Orders, and Counter-commands.

In the mean time, the Kings Guard encreases at York, which the Houses Voted a Preparation for War against the Parliament, a Breach of the Trust reposed in him by his People, contrary to his Oath, and tending to the Dissolution of his Government, and all such as serve him there, are Traytors to the Laws of the Kingdome, 11 Rich. 2. and 1 Hen. After this, the Parliament publish another Remonstrance, or Declaration of the Kings Mis-actions, and their own Priviledges, which the King Answers, and they again Reply to: And receiving Answer from the King, they Ordain May the Twenty Eighth, That all high-Sheriffs, Justices, &c. within an hundred and fifty Miles of the City of York, do make stay of all Armes and Ammunition carrying to York, and the Persons so conveying to be apprehended, and likewise that all Sheriffs within the Kingdome of England, and Dominion of Wales, shall by the Power of the Countie, suppress all Forces of Horse and Foot, coming together by the Kings Commission or Warrant, and all people of what Rank soever, are to be Aiding to their Suppression; and these to be published in all Market Towns and Churches. The King Cries Quits with them, forbidding all his people belonging to the Trained Bands, or Militia of the Kingdome, to obey any Order or Ordinance of any of the Houses, according to a Statute 7 Ed. 1. And forthwith he requires all Ministers, Free-holders, Farmers, and substantiall Copy-holders of the County of York, to meet at Hayworth Moor, near York, upon Friday Whitsun Week, by Nine in the Morning, to the Sheriff of the County of York. Which the Parliament Declared to be against Law, and of none effect and Command all people to disobey it, for so doing the Parliament will protect them.

Divers of the Lords and Commons withdrew themselves to the King.

Divers Members of the Commons, as well as of the Lords, misliked of those Proceedings of Parliament, and therefore with-drew themselves to the King, which the House observing, Ordered, That all such as did not make their personall Appearance by the Sixteenth Day of June ensuing, should be Fined One hundred pound towards the Irish Wars, such only excepted, as were employed by the Parliament.

The Parliament declares against pawning the Crown Jewels. XIX. Propositions sent from the Parliament to the King.

They knew that the Queen had Pawned the Crown-Jewells in Holland, for Money to be transported to the King, which to prevent him of, they Order, That whosoever hath, or shall pay, lend, send, or bring any Money in specie into this Kingdome, for, or upon those Jewells, or accept of any Bill hereafter, shall be an Enemy to the State.

June the Second, the Parliament sent to the King Nineteen Propositions.

I. That all the Kings privy Councell, great Officers, and Ministers of State, may be put out, excepting such as the Parliament shall approve, and to Assigne them an Oath.

II. That all Affairs of State be managed by the Parliament, except such Matters as are transferred by them to the privy Councell, and to be concluded by the Major Part of the Nobility under their Hands, the full Number not to exceed Five and twenty, nor under Fifteen: If any Place fall voyd in the Intervall of Parliament, then the major Part of the Councell to choose one to be Confirmed at the next Session of Parliament.

III. That all the great Officers of the Kingdome shall be Chosen with Approbation of Parliament, and in the Intervall, &c. before sayd.

IV. The Government and Education of the Kings Children by Parliament, &c. ut supra.

V. Their Marriages to be Treated and concluded by Parliament, &c.

VI. The Laws against Papists, Priests, and others, to be Executed without Toleration, no Dispensation except by Parliament.

VII. No Popish Lord or Peer to have Vote in Parliament, their Children to be Educated in the Protestant Faith.

VIII. To Reform Church-Government as the Parliament shall Advise.

IX. To settle the Militia as the Parliament have Ordered, and for the King to recall all his Declarations published against their Ordinances therein.

X. All privy Councillors and Judges to take Oath for the maintenance of the Petition of Right, and other Statutes which shall be made this Parliament, &c.

A 'XI. All Officers placed by Parliament to hold their Places, Quam diu bene se gesserint.

'XII. All Members of Parliament put out during this time, be restored again.

'XIII. The Justice of Parliament to pass upon all Delinquents, and they to appear or abide their Censure.

B 'XIV. The Generall Pardon to pass with Exceptions, as the Parliament shall Advise.

'XV. All Forts and Castles of this Kingdome to be disposed of by Parliament, ut supra.

'XVI. The King to discharge all his Guards and Forces now in being, and not to raise any other, but in case of Actuell Rebellion.

C 'XVII. The King to enter strict Alliance with all Reformed States, for their Assistance, to recover the Rights of his Sister, and her Princely Issue, to those Dignities and Dominions which belong unto them.

'XVIII. To clear the Lord Kimbolton, and the Five Members by Act of Parliament.

'XIX. No Peer hereafter to be made, shall sit in Parliament without their Consent.

D These Propositions were by the King rejected, as inconsistent with his Regality, So that now men began to despair of any good Issue of the Business. The King for his part Careless the County of York, and Declares to the Commons the Reasons of his Summoning the Gentry (and not them) together with his Intentions of Protecting them against all Oppressions, and to ease the Charge of Billet-money, and to put the Trained Bands of the Kingdome under Persons of Honour and Loyalty.

They are rejected by the King.

B sh sides make preparations for War.

The Parliament on the other side, Order June the Fourth, That all the Deputy-Lieutenants of England and Wales, that be not Members of the House of Commons, be present at the severall Daies, and Places of Training and Mustering the Counties: And all Lords Lieutenants are Ordered to dispatch their Warrants and Commissions accordingly, and that some Members of both Houses shall be sent down to be present, and to Countenance the Service.

This Order was vigorously put in Execution, and six daies after, Viz. June the Tenth, comes out another for bringing in of Money, or Plate, to maintain Horse, Horse-men, and Armes, for the publick Peace and Defence of the King, and both Houses of Parliament.

In the mean time, the Kings Agents in Holland are busie about getting Armes and Ammunition for him upon Pawn of the Crown-Jewels, whilst he himself sends abroad his Letters with Commissions of Array, beginning with the County of Leicester, Directing it to the Earls of Huntington, and Devon, Authorizing them to Muster all the ancient Trained Bands, and Freehold Bands of the Country, and over them to appoint Colonels, Captains, and Officers, and to Issue Warrants for Assembling the people for discharge of that Service. This Commission was Declared by the Parliament to be against the Law, the Liberty, and Property of the Subject, and the Actors therein to be Disturbers of the Peace, and Betrayers of the Subjects Liberty.

The King issues out the Commissions of Array.

F The Lord Keeper Littleton, having delivered the Great Seal to one Eliot, whom the King had sent to him for that purpose, durst not stay behind, for fear of being questioned about it, but shifted away to the King to York, as likewise many of the Peers had done, whose Names we find thus Recorded;

The Lord Littleton flies to York with the Great Seal

The Duke of Richmond, Marquis Hartford, the Earls of Lindsey, Cumberland, Huntington, Bath, Southampton, Dorset, Salisbury, Northampton, Devonshire, Cambridge, Bristol, Westmoreland, Barkshire, Munmouth, Rivers, Newcastle, Dover, Carnarvan, Newport, the Lords of Mowbray and Matravers, Willoughby of Erisby, Rich, Howard of Carleton, Newark, Pages, Chandas Faulconbridge, Pawlet, Lovelace, Savile, Coventry, Mohun, Dunsmore, Seymore, Gray of Ruthen, Capell, Falkland Master Controller, Secretary Nicholas, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, chief Justice Bancks. These Noblemen, and the privy Councell were by the King summoned, to whom he Declares, and Protests, that he would not usurp any illegall Authority over them, but is ready to maintain them against all others that would; And that he would Defend them from all Votes and Orders of Parliament, together with the true Protestant Religion, the lawfull Liberty of the Subject, and the just Priviledges of the three Estates of Parliament: Nor will he engage

An Army raised by the Parliament under the Command of the Earl of Essex.

The Parliament Petition refused by the King.

The King furnish'd with Money from the Queen, & from divers Lords and Gentlemen.

them in any War, but what shall be for the necessary Defence of his, and their Rights. Whereupon they all engaged to him their Duty and Allegiance in a most solemn Protestation; Sir Richard Gurney was then Lord Mayor of London, to whom, and his Brethren the Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, the King sends his Letters, forbidding them (upon Perill of having their Charter questioned) to levy Armes, or raise Money, upon pretence of a Guard for the Parliament, or any other Account, excepting only the Relief of Ireland, or the payment of the Scots Subjects.

And now comes out the Kings generall Declaration, wherein he Descants upon all the Parliaments Declarations for the last seven Months, and especially upon the last; professes, that henceforward he expects they should break out into disloyall Actions, Declaimed against their making the Defence of the King to be the pretence for their raising Forces, Pretends his own constant Resolution for the preserving of Peace, Religion, the Laws and Subjects Liberties; And expects all his Subjects to assist him against the Trayterous Attempts of such men as would destroy his Person, Honour, and Estate, and bring on a Civill War; engaging that whosoever should bring unto him Money, or Ammunition, Horse, or Armes, should receive Eight pounds per Cent. Considerations, and have good Assurance of both Principall, and Interest, upon his Forest Lands, Parks, and Houses.

In the mean time the Lords Subsign a Protestation, wherein they disallow all Meanings of War against the Parliament, and affirm their Endeavours only to tend to the maintaining of the Protestant Religion, the Laws of Peace, and Prosperity of the Kingdome.

About this time the King by publick Proclamation forbid all Levies of Forces, and all Contributions to such Levies, without his express pleasure, grounding his Prohibition upon sundry Statutes, as 7. of Ed. 1. 2 Ed. 3. 11 Rich. 2. and the Earl of Shrewsburies Case in the Reign of Hen 8. Then he minds them of their Oath of Allegiance, by which they were bound to be faithful not to the King only, as King, but to his Person as King Charles, contrary to the Parliaments Distinction betwixt his Person and his Authority, his Person at York, his Authority in Parliament.

Lastly, Concludes with a Justification of his Commissions of Array, which by this time were Issued into the severall Counties of England and Wales: To this the Parliament Reply, and he again to them, and they to him, and he to them again; All which Messages rather hindered, then allayed the Difference: And now began England to be divided, as once was Italy, into Guelphs and Gibellines; Royallists, and Parliamentarians, Cavaliers, and Roundheads.

The King to strengthen his own Party, makes a Progress from York into Nottinghamshire, and summoning the Gentlemen and Freeholders of that County to Newark, Caressees them with the most Obliging Expressions imaginable, for their Forwardness and Affections to him, Declaring his Resolutions of Acting according to the Protestation at York: The like he did to those of Lincolnshire, at Lincoln, and then July the Eleventh, sends a Message to the Parliament, to certifie them of his Intentions, to reduce Hull by Force, if not forthwith delivered to him, which if they should do, he would then admit of their further Addresses, and return such Propositions as may best conduce to prevent the Inguent War; together with the Message he sent them a Copy of that Proclamation, which he published against Sir John Horham, wherein he Complains of the Affront done to his Person by Sir John, and of the Parliaments justifying that Action by their Votes, and Orders, That Horham having Fortified the Town, and drowned the Country, had also set out a Pinnace at Sea, which had intercepted his Packet-Boat with the Queens Letters, and that the Earl of Warwick contrary to the Kings Command, had taken upon him the Command of the Fleet; for which Reasons, the King was resolved to punish Horham, and all other his Assistants. Indeed the Earl of Warwick had been by the Parliament commended to the King, as the fittest man for Admirall, the Earl of Northumberland being then sick, but he was Rejected by the King, who conferred that place upon Sir John Pennington; yet afterwards the Parliament conceiving it necessary, to get the Fleet into their Hands, the Earl of Warwick was by them Declared Admirall, who found such means, that in a short time, notwithstanding all the Opposition of Pennington, and his Adherents, he drew the Sea-men to his side, and completing his Design, Exauctorated the Captains of the opposite Patty, and put in Others in their stead: Soon after which, a good Ship, called the Lyon, Laden with Armes and Ammunition for the King, from Holland, being ignorant of these last Passages, fell in amongst them, which was by Warwick taken, and sent up to the Parliament.

The Parliament now thought fit to Arm, and therefore resolve, that an Army shall be raised for Defence of King and Parliament, and the Earl of Essex to be Captain-Generall, and the Earl of Bedford to Command the Horse.

The Earl of Holland, Sir John Holland, and Sir William Stapleton were Ordered to carry a Petition to the King then at Beverley; the Effect whereof was, To pray him to Disband all his Forces, to recall his Commissions of Array, dismiss his Guards, and return to the Parliament: All which the King refused. The Parliament consider of raising Moneys, and so Declare for Loan upon Publick Faith, to promote which, the Endeavours of the Ministers were not a little Serviceable unto them, whereby in a small time a very considerable Mass of Money, Plate, and Ammunition was brought in; the King was pretty well furnished with Moneys from the Queen upon the Pawned Jewells, and some Contribution from the Cavalier Lords, and Gentlemen, besides a liberall Loan from the University of Oxford: From Beverley the King removes to

Leicester,

A Leicesters, and caresses the Inhabitants of that County in like manner, as he had done to those of Nottinghamshire, and Lincolnshire; only the Earl of Stamford was Proclaimed Traytor for removing the County Magazine from the Town, to his own House at Bradgate, and setting a Guard over it; but shortly after the Parliament (whose Lord-Lieutenant he was for that County) Vindicated him by a publick Declaration.

The Earl of Stamford proclaimed Traytor by the King.

August the First, the King comes back to Yorkshire, Informs the Gentlemen there of the Parliaments forwardness to a War, desires them to spare him some Armes, and to Compleat Prince Charles his Regiment for the Guard of his Person, under the Command of the Earl of Cumberland.

A Regiment to be raised for Prince Charles under the Command of the Earl of Cumberland.

B Nor was the Parliament slack in their Business, but Declare for the raising of all their Power and Force against all Traytors which disturbed the State, and the Peace of the Kingdome, the Principall of which were Declared to be the Commissioners of Array, Viz. Of the Northern Counties, the Earl of Northampton, the Lord Dunsmore, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, Son to the Earl of Lindsey, Henry Hastings, and others, of the Counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, Leicester, Warwick, Oxfordshire: And for the Western Counties, the Marquis Hartford, the Lord Pawlet, Lord Seymour, Sir John Stowell, Sir Ralph Hopton, and John Digbey, and Others, in the County of Summerset. To oppose whom, the Parliament Authorize their Generall Essex, and Chiefs also, to be Lieutenants of the severall Counties; Viz. The Lord Say of Oxon, the Earl of Peterborough of Northampton, Lord Wharton of Buckingham, Earl of Standford of Leicester, Earl of Pembroke of Wiltshire, Earl of Bedford of Summersetshire, and Devon, Lord Brook of Warwick, Lord Crambone of Dorsetshire, Lord Willoughby of Parham of Lincolnshire, Densill Holla of the City and County of Bristol.

The Commissioners of Array proclaimed Traytors by the Parliament.

Lieutenants of severall Counties constituted by the Parliament.

The King deals with their Commanders, as they did with his, and Proclaims Generall Essex, with all his Colonells and Officers, which would not instantly lay down Armes, to be Rebels and Traytors: And to Counterplot their Designs of sending some Forces Northward, against himself and others Westward, to take in Portsmouth, he Commands Colonel Goring the Governor thereof to oppose them, and orders William Marquis of Hertford, his Lieutenant-General of his Forces, within the Counties of Devon, Cornwall, Sommerset, Dorset, Wilt, Southampton, Glocester, Berks, Oxford, Hereford, Monmouth, Radnor, Bregnock, Glamorgan, Carmarthen, Pembroke, Cardigan, the Cities of Exeter, Bristol, Glocester, Oxford, Bath and Wells, New Salisbury, and Hereford, the Town and County of Pool, Southampton, and Havenport, and of all the Trained Bands, and other Voluntiers, to March against the said Earl of Essex, and his Complices, and them subdue, especially in behalf of the Town of Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, and Southampton.

The Earl of Essex and the rest of the Parliaments Commanders proclaimed Traytors by the King.

The Marquis of Hertford ordered to March against the Earl of Essex.

August the Twelfth, the King publishes his Proclamation, requiring all his Subjects on the Northside of Trent, and twenty Miles Southward, to Aide and Assit him, and to that end to meet him on the twenty second of that Month, with Armes and Furniture at Nottingham, where, and when he intended to Erect his Standard, and promises to repay what Money and Armes they shall think fit to lend him.

The King summons in the Country.

E August the Twelfth, the King publishes his Grand Declaration, which will be too tedious to be here repeated; Wherein he sets forth his own Freeness and Forwardness to call this Parliament, before the meeting of the Peers at York; accuses them of Partiality, in expelling divers Members upon an Account of Monopolies, and yet Conniving Sir Henry Mildmay, and Mr. Laurence Whicaker: then he reckons up his severall Acts of Grace, Viz. His passing a Bill for a Trienniall Parliament, putting down Star-Chamber, and High-Commission Court, relinquishing Ship-Money, and the Business of Knightwood, and easing the Subjects in Matters of Forest Lands, and regulating the Stannery Courts, and the Clerk of the Marker. And lastly, His passing the Act for the Continuance of this Parliament, untill the Peace of England and Scotland, and all their Desires in reference thereunto, were provided for: Then he Accuseth them for Not supplying his Wants, Miking their own private Advantages of Offices, and Places of Profit, Keeping up the Scotts Army for their own Ends, Voting down Bishops, Deans, and Chapters, Deviling false Reports of Designs and dangerous Plots against them, Erecting and Countenancing Unlearned and Seditious Lecturers; Their publishing Protestations, Declarations, and Remonstrances, Charging him with all the Mis-haps and Misfortunes during his Reign, purposely to render him Odious to his Subjects; Their changing and unsettling the Militia, Encouraging Tumults, and Tumultuary Meetings, whereby such Members of either House as disliked the Violence of their Proceedings, were terrified into a Compliance, and himself constrained for his own Security, to remove further off the City. Then the King complains of the Business at Hull, and Horham, their seizing his

G Goods, and Money, their Calumniating him, as intending to levy War, Voting his Actions Illegal, and Issuing out Warrants for the Apprehension of all the Great Officers of State, which resorted to him; their seizing his Navy, and making the Earl of Warwick Admirall, raising an Army, and making the Earl of Essex Generall: Taking Tonnage and Poundage without his Consent, and converting the Money designed to the Relief of Ireland, and the discharge of the Kingdome Debts to serve their Turn, to War against the King, besides the Insolent Speeches of divers Members, Viz. Mr. Pym, Mr. Martin, Sir Henry Ludlow, and others, in the House hitherto unpunished: Next he takes notice of the unworthy Carriage of the Earl of Warwick, who was not ashamed to require a Confirmation of the Letter-Office to him for three Lives, at the same time that it is complained of as a Monopoly, and without the alteration of any Circumstance for the ease of the Subject; and this with so much Greediness, and Authority, that whilst it was complained of as a Monopoly, he procured an Assignment to be made of it to him, from the person complained of, after he had by his Interest stopped the Proceedings of the Committee, for five Months before the Assignment made to him, upon pretence that he was concerned in it, and desired to be heard.

Lastly, He justifies his own Proceedings against the Lord Kimbolton, and the five Members, whom together with Mr. Martin, Sir Henry Ludlow, Pennington, and Captain Ven, he is ready to prove Guilty of High-treason, and threatens to cause Indictments of High-treason upon the Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. against the Earls of Warwick, Essex, and Stamford, Lord Brook, Sir John B. Hotham, Major-Generall Skippon, and those who shall henceforth exercise the Militia, by vertue of the Ordinance; And Protest, that his Quarrell is not against the Parliament, but against the fore-named particular men, and concludes with an Offer of a Generall Pardon to all that shall desire it, the above-mentioned Persons only excepted.

The Parliament convert some of the money design'd for Ireland to their own use, and justify it to the King.

The Parliament had passed an Act for raising of Four hundred thousand pounds, for Relief of Ireland, but wanting Money now, for their more neere Occasions, they Vote that the Treasurers appointed to receive that Money, do forthwith lend them One hundred thousand pounds of it upon the Publick Faith, whereupon the King remembers them of the Act of Parliament, that no part of that money should be employed to any other purpose then the reducing of those Rebels, and therefore charges them to retract their Order, which they retort upon him as a high breach of Privilege, and Accuse his Counsellors of raising the Irish Rebellion, to suppress which, they had a Design to raise a Million of Money, and to send thither Five thousand Foot, and five hundred Horse, under the Lord Wharton, for Relief of Munster, all which was dashed by the Kings with-drawing to the North, and that his Forces Quartered in, and about the Common Roads to Ireland, had seized Apparell, Provision, Armes, Ammunition, and Waggon-Horses, directed towards Chester for their Service, and that he had recalled two Ships appointed for the Guard of those Seas, by which Courses the Rebels had Opportunity to strengthen themselves, that they were forced to borrow the forementioned Summ to supply the present Exigencies of the Army, which absolute Necessity had compelled them to raise for Defence of King and Kingdome: And now for the forwarding of their Forces, the Parliament Order their Deputy-Liutenants in the Northern Counties, to put in Execution the Ordinance of the Militia with other particular Advices and Orders, and further they promise the Gentry of the Counties, that what Damage they sustained from the Cavaliers by Plundering, and Pillaging, shall be fully repayed out of the Estates of those persons who shall persist to Act for the King against the Parliament.

The King sets up his Standard at Nottingham.

He sends to treat with the Parliament.

August the twenty second, the King comes to Nottingham, and there Erects his Standard, to which some Numbers resorted, but far short of what he expected; so three dayes afterward he sends a Messige to the Parliament to propose a Treaty, the Messengers were the Earls of Southampton and Dorset, Sir John Culpeper Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir William Udall, none of which were suffered to sit in the House, for to deliver their Errand, wherefore it was sent in by the Usher of the Black Rod, to which the Parliament made this Reply.

'That untill his Majesty shall recall his Proclamations and Declarations of Treason against the Earl of Essex, and them, and their Adherents; And unless the Kings Standard set up in pursuance thereof, be taken down, they cannot by the Fundamentall Priviledges of Parliament, give his Majesty any other Answer.

The King Replies, That he never intended to Declare the Parliament Traytors, or set up his Standard against them, but if they shall resolve to Treat, either Party shall revoke their Declarations against all Persons as Traytors, and the same day he to take down his Standard.

Which they deny, unless he forsake his evil Counsellors.

'To this they Answer, That the Differences could not any wayes be concluded, unless he would forsake his evil Counsellors, and return to his Parliament; And accordingly September the Sixth, they Order and Declare, That the Armes which they have, or shall take up for the Parliament, Religion, Laws, and Liberties of the Kingdome, shall not be layd down untill the King with-draw his Protection from such Persons that are, and shall be Voted Delinquents, and shall leave them to Justice, to the end, that their Estates may discharge the Debts and Loan-moneys of the Common-wealth.

A The War being now begun, the new-raised Soldiers began to commit sundry Out-rages upon the Country-people, which both King and Parliament, upon Complaint, laboured to Rectifie, Sir Thomas Barrington, and Mr. Grimston, being sent down into Essex by the Parliament, upon that Business, seized Sir John Lucas and his Lady, at Conlchester, and committed them to the Jayle, and soon after, Lucas is proclaimed Traytor by the Parliament, brought up to London, and Committed to the Gasehouse in Essex; one Mr. Newcomen was likewise Imprisoned, both of them to be brought to a speedy Tryall: The Parliament had formerly Voted, that money should be borrowed upon the Publick Faith, but because the people might look for some Assurance for the re-payment of such Loans: they now Declared, That all such persons as shall Assist them by Moneys, or otherwise, at their own Charges, shall receive satisfaction out of the Estates of those men which are, or shall be Noted Delinquents; of whom James, Lord Strange, Son and Heir to the Earl of Darby, was not the least, who was Impeached of High-treason by the Parliament, for Summoning the Lancashire men on the fifteenth day of July last past, to Manchester, to Support and Aide the King against the Parliament, and for railing of Forces, by some of whom, one Richard Percivall a Linnen Webster, was killed. The King at Shrewsbury by Advice of Judge Heath, Adjourned Michaelmas Term, and hearing of the proceedings against the Lord Strange, at Bridgenorth, he proclaims Thomas Nicholls, Humphrey Macworth, and Thomas Hunt, Esquires (notable Scicklers for the Parliament) to be Traytors.

The Parliament go about to borrow money upon the Publick Faith. The Lord Strange Impeached of Treason by the Parliament Mr. Hunt, Mr. Nicholls, and Mr. Macworth proclaimed Traytors by the King.

C September 29. The Lord Fairfax for the Parliament, and Mr. Bellasis for the King, had concluded Articles of Neutrality for York-shire, at which the Parliament taking Exceptions, Declared October 16. the Lord Fairfax and his Party not bound to observe the Articles, but to Assist the Parliament in Defence of the Common Cause: The Earl of Essex gave a deep Yellow for his Colours, which was also generally followed, but especially by the zealous City Dames, but others out of some Design, set up a Colour by themselves, which being Interpreted to Disaffection, and Distinction by those Ribbons, it was Declared to be a matter meriting Commitment, and the Brand of Malignancy.

The Lord Fairfax concludes Articles of Neutrality with Mr. Bellasis, at which the Parliament is displeased. The Parliament hearing of the preparation made in Holland for the Kings supply, sent over Mr. Strickland with a Declaration.

D The Queen was very Active in Holland to promote her Husbands Affairs, and by her Interest with the Prince of Orange, and the Industry of the Lord Digbey, had procured from the States of the united Provinces, some Experienced Officers, with Armes and Ammunition, to be sent over to the Kings Army, which coming to the Parliaments knowledge, they presently send over Mr. Walter Strickland, a Member of the House of Commons, their Residentary there to present them in their Names, with this ensuing Declaration.

E 'VV E the Lords and Commons in Parliament Assembled, taking into serious Consideration, the Means of Composing the great Distempers and Com-bustions begun in this Kingdome, which threaten the Destruction and Ruine, and of all other Protestant Princes and States, have thought good to make this Declaration to the high and mighty Lords, the States of the United Provinces; That we understand, by a Letter of the Lord Digbey, a Person fled out of this Kingdome for High-treason: That as he often endeavoured by his wicked and malicious Counsells to make Division between his Majesty and the Parliament, and hath been in great part the Cause of that miserable and unnaturall War, which is made against us by his Majesty, so he hath laboured by all means in the United Provinces to provide Armes, Powder, and Ammunition, for the Fomenting of that War, and making it more dangerous to the Kingdome; and for this purpose did Address himself to the Prince of Orange, by whose Countenance and Help (as we are informed by the Lord Digbey's Letters) he hath made Provision for great quantities of Ordnance, Powder, Armes, and divers other sorts of Warlike Provision.

G , And we are further informed by credible Advertisement, that the Prince of Orange in Favour of the Lord Digbey, and those other wicked Councillors, and Incendiaries, who being joyned together in these mischievous Practices against the Peace of this Kingdome, hath not only Licenced (but the better to encourage divers Commanders, experienced Officers and Soldiers, to resort into this Kingdome, in Ayde of them against the Parliament) hath promised to reserve their Places for them in their Absence, and doth cause other Provision of the same kind to be made, and prepared to be sent over for their Supply, to the great hurt of this Kingdome, and the danger of the interrupting the most necessary, profitable, and long continued Amity between the two States.

'We further desire to let them know, that we cannot believe that this is done by any Authority or Direction from their Lordships, considering the great help that they have received from this Kingdome, when heretofore they lay under the heavy Oppression

'Oppression of their Princes, and how conduceable the Friendship of this Nation, A ' (concurring with the Wisdome, Valour, and Industry of their own people) hath ' been to the present Greatness and Power which they now enjoy; Neither can we ' think, that they will be forward to help to make us Slaves, who have been usefull
 ' and assistant in making them Free-men. Or that they will forget that our Troubles ' and Dangers issue from the same Fountain with their Own: And that those who are ' set awork to undermine Religion, and Liberty in the Kingdome, are the same,
 ' which by open force did seek to bereave them of both. It cannot be unknown to that
 ' wise State, that it is the Jesuiticall Faction here, that hath corrupted the Counsellors B
 ' of our King, the Consciencés of a great part of our Clergy, which have plotted so ' many mischievous Designs to destroy the Parliament, and still endeavour to divide
 ' Ireland from this Kingdome, by a most wicked and cruell Rebellion there, and to ' divide the King from the Parliament here, and by false Slanders and Imputations of ' things never done nor intended by us, hath incensed his Majesty, so as that after ' many bitter Invectives published against us, without any just Cause given, He hath
 ' now at last resolved to set up his Royall Standard, and to draw his Sword for the De' struction of his most faithfull and obedient people, whom by the Laws and Consti- C
 ' tutions of this Kingdome, he is bound to preserve and protect; The Cases and For' tunes of both Estates being so Involved and United, we cannot expect to be hindered
 ' by them in our Just Defence: Or that they will do any thing to aggravate the Mife-
 ' ries and Troubles of this Kingdome, in the peace and happiness whereof they have ' found much Advantage, and by such unfriendly and unseasonable Supplies of our ' common Enemies, make way to their own as well as our Ruine.

' We therefore desire they may betimes look into this Mischief, and having searched
 ' it into the bottom, to stop the further progress of it: That they will not suffer more D
 ' Ordnance, Armor, or any other Warlike Provision to be brought over to strengthen ' those, who as soon as they shall prevail against the Parliament (according to their ' principles and Interests by which they are guided) will use that strength to the ruine
 ' of those, from whom they have had it. We desire they would not send over any ' Country-men, to further our Destruction, who were sent to them for their preser' vation: That they will not anticipate the spilling of English Blood in an unnaturall
 ' Civil War, which hath been so cheerfully, and plentifully hazarded and spent, in ' that Just and Honourable War, by which they have been so long preserved, and ' to which the Blood of those persons, and many other Subjects of this Kingdome, is E
 ' still in a manner Dedicated, but rather that they would Cashire and discharge from ' their Employment those that will presume to come over for that purpose: And ' in satisfying these our reasonable and necessary Desires, they shall thereby not only ' secure us, but themselves, yea, they shall most of all advantage his Majesty, for ' whose Service those things are pretended to be done. The Question between his Ma' jesty and the Parliament is not, Whether he shall enjoy the same Pretogative and ' power which hath belonged to our former Kings, his Majesties Royall Predecessors,
 ' but, Whether that Prerogative and Power should be employed to our Defence, or to ' our Ruine: We expect nothing from him but Security, and protection from those F
 ' mischievous Designs, which have been so often multiplied and renewed against us,
 ' though hitherto (through Gods providence) are often frustrated; It cannot be ' denied by those, who look indifferently into our Proceedings and Affairs, but that it ' will be more Honour, and Wealth, Safety, and Greatness to his Majesty, in con-' curring with his Parliament, then in the course in which he now is: but so unhappy
 ' hath his Majesty been in those who have the greatest influence upon his Counsellors,
 ' that they look more upon the prevailing of their own party, then upon any those great ' Advantages both to his Crown, and Royall person, which he might obtain by ' joyning with his people: And so cunning are those Factors for popery, in profe- G
 ' cution of their own Aymes, that they can put on a counterfeit Visage of Honour,
 ' Peace, and Greatness, upon those Courses and Counsellors which have no truth and ' reality: but of Weakness, Dishonour, and Miseries to his Majesty and whole King-
 ' dome. We have lately expressed our earnest Inclinations to that Nationall Love
 ' and Amity with the united Provinces, which is nourished and confirmed by so many ' Civill Respects, and Mutuall Interests, as makes it so naturall to us, that we have,
 ' this Parliament, in our humble Petition to his Majesty, desired we might be joyned
 ' with

A 'with that State, in a more neer and strict League, and Union; And we cannot but expect
 'some Returns from them of the like Expressions; and that they will be so far from 'blowing the Fire which begins to kindle amongst us, that they will rather endeavour 'to quench it by strengthening and encouraging us, who have no other Design, but to 'preserve our Religion, save our selves, and the other Reformed Churches of Chri-
 'stendome, from the Masacres and Extirpations, with which the Principles of the Po- 'pish Religion, do threaten us and them, which are begun to be Acted in Ireland, and 'in the Hopes, Endeavours, and Intentions of that Party, had long since been Execu'ted upon us, if the Mercy, Blessing, and Favour of Almighty God had not supera-B 'bounded, and prevented the Subtilty and Malignity of Cruell, Wicked, and Blood'thirsty men.

And now we enter upon Military Effects, the King himself is Generalissimo over his Own, his Captain Generall first Marquis Hertford, and afterward the Earl of Lindsey: and the Earl of Essex of the Parliamentarians.

The King returning to Tork, divers of his Forces were Quartered so neer Hull, that it seemed as if they had some Design upon the Town: Upon this, Sir John Hotbam and his Assistant Sir John Meldram, with a small Party made a sudden Eruption, and unawares surprizing them, C forced them to shift for themselves, killed some, took others, and so returned Victors; and shortly after receiving a Supply to the number of Five hundred from London, Sallied out again upon the Cavaliers, whom they compelled to a disorderly Retreat, killed twenty, seized their Colours, and seventeen Muskets, with some fifteen Prisoners, and burnt the Barn where some Armes and Ammunition was laid up for the King.

The Kings Forces repulsed from Hull by Sir John Hotbam, and Sir John Meldram.

In these Encounters was the first Blood drawn: August the Fourth, the King had summoned all his Subjects North of Trent, to a Generall Rendezvous, from whence he Marches to Nottingham, where, as we said, he set up his Standard, thence Westward to Strafford, then to Leicester, so towards Wales, and settles at Shrewsbury, where his Army encreased into a considerable Body.

The King takes up his Quarters at Shrewsbury.

D The Parliaments Forces formed at London, Rendezvous at St. Albans, and March Northward to meet the King, carrying with them a Petition of the two Houses, who prescribed these Directions to their Generall.

First, To restrain all Prophanes in his Army.

The Parliaments Directions to their Generall.

Secondly, To March and Fight the Kings Army, and, by Battell, or otherwise to rescue his Majesties Person, the Prince, and Duke of Tork, out of the hands of those about him.

E Thirdly, To take his Opportunity in some Honourable way to cause the Petition of Parliament to be presented to his Majesty, who if he be pleased to withdraw himself from his Forces, and to resort to his Parliament, you shall cause those Forces to Dis-band, and shall serve and defend the King with sufficient Strength in his Return.

F Fourthly, To Declare, that if any will (within ten daies after publication) withdraw from Assisting the King, and return to the Parliament, they shall have their Pardon, Except Delinquents already Voted, or to be Voted, or Impeached; Or who stand Impeached of High-treason, or have been Eminent, or Active against the Parliament: And except the Duke of Richmond, the Earls of Cumberland, Newcastle, Rivers, and Carnarvan; Viscounts Newark and Falklands, principall Secretary to the King, Secretary Nichols, Mr. Endimion Porter, and Mr. Edward Hide.

Fifthly, To receive Loans, or Contributions of Money, Plate, or Horses for the Support of the Army, certifying the summs of Money, weight of Plate, value of Horses, that the parties may thereby be repaid upon Publick Faith.

Sixthly, To protect the Good people from Violence of the Cavaliers, and to restore to them their Lollies.

G Seventhly, To apprehend all persons Impeached as Traytors, and other Delinquents, and secure them to the Parliament.

Eighthly, To observe such further Directions as he shall receive from the Parliament.

Besides these Directions, he had a Committee, any Four of whom, whereof himself to be One, were Impowred to Consult of things concerning the good of the Army, to punish, or discharge Malignants, and to take Subscriptions of Money, Plate, or Provisions, to be repaid at Eight per Cent. by Publick Faith: Colonel Goring held Portsmouth for the King, which the County

Portsmouth taken by the Parliament Forces.

County-Bands intended to Surprise, but he having timely notice met them by the way, Skirmished, and retired; but the Parliament Espousing the Quarrell, and the Assaultants having good Correspondents in the Town, Sir John Merick's Regiment, and a Troop of Horse were sent to their Assistance, who began the Siege, and with some other Helps so freightned Goring, that although Marquis Hartford hastened to his Relief, yet he found it his best way to Surrender the Town, and take Ship for Holland: However Marquis Hartford seized Sherburn Cattle, and giving the Earl of Bedford a Brush by the way, marched over Serdown towards Shrewsbury, where the King then Resided.

Sir John Byron takes Worcester for the King.

Sir John Byron had raised some Troops for the King in Oxford, but was unexpectedly set upon at Brackley in his march towards Oxford, by sundry Troops of the Parliamentarians, and the Townsmen of Brackley, by whom he was forced to retire to the Heath with some loss, yet on he comes to Oxford, and after a small time of tarrying, he marches to Worcester with Five hundred Horse, and takes the Town, and the next News we hear of him, is an Encounter with Colonel Nathaniell Pines.

Prince Robert, and Prince Maurice arrive in England.

About the beginning of September Arrived in England the two Princes Palatines, Rupert, and Maurice, who were presently entertained, and put into Command by the King their Uncle.

The King had now gotten together a Potent Army, to whom between Stafford and Wellington, after a short Speech he made a solemn Protestation of his Candid Intentions, and sincere meaning to defend the Protestant Religion, the Laws, and Liberties of the Subject, and Privileges of Parliament, according to his former Protestation at York.

The Earl of Essex Marcheth out of London to his Army.

Ten daies before this, Viz. September the Ninth, the Earl of Essex in great Pomp, attended on by the Parliament, set forth out of London towards St. Albans, and from thence to Northampton, where all his Forces met, amounting to the number of Fourteen thousand, having with him the Parliament's Petition, which he was to present to the King, the Effect whereof was;

The Parliament's Petition to be presented to the King by the Earl of Essex.

That his Loyall Subjects, the Lords and Commons in Parliament, cannot without tenderness of Compassion behold the pressing Calamities of England and Ireland, by the Practises of a prevailing Party with his Majesty, to alter true Religion; and the ancient Government of this Kingdome, introducing Superstition into the Churches, and Confusion in the State, Exciting, Encouraging, and Fostering the Rebellion in Ireland; and as there, so here begin the like Massacres, by drawing on a War against the Parliament, leading his Person against them, as if by Conquest to establish an unlimited Power over the People, seeking to bring over the Rebels of Ireland to joyn with them: And all these evill Counsellors are Defended and Protected against the Justice of Parliament; Who have for their just Defence of Religion, the King, Crown, and Dignity, of the Laws, Liberties, and Power of Parliament, taken up Armes, and Authorised the Earle of Essex their Captain-Generall against these Rebels and Traytors. And pray the King to withdraw his Person, and leave them to be Supprest by his Power, and to return to his Parliament, and that they will receive him with Honour, and yeild him Obedience, secure his Person, and Establish Him, and his People, with all the Blessings of a Glorious and Happy REIGNE.

Which he refuseth to accept.

This Petition was never delivered, notwithstanding that Generall Essex twice sent to the King, for a safe Conduct for those who should be employed therein; for the King refused to receive any Address by those whom he had accused of High treason, of whom the Earl of Essex was one: The King having Caresed the Inhabitants of Denbighshire, Flintshire, and Shrewsbury, furnished himself with money by melting in his new Erected Mint, such Plate as many of the Nobles and Gentlemen brought in plentifully; takes his March towards London, whereof the

The King marcheth from Shrewsbury towards London.

Parliament being informed, Order the Trained Bands of their sociate Counties, of Essex, Hartford, Middlesex, and London, to Rendezvous, and be ready at an Hours Warning, and Fortifie all the Passages about the City with Posts, Chains, and Courts of Guard. And for further Security they Voted, That such as will not Contribute, shall be Secured and Disarmed; in which Business the Mayor of London now Elect (instead of Sir Richard Gurney Ejected) was employed: And further, that the Fines, Rents, and Profits, of Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, and Chapters, and other Delinquents, shall be Sequestred for the Service of the Common-wealth: And that all the Kings Revenue, arising out of Rents, Fines, and Courts, or Composition for

The Parliament order the Lands of the Bishops, &c. to be sequestred.

A for Wards be Sequestred for the State: And a Committee for Sequestration appointed.

Sir John Biron had taken Worcester, to dilodge whom, Colonel Nathaniel Pines, and Colonel Sandys Marched with a Brigade of Horse, and some Volunteers of Foot of the County, raised by the Lord Say, and Assaulted the Town on the West-side of Severn, supposing that Essex had been at hand to fall upon the other side, as he was mis-informed by a Spy, but too late repented, is mistaken, when instead of Essex, comes Prince Rupert, whose Horse rushed upon the Colonel Sandys routed at Worcester by Prince Rupert. The Kings Forces quit that City upon the approach of the Earl of Essex. Gloucester, Bristol, and other places Garrisoned for the Parliament.

B from thence sent out the Earl of Stamford with a Party to Hereford, to hinder the Forces of South Wales, from joining with the King; from Hereford the Earl of Stamford with his Regiment of Foot, and two Troops of Horse, removes to Gloucester, entering the City as Governour, but not long after being called away into the West, Massy his Lieutenant Colonel is left behind as Deputy at first, but afterwards hath the sole Government conferred upon him: Colonel Thomas Essex was Commanded to Bristol, which he Garrisons, and after the Generals departure, is made Governour of Worcester; two more Regiments and ten Troops were sent to Kidderminster, and Bendly, to joyn with the Lord Wharton and Sir Henry Chamleys Regiments; and at Coventry and Warwick lay the Lord Peterborough, Sir William Constable, and Colonel Brown with their Forces, all to oppose the Cavaliers, marching to London: and at Tarmouth was seized a Ship

C coming from Holland for the Kings Service, with an Hundred and forty Cavaliers, and Three hundred Barrells of Powder. But in York-shire the Kings Party grew Potent, being headed by the Earl of Cumberland, Sir Francis Wortley, and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir John Kay, Mr. Francis Nevill, and Sir Thomas Glenham, who forced Captain Hotham to forbear ranging the Country, and retreat to Hull. In Cornwall near Pendennis, Sir Nicholas Slanning the Governour, Sir Bevil Greenwill, and others of the Gentry had gathered together a considerable Body of an Army, wherewith they possessed themselves of Lancaſton, and with their Generall Sir Ralph Hopton performed divers Exploits against the contrary Party, who held Plymouth, and some few other adjoining Places for the Parliament; In Wales the Earl of Worcester bestirred himself notably for the King, and drew a great Number of Welshmen to side with him, insomuch, that seeing his

The Kings Party powerful in the North. In Cornwall.

And in Wales.

D Army increased, he resolved to march towards London, and was gotten one daies Journey before Essex, who perceiving his error of staying so long at Worcester, hastens after him to the Relief of his Masters: The King disdaining to be pursued by a Subject, turns back to meet him, and October the Twenty third, both Cavaliers and Essexians, drew into the Field, between Kinton and Edgehill in Warwick-shire; the Cavaliers had gained the Top of the Hill, from whence the King took a view of the Parliaments Army, by whom he was saluted with three Pieces of Cannon, which was answered with two Shot of theirs, and the Fight Commenced about two of the Clock in the Afternoon, both Generalls performing their parts with great Courage, and Gallantry: The Earl of Lindsey now Generall for the King, led on his Forces with a Pike in

The Battell at Edgehill.

E his hand, and so did Essex, but was afterwards advised to retire from that Danger, as more becoming a private Soldier, then a Generall; the greatest Body of the Kings Horse was on the right Wing, Commanded by Prince Rupert, who furiously charged the left Wing, of the others Commanded by Colonel Ramsey, Commissary Generall, whom he Routed and pursued to Kinton-down, and further, making great Slaughter all along; but the left Wing consisting of Horse and Dragoons, had not the same Success being over-powered by the right Wing of the Parliamentarians, which was Commanded by Sir William Balfour, Sir Phillip Stapleton, the Lord Feilding, and Colonel Hurry: Generall Lindsey who Commanded the main Body, being too far engaged in the Fight, was taken Prisoner, and died presently after of the Wounds which he received in the Battell, and with him was taken the Lord Willoughby of Eresby, and Sir Edmund Varney Knight Martiall, and Standard-Bearer was killed, and the Standard taken, but instantly rescued by Mr.

F John Smith, who for that Service was Dubbed Knight and Baronet in the Field, and made Standard-Bearer: Night parted the Fray, and both Armies Retreat, each accounting themselves Victors; on both sides were lost between Five and six thousand men, the most remarkable on the Kings Side, being the Earl of Lindsey, and Sir Edmund Varney; On the Parliaments, Colonel Thomas Essex, who was come to the Fight from his Government at Worcester, and Lieutenant Colonel Ramsey, and the Lord St. John of Blets was taken Prisoner, and soon after died; the left Wing of Horse on both sides was Routed, and the Foot being left to themselves, were fain to shift for their Lives the best they could: Next day both the Parties quit the Field, the King Marches towards Ayno, and Essex towards Coventry: From Ayno, October the Twenty seventh, the King sends a Proclamation of Pardon to the Cities of London and Westminster, wherein Alderman Fulk, and Manwaring were excepted: The Battell of Edgehill was fought on Sunday the same day Twelve Month, that the Irish Rebellion brake out.

G Banbury stood yet out against the King, which he now resolves to fall upon, but both Town and Castle Surrendered without any Blows, and the two Regiments of Foot, and a Troop of Horse then in the Town, took Armes under him; So the King brings his Army to Oxford, whence Prince Rupert Marched against the Lord Say's House at Broughton, and takes it, and with a flying Party makes Excursions so neer London, that the Parliament thought good to desire their Generall Essex to bring his Army neerer the City, for their Safeguard, who accordingly Obeys, Banbury surrendered to the King.

Obayes, and comes to Westminster November the seventh, where he is honourably entertained by the Parliament, and presented with a Gratuity, of Five thousand Pounds, and a Declaration set out concerning this late Valiant and acceptable Service in that Bloody Battell at Edgill. The Recusants of Lancashire Judged this a reasonable time to Petition the King, to take them into his Protection, and to suffer them to have and bear Armes in his and their own defence, which was granted; Whereby he incurred this Censure; That he favoured Papists, and entertained them in his Army. The Parliament to recruit their Army, declare; That all Apprentices that will Lift themselves in their Service for the publike Cause shall be secured from Indemnity of their Masters during their Service, and their time included, to go on towards their Freedome, and all their respective Masters are to receive them again when they shall returne; By which meanes an infinite number of Apprentices were induced to Lift themselves in the Army; And now they declare to the Scots, That the King was so addicted to the prelaticall Party and the Papists, that unless they joyned their helping hand, the Protestant Religion was in danger here of being subverted, that he had a Designe of bringing in Forraigners into the North, which were to joyne with a Party of Papists there while himselfe conducted the prelaticall Army, wherefore they desired them to take care for the securing of their Borders, and to Assist here against the Popish and forraigne Forces.

The King heares of this, and by a Letter to the Lords of his Privy Councill, in Scotland endeavours to turne the Scales, but in vaine.

The Parliament had Voted an Address to the King, and desire a safe conduct for these Persons to present their Petition, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, and Four Members of the Commons Mr. Perpoint, the Lord Waiman, Sir John Evelin of Wilts, and Sir John Hippislie, all which were admitted by the King, excepting only Sir John Evelin who had been proclaimed Traitor at Oxford; which exception so irritated the Houses that they voted it to be a refusal of a Treary, and Ordered a Committee to acquaint the City Common Hall therewith, but this heat being somewhat allayed the King at Colebrooke November the Eleventh receives the Parliaments Petition from the rest of the Delegates without Sir John Evelin, which was in Effect to desire him to appoint some convenient place, not far from London; for his Residence, untill Committees of Parliament may attend him with some Propositions for removall of these Distempers; To which he answered; He would expect them at his Castle of Windsor, and desires them to hasten the Treary.

The Delegates were scarcely departed, when Intelligence was brought to the King, that the Earl of Essex had drawne his Forces with his Ordinance out of London towards him, And that unless he gained Brainsford, he would be hemmed in by the Parliaments Forces, who possessed most of the Townes round about him; whereupon he advanced thither the same night, In the Town were quartered part of Colonel Hollises Regiment who taking the Alarm made bold Resistance and defended themselves till the Lord Brookes Regiment and Colonel Hamdens came in to their Rescue and maintained the Fight against the Cavileers, till night drew on, and then being overpowred by Numbers, retreated out of the Town, which the King presently took possession of, together with some Prisoners, Armes and Ammunition, Eleven Colours and Fifteene peices of Ordinance. This was acted, November the Thirteenth, but Generall Essex hearing of this Fight, with all speed makes towards Brainsford, whither followed the City Militia and Trayned Bands, which together made a formidable Army, insomuch that the King thought it his best Course to march back againe, taking Kinslon in his way then newly quitted by the Parliaments Forces, from thence to Oatlands, Reding and so to Oxford; This Action of the Kings in a time of Treary, was so ill resented of the Houses, that they thereupon Voted, To have no accomodation, Yet upon the Kings Message to them, That he intended to march, at such a distance from London that should take away all pretence of misapprehension from his Army, which might hinder them from preparing their Propositions, they againe petition him to desert his Army and returne to his Parliament, And this with the same Success as formerly; In the mean time, a Letter from one of the Kings Agents in Holland to Secretary Nicholls is intercepted; which saies;

That the Prince of Orange hath advanced all those Sums we are to expect from him, of which Twenty thousand pounds are sent towards you, as much to New-Castle, and as much at least we bring with us, besides the great Business, we expect a finall end of this day, which will advance Sixty thousand pounds more. We have sent over Ten thousand Armes, Two thousand Horse-Armes, Twenty peices of Cannon, we bring over Wagons and all Accomodation to march so soone as we arrive, with considerable Officers from hence; And by the advice we receive from that side, there are Eight thousand foot already, Six troopes of horse, and the rest will not be long a raising after we come there, Generall King is designed for Lieutenant Generall, He hath been with the Queene, and will be suddainly there.

From Denmarke are likewise sent Armes for Ten thousand foot; and Two thousand five hundred Horse, with a trayne of Artillery, and every thing proportionable to the very Drums and Halbarts, two good men of War come their Convoy, and in them an Ambassadour to his Majesty, a Person of great Quality from Denmarke, Cockram comes along with him.

In Yorkshire the Earl of New-Castle had raised great Forces for the King, with which he comes to York, and joynes with the Earl of Cumberland making up a Body of Eight thousand horse and foote, whereof above two thousand were horse Dragoones. The Lord Fairfax was the most considerable man that stood up for the Parliament in those parts, between whome and the Earl of

The King replys, That he hath a good opinion of many of them, and could freely and willingly pardon all except Pennington the present Maior, and Venn Foulke, and Minwaring, and concludes with Threatnings to such as shall continue acting and assisting his Adversaries. Many of them were startled with this Answer, yet take heart againe, being revived with what Mr. Pym, and the Parliament Committee told their Common-Councell, of the Parliaments great love and Affection to the m, and Resolution to live and dye in their defence; In the North the Parliamentarians grow bold againe, Sir Hugh Colmely defeats severall parties of the Enemy, at Malton, and January the Sixteenth, joyning with Sir Matthew Boynton, fell upon a party, of Six hundred horse and foot at Gisbrough, commanded by Colonel Slingsbey, whom they routed, killed many, took an Hundred and fifty prisoners, (among whom was Slingsbey himselfe) and two hundred Armes. Sir Thomas Fairfax had failed of his first Designe, against Leeds, but the second time he carries it with little loss, wherein he tooke Four Colours, and Five hundred prisoners, (Six of which Commanders) with many Armes and much Ammunition; after which the Kings Forces relinquish Wakefield, and Doncasters, which are forthwith invested for the Parliament. The Earl of New-Castle drawes downe his Forces to York, to prepare for the Queens entertaynement; and January the Seventeenth proclaimes the Lord Fairfax and his Son Sir Thomas and others Traitors, as the Earl of Cumberland had done the first of December last; which the Parliament resenting doe as much against the Earl. Some desires of the Parliament had been presented to the King at Oxford, February the First, by the Earls of Northumberland, Salisbury, Pembroke, and Holland, with Eight of the Commons; Viz

The Scots enter England with an Army to assist the Parliament.

The Pope sends into Ireland to encourage the Rebels.

Thus way was made for a Treaty, but no more done in it for the present, till the Fourth of March That it was revived by the advise of Sir Benjamin Rudyerd a Member of the House of Commons, who in his Speech told the Parliament plainly, That the War would soone ruine all; So the Parliament appoynt for their Commissioners, the Earl of Northumberland Mr. Perceps, Sir William Ermine, Sir John Holland, and Mr. Whitlock, to attend the King at Oxford. February the 22, the Queene lands at Burlington Key, with Officers, Munition and Money from Holland, from whence the Earl of Montrose and the Lord Ogley with two troopes of horse conveyed her to York where all things are prepared for her Honourable reception by the Earls of Cumberland and Newcastle, and there she begins first to forme her Army.

Glocestershire now began to be the scene of Action, where Captain Bridges kept Sudeley Castle for the Lord Chandoise with Sixty Souldiers, and all other things sufficient; against him Lieutenant Colonel Massey advances, and offers to storm the Castle, but is repulsed, next day some horse and Dragoones possessed the Garden under the Castle and fired the Hay, and straw, and smothered the House, by opportunity whereof they had the advantage, to bring up and plant their Ordnance in such a convenient place, as necessitated the Besieged to surrender upon quarter, leaving their Armes behind them, and to ingage for payment of Five hundred pounds in six daies for the goods in the Castle, or loose them, yet could not the Parliament boast of this Victory for within a few daies space comes Prince Rupert, with Four thousand Horse and foot, making shew as if he meant to regaine it, but marches by to Cirencester where the strength of the County, and a great part of the Magazine lay, and on the first of February, masters the Guard, and forces his passage into the Town, which in two houres he gayned, putting the Earl of Stamfords Regiment and many others to the Sword, taking Eleven hundred prisoners and Three thousand Armes; And the next day summons Gloucester; which Massey resolves to hold out, and to strengthen it the better defects Sudeley and the other outward Garrisons.

The Welch Army neer 1500 raised by the Earl of Worcester and his Son the Lord Harbert marched forward for the King, to the Forrest of Deane and beat Colonel Boroughs Regiment out of Coford a small Towne neere Monmouth, and come on to Hingham, two miles off from Gloucester, where they intrench and their Major Generall Brett demands the Towne, and is answered with Scorne, so there they stay and spend five Weeks without any memorable Actions performed, and at last come off with dishonour; for Massey assisted by Captaine John Fines from Bristol, with Two hundred horse and Dragoones weakened them with continuall skirmishes, till Sir William Waller having taken Malmesbury, came to Gloucester and joyned his Forces with the other, Massey then draws out all his Horse with Five hundred foot, and some Ordnance, and held them in play for the first day, next morning Alarums them with the Great Guns and then both sides encounter fiercely and the Welch were likely to route the others and seize their Ordnance at which instant Waller comes up and charges them to the great comfort of his almost defeated Friends, who taking courage joyntly run upon their Enemies and drive them back into the house which they begin to batter with their cannon; Whereupon the Welch found a party and conclude to render the place and themselves prisoners, but the Officers should receive quarters as to their qualities and so the next day Waller and Massey lead their prisoners in triumph to Gloucester.

The Parliament had formerly desired the Assistance of the Scots which was granted, and now having compleated their Army March the thirteenth, they crosse the Tine and march southward to find worke for the Earl of Newcastle.

The Pope thought good to imitate St. Peter the supposed patron of that Church, he resolves to Fish but chooses troubled waters Irelands lakes and loughs must be the places of his games; the Rebels there notwithstanding their Defeats at Tredagh and Dondalk were much encreased in numbers, and many who were shie at the beginning now publicly declared for them, in so much that all parts of the Land were overwhelmed as with an inundation and it was high time now for this ghostly father to cast in his Baits, which he doth by two Letters, the one subscribed to Owen O Neales, and the other to all Archbishops, Bishops, Nobles and people of the Kingdome of Ireland, in both which he commendeth those who had already appeared in the quarrell, and exhorts

King Charles's nineteenth year being the year 1643 begins with a Treatie of peace which had been formerly agreed upon but proceeded stickly till revived at Sr. Benjamin Rudygards perswasion. At Oxford the Delegates of both parties, mett, and began to treat of the Kings Propositions concerning his Revenue, Magazines, Forts, and Ships, and the Parliaments Propositions concerning the disbanding of Armies, which Points taking up longer time then was Expected by the King, He sends this message to the Parliament Aprill. 12.

A Treaty begun at Oxford between the King and Parliament.

C THAT as soone as he was satisfied in his first Porposition concerning his own Revenue, Magazines, Ships, and Forces, in which he desired nothing but his Just Legall and known Rights to be restored to him, and to persons trusted by him, and as soone as the Members of both Houses should be restored unto the same capacitie of sitting, and Voting, in parliament, as they had upon the first of January 1641. (exclusively of such whose Votes had been taken away by Bill or by new Elections, or new Writs) and that as soon as his Majesty and both Houses may be secured from such tumultuous Assemblies as to the high dishonour of the parliament had awed the Members of the same, (which he conceived could not otherwise be done but by adjourning the parliament to some place Twenty miles from London such as the Houses should agree upon) his Majesty most cheerfully and readily would consent to the disbanding of the Armies, and would return speedily to his two Houses of parliament according to the time and place which they should agree upon.

The Kings message to the Parliament

Upon this the Parliament resolved to call back their Commissioners, and so the Treatie took end Aprill the 15. In the beginning of March last the Lord Brooke had marched towards Northampton, and seized on the Cavaliers Ammunition there, from whence he passed on to Warwick and to Stratford-Avon, and beats Collonel Crocker and Lieutenant Collonel Wagstaffe and their Forces out of the Towne, which he plundered, and from thence retreated to Warwick to refresh his Souldiers, and then to Staffordshire; At Leichfield lay the Earl of Chesterfield, with some Forces under his Command who knowing the Town to be indefenceable, retired to a more teneable place neere adjoining, called the Close. Brooke being Master of the Towne, tooke up his Quarters, whilst his Souldiers goe on upon the Enemy, but in the Fight one of the Cavileers shooting adventurously at the window of his Lordships Chamber, peirced his eye-ball, of which he instantly died, the losse of him for a while amised his followers, but recollecting themselves, they renewed the Fight, with such ardour of revenge, that they tooke the Close with the Earl of Chesterfield, and all his Souldiers and Ordinance. But March the 22 the Earl of Northampton with part of the Kings Army besieged Leichfield and forced the Parliamentarians with their Commanders, to betake themselves to the Close, to whose reliefe were coming Sir. John Gell, and Sir William Brereton with Three thousand Horse and Foot, whereof the Earl of Northampton having intelligence, leaving sufficient Force to keep in the Besieged within the Close. Marched off with the rest, and unexpectedly came upon the Enemy, who yet received them stoutly till first the Horse were put to flight, and the Foot unable of themselves to keep the field, were glad to shift for their own Lives, leaving the Victory with some Prisoners, Ammunition, and Baggage, Some Ordinance, and Four Drakes to the Cavileers who yet could not much boast of their Success, having lost in the Fight their Generall the Earl of Northampton, who was slain in the Head of his Troope. But now April the 21. comes Prince Rupert and joynes with the Earl of Northampton's Souldiers and altogether fall upon the Parliamentarians Commanded by Lieutenant Collonel Russell, who despairing of Succour yeilded up the place upon Honorable Conditions and Marched away to Coventry.

April 17. Generall Essex sat down before Reading, and in a short space made two severall Attempts upon it, but was in both repulsed, and the King himself Marched from Oxford to Wallingford for relief of the Towne; but Essex's Army dayly increasing with fresh Supplies from London both parties happened to skirmish at Camersham Bridge where the Royalists were worsted, and Essex continuing his Siege played furiously upon the Towne with his great Ordinance, whereby many were hurt and Sir Arthur Aston the Governour was dangerously banied, with the fall of a

Severall En-

Sir Ralph Hop-

vonshire Forces Commanded by Sir George Chidley.

In the West, Sir Ralph Hopton for the King lay with some Forces at Launceston, to dislodge whom, Sir George Chidley Commander of the *Parliament*s Forces in Devonshire, sends out a Party from Oakehampton, which coming undiscovered as far as Polston Bridge, had almost Surprised the Cavaliers in their Quarters. They in the Town now having but short Warning took the Alarm and drew up to a Hill, neer adjoining, which they maintained against all the Force of the Assailants, till such Ayde came in, as forced the Devonshire Men disorderly to Retreat home again, the Cavaliers pursue them to Sorton Down, and the Night coming on they make a stand, C the Weather was then very Tempestuous, and Stormy, and it Thundred and Lightened extraordinarily, to the great Astonishment of the Cornish; At which instant, one of the Enemies Scouts came in sight, Mounted on a great black Horse, at whom the Sentinells gave Fire, and missing him, concluded among themselves, that it was the Devill which had appeared to them, Reporting the same to others of the Army, which did breed a generall Contemnation among them: Captain Drake in this Confusion falls in amongst them with his Troop, and the amazed Cavaliers deeming that Chidleys whole Army was come upon them, and not well discerning their own Fellows, Fought at Randome against one another, and at last took the Run, never leaving till they were gotten back to Launceston; Yet within a short time after recovering Heart, they March again into Devonshire, and meet with the Parliamentarians at Chagford, whom they D Defeat, though not without some Loss, Sidney Codolphin and others being slain upon the Place. Sir George Chidley was now suspected of holding Correspondence with the Cavaliers, which afterward appeared more Evident to the World by his Acting in reference to Stratton Fight, a little before which he sent away the greatest Part of his Horse Westward, and with the rest of his Horse, and all his Foot Encountred the Cornish Men at Stratton, May the Sixteenth, where the Foot being weakly Guarded with those few Troops that remained, and unable of themselves to sustain the Enemies Charge, were utterly Routed, the most part being either slain, or taken Prisoners, which the Horse who Marched Westward hearing of, Posted away for Plymouth: Yet was this Loss in some measure Recompenced to the Parliament in the North by a Victory obtained, May the Twenty second, against the Kings Forces at Wakefield E about a Plot.

Colonell Nathaniell Fines Governour of Bristol, had discovered a Plot of Robert Yeomans, and George Bourchier to betray the City to the Kings Forces, Whereupon they were apprehended, and by a Councell of War Condemned to be Hanged, which Sentence was accordingly Executed, May the Thirtieth, notwithstanding the Kings Letter to the Mayor and Citizens, and Generall Rubens to the Governour in their behalf: And so ends this Month Famous by the Death of Mr. John Pym, that Active Member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Pym dies.

seizing of London discover'd.

The next Month June began with the Arraignment of Mr. Waller, a Member of the House of Commons, Mr. Tomkins, Mr. Challoner, Mr. Hasell, Mr. Blinkborn, Mr. White, and others, for Plot- F ting to Seize into their Custody the Kings Children, some Members of the Parliament, the Lord Mayor and Committee of the Militia, all the Cities Out-works and Forts, the Tower of London, and all the Magazines; Then to let in the Kings Forces to Surprize the City, and destroy all the Opposers, and to resist all payment of Taxes.

They were all Arraigned at Guildhall, and Condemned, but only Tomkins and Challoner were Hanged, Waller was reprieved by Generall Essex, and after a years Imprisonment in the Towers, paid a Fine of 10000 l. so was Pardoned; and Travelled into France.

Mr. J. Hamden slain in the Fight at Tame.
A new Great Seal Voted by the Parliament.

The Earl of Essex being about Tame, Ordered the Buckingham Forces to Alarm the Cavaliers, June the Seventeenth: Some Skirmishes passed between them; the next Morning early, Prince Rupert engages their Body of Horse in Chalgrave Field, whom he Routed, took Captain Shiffeld, the Earl of Musgroves Son, and many others Prisoners; Major Gunter shot dead in the place, and Mr. John Hamden a stirring Member of Parliament, received there his mortall Wound, of G which he died a Week after. But in the West the *Parliament*s Forces had somewhat better Success, where they took in Taunton and Bridgewater: And now their main Business was to take care, how the want of the Great Seal should be supplied; Whereupon after long Debates, they Voted that a new Seal should be framed for Confirmation of their Acts and Ordinances, which was forthwith done, and thereon Engraven the Picture of the House of Commons and Members Sitting: Reversed the Armes of England and Ireland, Cross and Harp Pale; but be- tween the Voting and framing of it, they passed this Order; That if the Lord-Keeper Littleton upon

A upon Summons did not return with the Great Seal within Fourteen Dayes, he should lose his Place, and whatever should be Sealed therewith by him after that time, should be Null and Void in Law: and presently after Mr. Henry Martin a Member of Parliament, adventured to Seize the Regalia, which were Deposited in Westminster-Abbey.

The Cornish Forces were advanced into Somersetshire, where at Lands Down near Bath, July the Fifth, Sir William Waller meets with them: Hoptons Forces were fewer in Number, yet stood stiffly to it, maintaining the Fight from Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, till One the next Morning, and then the Enemy forsook the Field; But some of the Prisoners here taken found Opportunity to blow up the Train, in which Business Hopton himself among others received some hurt, and his Army for want of Ammunition was constrained to Retreat into the B Devizes, having lost in the Battell divers Gentlemen of Note: Viz. Sir Bevil Grenvill, Mr. Leak, Son to the Lord Daincourt, Mr. Baker, Mr. Bosford, Lieutenant Colonell Wall, Major Lower, Captain James, Captain Chalwell, and others. But the Parliaments Loss was far greater, both of Officers and private Soldiers; Waller being Advertised of what had hapned, Follows, and Besiegeth them, to whose Relief the King from Oxford sends the Lord Wilmot with a Body of 1500 Horse; Waller draws off to Roundway Down, where they come to Blows: With Wilmot joyned Hoptons Forces; the Horse on each Side began the Fight, in which the Parliamentarians were Defeated (more through a strange Pannick Fear, then any Force of the Cavaliers) and Fled, leaving the Foot to the Mercy of their Enemies, by whom Hundreds of them were slain, and more Prisoners taken, Four fair Brass Guns, Ammunition and Baggage, Eight and twenty C Colours, and Nine Corners; and this July 13th: And Waller himself having thus lost his Army, with a small Retinue, posts to London for Recruits.

In the North there had risen some Difference between the Lord Ferdinand Fairfax Generall for the Parliament, and Sir John Hotham Governour of Hull; this Latter refusing to submit to the Former, and upon Complaints on either Side, the Parliament intended to displace Hotham, which he discovering by the Letter by him Intercepted, began to meditate new Designs, his Son Captain Hotham being Suspected by the Parliament, was Imprisoned at Nottingham, but made his Escape, and under-hand Treated with the Earl of Newcastle, and coming to Hull, his Father and he stand upon their Guard: the Parliament fearing the Consequence, sent down Sir Matthew Boynton with a Commission to Seize them both, and Succeed in the Government of the D Town; who not being suspected by Hotham, as being his Brother-in-law, found Means so to tamper with the Garrison-soldiers, as that he made himself Master of their Affections, and the Magazine; and then Sir John too late espying the Practice, fled out of the Town: but at Beverley his own Soldiers set upon him, and constrained him to fly back again to Hull, where he was taken, with his Wife and Son, and the rest of his Children, and all sent up Prisoners to the Parliament, and Sir Matthew Boynton remained Governour of the Town.

Colonell Fines Governour of Bristol had formerly hanged up some Citizens for intending to have betrayed the Town to the Cavaliers, who yet did not fail to watch their Opportunity to effect their Design upon it, which now they obtained; for Prince Rupert who had some while hovered about those Parts, July the Fourth, sits down before it, at such a time as he knew by E his Correspondents, that it was worst provided for Resistance: So that the Governour after three daies Siege was constrained to Surrender.

August the Twelfth, the Earl of Lindsey being freed from his Imprisonment which he had endured since Edgehill Fight, returned to the King at Oxford. Eight daies after the Earls of Bedford and Holland came to Wallingford, and were received by the Governour Colonell Blagg, and were after brought to the King, to whom they made a large Profession of their Duty and Allegiance, and of their Resolution to desert the Parliaments Cause, but soon after upon some Discontent, the Wind changed, and they fled back again to the Parliament.

Prince Maurice now Besieges Exeter, upon which he gives a fierce Assault, flings in Grana- does, and fires part of the Suburbs, upon which ensues a fruitless Parley: The next day the F Prince Masters the great Sconce, and turns the Ordnance thereof upon the City, and then the Garrison agree to yield up the Town, the Officers only to part with their Swords, and the private Soldiers with Cudgells in their hands, and the Government conferred upon Sir John Berkley, September the Fourth.

Exeter yielded to Prince Maurice.

In the mean time, Judge Berkley who had been formerly Imprisoned by the Parliament for the Business of Ship-money, was Fined 20000 l. made Incapable of all Offices, and to continue a Prisoner during Pleasure.

The Parliament about this time were busied for Recruiting Sir William Wallers Army, and to induce the Londoners to a more cheerfull Compliance with them in it: Pennington the Mayor G was put in possession of the Lieutenantcy of the Tower, but Waller was faine to attend the longer, because Generall Essex was in the same Condition, and had need of Re-enforcements; Essex musters 10000, at Hounslow Heath, but they would not serve the turn for so weighty a Business, as the Relief of Gloucester, now Besieged by the King, and therefore he must make use of London Trained-Bands.

Essex muste-

Gloucester was the Place which stoppt the Current of the Kings Successes, which he now Be- sieges; Massey was Governour of it, and had with him Two Regiments of Foot, One hundred Horse, and as many more from Berkley Castle, with the Trained Bands, and some Reformadoes in all about 15000 Men, 40 Barrells of Powder, and a slender Artillery, the Works large, but not compleated, and the West-side defended by the River, and in this Case it was, when August the Tenth, the King fare down before it with a formidable Army, and sends them his Summons, which taking no effect, the Cavaliers advanced to the East-Suburbs, which being instantly fiered by the Citizens, they Entrench on the South and East-parts, where for their Welcome, the Besieged Salley out upon them, did good Execution, and returned: Sir William Vaviser with the Welsh Forces Entrenched on the North-west side, in Order to joyning with the Worcester Forces, Generall Ruthin on the South-side, and Sir Jacob Ashley in the East-Suburbs. A

They within behaved themselves like men of Resolution, and Alarmed their Enemies with frequent Salleys; and first, Captain Gray with an Hundred and fifty Musquetteers attempts the Worcester Forces, and marching up to the main Guard, kills some, takes others, and burning their Guard returns. After him comes out Captain Mallery, with the like Number, doth some Execution, and Retreats: Not long after this, Captain Crispe on the East-side makes a Salley, with Loss on both Sides; The Besiegers resolve to make their Assault on the South and East-side, to which end they begin to raise their Works, and then they plant Three Pieces of Ordnance, of Fourteen, and Four and Twenty Bullet, which they played furiously upon the Town, making a sleight Breach, which yet was soon made up again with Wooll-Packs and Cannon Baskers: The Welsh and Worcester Forces were now Quartered together, who placed Four Pieces of Ordnance before their League, and One against the Avon-Gate, to Amuse, whom a Party Issues out over the Works and gives the Alarm, whilst a greater Body Sallies forth at the North-Gate, and gets behind the Cannon, which they Nayled, having over-powred the main Guard, though not without some Loss. B C

Three Pieces of Cannon were now Planted against the South, Three on the East, and Two at the East-Gate, with above an Hundred and fifty Shot, battering the Corner-point, and the Muskets Playing from the Walls, and the Granadoes shot out of their Morter-pieces, did some Execution on the People: yet were their Spirits nothing abated, for shortly after Two Parties Sallied out of the Town, the One Commanded by Sterinson, and Moore, the other by Blunt and White, which did good Service, and Retired: At this Siege, it should seem that Pallas joyned with Mars, so many Ingenious Devices, for Offence and Defence were put in Execution. Such Engines framed, such Myning and Countermyning, as the like was not used in all the time of these Wars.

Now the King prepares for a generall Storm, and all his Endeavours were ready for it, the Besieged in Want, and their Ammunition Consumed to three Barrells of Powder; When News comes that the Earl of Essex was upon his March, with a Gallant Army to raise the Siege, wherefore the King sent away Prince Rupert to Retard his Speed, till he might rise and be gone. This was upon the Fifth of September, and so the Earl of Essex Enters Triumphant into Gloucester, where he sets things in Order, Causeth the City to be plentifully furnished with Provisions from the Country, and leaving with them Three Culverins, and Forty six Barrells of Powder, departed after the King, who at this Siege lost that Opportunity of marching up to London, (the Parliament having then no considerable Army in the Field) which he could never after regain. D

In Ireland the Wars had continued hitherto, and the English Army had pretty good Success against the Rebels: But now the King understanding of the Parliaments Contracting with the Scots for Ayde, thought good to strengthen his Own Side, by recalling part of his Army thereto help him at Home, and to that end Commissions his Lieutenant-Generall, the Earl of Ormond to agree on a Cessation for a Year, which was concluded at Singeston, September the Fifteenth, One thousand six hundred forty and three, and three Dayes after was Proclaimed by the Lords Justices and Councell at Dublin. E

And shortly after that some Forces from thence, under the Command of Sir Michaell Ernley, Landed in Wales, and Besieged Hawarden Castle neer Chester, which was soon yielded up unto them by the Soldiers within, who came lately out of Ireland, and had been enforced to the Parliaments Service. F

The Earl of Essex having Relieved Gloucester, and furnished them with what they wanted, Speeds after the King, who passing by Cirencester left there a strong Party, where Prince Maurice his Forces were also that Night expected, but instead of them comes Essex, and mistaken for the Other, Enters the Town without Opposition, seizes Four hundred Men, and Thirty Cartloads of Provision; and so Marches to Chilton, neer which, on Mawarne Hills his Forces had a hot Skirmish with the Cavaliers, but Night parted the Fray, and the next Day, September the Twentieth, He Marches for Newberry, the King was there before, and had gotten the Advantage of the Ground, and planted his Ordnance.

Early in the Morning Generall Essex views his Enemies Battell, in Newberry Common, draws up his Own, and falls to Firing, and the Cavaliers do the like; That part of the Army which Prince Rupert charged, being over-layd, was forced to fall off to the Right Hand, where Two great Bodies of Horse Marched down the Hill, and fell in furiously upon the Prince, both Sides doing their Parts with great Manhood, and Animosity, coming to Handy Blowes with eithers Swords: The Essexians then Wheeling about, Charged the Lord Fermyn's Regiment, whom they forced to make their Escape through some Bodies of Foot. In which Encounter were Slaine, Colonell Censtable, and the French Marquis De-la Vindville: This Fight continued with great Loss and Bloodshed on either Side, but the Greater on the G

The Battell at Newberry.

A the Kings, whose other Bodies of Horse Commanded by the Earles of Carnarvon, and Northampton, notwithstanding the undaunted Courage of their Commanders, were overpowered, and Carnarvon Slaine. Night coming on, caused both Armies to Retire: In this Fight, the London Trained Bands and Auxiliaries did good Service, many were the Slain on Both Sides, and Essex lost many of his Officers; but on the Kings Part were killed the Earles of Carnarvon, and Sunderland, Vicount Falkland, Colonell Morgan, Lieutenant Colonell Feilding, besides Mr. Stroude, and many other Gentlemen, Volunteers, and most of his Officers hurt.

This was a harder Bout then that of Edgehill; So that neither Part having any Stomach to Renew the Fight, they Marched away one from the other, both the King and Essex, having first sent their Warrants to Newberry, and Enbarnes for the Buriall of the Dead Bodies. Essex his Ayme was to Relieve Gloucester, which he happily effected, though not without some Damage; for Colonell Hurry with a good Party of Horse fell upon the Rere of his Army, Commanded by Sir Phillip Stapleton, whom in a narrow Lane they Charged so furiously, that they forced them to a Run directly forward through their own Foot, till at length getting into the Field, they Faced about, and forced the Enemy back again: many Colours of the Kings Corners were carried up to London, and much Reputation was Gained by this Expedition to Generall Essex, and the London Trained Bands.

C Sir William Vavasor comes to Hereford with a strong Party, which he Augments with some Forces in those Parts, and being Commissioned to Command in chief in that County and Gloucestershire, Garrisons Tewkesbury, from whence comes to Sudley Castle, then held by the Lord Chandoyce, and thence to Neverstone Castle, which he also Garrisoned, Carelessing the Country People all the way, in hopes of inducing them to raise for the King: but failing of his Purpose retired back again.

Barkley Castle, was now kept for the King by Captain Roskarrock, who made many Incursions towards Gloucester, for repressing of which, a Company was placed at Frampton House, and another at Slimbridge, Massey himself Faced the Castle with two Troops of Horse and some Musketeers, whilst another Party of Horse went out to fetch in Malignants, but were frustrated by the Lord Harberts Horse: Sir John Winter for the King Manned his house at Lidney in the Forrest of Dean, from whence with the Lord Harberts Help he Infested the Parliamentarians, and had many Bickerings with Colonell Massey.

And now were Forces come over out of Ireland for the Kings Service Commanded by Colonell Myn, and Sir William St. Leger, so that Gloucester was again in a manner Surrounded with Enemies to the Number of about Six Thousand, and Prince Rupert himself amongst them.

A Plot was layd for the Gaining of the City, which one Mr. Stanford was to mannage, who Presuming upon old Acquaintance with one Blackhouse a Gloucester Captain, dealt with him by Letters to Betray the Place, which he Communicated to Massey; and they agree together to Drill on the Design, and Captain Blackhouse Writes back to Stanford with great Professions of Compliance; but withall, pretending extream Necessity, requires Two or three hundred Pounds in hand, and Security for Two thousand more.

E These Proposals were Ratified by the Lord Digby from Oxford, and Sir William Vavasor appointed to Treat with them, further concerning the Manner of effecting the Designe, accordingly Blackhouse receives of Stanford Two hundred Pounds, and a Promise to disengage a Bond of his of Fifty Pounds, and the Plot was thus;

That Colonell Massey should be drawn out of Gloucester with a strong Party, towards Barkley Castle, with Assurance that the Place should be Rendered, in whose Absence, Blackhouse was to open the Gates, and deliver the Word, which was to be done upon the Fifteenth of February.

But the Cavaliers in the mean time, smelling out Blackhouse his Intentions, escaped the Traps that was layd for them.

F Sir William Waller now enters Gloucestershire, (whereupon the Kings Party withdraw to their severall Garrisons) from whence he Advanced towards Monmouth, which he enters, the Lord Harberts Garrison Retiring; from thence he marches to Uske, and spending no long time there, returns with his Horse and Dragoons through the lowest part of the Forrest of Dean, neer the Rivers side of Severn, whilst his Foot and Artillery came back at Chepstow by a Bridge of Boats; and high time it was, for Prince Maurice had entered Tewkesbury with a Brigade of Horse and Foot, and joyning with the Lord Grandison, resolved to follow Waller, or meet him in his Return, Waller not having Strength enough to Fight the Prince, caused two Parties to give a false Alarm to his Quarters, whilst himself with his main Body slipt between both, and being re-inforc'd with Two Troops of Horse, and Two hundred Foot from Gloucester, he falls upon Tewkesbury, which he Surpriseth with some Prisoners, forcing the Governour Sir Matthew Cary to shift for himselfe: And Sir Robert Cook was made Governour of the Town for the Parliament, and then Marches away with his flying Body. But in Ripleyfield the Prince overtakes him, finding him drawn up and divided into three Bodies, but not in a Condition to Fight, being fewer in Number, no Shot prepared, no Cannoneers, few Foot, the Wind and Sun in their Faces.

In this Posture, some perswaded to Fight, others to Retreat, to which Waller Assented, although there was on other way but through a long Incommodious Lane, which accordingly he puts in Execution, Commanding a Party of Dragoons to Face the Cavaliers, and the Musketeers Severall places Garrison'd for the King by Sir William Vavasor.

Sir J. Winter and the Lord Harbert Infest Gloucester. More Forces sent the King out of Ireland.

The Cavaliers deputed in a Plot of theirs, layd for the seizing of Gloucester.

quietteers to ſtand at the Corner to make good his Retreat. But Maurice falls on and beats the A Dragoons, over Hedge and Ditch, who in their Flight did greatly diſorder the reſt, and more hurt he had done, if Haſelrig with ſome Horſe and Foot had not made a Charge, by which means the other had Opportunity to get out of the Lane, and from thence to Tisbury.

About this time it was, that Generall Essex Beſieged Redding, which occaſioned the King to draw away his main Forces out of Glouceſterſhire, whereby Waller got freedome to take Breath, and after ſome time of Reſreſhment, atchieved ſundry Exploits, and joyning with Maffey Marched to Hereford, which they took, and in it the Lord Sundamoor, Colonell Cunneſbeys, and Sir William Crofts, with others, ſome Armes and Ammunition.

After this they came up before Worceſter, which yet they would not ſtay to Beſiege, becauſe of the approach of the Kings Forces, under the Lord Capell, and the Lord Loughborough, who B came to the Relief of Captain Bride, Governour of Eccleſhall Caſtle, Beſieged by the Parliaments Forces under Sir William Brereton, Colonell Gell, Colonell Graves, Colonell Rigby, Colonell Jackson: Theſe had lately drawn the Moorlanders (Inhabitants of the Lower Grounds in Staffordſhire) to their Side, and had made themſelves Maſters of the Town of Stafford: Brereton quickly Maſtered Eccleſhall Town, and Summoned the Caſtle, but received a reſolute Answer; and having ſpent ſome Months-time in the Siege of it, Capell and Loughborough Arrived with their Forces, againſt whom, the Beſiegers finding themſelves unable to make Reſiſtance upon even Terms, quit their Trenches, and retire to the Church where they Fortifie themſelves; but there was no ſuch need of fear, for the Lords being to attend upon Buſineſs of greater Importance, could not make any Stay there, but contenting themſelves with having Relieved the Cattle, C reſolved forthwith to March away; Notwithſtanding all the Intreaties of Governour Bride, who ſeeing he could not prevail with them to make any Attempts upon the Church, and diſpairing of any Poſſibilities to hold out without them, delivered up his Charge to the Lords, who placed Captain Abel a Dane in that Command, and immediatly departed; and the old Soldiers loving their Old Captain, forſook the New, and followed him: And ſhortly after the Parliamentarians coming on again, the Dane was neceſſitated to Surrender upon reaſonable Quarter.

And now comes out an Ordinance of Parliament to Seize upon the Kings Revenue, and another for the abating of the Excife upon Virginia Tobacco, upon Complaint from the Plantation there.

Sir William Waller who after the taking of Hereford, was Deſeated at the Deviſes, was now again Recruited, and ſent away with a Promise of a new Commiſſion to be Serjeant Major Generall of Hampſhire, Suſſex, Surrey, and Kent; and Marching to Farnham, beat a Party of the Kings Army, and from thence marched to Auſton, which he took, and thence to Arundell Caſtle, where his promiſed Commiſſion was ſent him, and he thereby Encouraged, ſo ordered the matter, that in eight and twenty dayes Siege, he had the Place Surrendered.

During which time, Colonell Norton aſſaying to ſtop Hopton from going to moleſt Waller in his foreſayd Siege, was by him Routed, and flying towards Chicheſter, could not gain Admiſſion, at which Waller being Diſgusted, Writ up to the Parliament, craving Authority to place and diſplace all Governours of Towns and Caſtles within his Aſſociation, which was granted; and as he obtained it without the good Will of Generall Essex, ſo was he thereby left at Liberty, E without Dependance on his Direction.

The Parliament finding the Kings Power to encreaſe, Publiſh, That whoſoever ſhall Aſſiſt the King, with Horſe, Armes, Plate, or Money, againſt them, are Traytors to the Parliament, and ſhall be ſo proceeded againſt. Notwithſtanding which his Power greatly augmented, and his Armies in ſeverall parts obtained very Fortunate Succeſſes.

About this time Cardinal *Mazareine Richelieu*s true Succeſſor, deſiring rather to pry into the Eſtate of this Land, then to do any good in it, procured Count Harcourt to croſs the Seas hither, as Ambaſſadour to mediate a Peace between the King and Parliament, which took no Effect according to the Cardinals own Deſires.

The Earl of Manchester being at Cambridge about the Buſineſs of Sequeſtration, and not certainly reſolved, whether the Colledges and Halls were within his Commiſſion, the Parliament clear the Point with this Ordinance.

THas the Eſtates, Rents, and Revenues of the Colledges and Halls in the Univerſity of Cambridge, are in no wiſe to be Seized on, but ſhall remain and be to the ſame Univerſity, Colledges, and Halls, as if the Ordinance of Sequeſtration had never been made.

Provided, That if any Part, Portion, or Devidend be due to any Head, Fellow, or Scholar in the ſayd Univerſity, being, or which hereafter ſhall be a Malignant, or Delinquent, within any of the Ordinances of Sequeſtration, then they ſhall be excepted from receiving any Part or Portion of his Allowance, but ſhall be dealt with as it ſhall be Ordered by the Earl of Manchester, and none to be Receiver, Treasuſer, or Burſer, but ſuch as ſhall be approved by him.

A December the Twenty second, the King at Oxford Summons a Parliament, which Convened January the Twenty second; and the King calling them together, at the great Hall at Christ Church, tells them, That if he had the least Thoughts of disagreeing with the Happiness of this Kingdom, he would not advise with such Counsellours as they were; And to the Upper Schools were Assigned to the Lords, and the Convocation-house to the Commons. In this Parliament, besides the Prince and the Duke of York, Lord-Keeper Littleton, Treasurer Cottingham, Duke of Richmond, and Marquis Hartford, were Nineteen Earls, and as many Lords, and an Hundred and seventeen Knights and Gentlemen; but afterwards Five Lords more, and Twenty three Knights and Gentlemen, then disabled by severall Occasions, appeared in this Convention. The first thing by them taken in hand, was, to Consider of Means for the effecting of Peace; to which end a Letter is Ordered to be Writtento General Essex, and Subsigned by all the Members, is accordingly sent to him, to which the Earl returns no Answer, but sends it up to the Parliament at Westminster.

The K. Summons a Parliament at Oxford.

January the Sixteenth, the Scots Army entred England, by way of Newcastle, consisting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, under the Command of Generall Leven, for Assistance of the Parliament, in pursuance of the Solemn League and Covenant, sending before them a spetious Declaration, for the Justness of their Cause, which they profess to be Reformation of Religion, Honour of the King, and Peace of the Kingdoms.

The Scots Army enter England.

Secondly the Lawfulness of their Calling thereunto, which they ground upon that particular Obligation, which the Parliament had upon their Nation, for refusing to Countenance a War against them in 1640.

And lastly, Their Carriage therein, which they will manifest by their Civill Demeanor during their Aboad in England, and their Peaceable Departure afterwards; For which they freely give the Publick Faith of the Kingdom of Scotland, Declaring it to be a main End of their Coming, to Rescue the King from his pernicious Counsellors,

Sir Richard Biron Governour of Newark for the King, had been very Active in those Parts, and had made Excursions as far as within three Miles of Lincoln, which so provoked the Parliamentarians, that Sir John Meldram with Seaven thousand Men lirs down before the Town, where having continued three Weeks, continually Alarmed by Courageous Sallies of the Besieged, at length comes Prince Rupert with 4000 Horse and Dragoons, and a 1000 Foot; upon whose

Sir John Meldram Besiegeth Newark.

D Approach Meldram drew off to his chief Work, at Spittle, or Exeter-house, a little more then Musket Shot from the Town, whither they had drawn all their Regiments, Cannon and Ammunition: however Rupert Advanceth up the Beak and Hill, at the Descent whereof, he spies Four Bodies of Horse standing in readines to receive them, and all the rest Horse and Foot drawn up in Battalia near the Spittle: Upon these Rupert gives a stout Charge, and after some stiff Bouts by main force drove them quite out of the Field, beyond their own Work, Foot and Cannon at the Spittle, some into the Island, and others to Muskham-Bridge, and Asslayed their chief Work at the Spittell. In all which Places the Parliamentarians Valiantly Defended themselves; but having lost 2000 of their Number in Attempts upon the Town, before the Princes coming, and being now Distressed by Rupert before, and Governour Biron behind, all Intercourse cut off by their Enemies Interposition between the Spittell, Muskham-Bridge, and the Island, and not Victualls for above two Dayes, they were constrained to desire a Parley, and then come to these Articles,

He is Blockt up by Prince Rupert.

First, That Match, Bullet, Powder, Cannon, and all other Fire-arnes belonging to the Artillery, be delivered up.

Secondly, That all Soldiers March away with their Swords by their sides, and Colours and Drums.

Thirdly, That all Officers March without Molestation with their Armes, and Horses for themselves and Servants: And all Bagg and Baggage, Money, and whatsoever doth truly belong to themselves.

F Fourthly, That all Troopers and Dragoons March with their Swords, Horses, and Colours.

Fifthly, That his Highness send a Convoy to Protect them from any Injury two Miles, from the utmost of his Highness Quarters.

The Parliament Carets the Scots Army, and Impower them to Assaile for themselves, the Twentieth Part over all the Norths and all Malignants Estates in those Parts, besides what other Counties and Associations were Assaied for them.

But the Earl of Newcastle is Marching to give them rougher Entertainment, and against him the Lord Fairfax sends his Son Sir Thomas.

G But in the mean time, other Matters are preparing for Scotland by James Earl of Montross: This Lord had sided with the Covenantors in 1638, whilst they pretended to move by Petition only, and not by force for Preservation of Religion, the Kings Honour, and the Peoples Good.

The manner of Montrosses falling off from the Covenantors, and applying himself to the Kings Service.

In 1639. the Command of 2000 Foot, and five Hundred Horse was Conferred upon him, being Absent, and the Command of 5000 more upon his neer Relations and Friends, being a considerable Part of that Army which then Invaded England: In which Service he shewed much forwardness, as being the first that posted over the Tweede, and that on Foot, thereby shadowing his Intentions of turning to the King when Opportunity should serve, if the Pacification had not Intervened.

In the next Scottish Invasion he also accompanied them, and writ severall Letters privately to A the King at York, professing his Duty and Fidelity, which was stoln out of the Kings Pockets by the Scots of his Bed-chamber, and Copied out for the Covenantors: After the Disbanding of that Army, Montros returning home, joyned in League with some of the Nobility for upholding of the Kings Interest, but again betrayed to the Adversie Party; and shortly after they intercept a Letter from the King to him Quilted in the Mellengers Saddle, upon which he with Napier Lord of Marchmont, and Sir Sterling Ker, were Imprisoned in the Castle of Edenborough. Being afterwards Released, he in the year 1642. was offered the Command of the Scots Covenantors Army then to be levied for Assistance of the Parliament of England, which he refused, and privately with the Lord Ogleby came to the Queen then newly Landed out of Holland at Burlington in York-shire: to her he states the Case, and proposes some means to remedy those Evills which we threaten from the North, but all was quashd by Hamiltons coming home, he returns B and makes shew of some kind of Willingness to comply with the Covenantors; Whereupon Alexander Hinderson comes to Carels and to satisfie his Conscience, and with him comes Sir James Rolloch, from whom he sifts the Secrets, and their Resolutions to send an Army in Ayde of their Brethren in England against the King, and so Poits away with Ogleby to England, and comes to Oxford, where he Communicates his Intelligence to the Queen; who trusting more upon the Hamiltons, made no great Account of it; whereupon they take their way to the King then before Gloucester, with whom also they gained small Belief, being over-weighed by the prevalent Authority of Hamilton at Court, who ever laboured to keep down this Earl, as knowing his Worth to be such, that if on.e he came in Favour, he would soon over-top him: But the C King returning to his Winter Quarters at Oxford, by daily Reports found Montros to be too true, and now too late repenting his Incredulity, he Commithons Montros to be Generall Governour of Scotland, and orders the Earl of Antrim to Ayde him in Person, with some considerable Forces, out of Ireland to be Landed in the West of Scotland, and the Earl of Newcastle to furnish him with a Party of Horse to enter upon the South and to into the Heart of that Kingdom. And forthwith Sir John Cockram is dispatched to the King of Denmark, to Negotiate for Men, Money, and Ammunition.

Montros made General-Governour of Scotland for the King.

Marquis Hamilton sent Prisoner to Pendennis, upon his brothers flying to the Parliament. Montros enters Scotland with an Army. The Affairs in France, and other foreign Parts.

In the mean time, the Hamiltons come Post towards Oxford, giving out by the way, that their fiery Zeal for their King, made their Country too hot for them, but being forbidden the Court, the Earl of Lanrick gets to the Parliament at London, and from thence to the Scottish Army: D Whereupon his eldest Brother the Marquis, was sent Prisoner to Pendennis Castle in Cornwall. Montros coming to the Marquis of Newcastle, could obtain of him but Two hundred Horse, with two Brass Field-Pieces, and Orders to the Kings Forces to help him in his Journey to Scotland, and by the Counties of Cumberland and Westmerland, was supplied with Eight hundred Foot, and three Troops of Horse, and passing forwards by the help of some Friends, got together Two hundred Horse more, wherewith he shortly after, Viz. The year following, April 13. entred Scotland, and so ended this year with Us; Which was rendred Famous abroad by the Two Battells of Rocroy, and Durling, the First in May, at which time Don Francisco de Melo Besieged Rocroy, having made the Duke of Albuquerque a young Portugall, and araw Soldier General of the House, wheratt his Officers were so Disgusted, that when the Prince of Conde, and E Monsieur Gaston fell on, the Spaniards without making any considerable Resistance, began to Rout, and then to Run, and the French Victorious, presently took the Town of Theonville: Whereupon Melo was displaced, and the Government given to Cassell Rudrigo, till the coming of the Archduke Leopold.

But in Bavaria the Spaniards quitted with Messieurs, where the Duke of Lorraine (then in their Service) with John de Werdt, and the Baron of Mercy Vanquished the French, and Weymarinus, and took Prisoners the Four Martialls of France, which Conducted the Army, together with Four hundred Officers, and a Thousand Common Soldiers, besides the Pillage, This was about the end of November.

Sir William Waller Defeats the Lord Hopton's Force, and takes Winchester.

It was now the Twentieth year of King Charles's Reign, being the year 1644. Sir William F Waller having taken Arundell Castle, and gotten a Commission to his Mind, Marches forward against the Lord Hopton, whom he finds drawn out in Brandon Heath near Alsford, with Intention to Fight, which Waller refused not, and so gains an Advanthgeous Hill, from whence, being forced, he gets up to another, whither the Cavaliers follow him, and entred a sharp Dispute, but at length the Parliamentarians by the help of the Ground, and the Covert of Trees and Hedges, did such Execution upon the Enemy, that after the loss of many Persons of Quality, besides a great Number of the Vulgar Sort, they Retreated in great Disorder; and drawing off their Cannon towards Winchester, Wheeled off unseen to Basing-house, whence Hopton hastens to Oxford, and Winchester after this Victory yields to Waller, upon Summons. On the Kings Side G these were mortally Wounded; The Lord Stewart, Sir John Smith, and three Colonells, Sandys, Mannering, and Scot: and these were hurt, which afterwards recovered; Colonell Appleyard, Captain Perfon, Sir Edward Stowells, and Sir Henry Barde, of the Parliaments Side; besides divers that were Slain, Dollbeer was Wounded, and Colonell Tomson lost his Leg by a Cannon Shot.

About this time, Colonell Gryffith made his ridiculous Expedition with Silver Trumpets, and guarded Coats, for the Reduction of Wales to the Parliaments Obedience, but was totally Routed at his first Encounter, and so being Cashiered, we hear no more of him, but only for his Debauchedness commonly called Prince Gryffith, because at his setting forth, he bragg'd that

The ridiculous Expedition of one Gryffith.

A he would seek out Prince Rupert to fight with him hand to hand, and afterwards having spent his Estate Travelled beyond-Seas, and was killed in a Tavern at Paris.

This Spring Generall Essex had his Army Recruited to seven compleat Regimentts of Horse, and six of Foot, and the Parliament also compleated their Navy: and Colonell Oliver Cromwell Colonell Oliver Cromwell made Governour of Ely with Power to raise Moneys within the Isle, for Support of that Garrison, which consisted of Seven hundred Foot, and three Troops of Horse.

May the Third, Colonell Fox for the Parliament comes from Tamworth, to Bendly, by Night with a single Troop, and obtained Entrance of the Guard, under pretense of one of Prince Rupert's Troops, passed into the Town, Surprises the Garison, takes the Governour Sir Thomas Lisleton Prisoner, with divers other Gentlemen, about Fifty Horse, and carries them all away with him.

And in York-shire the Fairfaxes after divers Successes, April the Tenth, Mastered the Kings Garisons, at Selby and Heintough, and took so many Prisoners, that they were fain to desire the Parliament's Order, how to dispose of them: And now think themselves able to deal with the Earl of Newcastle.

April the Nineteenth, the Parliament at Oxford having little Business, and some Differences also among them, were willing to Recede, wherefore the King Prorogued them to the Eighth of October, and afterwards by Proclamation to the Ninth of November.

Now the Parliament in Scotland about this time Assembled, to whom the Parliament at Westminster send Congratulatory Letters, with Thanks for their Assistance both here and in Ireland, and certifie them, that they had serled a Committee of both Kingdomes at Westminster, to Consult together for the good of both Nations, and that they had appointed a Committee to Reside with the Scottish Army in England, to which Army they had already sent 20000 l. and had 30000 l. more in readines to be speedily sent unto them.

Latham House had been neer Eighteen Weeks Besieged by some Parliament Forces, under the Command of Colonels Ashton, Moore, and Rigby; but at last Prince Rupert Marches that way and takes Stopwash, where the Parliament had a strong Garison, and from thence sends Relief to the Countels of Darby: Whereupon the Besiegers drew off.

The King in the presence of the Peers at Oxford, received the Sacrament at Christs-Church, at the Hands of Bishop Usher, using these Solemn Protestations;

D "My Lords, I espy here many resolved Protestants, who may Declare to the "World the Resolution I do now make; I have to the utmost of my Power prepared "my Soul to become a Worthy Receiver, And may I so receive Comfort by the "blessed Sacrament, as I do intend the Establishment of the true Reformed Protestant "Religion, as it stood in its Beauty in the happy Dayes of Queen Elizabeth, without "any Connivance at Popery: I bless God that in the midst of these publick Distra- "ctions, I have still Liberty to Communicate, and may this Sacrament be my Dam- "nation, if my Heart do not joyn with my Lips in this Protestation.

E The Parliament at Westminster Voted it Treason for any Member, or Members of either House to Desert them, and go to the King, and they never to be received again.

And in the meantime, Essex and Waller joyn together, and enter Oxfordshire, with Intention to Invirion the King, whose greater Armies were then abroad, to prevent which, he Marches out of Oxford by Night, leaving sufficient Force behind for the Defence of the City, and comes to Norhly, where he drew up his Army of 3000 Foot, and 4000 Horse, 12 Drakes, and 60 Carriages, and so Marched on towards Worcester. Essex and Waller pursue two severall Wayes, but both met at Burford, where it is agreed between them, That Essex with his heavy Guns should March to Reduce the Western Counties, and Waller with the lighter Field-Pieces should joyne with Masseys Forces, and pursue the King: So Essex Marches to Faringdon, and Waller toward Glouster, and from thence in Quest of the King, who hearing of Essex's Departure, turns back, with Intention to be furnished with Ammunition from Oxford, and to give Waller Battell: at Burford he receives his expected Ammunition, and at Whitney some additionall Recruits, and from thence comes to Buckingham, and taking Brackley and Culworth in his way, Advanceth to Grimsbury Fields, neer Banbury, and Faces Waller, who was drawn upon Crockhill; but he soon left that standing, and gained Burton Hill, a more advantageous Ground, where he stood in Battalia, whom when the King could by no means draw down, he marched over Copredy Bridge towards Daintry. The Kings Van and main Body being a good space before, Waller makes down with 2000 Horse, and 9000 Foot over the Bridge, and falls upon the Kings Rear, Commanded by the Earls of Northampton, and Cleveland; these Faced about and Charged the Enemy through and through, and were so well Seconded, that they Routed Sir VVilliams Horse and Foot, killed 150 men, took all his Train of Artillery, together with many considerable Officers Prisoners; And this, June 29.

The King presently Marcheth to Bath, after Essex, who was gotten VVestward, and by the Lord Roberts Entreaty, was periwaded into the narrow Noofe of Cornwall.

July 23. the King comes to King-smoore in Somersetshire, and from thence August the First, to Liskerd eight Miles distance from the Earl of Essex, who was at Loftwithiel, and there was En- camped compassed by the King and Prince Maurice at Buconneck, Sir Richard Grenville at Bodmyn, and Sir Jacob Ashley at Hales, the Cavaliers were very desirous to Fight, but after a serious Deliberation, it was judged more adviseable to starve them; to that end, Generall Goring with a Parcy of Horse, and Sir Thomas Basset with 1500 Foot were sent Westward, to stop all Provisions that way, and to streighten them by keeping their Horse and Foot close together: Hereupon the Parliamentarians drew their Cannons and Baggage toward Foy, but the greatest part of their Horse being 2300. Commanded by Sir William Balfore, broke through the Kings two Quarters, and got to Salisbury, and thence to Plymouth, which all the War-time held out stoutly for the Parliament: All this while the King pursues his Advantage upon Essex his Foot, who with those few Horse that were left made the best Resistance that they could; but at last being over-powred by the Kings Forces, which in a manner lay round about them, and the Country rising in great Numbers upon them, the Earl of Essex quits his Command, and by Water makes for Plymouth, and the Soldiers now destitute of a General come to a Parley September the First: The Commissioners on the Kings side were Prince Maurice, Generall Ruthen, and the Lord Digby. On the other, Colonell Barkley, Colonell Whichcote, and Colonell Butler, who at last agreed upon Seven or Eight Articles, the Summe whereof were; To deliver up to the King all their Artillery, with all their Bag and Baggage, no Person under the Degree of a Corporall, to wear any kind of Weapon, all Officers above, only Sword and Pistoll: There were accordingly delivered up Forty Pieces of Brass Ordnance, Two hundred Barrells of Powder, with Bullet and Match proportionable, Nine thousand Armes for Horse and Foot; some Thousands of private Soldiers were immediatly upon their Desires entertained in his Majesties Service: The worthy Deportment of Major Generall Skippon, who Commanded the Foot, deservedly challengeth an Encomiastick Commemoration, who being desired by the Generall to escape away with him by Water to Plymouth, chose rather to live and die with his fellow-Soldiers, then to Desert them in such a distressed Condition. And when after the forementioned Agreement, the Cavaliers abused the unarmed Parliamentarians in their March, he Courageously addressed himself to the King, and representing what Dishonour would thereby accrue to his Majesty, procured more strict Command for the punctual observation of the Articles, and so marched to Poole: After these sundry Successes erected the Kings Party, Ilferdcombe, Barnestable, and Salisbury taken; and so the King Victorious, takes leave of the Western Parts, and returns to Oxford.

The K. sends severall Letters to the Parl.
and to the Earl of Essex
about a Treaty.

The King after the Defeat of Waller at Copedy Bridge, had Whitten from Evesham, July 4. D to the Parliament for a Treaty, and to the same purpose he sends another Letter from Liskard to Essex, at Leistwithiell, the like did the Lords and great Officers, and Commanders of the Army: but through mutuall Mistrusts, all came to nothing; Yet now after this Victory, the King from Tavistock sends another Letter, Dated September 8. to both Houses, for an Accommodation, willing them to take his former Letter from Evesham, into Consideration.

September the Twelfth, the Parliament at Oxford Assembled again, but falling into Divisions and Factions, the King despairing of any good Effects from them, in March following Dissolved them.

France and the united Provinces Mediate for a Peace.

The French had formerly Mediated a Peace between the King and Parliament, but in vain; And now the United Provinces meant to try what they could do in it, and at leastwise to settle Trade, however the Game went: from These, many men expected much good, by reason of the Kings previous Messages; but yet in the end of the year, they also returned, having effected nothing as to a Reconciliation.

The Earl of Newcastle Besieged in York
by the Parliaments Forces.

The Earl of Newcastle who had done many Exploits in the North, for the King, was now over-powred by the Parliaments Forces, consisting of the Scots, under the Earl of Levens Command, and of the English in two Bodies, the one Commanded by the Earl of Manchester, the other by the Lord Fairfax, each General having his particular Lieutenant-General, Leven had his Cousin Colonell David Lesley, Manchester, Colonell Oliver Cromwell, and the Lord Fairfax had his Son Sir Thomas: These Armies held the Earl of Newcastle Besieged in York about two Months, for whose Relief, Prince Rupert Advanceth Northward with a great Power of Horse and Foot, F taking in his Way three Garisons, Stofford, Bolton, and Liverpoole, and so comes forward towards York, upon whose Approach the Besiegers drew off, and those within Sally out upon the Rear, and bring back with them some Provisions. After this Rupert and Newcastle joyn their Forces, and pursue them with a Resolution to give Battell.

The Battell at Marston Moore.

July the Third, both Armies Face one another upon a great Plain, called Marston Moore; the Prince with the Left Wing fell on the Parliaments Right Wing, consisting of the Fairfaxian Horse and Foot, and a Reserve of Scots, Routed them, and pursued them a great way; the like did Generall Goring, Sir Charles Lucas, and Major Generall Porter, upon the main Body: but the Cavaliers too eagerly following the Chase, the Victory now almost Achieved, was snatcht out of their Hands, by Manchester and Cromwell, who with the Parliaments Left Wing utterly Routed the Earl of Newcastle, who Commanded the Right Wing of the Cavaliers, and then came in timely to the Relief of their Companions, who, now again Rallied, fell altogether upon the divided Bodies of Rupert and Goring, and totally dispersed them, and obtained a compleat Victory after three hours Fight, from Seven in the Morning, till Ten, took 3000 Prisoners, 20 Pieces of Ordnance, besides a considerable Number of Officers, and 47 Colours of Horse and Foot, and soon after made themselves Masters of all in the North.

Sir Thomas Glenham was Governour of York, which the three Generalls Besiege, and he standing

A Standing in want of Ammunition, Prince Rupert having made use of most of what was in the City for the Fight, July 16. Surrenders upon Articles; and then the three Generalls parting their Forces, Leven returns into Northumberland, and takes the Town of Newcastle: After this Battell, which was the greatest, both for the fierceness of it, and for the Number of Soldiers on both sides, that was fought during this unhappy Intestine War: Prince Rupert sped him into Lancashire, with the Relicks of his broken Army, but others departed the Kingdome (through Discontent taken at some Affronts, offered them by Prince Rupert, upon which they refused to engage any further in that Cause) and Landed at Hamburgh; Viz. The Earl of Newcastle lately made Marquis, with his two Sons, and his Brother Sir Charles Cavendish, Generall King, the Lord Falconbridge, the Lord Widdrington, the Earl of Cranworth, the Bishop of Londonderry, Sir Edward Widdrington, Colonell Carnaby, Colonell Basset, Colonell Muson, Sir William Vavasor Sir Francis Mackworth, with above Eighty other Persons.

The Parliament Ordain new Levies to be raised, 10000 Foot, and 1500 Horse, and 1300 Dragoons, out of the lately Affiliated South-eastern Counties; and as much Moneys to be advanced out of those Counties, as shall pay those Soldiers during their Employment.

New Levies raised by the Parliament.

Middleton a Scotchman, Lieutenant-Generall to Sir William Waller, comes before Dennington Castle in Barkshire, with 3000 Horse and Foot, which he gives a stout Assault to, but Repulsed, and finding himself unable to do the Work, marches Westward after Generall Essex: but in the way is met with, and Routed by Sir Francis Dorrington, and Sir William Courtney; this makes him Retreat to Shirborn in Dorsetshire, where he falls upon a Party of the Kings Horse, and beats them, repairing his Credit by their Overthrow: then comes Colonell Horton, and makes a second Attempt upon the Castle, and after him the Earl of Manchester a Third: but through the stout Resolution of the Governour Bloyse and his Garison, they were frustrated of their Hopes, and so the Earl marched away to Reading, and Horton to Abbingdon.

Dennington Castle attempted by three Parties, but in vain.

The Queen being come from Oxford to Exeter, was there delivered of a Daughter, June 16. which was called Henretta Maria, and after, she Journied from thence to Pendennis Castle in Cornwall, where she Embarked for France, and hath ever since continued there.

The Princess Henretta Maria born at Exeter. The Queen returns into France.

Banbury had been Besieged about Eleven Weeks, being Defended by Sir William Compton, Brother to the Earl of Northampton, who is now at leisure to Succour his Brother, which he doth, October 25. putting to Flight Colonell John Fines, and his Forces which lay before the Castle.

D But in Gloucestershire Massey prevails, Colonell Myn had been long a Goad in his Sides, and had now designed with the Forces of both Counties, Hereford and Worcester, to have Marched from their Rendezvous at Cassellane, to the Gates of Gloucester, but Massey prevents them, and with a competent Number of Soldiers, falls upon Myn, whom he finds drawn up into Battalia 160 Horse, and 850 Foot, these he Courageously Charges, and after a tough Resistance, breaks and disperseth them; Myn was slain upon the Place, and about 170 more, divers Officers, and many common Soldiers taken Prisoners: at length, too late, the Hereford and Worster Forces came up, but understanding what had passed, returned home again without any memorable Action.

Colonell Myn Defeated, and slain by Massey.

E Prince Rupert after his Defeat at Marston Moore, lying about Bristol, had an Intention to pass Astferry, to Guard which, he sends 500 Horse and Foot, Fortifying Beachly for a standing Guard being a Place of Strength, between Severn and Wye: Massey who was not accustomed to be idle, resolves to Attack them, and boldly performed that his Attempt, beats the Enemy, Masters the Guard and Place, and soon after takes Munmouth by the Treachery of Kirle Lieutenant-Colonel to Holby, the Governour.

Astferry Fight.

Newbury seemed to be the Place Destined for Martiall Exploits, neer which, One memorable Battell had been Fought before, and now a Second no less Cruell, is to be Disputed between the exasperated Parties, the Parliamentarians seeking to regain what Credit they had lost in the West, and the Cavaliers to repair the Loss in the North, the King had Amassed his Forces at Kingsleigh, and on the other Side the Earls of Essex and Manchester, and Sir William Waller Marched to a Generall Rendezvous neer Basing, October 23. and from thence the day following to Padworth, and next Morning to Buckelbury-Heath neer Newbury (where the King then was) and about Twelve of the Clock drew down the whole Army, between Thatcham and Shaw, and Skirmished with the Kings Horse. On Saturday, both Armies Plyed one another with their great Ordnance, but without much hurt done.

Massey takes Monmouth through the Treachery of Kirle. Newbury second Fight.

G Sunday, October 27. Some of Manchesters Forces, and London Train-Bands crossed the River Kenet, between the Hill and Newbury, and did some Execution upon those that kept the Pass against them: But Sir Bernard Ashley coming to Rescue, forceth the Other over the River. Again in the Afternoon, 4000 of Essex and Waller's Horse and Dragoons, with 500 Pikes, Charged the Cavaliers on the West-side of Newbury, where were the Cornish Foot, and the Duke of York's Regiment, with five Field-Pieces, and Prince Maurice's Brigade of Cornish Horse; all which unable to sustain the rough Charge of the Parliamentarians, Retreated back in some Disorder, and here the Kings Five Field-Pieces were taken. The Essexians following their Success, Advance with 500 Horse, and a sufficient Strength of Musketeers, betwixt Newbury and Spine, upon the Kings Life-guards, and Colonell Sir Humphrey Bennet's Brigade, whom they overpowered, and had much more Endamaged, if the Lord Bernard Stewart had not come up to their Assistance, and secured their Retreat on the East-side of Spine, the Parliamentarians having settled Three Bodies of Foot in certain Inclosures, Advanced over a Dirch, with a great Body of Horse to break in through the Kings Guards, but must first Fight with Generall Coring, and the Earl of Cleveland's Brigade, who Charged stoutly, and beat back the Enemy, but pursuing dis- A orderly were Repulied with Loss.

Upon the North-east of Newbury stood the Lord Ashley, with Colonell George Lyle for the King, against whom the Earl of Manchester's Horse and Foot, with the Trained-Bands of London, came down the Hill and Worsted Colonell Lyle's Guards: But then Sir John Brown comes on with Prince Charles's Regiment of Horse, Charges the Foot, and then receives a Charge of 1000 Horse, and so Retreats.

Manchester forces his way to the Reserve Commanded by Colonell Thelwell, and after a smart Dispute, beats them out of the Field, gains their Colours, and Two Pieces of Cannon. In this Fight, on the Kings Part were slain, Sir Anthony St. Leger, Lieutenant-Colonell Leak, Lieutenant-Colonell Topping, and Captain Catlin, the Earl of Cleveland, with others taken; the B
Earl of Brainford, and Forth, Sir John Grenville, Sir Richard Campfield, Major Alford, and Captain Walgrave, and others Wounded, many private Soldiers slain, and others taken Prisoners. This Fight endured till Eight of the Clock at Night, the Essexians called it the Revenge of Cornwall:
The King perceiving that all his Brigades were Worsted by the Parliamentarians, and fearing a totall Over-throw, if the Battrell should be renewed, Marched away secretly to Dennington Castle, and there leaves behind him his great Pieces of Ordnance, and so halts to Wallingford, Generall Essex Marches into Newbury, and after in vain Summons, and Assaults Dennington Castle, and so takes leave, committing the Care of that Siege to a Party which he left behind him.

Monmouth retaken by the Kings Forces.

Massey had formerly taken Monmouth, and had made Major Frogmorton Governour of it, who desiring to shew himself Active in his fresh Authority, draws out 300 Horse and Foot to take in C Chepstow Castle, in whose Absence, the Cavaliers, November 19. early in the Morning enter the Town, seize the main Guard, and take the rest in their Beds, with Colonell Branton, and many Officers and common Soldiers, the Committee, and pretty store of Armes and Ammunition:
Frogmorton hearing of this Surprisall, desists from his Chepstow Design, and Marches away to meet Massey at Burford.

The King sends out Sir Jacob Ashley with Three Brigades of Foot, and Four Regiments of Horse, who places his Head-quarters at Cirencester, and from thence sends out severall Parties which return with Prisoners and Spoil, whilst himself Masters Masseys Guard at Lipiot, and grows so Formidable, that he Commands Contribution to the very Gates of Gloucester: Prince Maurice D also Deputes a Regiment of Horse and Dragoons to the Service and Use of Sir John Winter's Garison of Lidney, in the Forest of Dean, and so the Kings Power becomes considerable in these Parts.

The Hothams
and Sir Alex- ander Cary Beheaded.

The Hothams must now come to their Tryall, the Earl of Manchester, and others are Assigned to be their Judges, and so December the First, Sir John is Charged in the Hustings-Court at Guild- hall, London, That he had Trayterously betrayed the Trust reposed in him by the Parliament, and adhered to the Enemy; to be proved by his Words, by his Letters, and by his Actions: And that he held Correspondence with the Queen, the Earl of Newcastle, and the Lord Digby, and others of that Side, and endeavoured to Betray the Town of Hull to the Cavaliers. His Son was Charged with Crimes of the same Nature; as for entercourse of Letters with the Earl of New- E castle, under pretence of Treating about exchange of Prisoners: which things being proved against them, they were both Sentenced to lose their Heads, and accordingly were Executed, the Son the First of January, and the Father the next day after. And a little before, Viz. December 23. Sir A- lexander Cary had been Beheaded, for endeavouring to give up the Island of Plymouth to the Kings Forces. Two Principall Irish Rebels, the Lord Macguire, and Macmahon had been Seized in Ireland, and sent up to the Parliament, and Imprisoned in the Tower, whence they found Means to make an Escape, but were re-taken and brought to Tryall; and first Macmahon being found guilty of High-treason, was, according to Sentence at the Kings-Bench Bar, Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered at Tyburn in November: and Macguire, notwithstanding his Complaint to the House of Lords, to consider his Quality as a Peer of Ireland, was by the same Court condemned F of High-treason, and like as his Fellow-traytor was Sentenced to be Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered, which was performed upon him, February 20.

A Treaty begun at Uxbridge between King and Parliament.

The King had formerly sent to the Parliament for a Treaty which they now began to hearken to, and so Commissioners are appointed on both Sides to meet at Uxbridge, January 30. the Commissioners for the King were these; The Duke of Richmond and Lenox, Marquis of Harford, the Earls of Southampton, Kingston, and Chichester, the Lords, Capell, Seamer, Hatton, and Cul- peper, Sir Edward Nicholls, Sir Edward Hyde, Sir Richard Lane, Sir Thomas Grandure, Sir Orlando Bridgman, Mr. John Ashburnham, Mr. Jeffery Palmer, Doctor Stewart. Those for the Parliament of England and Scotland (for now they are joyned in all publick Affairs) were the Earls of Northumberland, Pembroke, Salisbury, and Denbeigh, Lord Wainman, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Pierpoint, Sir
Henry Vane the younger, Mr. Crew, Mr. Whitlock, Mr. St Johns, Mr. Prideaux, Lord Lowden, Sir
Charles Erskine, Mr. Dondau, Mr. Brakeley, and Mr. Henderson. G

Many previous Desires of the Parliament had passed, but now they come to the Business. But before the Meeting, the King gives these Memorials to Secretary Nicholas.

'First,

A First, For Religion and Church-Government, the King will not go one Jot further, then is by you offered already.

The Kings
Memorialis to Secretary Nic-chols.

Secondly, And so for the Militia, more then what you have allowed by Me, but even in that you must observe, That I must have free Nomination of the full half, as if the Totall Number, Scots; and all be Thirty, I must name Fifteen: Yet if the Parliament will be so unworthy, as to admit of Ten Scots to twenty English, I am contented to name Five Scots, and Ten English, and so proportionall to any Number.

B As for gaining of particular Persons, besides Security, promise them Rewards for performed Services, not sparing to engage for Places, so they be not of great Trust, nor to dispossess Honest men, but as much Profit as you will; With this last, you are only to acquaint, Richmond, Southampton, Culpeper, and Hide.

And the King gives Directions to his Commissioners in Writing, thus;

First, Concerning Religion; In this the Government of the Church (as I suppose) will be the chief Question: wherein these two Things are to be considered;

C Conscience, and Policy; In the First, I cannot yield to the Change of the Government of Bishops, not only as I concur with the most Generall Opinion of Christians in all Ages, as being the best: but likewise I hold my Self particularly bound by the Oath I took at my Coronation, not to alter the Government of the Church, from what I found it.

His Directions to his Commissioners.

And as for the Churches Patrimony, I cannot suffer any Diminution, or Alienation of it (it being without peradventure Sacriledge, and likewise contrary to the former Oath.) But whatsoever shall be offered for Rectifying of Abuses, if any have crept in, or yet for the ease of tender Consciences (so that it endamage not the Foundation) I am contented to hear, and will be ready to give a Gracious Answer.

D

For the Second (Policy) As the Kings Duty is to Protect the Church, so it is the Churches to Assist the King in the maintenance of his just Authority; Wherefore my Predecessors have been alwaies Carefull (especially since the Reformation) to keep the Dependence of the Clergy entirely upon the Crown, without which it will scarcely sit fast upon the Kings Head. Therefore do nothing to change or lessen this necessary Dependence.

E Concerning the Militia, after Conscience this is certainly the fittest Subject for a Kings Quarrell, for without it, the Kings Power is but a shadow; and therefore upon no means to be Acquitted, but to be maintained according to the Ancient Laws of the Land. Yet (because to attain to this so much wished Peace by all good Men) it is in a manner necessary, that sufficient and reall Security be given for performance of the Agreement.

I permit you therefore, either by leaving strong Towns, or other Military Forces into their Possession (untill Articles be performed) to give such Assurance for performance of Conditions; as you shall judge necessary, to conclude a Peace.

F Provided alwaies, that you take (at least) as great Care by sufficient Security, that Conditions be performed to Me. And to make sure, that the Peace once settled, all Things shall return into their Ancient Channells.

For Ireland, I confesse they have very specious popular Arguments to press this Point, they gaining no Article more conducing to their Ends then this, and I have as much Reason both in Honour and Policy to take Care how to Answer this, as any: All the World knows the Eminent Inevitable Necessary, which caused me to make the Irish Cessation; and there remain yet as strong Reasons, for the concluding of that Peace. Wherefore you must consent to nothing to hinder me therein, untill a clear Way be shewn to Me, how my Protestant Subjects there, may probably (at least) Defend themselves; and that I shall have no more need to Defend my Conscience and Crown from the Injuries of this Rebellion.

G

The Protestation Consented to, and Taken, by his Majesties Commissioners appointed A to Treat.

I A. B. One of the Commissioners Assigned by his Majesty for this present Treaty at Uxbridge, do Protest and Promise in the sight of Almighty God, that I will not Disclose nor Reveal to any person, or persons whatsoever (who is not a Commissioner) any Matter, or Thing that shall be Spoken of during the Treaty by any One, or more of his Majesties Commissioners, in any private Debate among themselves, concerning the sayd Treaty, so as to Name, or Describe Directly, or Indirectly, the person, or persons that shall speak any such Matter, or Thing, unless by the Consent of all the sayd Commissioners, that shall be then Living. ^B

Memorandum, That it is by all the said Commissioners agreed, that this shall not bind, where any Ten of the Commissioners shall agree to certify his Majesty, the Number of the Assentors, or Dissentors upon any particular Result in this Treaty, not C Naming, or Describing the Persons.

The Commissioners on both sides being met, the things to be Treated of were ;
First, Religion.

Secondly, The Militia.

Thirdly, Ireland.

But first, the Kings Commissioners give in this Paper concerning Religion.

The Off. rs of the Kings

ers concerning Religion.

'And if the Parliaments Commissioners will insist upon any other things which they shall think necessary for Religion, the Kings Commissioners shall very willingly apply themselves to the Consideration thereof.

B The Parliaments Commissioners Paper concerning Religion, was ;

'That the Bill be passed for Abolishing and taking away of all Archbishops, Bishops, &c. according to the Third Proposition.

'That the Ordinances concerning the Calling and Sitting of the Assembly of Divines be Confirmed by Act of Parliament.

'That the Directory for publick Worship, already passed both Houses, and the Propositions concerning Church-Government annexed, and passed both Houses, be Enacted as a part of Reformation of Religion and Uniformity, according to the first Proposition.

'That his Majesty take the Solemn League and Covenant, and that the Covenants be enjoined to be taken, according to the second Proposition.

To this was Annexed the following Paper.

D 'That the Ordinary way of dividing Christians into distinct Congregations, and most expedient for Edification, is, By the respective Bounds of their Dwellings.

'That the Minister and Church-Officers in each Congregation, shall joyn in the Government of the Church, as shall be Established by Parliament.

'That Synodical Assemblies shall consist both of Provinciall, and Nationall Assemblies.

E Which Papers took up three Dayes of the Treaty in Dispute ; the next three Dayes were Ordered for the Militia, and was afterwards Resumed for other three Dayes.

Propositions concerning the Militia, the Fourth of February.

Concerning the Militia.

'We desire, That the Subjects of England may be Armed, Trained, and Disciplined, as the Parliament shall think fit.

'The like for Scotland, as the Parliament there shall think fit.

F 'An Act for settling the Admiralty, and Forces at Sea, and Moneys thereto for Maintenance, may be as the Parliament shall think fit.

'The like for Scotland.

'An Act for settling all Forces by Sea and Land, in Commissioners, to be Named by the Parliament, and as both Kingdomes shall Confide in, and to suppress all Powers and Forces contrary thereto, and to Act as they shall be directed by Parliament.

'So for the Kingdom of Scotland.

G 'That the Militia of the City of London, and of the Parishes within London, and the Liberties within the Weekly Bills of Mortality, be in the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Councill.

'That the Tower of London may be in the Government of the City, and chief Officers, those to be Nominated, and removed by the Common Councill.

'That the Citizens and Forces of London may not be drawn out of the City without their own consent, and that the Example in these distracted Times, be no President for the Future.

Concerning Ireland.

The next Three Days began the Seventh of February, and the same was taken up again, February the Eighteenth, for other Three Days, for Ireland.

‘That an Act of Parliament be passed to make void the Cessation of Ireland, and all Treaties with the Rebels, without consent of Parliament, and to settle the Prosecution of the War of Ireland, in the Parliament, to be Managed by the joynt Advice of both Kingdomes, and his Majesty to Assist, und to do no Act to Discourtenance, or Molest them therein.

These things being of great Consequence, I have set down Verbatim, without any Variation. The Kings Commissioners would not consent to the Parliaments Propositions, in any of the Three Points, of Religion, Militia, or Ireland; but motioned, That if the Articles proposed by them, did not give Satisfaction, that then so great an Alteration as a totall Abolishment of a Government Etablised by Law, may be suspended, till after the Disbanding of all Armies, the King may be present with the Parliament, and a Nationall Synode may be called to consider and determine of so Important a Business.

Secondly, For the Militia, they would condescend no further, then that the Persons to be trusted with the Militia, be Nominated between them, or that an equall Number, the one half by the King, and the other by the Parliament, and this to be but for three years.

But Thirdly, as to Ireland, they justified the Kings Proceedings, and would not allow of any thing which should make against the Cessation: And so the Treaty takes end, without any thing effected, of what the poor People longed for; the Commissioners on both sides being so much Bounded and Hand-tyed by their Superiours.

Basing-house
Besieg'd by Sir
William Waller.

The Marquis of Winchester held out his house at Basing for the King, to Reduce which, Sir William Waller with his new Levies advances and Storms it thrice in Nine Dayes, but was beaten off, and fain to Retreat to Farnham: Colonell Norton succeeds in that Service, with whom joyn Colonell Morley, and Sir Richard Onslow, who fall furiously to the Work, but with greater hurt to themselves.

Shortly after Colonell Whiterhead comes to them with his Regiment. The Besiegers fall to Battering, while Necessities encrease within. Norton sends his Summons, which are Contemned by the Marquis. The Besiegers Sally out, and do much Execution. Now comes Sir William Waller himself, and with some Troops Faced the House, on whom the Besieged play from their Works; the Marquis sends to Oxford for Relief, which is promised: In the mean time, Waller departs. Colonell Gage is sent from Oxford, with a Regiment of bold Blades, who finds Norton ready to receive him on Chesham Down, September 12. Gage makes his Approach, appearing first on a Hill neer the High-way, which leads to Andover; Whereupon Norton Charges with great Courage, and breaks through the others Horse, who having a Reserve of Musketeers, with more then Ordinary Valour, forced Norton to Retreat as far as the Church, and so through Basing-stoke. The same time the Besieged Sallying out at severall places, brought in many Prisoners, viz. Two Captains, two Lieutenants, four Serjeants, and neer an hundred private Soldiers: The Relief which Gage brought in, consisted of many Horse-load of Powder, and Mutch, a Drove of Cattell, besides Plunder from Basing-stoke.

November the Sixteenth, The Besiegers after four and twenty Weeks labour in vain, raise the Siege, having lost about 1000 Men one way or other, during their stay before that House. Nor had the Kings Forces any better Success in their long Sieges before Plymouth, Lyme, and Taunton in the West, which three Places cost them the lives of some Thousands of their Soldiers, and yet not taken at last.

The Archbishop of Canterbury had been accused by the Parliament, in the year 1640. as Frammer of the Canons agreed upon by the Convocation, and for other Delinquencies, and the Scots had adjoyned him with the Earl of Strafford in their Grand Accusation, and Charged him for Obtruding upon their Nation the Liturgie, or Book of Common-Prayer, and the new Book of Canons, and Constitutions Ecclesiasticall, and for advising the King to Dissolve the last Parliament, and such other things: For which he was first committed to the Custody of the Black-Rod, and Ten Weeks after Voted guilty of High-treason, and sent Prisoner to the Tower, where he continued the space of four years; in which mean time, his Rents were Sequestred, his Goods, Books, and Papers seized. His Charge was endeavouring the Subversion,

1. Of the Laws.

2. Of Religion.

3. Of the Priviledges of Parliament. After a hundred times Attendance on the House, January the Fourth, they passed their Ordinance of Parliament, that he should be Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered, but upon his Petition, they Voted him to be Beheaded, and allowing his Chaplain Doctor Stern to Administer with him, they also joyned Mr. Marshall, but the Archbishop refused him. January the Tenth he was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-hill, by Alderman Pennington, where he made his last Sermon, or Speech, which lasted about an hour, having for his Text the second Verse of the Twelfth Chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and then after Prayer, and some short Ejaculations, layd down his Head upon the Block, which the Executioner Chopt off at one Blow. And this was the end of that great Prelate, William Laud, after

A he had seen that Hierarchy, and Lithurgie Abolished, whereof he Lived and Died so stout a Champion.

The Parliament were somewhat discontented with their Generall the Earl of Essex, whom they suspected as Careless, or Discontent, because after the Second Battell at Newbury, he suffered the King to March away, without any Molestation, and after to Relieve Dennington Castle, and beside, that he had quitted Newbury, and let it fall into the Kings Hands, to serve as a Covert-Quarter for his Forces; whereupon they begin to consider, of new Modelling the Army.

The Parl. began to think of new Modelling the Army.

The King was much Taxed about the Treaty at Uxbridge, for bewraying so much Favour and good Will to the Irish, as was discovered in the Article about Ireland; and also by his Transactions with them, as namely, his Writing two Letters to the Earl of Ormond, to hasten the Peace with them, and promising them that the Penall Statutes against Roman Catholicks should not be put in Execution, the Peace being made, and they remaining in their due Obedience. And further, that when they gave him that Assistance which they promised for his English Occasions, then he would consent to the Repeal of them all, by a Law, except those against Appeals to Rome and Premunire; Nay, and more then this, he had written to Ormond, a Third Letter for hastning the Peace, which rather then mis, he should promise to joyn with them against the Scots, and the Lord Inchiquin: These things the Parliament did much exaggerate against him, and also took such Care for Succouring their Friends against the Rebels, that they were never able to send over the promised Supplies to the King.

The King tax'd as a Favourer of the Irish Rebels.

C The Earl of Montrose entered Scotland, April the thirteenth, and seized Dumfreese, expecting Antrim's Irish, which not coming according to promise, he was fain to retire into England, and from thence sends the Lord Ogleby, and Sir William Rollock Disguised, into the Heart of Scotland, who bring back uncomfortable Tydings of the great Power and Strength of the Covenanters; whereupon he sends Ogleby to the King for more Men, or at least Armes from beyond-Seas, but these Messengers were surprized, and Imprisoned by the Covenanters. Montrose with a small Retinue, re-enters Scotland, and comes to his Cousin Patrick Grayham, where he lyes close, untill instead of Ten Thousand promised, Alexander Mardenell brings over into the North of Scotland, 110 Irish from Antrim, with whom Montrose meets in Athole, where Eight hundred Country-men joyn with them. With these Forces he proceeds further, and the Lord Kilpont Son to the Earl of Taith, and Sir John Drummond, Son to the Earl of Perth, Unite with them, with Five hundred Foot: The Covenanters Rendezvouzed at Perth, and from thence draw out to Tepper Moore, Commanded by the Earl of Tullebarden, and the Lords Elcho and Drummonds, with Six thousand Foot, and Seven hundred Horse, ready to Fight.

Montrose's his Proceedings in Scotland.

September the First, the Lord Drummond comes out with a Forlorn Hope, and at the first On-set is Routed back to the Main Body, and so Montrose with a Shout, let loose his whole Forces upon them, and puts them to flight, with the Slaughter of Two thousand, and many Prisoners, and the City of Perth taken.

After this Victory the Earls of Kinroule and Arley, Sir Thomas Ogleby, and his Brother Sir David, and other Gentlemen thereabouts come in to him, with whom he seeks out the Enemy, who lay at Aberdeen, with an Army of Two thousand Foot, and Five hundred Horse, Commanded by the Lord Burghley, expecting the Conjunction of the Earl of Argile, and his Forces, which Montrose means to prevent by Fighting them: Montrose had but Four and forty Horse, (none at all in the first Battell) and Fifteen hundred Foot, all resolute Men, which did their Work with much Courage, Routed the Enemy, and had the pursuit of them to the Gates of Dundee; After which, Montrose enters Aberdeen, but News comes Post, that the Earls of Argile and Lothian were at hand, with a strong Body of Horse, which Montrose unable to Encounter with, retires to Higland Mountains, and goes to Straggbogey, to try if he could persuade the Gordons to engage on his Side, but they were hindred by the Earl of Huntley their Chief, who though a Cavalier himself, yet out of meer Envy to Montrose, did more Obstruct the Kings Business, then the Covenanters themselves.

Here Montrose skulks, but Argile and Lothian follow him, and neer Faty Castle they Skirmish together, and the Montrossians having the advantage of a Hill, put their Enemies to a disorderly Retreat; After which, they both fall to Treating, during which, some of Montrosses Followers are dealt with to Betray him, wherefore to secure himself, he Marcheth away to Badenoth, many of his Men by Argiles Corruption falling off from him, and making no stay there, through unknown By-ways, comes to Dunkeldon, and frightens Argile out of those Parts: Macadonnell was Employed by Montrose to the Mack Renolds, with whom he used such Periwations, that 500 of them with their Chief, followed him to the Earl, and Patrick Graham brings some Recruits from Athole: with these Montrose Marches through Braidalbain into the Country of Arguile, where the Earl was Lifting Soldiers, neer the Castle Inverare, but Montrosses coming Scares him away, and he Victorious divides his Army into Three Brigades, himself Leading the One, Mac-donnell Another, and Macrenbold a Third, and with Fire and Sword Devattates all, and to departs to Lyghness, where 5000 Horse and Foot, Commanded by the Earl of Seaford, were ready to Oppose him, and the Earl of Arguile not far off with 3000 Foot at Innerlogh. To prevent their Joyning, he resolves to fall upon Arguile, which he does on the 2. of February, and after a short Fight, in which 1500 were slain, put him to the Rout, with such Terror, that they ran Nine Miles out-right: On Montrosses Part but few killed, and many hurt, of whom Sir Thomas Ogleby dyed after of his Wounds.

The K. sends to the Duke of Lorrain, and the King of Denmark for Ayde.

The Parl. consult about an Ordinance for calling the Members of both Houses from Military Employments.

Essex and the other Lords lay down their Commissions.

Sir Tho. Fairfax elected by the Parl. to be Generall of their Army.

In England the Cavaliers prevail in Gloucestershire, and take Rowdon-House, after stiff Resistance A made by the Colonells, Deverex, and Stevens: and Colonell Hopson, having raised Sixty Horse, and Forty Foot for the Parliament, is surprized and carried Prisoner with all his Men into Ludbury in Herefordshire: But the Parliamentarians met with Sir John Winter abroad, and beat him; and about the same time another Party of their Side surprize Shrewsbury: Prince Rupert is now in Wales, and with him Prince Maurice, the Lord Hastings, Ashley, Langdaell, and Gerrards with the greatest Part of the Kings Forces, and are very active in Imprisoning more Men and Armes in the Neighbouring Counties. Nor was the King Sollicitous only at home, but by his Agents abroad Negotiated with foreign Princes for Ayde: The Duke of Lorrain had an Indifferent Army about Colless, with whom the Queen Treats, and had brought her Business to some end, when Cardinal Mazarine spoils all, and finds other Work for the Duke.

To Denmark Colonell Ciehrum was sent with Instructions; and indeed King Christian was willing to have Assisted his Nephew, but he was suddenly Imbroyled at home by the Invasion of the Swedes, who had well neer ruined the Dane this year, if the Hollander had not Arrived with a Fleet at Copenhagen, for his Defence, and in it an Ambassador to the Swede, by whose Means and Mediation, and at the Suit of the Dane, a Peace was concluded between them to the Swedes Advantage, and two years after the old King Christian (now at Peace, though with the loss of a considerable Part of his Dominion) having Reigned above Fifty years, Deceased, leaving a Son named Frederick the Third to succeed him; And so King Charles being here also frustrated, was fain to apply himself to make the best Provision that he could at home, to Cope with the Parliaments New Modell: and thus ends this year.

It was now the One and twentieth year of King Charles's Reign, being the year 1645. at the beginning whereof, the Parliament were busied about framing the great Ordinance for calling the Members of both Houses from Military and Civill Affairs and Places, which was at last passed, not without Exceptions of some, as Cromwell, and a few others.

The Parliamentarians had, as we have sayd, Surprized Shrewsbury, for which piece of Service, Colonell Mistron about this time receives publick Thanks in the House of Commons, and that deservedly: It having been the Kings chiefest Garison, as may be judged by the following particulars: for here were taken Eight Knights and Baronets; Forty Colonells, Majors, Captains, and others of Quality, besides common Men, Fifteen Pieces of Ordnance, many hundreds of Armes, divers Barrells of Powder, Prince Maurice's Magazine, and all this without any D considerable Loss.

February the Twenty second, About this time Ambassadors come to the Parliament from Swedeland, with whom the Parliament (being offended with the Dane, for his forwardness to Assist the King) readily entered into a League of strict Amity and Friendship.

Sir Marmaduke Langdale with 2000 Horse and Dragoons from Oxford, beats the Lincolnshire Horse, Relieves Newark, Belvey, and Abby Delazonth, with Provision, and Marcheth Northward to Pomfret, and in spite of the Lord Fairfax's Power, Relieveth that Castle also; from thence he returns to Newark, so to Leicesters, then to the Forest of Dean, and beats off Colonell Massey from lying before Lidney.

The King at Oxford takes Care to furnish his Garisons, and to fit his Army for the Field, and the Earl of Northampton routs the Parliaments Northampton-Horse: But Major Generall Brown Governour of Abbingdon for the Parliament, sends out severall Parties, who return with Success; And about this time the House of Lords make the Earl of Northumberland and his Countess Governour, and Governess of the Kings Children at Whitehall.

The Parliament having resolved to Modell the Army, the Earls of Essex, Manchester, and Denby, Surrender their Commissions in the House of Lords, but withall, desire that their Soldiers Arrears may be discharged, which the Lords commend to the Commons, and a Vote is passed for it, and 10000 l. per annum ordered to the Earl of Essex out of Delinquents Estates, for his Services and Losses. And the Earl of Warwick yields up his Commission of Admirall, which Offices are presently Intrusted to Commissioners.

The Parliament after some Jarring of both Houses about it, Elected Sir Thomas Fairfax to be Generall of their Army, and had accordingly sent for him up out of the North, which was the reason that he was not present, when Sir Marmaduke Langdale Defeated his Fathers Forces, and Relieved Pomfret: The other Chief Officers of this New Modell were these, Phillip Skippon Major-Generall to the whole Army, Oliver Cromwell Lieutenant Generall of the Horse, Thomas Hamond Lieutenant-Generall of the Ordnance, Henry Ireton Commissary-Generall of the Horse. The Colonells of Foot were these, Sir Hardress Waller, Hamond, Harley, Montague, Loyd, Pickering, Hulburn, Craford, Berkley, Aldridge, Ingouldsby, Rainsborough, Welden. For the Horse were, Butler, Sheffield, Fleetwoods, Rossiter, Rich, Whaley, Graves, Sidney, Middleton, Vermuden, Levisaire, and Sir Robert Pie, and Colonell Okey of Dragoons.

Generall Fairfax having received his Commission, yet stayed for the finishing of the Great Ordinance, the Effect of which was;

That all and every the Members of either House shall be discharged (at the end of Forty Dayes, after the passing of this Ordinance) of all their Command, Military, or Civill, conferred by Parliament since the Twentieth of November, 1648.

That

A That all other Governours and Commanders (not Members) by Land, or Sea, shall continue in their Offices, wherein they were Intrusted the 20 of March, 1644.

The Ordinance for calling the Members from Employment in the Army.

Provided and excepted, That Lieutenants and their Deputies in severall Counties, Cities, and Places, or of any Custos Rotulorum, or Justices of Peace, or Stewards, or any Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, or Goal-delivery: And also that those Members of either House who had Offices by Grant from his Majesty, before the Parliament, and were by him Displaced before the Sitting of this Parliament, and have since by the Parliament been restored, shall not be Discharged from their sayd Offices, or Profits thereof, but shall Enjoy the same.

April 3. Sir Thomas Fairfax sets forth for Windsor, where he applies himself to the framing of his new Army, a Business of no small Difficulty, in which Major-Generall Skippon so effectually bestirred himself, that the Parliament thought fit to send him a Letter of hearty Thanks, for that and all his former faithfull Services: Hither comes Lieutenant-Generall Cromwell, whom after some Salutations passed, the General Ordered to March towards Oxford with a Brigade of 1100 Horse, and Dragoons, to intercept a Convoy of 2000 Horse, which Prince Rupert had sent from Worcester to fetch off the King, with his Train of Artillery, and some Foot, so to Imbody and take the Field. At Ifflip Bridge Cromwell falls upon them, and Routs them, took between Four and five hundred Horse, and Two hundred Prisoners with the Queens Stander; the rest fled to Bletchington House, whither Cromwell pursues them, and sends a sharp Summons to the Governour, who doubting of Relief from Oxford, thinking that the Enemy had a considerable Strength of Foot, and over-swayed by the puling Tears of some Ladies got thither to visit his Wife; Surrendered the House with all the Armes, and Ammunition; which were sent to Alisbury, and the House slighted, for which the Governour Colonell Windebank is shot to Death at Oxford: Cromwell Improves his Success, and falls upon a Party of 350 Foot, about Banton Bush, whom he Defeats and takes them almost all Prisoners, with their Armes and Ammunition, and sends them with a Convoy to Abbingdon. And John, Colonell Fines, beats another Party of Horse, and takes 150 Horse, 3 Colours, 40 Prisoners, and 50 Armes. Sir John Winter being Relieved by Langdale, and obtaining from Prince Rupert 2000 Horse, and 1500 Foot, made such stir as drew all Gloucester Forces upon him. April 22. the Prince Marches all Night to his Assistance, and finds Massey before Lidbury, and gives them a suddain Alarm: Massey being thus put to it, drew up and fought the Horse, entertaining the Cavaliers with hot Charges, whilst the Foot might get off, but being over-powered was faine to give way, and the Cavaliers falling in upon the Foot, did much Execution upon them. Masseys Horse was shot dead under him by Rupert, and Major Backhouse received his Mortall Wound, divers slain, the rest by flight escaped.

Cromwell routs the Cavaliers at Ifflip Bridge, takes Bletchington House, and falls upon a Party at Banton Bush.

Colonell Windebank shot to death at Oxford.

Prince Rupert Marches from thence with about 6000 Horse and Foot towards Ludlow, and so to Shrewsbury, Dreining Garisons, and taking to him the less Brigades, and so he and his Brother Maurice Assisted with Goring's Horse and Dragoons fetch'd off the King from Oxford, who with a numerous Army Advanced towards the Relief of Chester: but Goring takes leave, desiring to return to the West, to hinder the raising of Tanneton Siege; but in his way would beat up the Quarters of Lieutenant Generall Cromwell, who with his own Forces, and a supply of some Foot from Abbingdon, streightned the Kings Garison at Farrington; But his Design being discovered; Cromwell was ready to Encounter him, neer Newbridge, where at first the Cavaliers had somewhat the better, but in the end Cromwell gaining the Passage over Newbridge, Goring declines engaging with all speed, and Marches back after the Army into the West.

Prince Rupert fetcheth off the K. from Oxford

Generall Fairfax's Army being now fully Compleated, it was taken into Consideration, whether he should Besiege Oxford, it being the Kings chief Garison, and the Place where most of his Artillery lay, and therefore of great Consequence, or else to Relieve Tanneton: The Commiseration of which Distressed Towns estate, at length over-swayed in their Counsells, and so the Generall Advanceth that way as far as Blainford, whilst Cromwell and Brown were Ordered to attend the Kings Marches; but upon second thoughts, the General was recalled, and Colonell Welden with a Brigade of well-neer 2000 Horse, and 5000 Foot, was Deputed to that Service, and so Fairfax departs to Newbury, whither came Cromwell and Brown to Confer with him, and so returned again to their Charges, and during the time of the Generalls stay in that Town, happned the fore-mentioned Skirmish between Cromwell and Goring: And now Fairfax receives an Express to Advance to Oxford, and lay close Siege to it; and Lieutenant-Generall Cromwell, and Major Generall Brown, are re-called from following the King, to Assist the Generall in the Siege.

Fairfax sends Colonell Welden to the Relief of Tanneton.

G Colonell Welden was come within a dayes March of Tanneton, the Cavaliers being Informed that it was the whole Army, resolved to give one furious Assault, and in case that took not effect, to rise and be gone, which was performed, and so on Munday, May 12. Colonell Welden enters Tanneton, and finds the Town almost ruined by Fire, Two long Streets of fair Buildings being burnt to the Ground: and thus was Tanneton happily relieved, after it had long endured an hard Siege.

Major Generall Massey after his Defeat at Lidbury received 340 Horse Auxiliaries from Newport-Pannell, and a larger Supply then that was afterwards brought him by Major Buller, so that

now

now he was in a Condition to effect something, being also freed from his grand Enemy Sir John A. Winter, who being called away to publick Service in the Army, had Demolished his House at Lidney.

Massey takes Evesham by Storm.

Massey draws forth 500 Foot from Gloucester, and 200 from Warwick, with a strong able Brigade of Horse, against Evesham, where Colonell William Legg was Governour, who refusing to yield upon Summons, Massey storms the Town, and takes it with the Governour, and 20 Officers, 500 Foot, and 120 Horse, with all the Armes and Ammunition. And the General lying before Oxford, sent out a Party of Horse and Foot under Colonell Rainsborow, to Summon Gaunt-house, the Governour whereof, though at first he answered, that he liked not Windebanks Law, yet seeing Rainsborow ready to storm it, Surrenders upon Quarter.

The Kings Army relieves Chester, and takes Leicester
by Storm.

The King with his Army Marching towards Chester, carried such a Terrour with him, that B made Sir William Brereton quit the Siege, and so his Work being done, he wheels about, and sits down before Leicester, and sends a Summons to the Town, who returns their Desires of Respite till the next Morning; the Trumpeter being returned with the Message, a Drum was instantly dispatched, requiring an Answer within a quarter of an hour, which time whilst they within spend in Debate, the Kings Cannons play upon the Town from the Battery, and all Commanded to their Charge, in Order to a Storm, the Contest continued a day and a Night, and the Town was stormed at six, or seven places, and about three of the Clock was entered, Saturday, May 31. and many put to the Sword, the Committee-men, with the Governour Colonell Gray, and Hacker, taken Prisoners, much Ammunition, and the Plunder of the Town sent to the Kings Carisons thereabouts, the Scots Reformades, and Dalbiers Men killed, those that escaped fled to Rockingham Castle: and from thence the King Triumphant Marches towards Northampton, and Faces that Town. C

Taunton streightened again by the Kings Forces
in the West.

In the West, Goring, Hopton, and Grenville unite their Forces, and fall upon Welden's Brigade, whom they forced to retire to Taunton in great Disorder, where though the Town had been formerly Relieved with all manner of Provisions, it being kept in altogether by a Potent Enemy, they were greatly streightened, and distressed. These and some other Successes did so heighten the Kings Party, that they began to make all sure, not considering that it was but a lightning before Death; for Fairfax hereupon was Commanded to rise from before Oxford, and Cromwell Marcheth into the Associated Counties to prevent the Kings Eruption into them, and Colonell Vermuden was to joyn with the Scots, with a Party of 2500 Horse and Dragoons, in case the King should Advance Northwards. Friday the Fifth of June, the Army had a generall Rendezvous at great Brickhill, where Intelligence was brought them, that the King was about Daventry, and thereupon it was resolved to give Battell, and to that end Lieutenant-Generall Cromwell is sent for, who came afterwards with 600 Horse and Dragoons: Colonell Vermude also returned to the Generall, because the Scots had unexpectedly Retreated to Westmerland, and Fairfax sends Post to Sir John Gell, Colonell Rossiter, and the Governours of Coventry, Warwick, Northampton, and Nottingham, to March with all speed with their Forces to the Army, for that there was likely to be speedily an Engagement.

The Kings Forces lay still about Daventry, and Burrough-hill, which being a place of great Advantage, it was thought he had chosen to Fight upon, but his Design was (having Relieved Oxford, with store of Cattell and Sheep) to March for the Un-setting of Pomfret and Scarborough: But Fairfax Advanceth to Gilborough, within four Miles of Northampton, and five Miles of Burrough-hill, and both Armies lying nigh one another; the Fairfaxians Alarum the Cavaliers, and take some Prisoners, the King being then abroad: about Twelve that Night, Fairfax rides about his Guards, and happping to forget the Word, he was stopped at a Horse-Quarter, by the Sentinell (who though entreated, yet refused to give him the Word) telling him, that he was to demand the Word from all that past him, and to give it to none; and so though knowing him to be the Generall, stopt him in a great Shower of Raip, till he had Ayde from the Captain of the Guard, and lastly, the Sentinell was preferred for his Carefulness.

June the Thirteenth, the King drew off from Burrough-hill, to Harborough, minding to March to Pomfret, and thinking, that if he were followed, he should Fight with more Advantage, further Northward. F

Fairfax sends out Ireton with a flying Party of Horse, who falls upon a Party of the Kings Rear, Quartered in Naseby Town, took many Prisoners, some of the Princes Lifeguard, and Langdales Brigade, and gave such an Alarum to the whole Army, that the King at Midnight leaves his own Quarters, and for Security hastens to Harborough, where the Van of his Army was Quartered, raises Prince Rupert, and calls a Councell of War, where it was resolved to give Battell; and because Fairfax had been so forward, they would no longer stay for him, but seek him out: Fairfax was come from Gilborough, to Gilling, and from thence to Naseby, where both Armies drawn up in Battalia, Faced one another.

The Battell at Naseby.

Saturday, June 14. A fatall Day to the King; the King Commanded the Main Body, Prince Rupert, and Prince Maurice the right Wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the Left, the Earl of Lindsey, and the Lord Ashley, the right-hand Reserve, the Lord Bards and Sir George Lyle, the Left. Of the Parliaments Army, Fairfax and Skippon Commanded the Main Body, Cromwell the Right Wing, with whom was Rossiter, who came with his Forces but a little before the Fight, and Ireton had the Left: the Reserves were brought up by Rainsborow, Hammond, and Pride, Prince Rupert Charged the Parliaments Left Wing, Commanded by Ireton, who made Gallant Resistance, but

A but at last was forced to give Ground, Ireton himself being run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Holbert, his Horse shot under him, and himself taken Prisoner: For awhile Rupert follows the Chase almost to Naseby Town, and in his return summoned the Train, who made no other answer but with their Firelocks; But in the mean time Cromwell Chargeth furiously on the Kings Left Wing, and got the better, forcing them from the body, and prosecuting the Advantage, quite broke them, and their Reserve, during which, the main Bodies had Charged one another with incredible Fierceness, often Retreating and Rallying, falling in together with the but-ends of their Muskets, and coming to handy-Blows with their Swords: But Fairfax Foot coming up seasonably to the Horse (for they had lingered some while about Pillaging) and Cromwell coming in with his Victorious Right Wing, they all Charged together upon the King, who unable to endure any longer, shifted out of the Field towards Leicester, and Prince Rupert, who now too late returned from his Improvident eager Pursuit, seeing the Day lost, accompanied them in their Flight, leaving a compleat Victory to the Parliamentarians, who had the Chase of them for fourteen Miles space, Viz. Within two Miles of Leicester, and the King finding the Pursuit so hot, leaves that Town, and hails to Leichfield: This Battail was won and lost just as Marston Moor was, but proved much more Destructive to the King and his Party, and indeed it was exceeding Bloody, both Armies being very Courageous and Numerous not being 500 Odds, Fought in a large Fallow field on the North-west side of Naseby, about a Mile broad, which space of Ground was wholly taken up: On the Parliamentarians side were Wounded and Slain above 1000 Officers and private Soldiers, Major General Skippon (who was an old experienced Soldier, was ordered to draw up the Form of the Battell) Fought stoutly that day, and although he was sorely Wounded in the beginning of the Fight, and the General desired him to go off the Field, he answered, he would not stir so long as a man would stand, and accordingly stayed till the Battell was ended. Ireton (as is sayd before) was dangerously hurt, and taken Prisoner for awhile, after he had done his Part, but in the confusion of the Fight got loose again, and saw the Victory Achieved: The General and Lieutenant-General performed their Work with admirable Resolutions, and by their own Examples infused Valour into their Followers, so likewise did the other Officers, of whom divers were Wounded; On the other side the King shewed himself that Day a Courageous General, keeping close with his Horse, and himself in Person Rallying them to hot Encounters, the Earl of Lindsey, Lord Ashley, Colonel Rassell, and others Wounded, 20 Colonels, Knights, and Officers of Note, and 600 private Soldiers slain: but much more was the Damage that the King sustained, by what was taken, Viz. 6 Colonels, 8 Lieutenant-Colonells, 18 Majors, 70 Captains, 8 Lieutenants, 200 Ensigns, and other inferior Officers, 4500 common Soldiers, and many Women, 13 of the Kings Household-servants, 4 of his Foot-men, 12 Pieces of Ordnance, 8000 Armes, 40 Barrells of Powder, 200 Carriages, all their Bag and Baggage, with store of rich Pillage, 3000 Horse, the Kings Standard, and divers of Horse and Foot, one of the Kings Coaches, and his Cabine of Letters and Papers, which were after published by the Parliament; And Sir Marmaduke Landale fled the same Night to Newark: the next day the General sent up Colonel John Fins to London, with the Prisoners, and Colours taken in the Fight. And with this comes News of several other Successes, as the gaining of Hougham Garrison neer Grantham: And Sir William Brereton's beating a Party of Cavaliers in Cheshire, and taking a Hundred and fifty Prisoners, and Four hundred Prisoners taken in fight by a Party from Shrewsbury, and the taking of Major Fenningham, and divers others, by Captain Stone, Governour of Eccleshall Castle in Staffordshire.

E Sir John Gell was Marching with Two thousand Horse according to the Generalls Order, and in his way took Ninety Prisoners, some being of the Kings scattered Horse, and the rest Newarkers; and forthwith joyned with the General, who sat down before Leicester, April 16. and Summoned the Governour, the Lord Hastings, to deliver up the Town, which he refusing, Warrants are Issued out for the Country to bring in Ladders, and other Necessaries for a Storm, and so the next day he Assailes the Town in severall places, and at the Newark-side made a wide

F Breach, which terrified the Governour into a Pauley, after which ensued Surrender upon honourable Terms; in it were Fourteen Pieces of Ordnance, Thirty Colours, Two thousand Armes, Five hundred Horse, Fifty Barrells of Powder, and other Ammunition proportionable. And not long after, Sir Thomas Glenham, Governour of Carlisle in Cumberland, having been long Besieged by the Parliament Forces, and despairing of Succour from the King, yields up the Town, June 28.

Leicester retaken by Gen. Fairfax.

The Club-men up in Arme in Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire.

They Capitulate with Gen. Fairfax.

The low Condition of the Parliamentarians about Taunton, caused the Parliament and Committee of both Kingdoms, to Order the General to repair thither, which was readily obeyed; and Sir Thomas Fairfax by long Marches comes to Dorchester, and there hears that a Multitude of rude People, called Club-men, were up in a Tumultuary way, Declaring themselves to be Neuters, being mostly Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire Men, these had slain upon Major General Massey, who was likewise Commanded into those Parts, with 3000 Men, for the Relief of Taunton: Some of the Club-men were killed in the Quarrell, of which they boldly demanded Reparation, and their Numbers encreasing, forced the Parliamentarians Quarters at Sturminster, Newton, and other Places, seize all their Horse in the Grounds, neer 100 Dragoons, and grew so Insolent, as to Capitulate with Fairfax himself at Dorchester, and to desire safe Passage for their Commissioners to go both to King and Parliament: Sir Thomas sends them a Civill Answer in Writing, which not contenting them they draw off in Discontent, and set upon a Party of the Garrison

Garison of Lyme and kill some of them; but Fairfax and Massey joyning in a Body, scared A them into more Moderation, so that the Army passed quietly on their Journey.

by Fairfax near Langport.

Generall Goring hearing of Fairfax's Approach, drew off from Taunton, in which Siege he had sustained great Loss, the Place being Gallantly maintained by Colonell Robert Blake: This man was formerly Assittant to Governour Leely of Lyme, and was chief Actor in the famous Repulse of Prince Maurice, from that Town, and afterwards found Means to Surprize Taunton; which with Indefatigable Labour and undaunted Courage he kept against Goring's Numerous Forces, being first (after extream Hardships endured) Relieved by Colonell Welden, and now by Generall Fairfax; for upon Report of the Generals coming, Goring Retreats to Langport, not without some Loss by a Sally from the Belieged; Fairfax and Massey had now again divided their Forces, Massey comes up by Mortaby, falls upon Goring's Rear, and takes some B Prisoners: On the other side of the River Fairfax Marches up and reduceth the Cavaliers to an inevitable necessity of Fighting; Goring had seized a convenient Pass leading to Bridgewater, which Major Bethell and Major Desbrough force, and the Generall Advances, and puts the Cavaliers to a disorderly Retreat, and pressing fiercely upon them, constrains them to fly, pursues them eight Miles, almost to Bridgewater, many slain, 1400 Prisoners taken, about 1200 Horse, Colonell Heningham, Colonell Slingsby, and divers Officers of Quality, and 30 Colours; the rest immediately quitted Langport, and fled away with two Pieces of Ordnance, whom the Lieutenant-general pursuing, took both the Ordnance, and most of them Prisoners: This Battrell was Fought July 10. in Sutton Field near Langport. Goring having refreshed himself at Bridgewater, Marcheth away to the North of Devonshire, and presently after Sir Thomas Fairfax hits C down before that Town, about the time that Burrough Garison was taken by Colonell Okey: The Generall sends in his Summons, which was resolutely refused by Colonell Windham, whereupon he Storms, and wins the Lower part of the Town, but is repulsed from the Upper, and much endamaged by the continuall flinging Granadoes, and other combustible Stuff from within: the next day he sends another Summons, telling them, That their Deniall wrought no other thoughts of Compassion in him, but only to Women and Children, who might otherwise suffer by the Governours Obstinacy; and so divers Ladies, Gentlewomen, and Children came out of the Town, and then the Generall being better provided with Materialls for his Work, gave the second Assault, some stormed, other fiered with Granadoes, and Slugs of hot Iron, and the Wind serving their turn, it wrought such Effect, that the Governour moved therewith, first D Treated, and then Surrendred, yielding themselves Prisoners, and the Town to be preserved from Plunder: And this July 23. there being 1000 Officers and Soldiers Prisoners, 44 Barrells of Powder, 1500 Armes, 44 Pieces of Ordnance, and 400 weight of Match.

In the North the Parliament's Forces succeeded happily, where Pomfret Castle was taken by Major Generall Poyns, and Scarborough by Sir Matthew Boynton. About the latter end of July the Generall sent a Party of Horse and Dragoons under Colonell Rich and Colonell Okey to Bath, who had the Town Surrendred to them, without any of the least Opposition, there being in it but a very small Garison. The next Business was to Attempt Sherborn Castle, where Sir Lewis Dives was Governour for the King: In the time of this Siege, the Club-men continued their mutinous Meetings, and Colonell Fleetwood was sent against them to Shaftsbury, who seasonably Invroned them in the Town, and carried away 50 of the Ring-Leaders Prisoners, but this would not quash them; for shortly after, about 4000 Muster upon Hambleton Hill; near Shrawton, against these, Lieutenant-general Cromwell Marcheth, and endeavours to reduce them to Reason by Parley, but that proving fruitless, falls upon them, kills some, disperseth the rest, and takes 400 Prisoners, and so returned to the Generall lying before Sherborn; This Defeat being seconded by the Ordnance of Parliament against their Illegal Assembling, so allayed their Tumultuous Spirits, that they never afterwards made any Disturbance.

Hereford yet held out for the King, which the Scots were ordered to Besiege, who accordingly Surrounded, and Summoned the Governour, Sir Barnaby Scudamore, which was answered with Neglect; whereupon they begin their Approaches, and raised their Batteries, from whence they played with their Ordnance upon the Town, but did little Execution that way, and so fall to Myning, but are discovered, and Countermined; this Siege continued till the First of September, at what time the distressed Condition of their own Country called for their Ayde, Montrose's prevailing incredibly against the Covenanters; David Lesley had been sent before with the greatest part of the Horse, and now Generall Leven ariseth from the Siege, with Intention to March Northwards, at the Nick of time that the King having raised some Recruits in Wales, with a flying Army came to Hereford, and did some hurt to the Rear of the departing Scots: David Lesley entred Scotland, and so managed his Business, that there was little need of Leven, who therefore takes up his Quarters in York-shire. Indeed Sir Thomas Fairfax hearing of the Scottish Affairs, had sent a Letter Subscribed by himself, and all the chief Officers of the Army, to Generall Leven, representing the Condition of their Kingdome, and their Willingness to spare Forces for their Assistance. But about this time some Disguits arose between the Parliament and the Scottish Army, which made them somewhat more jealous of one anothers Intentions, while the Scots Clamour with the Parliament for Money, and the Parliament at the Scots for not Addressing themselves at the Siege of Newark: Hereford Siege being raised, the King Marches up and down Wales, to raise Supplies, thence comes to Leichfield, and by the way Fights a Parry of Scottish Horse and Dragoons, then Marches to Ashbourn, beats Sir John Gell, and carries some Prisoners

A Prisoners with him to Welbeck-house, and so with a flying Army rangeth up and down, comes to Huntington, and takes that; Marches to Cambridge, and after a small Skirmish forceth his Entrance, thence to St. Ives, which place he Fined Five hundred pounds; thence to Oxborn, and so to Oxford, August 28. where he stayed not long, but Advanced to Ludlow, earnestly Intent upon the Relief of Chester, then close Besieged by Sir William Brereton.

Ruston Heath Fight.

Major General Poyns with a Party of Horie was appointed to attend the Kings Motion, and followed him so close, that on Ruston Heath, two Miles off Chester, they came to a Fight, where Poyns was forced to give Ground, and had been utterly overthrown, if Colonel Jones had not come in with a new Supply from Brereton, which encouraged Poyns to Rally, and so the King being be-set both Rear and Front, forlook the Field, and betook himself into Chester, but finding the City much weakened by Batteries, and the Assaylants ready to Storm, he took leave and sped him into Wales again for Recruits.

The General Fairfax was now before Sherborn Castle, of which Sir Lewis Dives was Governor, and would not hearken to any Summons, and so endured a furious Storm, and with much blood-shed on both Sides; after an extream cruell Fight the Castle was yielded upon Quarter, with 400 Prisoners, many of them Persons of Quality, 18 Pieces of Ordnance, and a Morter-piece, August 15.

Sherborn Castle taken by Fairfax.

After the taking of Sherborn, it was Debated in a Councell of War, Whether they should pursue Goring, or Besiege Bristol, whereof Prince Rupert was Governor: at last the latter was resolved on, and accordingly they Marched thither, and sat down before it; the Parliaments Ships being ordered to Guard it by Sea.

Bristol Besieged by Fairfax, and Cromwell.

In the mean time, Nunsey Castle was Surrendered to Colonel Rainsborough, and Portsmouth Point to Colonel Kempson. Bristol was sufficiently furnished with Provisions, 10: Food and Fightings, and the Ill-affected Disarmed. Fairfax, sends in his Summons to prevent Blood-shed, and hazard to the City: Rupert desires leave to send to the King, which being denied, he offers to Surrender up the Place on these Conditions; Every Man to March away in the height of Honour, with their Armes, flying Colours, Drums, Trumpets, and as much Powder and Match as they can carry about them, with Bag and Baggage, Horse, Armes: Ten Guns, Fifty barrells of Powder: And lastly, the Lines and Fortifications sleighted, and to be no more a Garrison. Fairfax sends Answer satisfactory enough, as to the Concernments of the Soldiers, but not in reference to the Lines, and Fortifications, and continuing it a Garrison: Rupert had made severall Sallies, and done some Execution upon the Enemy, and had lost some considerable Persons on his own side too, As Sir Bernard Ashley, Sir Richard Crain, and others who died of Wounds then received; but seeing no good to be done that way, the Parliaments Strength encreasing, by the Accession of the Country people, he thought good to protract the time, by Treating, till his Countercarries and Lines were finished, which Fairfax now smelling out, resolves upon a Storm, to be made good in three Places, Colonel Fortescue with Four Regiments to storm on Somersetshire side; Colonel Mountague with the like Number on both sides of Lawford-Gate, and Colonel Rainsborough on this side the River Froom, from the Sallyport to the Priors Port, and other Regiments disposed in several Stations, to second the Assaylants, and to enter the Lines, in case of the Stormers Success: Fortescue failed in his Attempt, and so did only Alarm; Mountague and Rainsborough did their Work, and forced their Entrance into the City, firing the Houses as they went, and the Sea-men also Mastered Waterport, and Rupert having done as much as was possible, retired into the Castle, and the next day came to a Parley, and concluded on the same Articles, which Sir Thomas Fairfax formerly offered them, and so Marched out, September 12. In this Service the Parliament lost many men, Lieutenant Colonel Purefoy, and Captain Hill were slain upon the Place, Major Bethell, and Major Cromwell mortally Wounded. Thus was Bristol a Place of great Consequence gained to the Parliament, which might else have proved a Work of more Difficulty, if the King had joyned with Goring for the Relief of it, as was intended, the Parliaments Forces being but sufficient for that Siege, and so not likely to have Impeded their Conjunction: Here were found 140 Pieces of Cannon mounted, 100 Barrells of Powder, Victuals in the Royall Fort, for 150 Men, for 320 dayes, the Castle Victualled for near half so long, the Prince had in Garrison 2500 Foot, 1000 Horse, besides the Trained Bands, and Auxiliaries above 1000.

The City taken by storm, and the Castle by Surrender.

Bristol being thus reduced into the Parliaments Power, General Fairfax Marches to Exeter, and Lieutenant-general Cromwell to the Devizes, which after severall Butteries, he Mastered, and Laycock House was taken by Colonel Pickering, and Barkley Castle by Colonel Rainsborough, although he had a sharp Dispute for it first: And Farley Castle in Somersetshire, and Sendall Castle in Yorkshire reduced by the Forces of the Parliament, and Chepstow in Monmouthshire, by Colonel Morgan, Masseys Successor in the Government of Gloucester: And October the Fifth, Lieutenant-general Cromwell takes Winchester Castle, and from thence departs to Basing House, which had held out against many Assaults, ever doing more hurt then it received. But now comes Cromwell and resolutely storms it, they within shewed themselves as Valiant as ever, but meeting with other kind of men then formerly, the Marquis of Winchester was forced to yield, and kindly used by the Conquerors, who found an unexpected Mass of Wealth in the House.

The Devils, Winchester and Basing-house taken by Cromwell. Laycock house by C. Pickering, Barkley Castle by Rainsborough, Chepstow by Colonel Morgan.

In earnest, the Kings Condition was very low, he had been formerly Routed near Westchester, and thence he made shift to get into that City, afterwards getting out again into Wales, had gotten into a good Body of Horse, with which he Couried up and down; and lastly, resolved to send the Lord Digby, and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with some 1600 Horse, to joine A with Montross, who accordingly Marched into York-shire, and near Sherburn Surprized 800 Foot of the Parliamentarians, with their Armes, but staying for Carriages to convey them away; Colonell Copley, Colonell Lilburn, and other Commanders of York-shire, with sufficient force came upon them, and Routed them, recovered all, took 400 Prisoners, and 600 Horse, Digby's Coach and Cabine of Letters, by which much was discovered of the Kings Transactions with the Danes, and Irish Rebels; Digby with the rest flies Northwards, and at Carlisle Sands was the second time Defeated by Sir John Brown, with the loss of 100 slain, and the taking of 200 Horse, and many Prisoners; and in their Flight towards Beeston Castle, were met with by Colonell Briggs, who took 200 more of them, besides 180 of them, who flying through Westmerlands were seized by Vandruck, so that Digby with a very small Retinue, fled over to the Isle of B Man, and thence into Ireland to the Earl of Ormond. The Parliament thrive every where, Fairfax takes Tiverton, Cromwell Langford House, and Major Generall Langborn in Wales reduces Carmarthen.

While the Generall lay about Charde, the Lord Goring beat up his Quarters by Night, took about 40 Foot, and 20 Dragoons, but then the Alarm being taken, the Cavaliers returned; Fairfax followed, and in his way (as was sayd) reduced Tiverton, and from thence after severall Marches, drew neer to Exeter, which he streightned in order to a Siege. About this time Monmouth was taken by the Parliament Forces, and Shelford House neer Newark, Worton, Wiverton, and Welbeck, by Major Generall Poyns: And now dies Colonell Pickering, who had done great Service for the Parliament in this War, but is here overtaken by a new Disease, which C brought him to his End, with many others at Antree.

Overtures of a Treaty between Prince Charles, Goring, and Sir Thomas Fairfax.

In this mean time, severall Occurrences intervened between Prince Charles, the Lord Goring, and the Generall Fairfax, which Last, continually Answered the Two former, That he would Treat with them, as a Soldier, and a Servant to the Parliament, but no further; Goring crosseth the Seas for France, to raise new Supplies there, against the next Summer; and Prince Charles with his Councell bestirred themselves about raising the Counties of Cornwall, and Devon, to disturb Sir Thomas Fairfax, in his lying before Exeter.

Colonell Birch takes Hereford for the Parl. by a Stratagem.

December the Eighteenth, Hereford was taken by Surprize, the manner thus: The Governour had issued out Warrants for the Country-people, to come in to Work in the Town, for the Service of the Garison: Colonell Morgan, and Colonell Birch had Intelligence of it, and so layd D their Design; Morgan had 1100 Horse and Foot, and Birch had 900 Foot, and a Troop of Horse ready for the Enterprize, with which they March from Gloucester, to Hereford, in one Day and a Night, where some lusty Fellows were picked out, and Arrayed with Habit of Country Labourers, and one of them to serve for a Constable, with a Warrant in his hand, to bring these Fellows to Work, according to the Governours Order: 150 Firelocks were lodged in the dark, as neer the Gate as possible, and another Body to Second them: So the Bridge is let down, the supposed Constable and his Consorts enter, and presently take an occasion to Quarrell with the Guard, killed three of them, then in come the Firelocks, and after Colonell Birch, and lastly, Colonell Morgan, with the whole Body. These soon Mastered the unware Surprized Garison, with small Lois on either side, wherein were 11 Pieces of Ordnance, much Armes and Ammunition, the Lord Brudenell, and Judge Jenkins, 14 Knights, 4 Lieutenant Colonells, three Captains, and other Officers and Gentlemen One Hundred, and with this Action, Morgan and Birch gained as much Honour, as Sir John Digby reaped Disgrace, by his Treacherous Motion to Colonell Ker, Governour of Plymouth, wheeby he would have persuaded him to Deliver up the Town of Plymouth, because the Parliament were about to put in another Governour; But he returned him a Noble Answer, wherein he signified his utter abhorrence of such a Treachery, and withall, Ingeniously, though Satyrically, twitted Digby with the former Treasons of his Relations.

Westcheester had been long Besieged, and much of the Kings Hope was reposed in the holding out of that City, many Endeavours had been used to the Relief of it, and many Transactions had F passed with the Irish about it, which afterwards bore hard upon him; the Lord Biron was Governour of it, and Sir William Brereton for the Parliament had layen before it since August last, and endured many Salleys from the Besieged; Colonell Jones, and Colonell Lowthian, who had hovered about Beeston, drew off at Midnight with a Party of 1300 Horse and Foot, and by Four of the Clock attained the East-side of Chester, which they Stormed in Four severall Places, and though at first Repulsed, yet continuing the Assault with much Resolution, forced the Cavaliers to Desert the Forest Street, which they took Possession of, with the Mayors House, Sword, and Mace, and the Sheriffs Ward, after which piece of Service, Breretons Soldiers enlarge, and by degrees almost Block up the West-side too: Hereupon Sir William Vaughan for the King, with 1700 Horse and 700 Foot, Marched towards the Besiegers, but is met with by Mittons, Jones, and G Lowthian, with 1400 Horse, and a 1000 Foot; between whom hapned a Relolute Engagement, but the Victory fell to the Parliamentarians, 100 slain, and 400 taken Prisoners. A second Design of Relief was Attempted by Sir Arthur Ashton, but he was Routed at Sturbridge, and himself taken Prisoner: So now Sir William Brereton Summons the Governour, who yet stands out, and sends a Messenger to the King, who returning without any hopes of Succour, Biron was constrained to Treat (the Suburbs, as was sayd, were taken before) and February the First Surrendered to the City upon honourable Conditions; and so Sir William Marches towards Leitchfield: And about Westcheester was taken by the Parliament Forces.

A about this time, the Court of Wards, and Liveries was Voted down by the Parliament.

The King being come to Newark, as a Place of greatest Security, and most unlikely to be Besieged; a strange Quarrell hapned amongst the Great Ones there, concerning the Lord Digby, lately Defeated at Sherborn, whom Major General Charles Gerrard, charged with Treason: with him ended the Two Princes, Rupert, and Maurice, the Lord Hawley, and Sir Richard Willis; but Governour Bellasis stood up for Digby, with divers others: The Contention grew hot, from Words they come to Swords, and the King coming in to part them, increased the Feude, by siding for Digby; Whereupon Rupert and the rest of the contrary Part, to the Number of 400, in much Disgust layd down their Commissions, and depart to another Place where they stand upon their Guard, and so the King departs for Oxford, with a Guard of 300 Horse, whom Poyns meets with at their Return, and Routs them, and then takes in Bevoys Castle; and not long after, the Countess of Darby surrenders up her House at Latham to the Parliament: The King at Oxford with Rupert and Maurice now Reconciled, was Blockt up by the Parliaments Forces, whereupon he Commands a Fast to be observed every Fryday, during his Troubles.

A Quarrell amongst some of the Kings chief Commanders.

Belvoir Castle and Latham House surrendered to the Par. The K. Blockt up at Oxford, sends to the Par. about a Treary.

In the mean time, a Treary was Agitated, between the King and Parliament, and the King desired to come to a Personall Treary with the Two Houses at Westminster, and some likelihood there was of a good Effect: When all was Blasted on a suddain, by a Discovery of the Kings Transactions with the Irish, partly by the Letters seized in Digby's Coach at Sherborn, and partly by Letters taken in the Pockets of Malady, Archbishop of Tuam, who was slain at the Overthrow of the Rebels at Sligo in Ireland; wherein the King offered Toleration of Religion, Themselves to choose a Governour of their own, and to be Intrusted with severall Castles and Forts, for their Caution; Upon Condition to send into England 10000 Men to Assist him against his Enemies: And (which was worst of all) amongst other Intercepted Irish Letters and Papers, was found this Copy of the Kings Commission to the Earl of Glamorgan, Impowring him to Treat with the Rebels.

CHARLES, By the Grace of God, &c. To our Trusty and Well-beloved Cousin, Edward, Earl of Glamorgan: We Reposing great and especiall Trust and Confidence, in your approved Wisdome and Fidelity; Do by these Presents (as firmly as under Our Great Seal, to all Intents and Purposes) Authorize, and give you Power to Treat and Conclude with the Confederate Roman Catholicks in Our Kingdome of Ireland; If upon Necessity any Thing be condescended unto, wherein Our Lieutenant cannot so well be seen in, as not fit for Us for the present publicly to Own. Therefore We Charge You to proceed according to this Our Warrant with all possible Secresie: And whatsoever You shall Engage Your Self upon such Valuable Considerations, as You in your Judgment shall Deem fit: We promise in the Word of a KING, and CHRISTIAN, to Ratifie and perform the same, of that which shall be Granted by You, and under Your Hand and Seal; The Confederate Catholicks having by their Supplies Testified their Zeal to Our Service. And this shall be in each Particular to You a sufficient Warrant:

The Kings Commission to the Earl of Glamorgan.

Given at Our Court at Oxford, the Twelfth of May, 20 Car.

F Glamorgan had brought his Business to some Issue, when for Colouring the Kings Intentions; State Reasons enforced the Earl of Ormond, the Lord Digby, and the Councell to Imprison him, which yet could not be so cunningly carried, but that it gave Distaste to the Irish, his Fellow Papists, who thereupon began to suspect double Dealings, and so neither sent over the promised 10000 Men. nor any Ayde to West-chester (whereby that City was lost) although Glamorgan was quickly Released, upon the Bail of 6, or 8 Irish Peers: But these Passages, together with the Discovery of the Lord Digby's Letter to the Archbishop of York, and the Archbishops Letter to the Lord Ashley, and Glamorgan's to the King, Declaring the Design of his Restraint; put the Parliament into such a Heat, that they would by no means consent to the Kings Proposals, though frequently reiterated, wherein he offered to come to the Two Houses, upon Assurance of the safety of his Person; and to Advise with them for the Good and safety of the Kingdome: Provided, all that have Adheared to his Majesty, may have Liberty to go to their own Homes in safety, and their Sequestrations to be taken off: Upon which Conditions, his Majesty was willing to Disband all his Soldiers, and Dismantle his Garrisons, pass an Act of Oblivion, and Free Pardon to all. And so these Hopes of Reconciliation vanished.

The discovery of the Kings Transactions with the Irish, incens'd the Par. against him.

The Town of Monmouth was now taken by the Parliament Forces, and Exeter streightned, on the East-side by the Garrisoning of Norwell, Broadcliff, Poultimore, and Stoak; and on the other side beyond the River, by the Garrisoning of Kirtonfulford, and Cannonteen: Captain A Dean was also sent to take in Pouldram House, but failing of his Design, possessed himself of Pouldram Church, but being there continually Attayled by fresh Numbers of the Enemy, who came very thick upon them from Exeter and other Places; Sir Thomas Fairfax fearing their Loss, Commanded them away: Upon News of the Cavaliers Advance from before Plymouth, to Relieve Exeter, Sir Thomas resolves to meet them, and therefore riseth from the Siege of Exeter leaving that Place sufficiently Blocked up by the forenamed Garrisons, and the Addition of Sir George Chidleys House at Ashton: At Beveystrey, lay the Lord Wentworth with Five Regiments, whom Lieutenant General Cromwell Surprizeth, and takes three Regiments, and dispereth the rest, Wentworth himself hardly Escaping.

Lieutenant General Cromwell surprize h the Lord Wentworth's Forces at Beveystrey.

Fairfax comes now to Totness, whose Approach caused the Cavaliers before Plymouth to B quit their Trenches, and be gone, having been shrewdly put to it, by that stout Garrison, who Sallied out upon them Frequently and Successfully.

Dartmouth taken by Gen. Fairfax.

From Totness the General orders Two Regiments to be drawn before Dartmouth, and himself follows after with the rest, and upon Rejection of a Summons, falls to Storm it in Three Places; The first Post by the West-Gate, by Colonel Hammond, on the North by Colonel Pride, and on Tunstall Church and Works by Colonel Fortescue: All which fell on with great Resolution, gaining one Foot after another, till they had Mastered all, but Kingsworth Fort, the Castle, and Gallants Bower. In Kingsworth Fort was Sir Henry Cary with his Regiment, who failed not to do his Part, but being over-powred, yielded upon good Terms, to March away with his Officers and Soldiers; and so the Parliamentarians entred it, wherein were 12 Guns, 12 Barrells of Powder, and convenient proportion of Ammunition. The next Morning the General summons the Castle, and the Governour was willing to Treat, but having stood it out, to this Extremity, could obtain no other Conditions, but Quarter for himself, and all his Officers and Soldiers; but afterwards the General dismissed all the common Soldiers, but kept Prisoners Sir Hugh Pollard the Governour, the Earl of Newport, Colonel Seymour, and the other Officers; Ordnance about 120 mounted: and Two Men of War taken, January 19. Shortly after a French Vessel not knowing the Town was taken, strook into Dartmouth with a Packet of Letters from the Queen, which being Seized, they discovered the whole Business of the Kings Negotiation with France.

Hopton Routed at Torrington.

Colonell Hammond takes in Pouldram Castle, and the General sits down again before Exeter, D and summons the Governour, Sir John Berkley, who Answers, That in Honour he cannot Surrender, having good Hopes of Relief from the Prince. Fairfax resolves to Storm, but hearing of Hopton's Advance to Torrington, with 5000 Horse, and 4000 Foot, he once more rises from that Siege, leaving Sir Hardress Waller behind him with some Regiments, and Marches to Chimley, and from thence towards Torrington, where the Enemy then lay, and beat them out of Stedden House. The Cavaliers had Fortified the Town with Lines and Barradoes, which yet could not Discourage the Parliamentarians from pressing upon them: The Battell began neer the Town, whither Hopton Retreated, the Horse following, entred close with him, whom the Cavaliers Charged so boldly, that they were like to give over; But the Army seconding the Loss with fresh Men, the Town was wholly gained: But some of the Enemy fiered the Magazine in the Church, which blew up the Church, and did more harm to the Assaylants, then the Sword had done before, upon whom in this Amazeiment, Sir John Digby Charging did much Execution, and then bid farewell, at Eleven of the Clock at Night, February 16. Hopton himself was shot in the Thigh, and Digby in the Head, many Prisoners, and Horse taken, and divers slain. Hopton departs to Stratton, and Fairfax follows, which causeth his Lordship to March more Westward, yet some of his Rear Loytered so long, that about 80 of them, and about 300 Horse were taken; from thence the Army Advanceth to Lanceston, which the Prince had quitted, leaving Colonel Basset behind him with 500 Foot, and some Horse, who Skirmished, and being soon worsted, escaped away by the darkness of the Night: Salisbury, and Mount-Edgcumbe being Reduced, the General follows the retiring Enemy, towards Bodmyn, alwaies keeping a watchfull Eye to E hinder them from breaking through, and such a Terror was upon them, that they would seldom ever stand to it, though oftentimes far superiour in Numbers: And Prince Charles finding the Pursuit so hot, Imbarqued himself for Scilly. All things succeeded so happily with Fairfax, that after severall Successes, the Lord Hopton in vain desired a Cessation, and then would needs persuade himself that it was granted: But the General summons him to lay down Armes, upon which ensued a Treaty at Tresilian Bridge, Sir Thomas Fairfax Quattering at Truro, and the Lord Hopton further Westward, where at length these Articles were agreed upon, March the Thirteenth.

Booke up by Fairfax at Torrington.

Articles agreed on between them.

That the Lord Hopton should Disband his Army in the West: General Fairfax excepting his Lordship to have Fifty of his own Horse, and Fifty of Fairfax's, for his Convey to Oxford. All Strangers to have Passes to go beyond Seas, and to carry with them what is their Own, without Horses and Armes. All English Officers to go home to their Habitations, or if they will beyond Sea. Each Colonel to have his Horse, and two Men and Horses to wait on them: Each Captain one Man and Horse: the Troopers 20 s. apiece, and to go where they pleased.

But

A But Hopton hearing of the ill Effects of the Propositions of Peace, changed his Course for Oxford, and sailed into France. After the Disbanding of these Forces, all the Kings Garisons and Forts in Cornwall yielded, except only Pendennis Castle, and the Mount: And Generall Fairfax returned to the Siege at Exeter.

The Kings Forces in this mean while had not been Idle, but moved up and down in flying Parties, to their best Advantage; The King, the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, and Prince Maurice, were at Oxford closely Surrounded by the *Parliament*s Forces, their Hories being about Farrington, expecting the Lord Ashley, with his Foot to joyn with them: But he was met with by Sir William Brereton, and Colonell Morgan at Stow in the Wold, upon the Edge of Gloucestershire, where he was totally Defeated, and himself taken Prisoner, 1500 Hories and Foot, with his Baggage, Ammunition, and some of the Kings Letters concerning Ireland,
B March 21.

The Lord Ashley routed at Stow on the Wold.

But in Scotland the Kings Affairs Succeed better, this year, where the Earl of Montrose prospered Incredibly; for after his Defeat given to the Earl of Argyle, many of the Cambells took part with him, by whose help he took Elgin the chief Town of Muray, while the Lord Gordon, eldest Son to the Marquis Huntly, with some Forces joyned with him, so that now he was strong, 2000 Foot, and 200 Hories, with these he Defeats Sir John Hurry, and the Covenanters Army at Brechen, and Marches to Grantsbain towards the River Tay, and so for the Forth, there he meets with Generall Baily, and Hurry, and offers them Bartell, which they refuse, so he is for Dunkeld, where Lewis the youngest Son of Marquis Huntly, takes leave, and goes home to his
C Father, carrying with him all the Gordons: however Montrose and the Lord Gordon, who never deserted him, Summons Dundee, and upon refusall falls to Storming, and enters the Town; In the Nick of time comes Baily and Hurry with a strong Power, whom Montrose not able to Encounter, Retreats through rough and unknown wayes, Skirmishing with the Pursuers for many Miles together, and with much ado, passed over the South-Esque, and returns to Brechen. Now having some time to rest, he sends the Lord Gordon to endeavour the bringing back of his Brother, and the rest of the Gordons, himself with 500 Foot, and 50 Hories, Marches through Angus, Perthshire, and neer the River Erne, Repulses Baily, and comes to Balwidier, where the Earl of Aboyn meets him: at Lough Catrine he had Intelligence, that Hurry was upon Engaging with the Lord Gordon, to whose Assistance Montrose makes speed, and after a tedious uncouth
D March, Joyns with him (in the midst of Marve) who had gotten together 1000 Foot, and 200 Hories; Hurry Retreats, followed by Montrose, who pressed so hard upon him, that at a Village called Aldern, they came to a Bartell, May 4. in which, Montrose's right Wing was overpowered, but that Loss was abundantly recompensed by the Left, which utterly Routed Hurry's right Wing, and coming opportunely to the Rescue of their Fellows, put the Others to Flight.

The Affairs of Montrose in Scotland.

The Earl of Linsay now took upon him the Command of the Covenanters Army in Argyle's stead, and joyns with Baily to seek out Montrose, who Retired to Kingarf Castle, and so Linsay departs to Arbolls, and Baily to ruine Huntley's Country, which Montrose means to Defend, and Marches to Aileford Hill, and possesseth it, Baily was unwilling to Fight, but being perswaded by the Lord Balcarris, prepared for Battel, which Montrose refused not; both Sides fought well, E but at length Montrose obtained the Victory, though dearly purchased with the Death of the Lord Gordon, who was there shot dead, July 22.

The Fight at Aldern.

After this Victory, Montrose was Recruited with 1800 Men, with which he Advanceth to St. Johnstons, where the Parliament then sat, whom having somewhat Scared, he turned away to Dunkeld, and there is met by Aboyn, with 200 Hories, and as many Dragoons: And the Earl of Arley, and his Son Sir David, bringing with them, 80 Hories of the Oglebies; And now thinking himself able to deal with any Scottish Army, he entred Fife, and Incamps in Kilsythfield, with 4500 Foot, and 500 Hories: Baily was ready to Encounter him with far greater Forces: And so August 17. they came to a Bartell, which was one of the Bloodiest that was Fought in Scotland all this War, for the Montrossians fought desperately, resolving generally, rather to lay F their Bodies in the Field, then turn their Backs: The Covenanters Disputed it with much Animosity, but at length their Hories being resolutely Charged, turned about and Fled, and the Foot unable of themselves to endure, followed, whom the Montrossians pursued 14 Miles together, so that the Covenanters lost this Day in Fight and Flight, above 5000 Men: After this great Victory, all things for awhile answered Montrosses Expectation, most of the chief Places of Scotland and Edenborough it self submitted to him, and Macdonnell and Drummond dispersed those Forces, which the Earls of Cassells and Eglington were raising in the Western Parts. But this Prosperity was short lived, for the Highlanders thinking they had done their Work, being laden with Spoils, returned Home; And others to the Number of 3000, and 120 Irish, with Macdonnell their Leader, took leave of Montrose for a season, promising to return with many G more Men, within 40 dayes, which yet they never performed: And shortly after the Earl of Aboyn carries away with him his own Men, and all others of the Northern Forces; Inasmuch that now he had but a small Army with him.

The Covenanters Defeated by Montrose at the Bartell of Kilsyth.

In this mean time, the Covenanters privily sent to David Lesley in England, to come to their Help, who readily obeyed, and hastned to Berwick, with all the Scottish Hories, and presently entred Scotland; at which News Montrose was much troubled, as knowing his own Weakness in Hories, and therefore would have got himself into the North again: But Lesley prevented him, and by hasty Marches overtook him in a Field called Phillips-Haugh, neer Selkirk, where he forced him to Fight, September 13. Lesley had about 6000 Men, most of them Horse; which notwithstanding the Montrossians Valiantly received and stood out their Charges: But in the End, were over-powered, and beaten down with a great Slaughter. Montross himself with much ado Escaped to his old Shelters, and the next day got together the Remainders of his scattered Forces, which are seasonably augmented by the coming in of Marquis Douglass, and Sir John Dalrymple, with a small Party of Horse; with these he Marches Northwards, Fordeed Avon, and River, and meets with the Earls of Craford and Arley: And now he had 200 Horse, and some Foot, whom he leads into Atboll, and is there furnished with 400 Foot, with whom he Climbs over Gransbain Mountains, to meet with Aboin, and then returns back again the same way, and falls into Perthshire; and here by Messengers from the King, had Order to March Southward, if possible, to meet the Lord Digby, with his Party of Horse: which Messengers B and Letters he sends to Huntley, and Aboin; Montross himself passeth the Forth, and spoyles Sir John Buchanans Lands.

About this time the Lord Napier of Marcheston, deceased; And Sir William Rollock, Sir Phillip Nasbit, and Alexander Ogilby being taken by the Covenanters, were Condemned and Executed at Glasgow, and Colonell O Caben and Colonell Laghlen at Edinburgh.

Montross in Revenge of his Friends wastes the Country about Glasgow with 300 Horse, and 1500 Foot, himself Encamping at Leven, where he hears the News of Digby's Defeat, this makes him return Northward where he spends much time in Treating with Huntley, who played fast and loose with him; And promised to Assist him in the Siege of Inverness, but failed, so that Design came to nothing: but was frustrated by Major General Middleton, who came from the Scots Army in England with Forces; yet Huntley upon his own private Quarrel, Besieges and takes Aberdeen, whereinto Middleton had thrust 500 Men: but the Marquis gaining the Town, Plundered the Inhabitants, who for the most part were Royally Affected, yet freely Released all Prisoners which were of Middleton's Men. Montross notwithstanding all these Discouragements, still laboured to keep up the Royall Interest, and had gotten together many Friends and Tenants, of the Earl of Seaford, the Lord Rose, Sir James Mac-donell, Maclin, Glengar, Mac-reynold, with whose Help he made assist to keep up the War, doing no small hurt to his Enemies. But the next year, the King having entruisted himself with the Scots Army in England, sent a Herald to Montross, with Commands to lay down Armes, and Disband, and to pass over into France, till his Majesties further Pleasure, which Orders, he readily obeyed: And by that means the Covenanters had Elbow room, having already put to Death 4 of their Capital Enemies, at St. Andrews, Viz. Sir Robert Spotswood, Nathaniel Gordon, Andrew Gultery, and William Murray; but the Lord Ogilby putting on his Sisters Apparell, had made an Escape out of Prison. And now they had leisure to Jangle with the Parliament of England, about some Differences at that time arising.

Nor was England only the Seat of War this Year, but other Nations also had their share: The Swedes had made a Peace with the Danes, but still continued Hostility with the Emperour, which continued with various Success, till at last they came to a Battell, wherein at first the Germans had the better; but busying themselves according to their Custome, too greedily about the Baggage, the Swedish General Torstenson, Rallies his almost Defeated Forces, falls upon the Plundering Imperialists, and Wrecks the Victory out of their hands, taking Prisoners, 4 Generalls, Hassfeldt, Mercy, Bray, and Zaradeskie: 7 Colonells, and 4000 others, besides 3000 slain; Yet was this Fight nothing so bloody, as that between the French and Bavarians, near Friburge: Whereas One sayes, they had a Design to die all, such a horrible Massacre there was, with the greatest part of both Armies layd dead on the Field: Nor could either Side boast of their Gains; but what Advantage could be claimed, was rather on the French side, whose Generalls the Duke of Anguien, and Marshall Turenne, reinforcing their Troops, Seized Philippsburg, Spier, and Mentz. The Spaniard for his Part was this Year as the Emperour, loosing the greatest part of Flanders to the French; And the Salt of Gannet to the Hollander: And in Italy the French take Piombino, and Portolongone, and Defeat the Spaniard at the Passage Mora, F besides severall Successes in Catalonia.

It was now the Twenty second Year of King Charles's Reign, Viz. 1646, which the Parliament begin with disabling all Members absent, with the King, for ever sitting in the House; and Impower the Speaker to give Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, for new Elections in their Places.

Gen. Fairfax comes to London.

The War was almost finished, the Kings Fortes beaten out of the Field, Garisons Surrender apiece, Dennington Castle, Michaels Mount, Ruthen Castle, Woodstock, and others yeild to the Parliament. Generall Fairfax, and Lieutenant Generall Cromwell return to the Siege of Exeter, which had been Blocked up by Sir Haidres Waller, during the Generalls stay in the West. The Governour Sir John Berkley being Summoned, and despatching of Relfer, returned Answer, That it was agreed on at his Councell of War, That Commissioners might meet on either Side, to Treat on Friday, April the Third, which was assented unto. The Treaty lasted till Thursday, April the Ninth, at which time the Articles were Signed, no waies Dishonourable to the Besieged, who Marched out, April the Thirteenth. After which the Generall went to Banestable, and had it Surrendered to him, upon the same Conditions that Exeter was.

B And now Sir Thomas Fairfax resolves to March for Oxford, which put the King upon thoughts of providing for his own Safety: And therefore, April the Thirteenth, he came out of Oxford in Disguise, with Parson Hudson, waiting upon Mr. John Ashburnham, and got to the Scots Army, before Newark, May the Sixth, whereupon divers Noblemen seeing themselves Deserted by the King, yeilded to the Generall: But the Governour Sir Thomas Glenham, would not so easily quit his Charge: However Fairfax goes on, and fixes his Quarters, the next upon Hellington Hill, which was committed to Major Generall Skippon, lately recovered of his Naseby Wounds: The Second being a Bridge over Charwell, near Marston, and a Line drawn from Ips to Charwell, fell to Colonell Rainsborough: A Third to Colonell Lambert, And a Fourth, to Colonell Harbert. And Major Generall Skippon had the managing and carrying on of these Works, Lines, and Approaches.

C Sir Thomas Glenham being summoned, returns a Civill Answer, Desiring leave to send to the King about it, but was refused; Many Messages pass to and fro, till at last, May 18. the Treaty began, which held till June 20. and then Concluded upon very Noble Terms, with Sir Thomas Fairfax was the rather Induced to Condescend unto, out of his Respect to the Colledges, and Library. And accordingly the City was Surrendered, June 24. together with Faringdon Castle, which was included in the Treaty: There Marched out in a Body well Armed, about Three thousand, besides near as many more which afterwards had Passes. Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, and divers others Transported themselves beyond Seas. In the City were found seventy Barrells of Powder, Thirty eight Pieces of Ordnance, whereof Twenty six Brass, and plentifull Store of Provision of Victuals. The Duke of York was carried to St. James's, where he met with his Sitter the Princess Henretta Maria, sent thither from the Surrender of Exeter, but was shortly after conveyed over into France, by her Governess the Lady Dalkish.

D Oxford being taken, it was in vain for the lesser Garisons to stand out; wherefore News comes thick and threefold to the Parliament of the Surrenders of Banbury, Borsall, Carnarvon, Ludlow, Leichfield, Worcester, Wallingford, and Goshridge; And Governour Arundell, who could not till now by any means be Induced to deliver up Penderennis Castle, when all the West besides was Reduced, at length yeilds to Colonell Fortescue: And the Marquis of Worcester having been long Besieged by Colonell Morgan, and now Summoned by Sir Thomas Fairfax himself, gives up his Castle of Ragland. It was long before the Scots would be perswaded to return out of the North, and Besiege Newark; but at last, being over-come with the Summ of Thirty thousand pounds, they came on and Encamped on the North-side of the Town, and Poynes and Rosster on the South-side the Besieged make frequent Sallies out upon their Enemies, killing and taking many: But the King being come to the Scottish Camp, sends in his Desires to Governour Belafus, to deliver up the Town, to the English: Inobedience whereunto, it was, upon Honourable Conditions, Surrendered to Colonell Poynes, about the beginning of May.

F The Seals of State being sent from Oxford to Westminster, were according to the Vote of the Two Houses broken in the House of Lords, in the presence of the Commons. The War in England being now, after much Bloodshed, brought to some End, the Parliament were at leisure to dispute with the Scots, concerning their keeping of the King; Who fearing least Sir Thomas Fairfax should fall upon them, and Compell them to deliver him up, Retreated Northwards to Newcastle. The Earl of Essex had lived to see his War Accomplished by another Generall, and this year dies of an Apoplexy, at Essex-House in the Strand, September 14. And the Parliament in respect to his former Services, Voted 3000 l. to be given towards his Funerall; He was Honourably Attended to his Grave, and Interred, Oct. 23. Mr. Vynes Preached his Funerall Sermon.

G The Parliament seeing the King gotten into the Scots Possession, sends a second Invitation to the Prince of Wales to come to London, with promise of Honour and Safety, but he durst not venture. The Parliament about this time passed an Ordinance for Disbanding Major Generall Massey's Brigade, which General Fairfax was ordered to put in Execution, who thereupon Marched from Oxford to the Devises, where he found them consisting of the Number of 2000, 500 Horse, prepared by the perswasion of Major Generall Massey, Colonell Cook, and the rest of their Officers to obey the Ordinance of Parliament. Soon after this, the General was taken with a Fit of the Stone, which made him take a Journey to the Bath; presently after his Recovery he set forwards for London, whither he came Novem. 12. being met in the way with the City Militia, And the next day both Houses Ordered their Speakers, to return him their Publick Thanks for his good Services, which accordingly was fulfilled, Saturday, Novem. 14. And on the 17. received a Congratulation from the Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen of the City.

The King lends from Newcastle to the Parl. about a Treaty. The Scots ordered to depart out of England.

Sixteen Propositions sent to the King at Newcastle.

Ormond and Digby conclude a Peace with the Irish.

The Scots deliver up the King into the Power of the Parl.

The King brought to Holmby House.

The Parl. divide into Presbyterian and Independent.

The Affairs of Ireland.

The King at Southwell had written to the Parliament for a Treaty, and being now at Newcastle, he writes to the Parliament of Scotland to the same Effect, and likewise to the City of London; But the House of Commons are Debating, That the Kings Person should be Demanded of the Scots, and hearing that the Scottish Horie formerly lent into Scotland, were returned into England: They Vote the whole Army of the Scots to return to their Country, and quit their English Garisons upon Receit of part of their Arrears, and the rest to be sent after them. The Scots (having suffered Ashburnham to Escape beyond the Seas) send a Letter to the Parliament, wherein they desire them to send Propositions of Peace to the King: And in the mean time was a Disputation between the King, and Mr. Alexander Henderson, a Scottish Minister, about Church Matters, which was since Published.

The Parliament had appointed a Committee to Treat with the Scottish Commissioners, about drawing up Propositions to be sent to the King; much time was spent in Wrangling, whilst the English deny the Scots to have any Right in Disposall of the King in England, and the Scots as stiffly claimed it, he being their King as much as the Englishes, and they having as good Right to Dispose of the King in England, as the English could Challenge in Scotland. In Conclusion, the Scots conceived the Parliaments Motions to be too High and Inconsistent with their first Pretensions: but at length, Sixteen Generall Propositions, with sundry Qualifications, were presented to the King at Newcastle, July 27. by the Earls of Pembroke and Suffolk, Sir Walter Earle, Sir John Hipley, Master Goodwin, and Mr. Robinson, who were limited to Ten Days; The King returned his Answer Negative, still desiring to come to London, and to Treat Personally. Nor would the Parliament permit the King of France to Interpose in the present Differences, by his Extraordinary Ambassadour, Monsieur Balline.

About this time, Ormond Glamorgan, and Digby concluded a Peace with the Irish Rebels, which was Proclaimed at Dublin, July 30. The Scots Generall Assembly send a Remonstrance to the King, desiring him to settle Matters in England, according to the Covenant, and to Signe the Parliaments Propositions: And Chancellor London told him plainly, that there was no other Means for him to close with his Two Houses; And moreover, if he lost England, he should not be admitted to come and Reign in Scotland. But all this could not prevail, and therefore the Scots who had hitherto somewhat sharply Disputed about the Disposall of his Person, are content upon the Receit of a good Summ of Money, to depart Home, and leave the King, in the Power of the Parliament; Who Voted him to Holmby House, and sent their Commissioners, the Earl of Pembroke, and Denbigh, and the Lord Mountague, Sir James Harrington, Sir John Holyland, Sir Walter Earle, Sir John Cook, Mr. Crew, and Major Generall Brown to receive him from the Scots at Newcastle, to whom he was accordingly delivered; and February 6. they left Newcastle in Possession of the English, and Marched Homewards. February the Eighth, The King, Sad and Sorrowfull, sets forward with the Commissioners for Holmby, Attended with 900 Horie, and after a Fortnight came to his Journeys end: being met by the Way by Generall Fairfax, and many of his Officers; The Commissioners had Two Chaplains, Mr. Marshall, and Mr. Carrill, but the King would never hear any of them, Requesting the Parliament that Two of his own Chaplains might be sent to him, which was not thought fit to be Granted, because they looked upon them as Disaffected.

The Parliament was now freed from all fear of Opposition, but unhappily break out among themselves, dividing into severall Parties, under the Title of Presbyterians, and Independents; And March 19. the Vote was passed for New Molding the Army into less, Disbanding some Forces, and Dismantling many Garisons: This made the Army Muter, and knowing their own Power, draw neer to London and Westminster, and frame a Petition, whereat the City being Startled, they likewise draw up their Petition, and Pray, That the Parliament would give Command, that the Army be forthwith removed, and after with all speed to be Disbanded: And that the City may make Annuall Election of their own Militia. And so ends this Year Remarkable, for the Death of Henry of Nassau the old Prince of Orange, whose only Son William Succeeded him in the Dignity of Generall, and Admirall of the United Provinces.

In Ireland all things are gone to Wrack, for these last Four Years, for after the Treaty of Singenstone, 1643. the King trusting too much to the Fidelity of the Irish, withdrew part of his Forces, to Assist him in England; whereof the Irish taking Advantage, fell to Plundering and Pillaging the English, seizing the People with sundry Forts and Castles, and not performing any thing of what they Promised: And having now gotten Expert Generalls from beyond Sea, they were so bold, as to fall upon the Scottish Forces, to whom they gave a most Unfortunate Blow; and to encrease the Miseries of the English there, they were now unhappily divided among themselves: Ormond for the King, Broughill and Inchequin for the Parliament, Ormond for his Part to Promote the Kings Affairs, would turn the Cessation into a Peace with the Irish, which the French were ready to Promote, and to heighten the Kings Party against the Parliamentarians, sent 10000 l. to Ormonds as an Earnest of greater Matters; And the King and Parliament being then in Treaty: The French Resident took occasion to Write to Ormond, that if the King and Parliament should conclude a Peace, it must be necessary to comprehend the Irish therein, for their settlement in their due Rights, otherwise his Master must take the Irish into his Protection; But the Parliament Vote the Lord Lyle, (Son to the Earl of Leicester). to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Determine to send him over with Considerable Forces; Yet in the mean time, Ormond is Articling into a Peace with the Rebels, upon these Conditions:

That

A That the Irish be not bound to take the Oath of Supremacy. A Parliament to be held before November. All Acts against Roman Catholics be Repealed. Places of Strength to be in the hands of Men of Merit.

But the Popes Nuncio, and the Irish Clergy Disclaimed this Peace, which Ormond understanding, and being in great Want of Ammunition and Powder, Treats with the Parliament about a Surrender of Dublin, and the rest of the Places of Strength in his Power; to which they readily give Eare: But the Rebels being now 15000 Foot and 2000 Horse, Commanded by Owen, Oncale, and Preston, seemed to threaten a Siege to Dublin, wherein lay 3000 Garison Soldiers. The Parliament sent over Colonell Monk, with 1870 Horse and Foot which arrived at Dublin, and looked that Ormond would have delivered the City into their Hand, according to his Treaty with the Parliament: But finding themselves deceived of their Hopes, set Saile and Landed at Belfast in the North. However the War goes on, the Irish not daring to Distaste their Clergy: Ormond does little, so that these Garisons are left to the Rebels, Lese, Strathbally, Bifers, Grange, Mellon, Rebend, Alby, Greenhill Castle, Jordan, Edenberry, Marmage Town, Sir James Hayes House, Honeslow, Haus, Castell Warden, Monmouth, Lestip, Lucan, Falmishore, Tallon, Bulloris, and Bellament. And in conclusion, Ormond enters into a Confederacy with the Rebels, upon Dishonourable Terms, and takes away the Keys of the City from the Mayor, and gives them to the Lord Lambert of Ireland, who by this means becomes Governour of Dublin. But on the other side, the Parliamentarians had some Successes against the Irish, and took Castell Lyons, and Inchequin Castle, Dungarvan, and Blarney Castle, and stoutly Defended Banratty, against Musgraves Forces: And now the Lord Lieutenant Lyle comes over to his Government, January 28. And having set things in Order, and encouraged those of his Party, returned back into England, April the First: But the Parliament resolve to prosecute the War Vigorously, and to send over 8400 Foot, besides Officers with 3000 Horse, and 1200 Dragoons; All which were to be taken out of Generall Fairfax's Army, which occasioned much Distemper between the Army and Parliament.

Little News from Foreign Parts this year, but only the Surrender of Dunkirk to the French, and the Emperours eldest Son Crowned King of Bohemia.

Dunkirk Surrendered to the French.

Men might have reasonably expected, that King Charles's 23 Year of his Reign, 1647. should have began with a Sunshine of Settlement so desirable, after such Storms of War. But contrarywise these Hopes were suddenly Blasted by Dissentions, between the Parliament and Army; These last being offended with the Intentions of the former, to Disband them, and being encouraged by Petitions from severall Counties to the Generall, not to Disband till the Peace of the Kingdome were fully settled: they drew up a Petition which was presented to the Parliament, by Lieutenant Generall Hammonds, and Three Colonells, Desiring Provision for Indemnity, the Arrears to be paid, that the Foot Soldiers may not be Prest out of the Kingdome, nor Horsemen to serve on foot: Their Widows and Children to be Relieved, and (untill the Army be Disbanded) that they may receive Pay to discharge their Quarters, and not to Burthen the Country. This Nettled the Parliament, who Declared their high dislike of it, and Voted, That such as continued in this way of Acting, to be proceeded against as Enemies of the State. Some Petitions from Essex and other Places, are brought to the Parliament, Inveying against the Armies Proceedings, which fret the Soldiers, who sharply Appologize for themselves, and utterly refuse the Service of Ireland, till Satisfaction were given to their Desires. The Difference was likely to have grown Wider; But to close the Breach, Commissioners are chosen on both sides, to meet in Order to a right understanding. But the Army Judged that it would not be a little Advantageous to their Concernments, if they could get the King into their Hands: And therefore Corner Joyce was sent to Holmby, with 500 Horse, who brought away the King from thence, with his Guardians Commissioners, (who would by no means leave him) having first promised him, that he should have no Violence offered to his Person, that his Trunks and Papers should not be Rifled and tumbled, that he should be Attended with such Servants, against whom there was no just Exception, and that nothing should be Imposed upon him contrary to his Conscience, June the Fourth: And so he was Conveyed to Childersley, and thence according to his own Desire to New-Market; And this the Generall certifies in a Letter to the Parliament, withall, Affirming that it was done with his Consent, And that the Reason alledged by the Parties, was, Because certain Persons had Designed to take away his Majesty, thereby to gather Strength to make a New War, which they were able and ready to prove.

The Armies Petition.

The King brought from Holmby to the Army by Colonell Joyce.

And now the Army to the great Terrour of the Parliament March towards London, and came unto St. Albans, notwithstanding a Message from the Houses not to come within 25 Miles of the City, which the Generall excuses, saying, That the Army was come thither, ere they received the Parliaments Desires. And here he obtains a Months Pay for the Soldiers: The Parliament Vote, That the Generall be required to diliver the Person of the King to the former Commissioners, to come to Richmond, to the Intent, that Propositions of Peace may be speedily presented to his Majesty, and that Colonell Rossiter and his Regiment may Guard his Person. To this the Army would not Consent, and therefore sent up their Representation, with these Proposals, as the only effectual Means to procure a stable Settlement (Viz.) That the Houses may bee speedily purged of such as ought not to sit there: That such who abused the Parliament and Army, and endanger the Kingdome, may be speedily disabled from doing the like, like, or worse. That some determinate Period of time may be set to this, and future Parliaments, according to the true Intent of the Bill for Triennial Parliaments. That Provision may be made not to be Adjournable, or dissolvable, by any Power but by their own Consent, during their respective Period, and then to determine themselves. That the Freedom of the People to prevent Grievances by Petition to Parliament may be Vindicated. That the Exorbitant Power of Country Committees may be taken away. That the Kingdome may be satisfied in the Parliaments Accounts for the vast Summs received; and also in divers other things, wherein the Common-wealth hath been abused. That after Delinquents have passed their Compositions; an Act of Oblivion may be passed.

The Armies Representation and Proposals.

Eleven Members Impeached by the Army.

The Parliament being (as was said) divided into Two Parties, The Independents Countenanced the Army, and the Presbyterians the City, in a high manner against the Army, of whom B they would fain have rid themselves, by sending a great part of them into Ireland, and Disbanding all the rest: to prevent which, they have in readiness an Impeachment against Eleven of the chiefest of them: For retarding the Relief of Ireland; For Acting many things against the Laws and Liberties of the People; And for obstructing the Courts of Justice. All which was offered to be proved against them: Their Names were, Denzill Hollis Esquire, Sir Phillip Stapleton, Sir William Lewis, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir William Waller, Sir John Maynard, Major Generall Massey, Mr. Glynn Recorder of London, Colonell Walter Longe, Colonell Edward Harley, and Anthony Nicholls Esquire. And with this Charge they delivered in a Paper, Desiring that the Accused Members be forthwith Suspended from sitting in the House. This was much C stumbled at, and look upon as too much Intrenching upon the Privilege of Parliament: But the Army persisting in their Desires, the Eleven Members first forbore the House, and afterwards obtained leave to Travell for Six Months. But to give some Satisfaction to the Parliament, the Army removed further off from London, having the King continually near them, who had a great mind to see his Children, which was effected, by means of a Letter from Generall Fairfax to the Parliament. The Eleven Members being gone, a Vote was passed for taking the London Militia out of the hands of the City, and transferring it to others better Affected to the Army: And it was made Treason to seek Subscriptions to Petitions; Upon which, great Multitudes of Prentises and others flock to Westminster in a Murinous manner, Clamouring at the Parliament Doors, that, that Vote should be Repealed, before the Members should pass out of the House, and forcing the Speaker back into the Chair, Constrained him and them to sit, till D they Extorted this Vote from them.

The Petition of the City against the Vote for taking the Militia out of their hands.

That the King should come to London, and the City have their Militia restored to them: And then the Parliament Adjourned for Four Days.

The Speakers and divers Members fly to the Army.

The Generall, who for ease of the Country was moved to Bedford, hears of this, and Marches up towards London, and sends before him a Letter to the Mayor and Aldermen; wherein he signifies, His Resentment of the late Outrage, and requires Justice to be done upon the Offenders. In his way he is met with, by the Speakers of both Houses, and the greatest part of the Members, who repaired to him at Hounslow, Complaining of the Affront and injurious Violation offered unto them, and there they Consult together, how to get the City without E Blood.

The City submit to the Army.

In the mean time, the contrary Party meet together in Parliament, and hope to carry all before them, and choose new Speakers. The Eleven Members are now gotten in again; the first Thing done, is to confirm the last extorted Votes; And to put the City in a Posture of Defence, Ordering Soldiers to be Lifted, and Major Generall Massey, Sir William Waller, and Colonell Poynts, to have the Command of them; And the Citizens set forth a Declaration against the Army, yet were not things so evenly carried, but that upon the Approach of Generall Fairfax, all was in a Hubbub, many Dissentions in their Counsells: And at Guildhall they fell from Words to Blows, divers Wounded, and some Slain. And lastly, The Aldermen conclude, to Write to the Generall to excuse themselves, laying the Fault upon some particular Persons: The General sends a Brigade, under the Command of Rainsborough and Huson, over Kingston Bridge F to Southwark, who take in the great Fort on the High-way to Lambeth: The Common Councell Post away Messages to the Generall for a Pacification, which he with the Content of the Members of Parliament then present, granted upon Condition, That they should Desert that Parliament then sitting, and the Eleven Impeached Members, and deliver up the Tower, and their other Forts, which they were glad to submit to: Presently a Declaration is published, making Null all Acts, passed by the Members at Westminster, since the Twenty sixth of July last.

The General Marcheth with his whole Army through the City.

August the Sixth, The Generall Marched in State to Westminster, and re-established the Members of Parliament, and received their Publick Thanks, for Vindicating them from the Injurious Usage of the Citizens; And the next Day Marched through the City with the whole G Army 20000 Horse and Foot to the Tower, and puts in Colonell Tichbourn for his Deputy-Lieutenant, by Vertue of an Ordinance of Parliament, whereby he was Constituted Captain-Generall of all the Forces and Garisons in England and Wales, and Constable of the Tower: And a Months Pay was given to the Army, as a Gratuity for their good Service, in Suppressing the late Insurrection; but the Excise was thought fit to be continued: The Generall had his Head Quarters at Kingston, and the King was settled at Hampton-Court, with his Children about him; whither the Earl of Ormond repaired to him, having by his Command quitted his Government in

A In Ireland to the Parliament's Commissioners: Inquiry is now made for the chief Actors and Fomenters of the late Uproar, for which Mr. Glyn was ousted of his Recordership. Sir John Maynard was Impeached of Treason, and Hollis, Waller, Clotworthy, Massey, Longe, and Nicholls, were Summoned to attend the House, the Sixteenth of October: Sir John Gayer Lord Mayor, and Four Aldermen, Culham, Bunch, Langham, and Adams were Accused and Committed to the Tower; and the Earls of Lincoln, Suffolk, and Middlesex, with the Lord Barkley, Maynard, Hunsdon, and Willoughby of Parham, were Committed to the Black-Rod.

Severall Members of Parli. and Citizens questioned for Acting in the late Tumult.

But care was now taken to pull down the Pride of the City; to which end, both Houses Order the casting down of all the Works about the City, and the dividing of their Militia, Impowring the City of Westminster, the Burrough of Southwark, and the Hamlets about the Tower, each to have its distinct Militia of it self.

B The Army are much behind hand for their Arrears, therefore Petition the Parliament for payment of them, which the Houses taking into Consideration, raised some Summs of Money to stop their Mouths for the present, and so apply themselves to draw up Propositions of Peace to be sent to the King to Hampton-Court, which were in Substance the same with those that were offered to him at Newcastle, and had the same Effect, the Business of Episcopacy being ever a main Obstruction, which the Parliament were resolved to Abolish, and the King would rather loose all, then give Consent thereunto; and in his Answer shewed a greater Inclination to the Army then the Parliament, which afterwards he had cause to repent of.

Propositions sent to the K. at Hampton-Court.

C About this time the Parliament Vote Six thousand Foot, Two thousand four hundred Horse and Dragoons to be sent into Ireland, and Eighteen thousand Foot, and Seven thousand two hundred Horse, and a Thousand Dragoons, to be kept up as a standing Army for England.

Part of the Army Voted to be sent into Ireland. Agitators of the Army chosen. Their Letter to the Gen.

About this time, the Officers to provide for their own Concernments, thought good to Elect out of every Regiment a certain Number of Soldiers to Meet and Consult by the Name of Agitators: These together draw up a large Letter to the Generall full of Complements, and desire, That he would take some Course to settle the Nation in Peace, and to secure such as had fought against the King, from standing in any need of asking him Pardon, or receiving Indemnity from him. That Parliaments may be determined to certain Periods of Time, And that Care be taken for due Election of Members for the future, and for the Payments of the Armies Arrears, that they may not be burthensome to the Country. Sir Thomas Answers, That he had a good

D Opinion of the honesty of their Intentions, and referred their Desires to the Generall Councill of Officers.

November the Sixth, the Scots Commissioners send a Letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and require, That the King may be admitted to a Personall Treaty, or at least, that he should not be carried from Hampton-Court, violently by the Army, as he was from Holmby House, but that Commissioners of both Parliaments may freely pass to, and from him, to Treat for the Settlement of the Kingdoms. This put the Parliament upon preparing new Propositions: In which mean while, the King is informed, That his Person was in some hazard, from the Agitators, who were Plotting of some Design to take away his Life; And therefore he

E Consults with Sir John Berkley, Mr. John Ashburnham, and Colonel William Legg, how to prevent the Danger; and among them it is Resolved to escape to the Isle of Jersey: to which end a Ship is prepared, to take him in about Southampton, and Horses are Lodged near Hampton Ferry. And thus November the Eleventh, he according to his Custome withdrew himself, a little before Evening Prayer, with his Three forementioned Confidants, and escaped to his Horses, by the way of Paradise, a Place so called in the Garden, and Rode away, leaving behind him a Letter to the Parliament, which was afterward delivered them: Wherein he promised to break through this Cloud of Retirement, and shew himself really to be a Father of his Country, if he might be heard with Freedome, Honour, and Safety. But the King coming to the Sea-shore, found himself to be disappointed of his Design, by the failing of the Ship, wherefore it was concluded, that the King and Legg should go to Tedworth, to the Countess Dowager of F Southampton House, whilst Berkley and Ashburnham Ferried over to the Isle of Wight, to Governour Hammond, of whom the King had some Hopes, because of his Brother Doctor Hammond, (who was the Kings Chaplain) to him they were to signify in generall, That the King having escaped from Eminent Danger of Assassination, was willing to cast himself upon his Fidelity, if he would engage upon Oath, for the Safety and Liberty of his Person: Hammond would promise for his Safety, but not for his Liberty; and they fearing to be taken into Custody, came over, with him to the Ladies House, where the King was, who found himself Necessitated to cast himself upon no better Terms, with an unwilling Willingness, upon Hammond's Protection, who presently Certifies the Parliament of it; and they being well contented with it, Ordered his Continuance there, with the same Attendants which he had at Hampton-Court, and no other.

He is secur'd in the Isle of Wight, by Colonel Hammond.

G The King at Carisbrook Castle Writes a Letter to the Parliament, and another to the Scots Commissioners; wherein he Professes, That he cannot, either as a Christian, or a King, Consent to the Abolishing of Episcopall Hierarchy, because he looked upon it as Apostolicall, and had Sworn at his Coronation to maintain it: But yet he was willing, that Presbytery should be continued for Three Years, and a free Debate to be had, between the Divines Assembled at Westminster, and Twenty that he should appoint, about the Settlement of Church Government for the future. He is also willing, that the Parliament should dispose of the Militia, and have the

Choice

Choice of his Privy-Counsellors during his Reign; Provided they have it by Grant of Patent A from him, and that it return to his Successors: And he is willing that the Arrears of the Army should be paid, and he will be ready to use his utmost Endeavour for the raising of so much Money. These and some other Proposals he made, promising moreover to give Satisfaction to the Kingdome of Scotland, when he shall receive his Desires: And still he pressed for a personall Treaty, which the Parliament refuse, yet after Three daies Debate, they were content to admit of it; Provided, that he would Sign these Four Bills:

Four Bills sent to the K. to be Signed.

'First, That it be lawfull for the Future, to Order the Militia of the Kingdome, without the Kings Consent; to raise what Armies they please, All others under pain of Treason to be prohibited to Assemble, to the Number of Thirty Persons, without the Authority of Parliament.

'Secondly, That it be lawfull for the Houses to sit, to Adjourn their Sitting to what Place they please, to Assemble at what time soever, and at their own Discretion.

'Thirdly, That all Oathes, Interdictions, and Declarations, set forth in Publick, against either Houses, be accounted and declared Void.

'Fourthly, Whomsoever of the Nobility the King hath Dignified with Titles, from the time Himself departed, and carried away the Great Seal of the Kingdome, the same be Degraded of their Honours, And these to be passed into Acts.

The K. refused to Sign them.

These Propositions were carried to the King by the Earl of Denbigh, Lord Montague, Mr. Lyle, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Kemp, and Mr. Bunkley: But the Scots Commissioners follow and Protest against them, as too derogatory from the Kings Honour, and contrary to the Parliaments former Engagements and Protestations; And so the King refused to Sign them, desiring the Commissioners to tell the Two Houses, That there were different Interests to be complied with (Viz.) The Parliament, The Army, And the Scots; and therefore he requested, That some Means might be found out, which might give Contentment to all These, without which, A well-grounded Peace could never be Established. The Kings Refusall so offended the Commons, that they presently put it to the Vote, Whether any more Addresses should be made unto Him, and after a long Debate, it was Resolved;

The Parl. Vote, That no more Addresses should be made to the K.

First, That no Addresses shall hereafter be made to him by the Parliament of England.

Secondly, That none shall on pain of Treason, make any Addresses, without leave from the Parliament.

Thirdly, That no written Paper, Message, or Declaration, be received from his Majesty, on Penalty of Treason.

Which Votes were so well Resented by the Army, That now having no further need of their Agitators, They reduce them into Order, and publish a Declaration of their owning the Parliaments Proceedings and their Resolution to adhere with, and stand by them in their said Votes, even against the King himself, or any that shall partake with him; Which the Lords perceiving after many daies Tugging about it, at last, Assented to the Votes of the Commons.

Mutiny at Newport in the Isle of Wight.

In the mean time, Colonell Hammond had turned away the Kings Servants, and used him a little more Severely, then formerly, which occasioned a Mutiny in Newport, the chief Town in the Isle of Wight, where one Captain Barleigh beat a Drum for the Kings Service and Delivery, but was soon Suppressed, himself taken Prisoner, and afterwards Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered, as a Traytor; And more Forces sent at Hammonds Request, to Secure the Island: and Judges were appointed to proceed against those who Mutined, about keeping of Christmas, in London, Canterbury, and other Places.

The Committee of Derby House, how Impowred

And now both Houses Vote, That the Committee of Derby House, have a Plenipotence to Transact the Business of the whole Kingdome, and to dispose as they shall think fit of the Army Commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, who is now Impowred to place, and displace the Kings Attendants; provided, he allow him not above Thirty. And a little after he becomes Lord Fairfax, by the Decease of his Father.

Judge Jenkins try'd by the Parl.

About this time, Judge Jenkins was brought to the Bar of the House, where he refused to kneele, his Charge was read against him;

That he had passed Sentence against men to be Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered, for not Assisting against the Parliament.

That he took up Armes himself, and stirred up others against them, and had Charged them with Counterfeiting the Great Seal. Which he was so far from denying, or any way Extenuating, that he boldly owned all, and more then they Accused him of, endeavouring to Terrifie the Parliament with the Numerousness of the Royall Issue; and so provoked the House with his Deportments, and Words, that he was Fined a Thousand pounds; and the House Voted a Charge to be brought in against him.

The

A The Marquis of Ormond after severall Capitulations, had yeilded up the Irish Government into the hands of the Parliament, by whom was sent over Colonel Jones with 1450 Horse and Foot, who took Possession of Dublin, June 17. where he with the *Parliament*s Commissioners, were well received by the Parliament there at that time Sitting, and is made Governour of the City, at the same time that Sir Charles Coote Defeated a Party of the Rebells: And not to be Idle, he Marches out with 3000 Men against Generall Preston, who met him with 8000, and over-powred him, made him first Retreat, and then Fly, and did much Execution upon his Forces in Four Miles Pursuit. But August the Eighth, they came to a Second Encounter near Trym, where Colonell Jones did revenge his former Foyle, beat Preston out of his Bogg, killed 5470 Foot Soldiers, and 300 of the Gentry, took 7000 Armes, 4 Pieces of Ordnance, and great Pillage, with 150 Oxen; And improving his Victory, takes Castell-Richards, Port-Castell, Asbby, Grucsfort, the Mabber, Bellisloe, Cabbrough, Castell-Lewar, Danmook, Carrat, Maestrofe, Castell-Down, and Castell Amoni: And in Munster near Megallo, and Clancard, the Lord Inchequin, November, the 13. gave such a Defeat to another Party of the Rebells, that what, with taken and slain, the Enemies Loss is reckoned Four thousand. So that now the Parliament having no need of the Scottish Forces in Ulster, are earnest to have them recalled Home out of Ireland.

The Twentyfourth Year of King Charles's Reign, being the Year, 1648. now begins with the Visitation of the University of Oxford, which was performed by the new Chancellor, the Earl of Pembroke, not without much Resistance; for the Heads and Principalls would neither own the Authority, nor the Covenant, for which Reason, many of them were Outed of their Places, and others put in: And the Parliament Vote, That all those who will not submit to the Power, shall be Expelled the University, and all the Colledge Rents to be paid to the Visitors appointed.

Oxford visited by the new Chancellor.

Muriny of the London Apprentices.

This Summer, the King, though a Prisoner, was as Formidable as ever since the late Troubles, the very Name of a King proving sufficient to raise Insurrections, and not only Tumults, but considerable Armies: London it self was not free from Muriny; for April the Ninth, The Apprentices set upon a part of the Trained Bands, whom they over-powred, and encreasing hourly, divided into Parties; One whereof made towards Whitehall, but were Repressed by the Horse-Guard of the Mews, yet at Night they joyn again, Surprize Newgate, and Ludgate, and shut up the Gates, then they seize a Drake-piece from the Lord Mayors House, which they Planted within Ludgate: the Morning following they laboured to get Armes, and broke open some Salemens Houses of Ammunition, and Mastered the Magazine at Ladenhall, Crying out for God and King Charles: But the next day General Fairfax entered Aldersgate, with Two Regiments, Marched to Ladenhall-street, and there Charged the Rabble, whom after a short Tumultuary Skirmish, they utterly dispersed with little or no Loss; So that this Hubbub might justly be termed, The Mountains Travell. But in Wales Col. Poyer, Governour of Pembroke Castle, refused to yeild up his Charge (though Commanded) without full payment of his Arrears: And Major Gen Langhorn for the same Reason, refused to Disband his Men; and so both Revolt, and Langhorn Surprizes Tenby Castle, with the *Parliament*s Commissioners in it: And now they grow bold, Commanding Contribution round about, and Declare for the King. Colonell Horton is sent Commander in Chief against them, with 30 Companies of Horse and Foot, who sends out Colonell Fleming to gain a Pass from Poyer, which he finds Q'irted to his Hands; but going on Improvidently, falls into Poyer's Ambuscado, by whom he was totally Routed, and compelled to fly, with a few others, to a Neighbouring Church, and perceiving himself unable to hold it out, died as it is thought, by his own Sword, and the rest were taken Prisoners. This Success was attended with another, Chepstow Castle being taken by Sir Thomas Keymish in the Governours Absence. But now the Tyde turns; News comes that Lieutenant Generall Cromwell is Advancing with a strong Power to Suppress them, which makes Langhorn resolve to Fight Horton, before his coming, who as willingly Marched to meet him, and near St. Fagows, May the Eighth, views his Enemy, near 8000 strong, but in disorder, unready for Fight. In this Condition Horton Charged them, and obtained an easie Victory, killed some, took 1500 Officers, and 3000 common Soldiers, Langhorn himself, and Powell escaped by Flight. Lieutenant Generall Cromwell enters Wales, Stormed Tenby Castle, and had it yeilded upon Mercy, and Chepstow Castle was re-taken by Colonell Ewer: But all this could not keep Sir John Owen quiet, who whilst Cromwell Besieged Pembroke Castle, got together some Forces in North-Wales, which the County-Sheriff would have Suppressed, but being too weak, was Defeated and taken Prisoner; and shortly after the same Fortune befell Owen himself, by the Valour and good Conduct of Major Generall Milton: Pembroke Town and Castle stood out Courageously, for a long time, but at length were so distressed, that they willingly would have Surrendered, if they could have obtained any other Conditions, then to yeild upon Discretion; Cromwell gives a furious Storm, which the Besieged resolutely endured: But the Scottish Invasion made the Lieutenant General more inclinable to give them Articles, upon which the Town and Castle was delivered up, July 13. (Viz.) Langhorn, Poyer, and 3 other Principal Actors, to submit to the *Parliament*s Mercy: the other Commanders, Kts. & Gentlemen, to depart the Kingdom within 6 Weeks, for 2 years, the rest to return to their respective Dwellings, & the Townsmen to enjoy their Freedoms and Liberties, those that submitted to Mercy were afterwards tried as Traytors, notwithstanding the Princes Letter in their behalf to Gen. Fairfax: But this Favour was extended towards them, that they should cast Lots for their Lives, and so only Poyer Suffered. April 20. The Duke of York Disguised in Womens Apparel, made his Escape from St. James's by Water, and Landed at Dort in Holland, by the help of one Colonell Bamfield, sent over purposely on that Design by the Queen.

Poyer and Langhorn take up Armes for the King in Wales.

Defeated by Col. Horton.

Sir J. Owen Routed by M. Gen. Milton.

Pembroke Castle yeilded up to Cromwell. Poyer shot to death.

The Duke of York escapes into Holland.

Petitions brought to the Parl. from Ef-sex, and other Counties.

The Country began now to be displeased, that after such Expence of Men and Money, there was a yet no likelihood of a Settlement, but rather a fearfull Expectation of New Wars, and therefore resolve to Petition: The County of Essex begins the Dance, and desires the Parliament that the Army may be payd, and Disbanded, and the King admitted to a Personall Treaty; Surrey follows, and desires the like, but in higher Terms; and being Numerous quarrell with the Soldiers at Westminster, and come to Blows: some hurt done on both Sides, Night parts the Fray; The City Succeed, and Petition to the same Effect, and also desire, That those Prisoners, who stood Committed for their former Insurrection in Massey's Business, might be Released, as shortly after they were, upon the Cities constant Adhearing to the Parliament, and refusing to send any Ayde to the Kentish, against the Generall: And at their Desire their Militia was restored, and Major Generall Skippon was appointed Commander of the City, and all the Forces within the late Lines of Communication. The Lieutenant of the Tower was discharged, and Mr. West Citizen, Surrogated in his Place, and Colonell Barkstead, and Colonell Rich were Ordered to draw off their Regiments out of Whitehall, and the Mews, instead of which, the City Common-councell Order a Guard for the Parliament, and Six hundred pounds Yearly for their Major Generall: And all this with the Generals free Consent and Approbation.

The Kentish Men in Arms.

The Kentish Men would not Petition, but with their Swords in their Hands, and were up in Armes in such considerable Numbers, that it was thought fit for Sir Thomas himself to March against them, which he doth, with Six thousand Foot, and Two thousand Horse; the Kentish were near Ten thousand: but unadvisedly parted their Forces, and sent away a Brigade to besiege Dover Castle. The Generall Advances, and Defeats some of them between Craisford Heath, and Gravesend; from thence he sends Major Husbands before, who gains a Passage over a Bridge at Northfield, and some Prisoners: the Generall comes on, Marching in a full Body, expecting the Enemy would have Engaged, but they were not prepared, and so without any Resistance he came to Maidstone, in which the Kentish were drawn up into a Body, the Town strongly Man'd, and well provided with Ordnance, and Barracadoed: Fairfax having his Army encreased to Ten thousand, falls to Storming at Seven a Clock at Night, June the Second, Twice Repulsed, the Third time got Entrance, but then the Fight was more Perillous then the former, whilst the Assaylants had to do not only with those who Manned the Streets, but were also Galled with continuall Shot from the Houses, getting all by Inches; Nor could they acquire the Victory till after six Hours Fight, and much Loss on their own Side; But of the Enemy Two hundred were slain, above one thousand three hundred Prisoners, divers of Quality, Four hundred Horse, and Eight Pieces of Ordnance, with good Booty: And presently upon this, Rochester was also quitted to the Generals Mercy; Many of the Kentish Men after this Defeat re-inforcing their Companies, Marched up in a Body towards London, and Rendezvous'd upon Black-heath, whither some resolute Persons repaired to them, under Command of the old Lord Goring: But the Kentish perceiving their Succours to come far short of what they expected, quit their Commanders apace, and return Home: but Goring with 500 Men crossed over Greenwich Ferry into Essex; in which County the Committee Men were already Secured, and Sir Charles Lucas having gotten together Two thousand Horse and Foot, Joyns with Goring, who Seizes the Earl of Warwick's Armory, and gets into Coulchester, which now becomes a Seat of War, and the Country Flockt in unto them: But Generall Fairfax leaving Colonell Rich, and Colonell Hewson, who had now raised Dover Siege, to take in those places in Kent, which himself had not time to Reduce, crossed over into Essex after the Enemy, and came before Coulchester, which he immediately Surrounds with a Potent Army.

A part of the Navy revolt to Prince Charles.

The Seamen being Disatisfied, Muriny, and divers of the Ships went to the Prince, with Vice-admirall Batten himself, who was thereupon Knighted: And now the Prince with a considerable Fleet sets to Sea, having with him his Brother the Duke of Tork, Prince Rupert, the Earl of Brainford, the Lords, Hopton, Wilmot, Willoughby, and Culpeper, with others of Quality, and came into Yarmouth Rode, with Twenty good Men of War, and Two thousand Soldiers; there he would have Landed, but hearing of Colonell Scroops coming against him with a Party of Horse and Foot, he Sailed from thence to the Dunns in Kent, seizing what Merchant-Sips and Goods he could meet withall. Deal Castle was at this time Besieged, for Relief whereof, the Prince would needs Attempt something, and therefore sets 500 Men ashore, who at first Charged handsonly, but being too weak, were beaten, severall slain, and taken, and the rest got Aboard again. Soon after this Sandwich, Deal, and Weymore Castles were yielded up, and the whole County of Kent fully Reduced. Whilst the Prince Anchors in the Dunns, the States of Scotland Invite him to them, and engage the Publick Faith of that Kingdome, for his Well-being, in Honour, Freedome, and Safety, with them, or with their Army then in England, and to remove from them, or their Army, when, or whither he pleased: But he having Written to the House of Lords, for promoting the Treaty with the King, and in vain Summoned the Earl of Warwick (Admirall for the Parliament) to submit to him as highest Captain-Generall under his Majesty, and beginning to stand in need of Provision, returned with his Fleet back into Holland.

The Earl of Holland takes up Armes for
the King.

But the Earl of Holland being Commissioned from the Prince, raiseth a fresh Insurrection, just as it were in the View of the Parliament, at Kingston upon Thames; The chief Actors were the Duke of Buckingham, and his Brother the Lord Francis, and the Earl of Peterborough. July 2. They Mustered 500 Horse, and some Foot upon Kingston Heath, and from thence Marched

A ched to Darling, and would have possessed Riegate, but were prevented, by Colonell Rich and Major Gibbons, whereupon they Retreat towards Kingston, closely pursued by the other, and sending away their Foot before, to secure their Retreat to the Town, they made a stand, between Ewell and Nonfuch Park; The Pursuers follow on, the Fight was short and smart: the Lord Francis Villiers refusing Quarter was slain, with Major Dalbier, and a Son of Sir Kenelm Digby, and others, the rest put to flight, and many Prisoners of Note taken, July 7. the Earl of Holland made no long stay at Kingston, but fled with all speed to St. Needs in Huntingtonshire, where he was totally subdued, and taken by Colonell Scroop, and sent Prisoner to Warwick Castle; but the Duke of Buckingham fled towards Lincolnshire, and escaped beyond Seas. Conchester holds out Courageously, makes frequent Sallies upon the Besiegers, with pretty good Success, and B good hopes of Relief from the North; for the Parliament of Scotland had sate ever since the Second of March, and were Disgusted at the English Proceedings in reference to the King, which was encreased by the Report of their Commissioners now returned: so that notwithstanding the Parliament of England made them fair Offers, concerning the payment of the Money due upon Account of their Auxiliary Armies both in England and Ireland, and shewed moreover some Inclination to settle the Presbyterian Government here; yet all will not serve, for they had formed a Committee of Danger, to Consult of their Affairs in relation to England: the Major part of these being Hamiltons Faction, Vote a War, which the others Protest against, but to no purpose: And now the Scots Publish their Declaration, the Heads whereof were these;

He is Routed, and the Lord
Francis slain.
The Earl taken at St. Needs.

C "That his Majesty may come to London, or to some of his Houses neer, and that with Safety.

The Scots Declaration.

"That Reparation be made for his Carrying away, or Satisfaction by punishing them that did it.

"That the Army under the Lord Fairfax be Disbanded.

D "That Presbytery be settled, Secularies punished.

"That all Members of the House be restored.

Cavaliers now Flock apace to Edenborough, and Wogan a Captain in the English Army, Revolts to them with his Troop, and Two Companies of Foot Landed out of Ireland, at Chester, and Marched thither likewise: Berwick is Surprized by the Cavaliers, Sir Thomas Glen and Sir Phillip Musgrave raise Forces for the King in Westmerland, and Cumberland, with which they Surprize Carlisle, and with them Joynes Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with some Horse, Generall of the English Army for the King, who now being 3000 strong, Coasted about the Northern Counties.

Berwick Surprised, and Carlisle.

July the Thirteenth, The Scots Army entred England, the Van was brought up by Duke Hamilton their Generall, the Main Body by Major Generall Middleton, and the Rear by the Earl of Calender; these joyn with Langdale, and fall upon Major Generall Lambert, neer Appleby, and force him to Retire into the Town, from whence he to Retreats Kirbystevens, and after to Bowes, leaving some of his Forces behind him, to Defend the Castle, which was Besieged and taken, August 7. by Sir Phillip Musgrave. Colonell Boynton Governour of Scarborough Castle Declares for the King, and Pomfret Castle was surprized by Major Morris, Tinmouth Castle likewise Revolts, but was suddenly retaken by Sir Arthur Haslerig.

Sir Marmaduke
Langdale joyns with the Scots.

F The Scots Retreat to Kendall in Westmerland, and Major Generall *Lambert*s Army encreases daily, with additionall Forces: Lieutenant Generall Cromwell having quieted Wales, Marches to Joyn with Lambert, and in his way takes Pomfret Town, but not the Castle. Hamilton leaves Kendall, and Marches into Lancashire, intending for London, which the English Army mean to hinder, and therefore March to Preston, where Hamilton and Langdale lay with their Soldiers little fewer then 24000; Cromwell and Lambert were reckoned to have 5000 Horse and Dragoons, and 7000 Foot. August 17. both Armies Faced one another, Major Smithson commanded the Foreloft of the English, who charged furiously on the other, Routed them, and Alarmed the whole Army, and so the Battells joyn on a Moor two Miles East of Preston, and the Fight was very hot for two Hours, and then the Scots gave Ground; which encouraged the English to pursue, and that so fiercely, that they were forced to Divide: One Part being a Body of Three thousand Horse, moved towards Lancaster, which was pursued and dispersed by Colonell Twisselton, and Colonell Thornlow, who took Multitudes of them Prisoners; the other Part Horse and Foot Marched over the River Ribell, whom the Main of the English Army follow, and at Rible Bridge the Scots make a stand, Defending the Pass stoutly for two Hours, even to Push of Pike, and then were constrained to Retire: The next Morning the Scots draw up upon a Hill on the side of Preston, whence being forced by the English, they fled in great Disorder to Wiggon, which they Plundered, and next Morning Marched towards Warrington (the English pursuing stand, but were again beaten, with the Loss of a Thousand Men slain, and were prosecuted to the very Bridge, where the Foot in Number 4000, being deserted by the Horse, laid down their Arms, and submitted to Mercy; Hamilton got away with Three thousand Horse to Nantwich, where the Country being up in Arms, seized 500 of them. Lieutenant Generall Cromwell Marched towards Cumberland to meet Monroe, giving Order to all the Parliament

Commanders in those Counties to follow the flying Scots; by some of whom, Major Generall Middleton, who Commanded 400 Horse, was Defeated and taken Prisoner, and the rest disperst, Hamilton himself was met with at Uxeter, and made to submit to Mercy, by the Lord Gray of Groby, who sent him Prisoner to Asby de la Zouch. In this Daies Fight, the English took more B Prisoners, then their own whole Army amounted to: The Ensigns, Cornets, and Colours here taken, were afterward hung up in Westminster-hall; Sir Marmaduke Langdale was apprehended in an Inne. Cromwell Improves his Succes, and comes to Durham, to look out Monroe, supposed to be about Six thousand strong, but the Presbyterian Party in Scotland, having now recovered the Sword, Command him to return, which he obeys more for fear of the English, then duti-fulness to them, and joyning with the Earl of Lanerick, both together made 8000 Horse and Foot, to oppose whom, the Presbyterians provided an Army, whereof the Earl of Arguile was Commander in Chief, and David Lesley Lieutenant Generall. Cromwell enters Scotland, and Publishes this Declaration.

‘WHereas We are Marching with the Forces of the Parliament of England, into C the Kingdome of Scotland, in pursuance of the remaining Part of the Enemy, ‘who lately Invaded the Kingdome of England, and for the Recovery of the Garisons ‘of Berwick and Carlisle: These are to Declare, That if any Officer or Soldier un‘der my Command, shall take, or demand any Money, or shall take any Horses, ‘Goods, or Victualls, without Order, or shall abuse the People in any sort, he shall be ‘tryed and punished with Death, by a Councell of War.

To him Arguile, Lowden, Leaven, and other of the Scots Nobility repair, and Contract with him for subduing of the Publick Enemy: And so much feared he was in Scotland, that this D Agreement was Consented to;

‘First, That the Armies under Arguile, and the other under Lanerick and Monroe,
‘with all the Forces in any of the Garisons in Scotland be Disbanded, and Berwick
‘and Carlisle to be Delivered to the English.

‘Secondly, That the Settlement of Religion at Home, and promoting Reformation ‘Abroad, be ordered to the Determination of the Generall Assembly, and all Civill ‘Differences be referred to a Parliament speedily to be Called.

‘Thirdly, That no Party that were in the last Engagements against England, be of E
‘the New Parliament, or of the Generall Assembly. And so he Returns into England, after he had been Invited to Edenborough, to Feasts and Banquets, and highly Caressed by the States of Scotland, with all Expressions of Honour: And in Yorkshire
he was desired by the Committee to Reduce Scarborough, and Pemfret Castles, which was then promised, but afterwards performed.

Coulchester Surrenders upon Articles.

Coulchester had endured a tedious Siege, and was now brought to such Scarcity of Provision, that they had not Horse-flesh enough to serve them one day, that being the Food, which they had fed on almost a Fortnight, and purchased with much Blood spilt in divers Sallies for dead F Horses: and now perceiving all hopes of Succour utterly frustrated, were necessitated to yeild upon these Conditions;

The common Soldiers to depart with Life, and the Officers to remain at the Generals Disposall, he to Exempt from Mercy, whom he pleased, the Remainder to be remitted to the Parlia- ments Mercy, and the Town to raise 14000 l. to preserve it from Plunder. The Prisoners of Quality, were the Lord Goring, Capell, and Loughborough, Eleven Knights, Twelve Colonels, Eight Lieutenant Colonels, Nine Majors, Thirty Captains, and Sixty five Gentlemen, the private Soldiers were above Three thousand; Three of the Knights were Condemned by a Councell of War, (Viz.) Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Lisle, and Sir Bernard Gascoyn, a Papist; this last was Re- G prieved, and the other Two were Shot to Death. The First having (as the Generall said in his Letter to the Parliament) contrary to his Promise falsified his Word with him; The Second directed the shooting of poisoned Bullets, being against the Law of Arms.

Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lile, shot to death.

And so Generall Fairfax after much Loss of Time and Men, and difficult Service for a Quarter of a Year (for undoubtedly the Besieged were valiant Men) took possession of the Town of Coulchester, August 27. After which he Marches up, and down the Counties of Suffolk, Nor- folk, Cambridge, and Hartford, to settle Peace, and visit the Garisons, and so returns to St.
Albans

A And his Head-quarters. And thus we have ended with the Military Actions this Year. Whilst the Army was busied in Fighting, the Parliament were taken up with Petitions from the severall Counties, for a Treaty with the King; the City among the rest had preferred One, and withall desired the Release of their Aldermen, Gayer, Langham, and Bunch, and Serjeant Glynn, which the House Voted, and likewise Repealed them Orders against the Earls of Lindsey, Suffolk, and Middlesex, and the Lords, Berkley, Hunsdon, Maynard, Willoughby of Parham, and the Eleven Members: And now they apply themselves to the Business so much desired; The Earl of Middlesex, Sir John Hipley, and Mr. Bulkley, were sent to the King, to let him know the Parliaments Intentions; who returned with his Desires, upon which the Parliament Voted:

Petitions from City and Country, for a Treaty with the King.

B 'That the Votes of Non-Addressees should be Recalled.

The Vote of Non-addressees recalled.

'That such Persons as he should send for, as necessary to him in the Treaty, be Admitted.

'That he be in the same state of Freedome, as at Hampton-Court, with such Servants as he desires.

'That Five Lords, and Ten Commons be chosen Commissioners to Treat with the King, and the place to be Newport in the Isle of Wights. And that the King be admitted to Invite the Scots thereunto, but to Treat only concerning that Kingdome.

C Which Votes were sent down to the King, who was to Treat Personally with these Commissioners; The Earls of Salisbury, Penbrek, Middlesex, Northumberland, and the Lord Say, for the House of Lords: And the Lord Wanman, Mr. Pairpoint, Sir Henry Vane the Younger, Sir Harbottell Grinston, Sir John Potts, Mr. Brown, Mr. Crew, Mr. Bulkley, for the House of Commons; and with these were joyned, Mr. Hollis, and Mr. Glyn, both lately re-admitted to the House. Monday, September the Eighteenth, the Treaty begins; the Propositions were in Number Eleven.

Commissioners sent with new Propositions to the King.

'The First was, For calling in all his Declarations, which he Assented to, with this Proviso, That neither this Concession, nor any other of his should be taken Advantage of, unless the whole were concluded.

'The second Proposition was, Concerning the settlement of the Church, in reference to which he Condescended; To settle the Directory, to pass an Act to Confirm the Assembly, and to Establish Presbyterian Government for three Years, reserving Liberty to himself and his Party to use the old Form: But would not agree to the utter Abolishing of the Episcopall Hierarchie, nor the selling of their Lands.

'The third Proposition was, For settling the Militia in the Hands of the Parliament for twenty Years solely, to which he Assented.

E 'And likewise to the Fourth, For making void the Cessation of Ireland, and permitting the Government of it both Civill and Military to the Two Houses at Westminster.

'And to the Fifth, and Sixth, For Nulling all Honours and Titles, since the carrying away of the Great Seal, and for payment of Publick Debts.

F 'The seventh Proposition, Concerning Delinquents, to whom the Parliament intended great Severity: The King was contented that they should be Fined, and prohibited Access to Councell of Court, without the Parliaments Consent; That they be deprived for three Years, of their Right of Sitting in Parliament, and brought to Tryall, if the Two Houses think fit, to suffer according to the Merit, whereof they shall be Legally Convicted: But he would by no means hear of Branding them with Treason, nor taking away either Lives, or Possessions, or any others but such as after a Legall Triall shall be found Guilty of. Among the Established Laws of the Land.

'The Eighth, for Impowring the Parliament to Confer all Offices of the Kingdome and chief Magistrates for twenty Years.

'The Ninth, For Confirming the New Great Seal, with all Grants and Commissions Sealed by it.

G 'The Tenth, For Ratifying all Priviledges, Grants, Charters, and Immunities; Power to dispose of the Tower, and Militia be Confirmed to the City of London; And all the Citizens to be Exempted from Military Service out of the Liberties; unless at the Parliaments Appointment.

All these were fully Consented to, and likewise was the Last, for totall Exterminating the Court of Wards. Provided, That 10000 l. be yearly paid to the King by way of Compensation.

The Parl. Vote
a full Agreement with the King.

The Earl of Ormond had gotten back into Ireland, and raised Forces there in Opposition to A the Parliament, by the Kings Commission; But the King assured the Commissioners, That if the Treaty take effect, the Irish Affairs shall be managed at the Discretion of the Houses only.

The King having thus far Complied with the Parliament, They likewise at his Desire Vote;

‘ That he be in Honour, Freedome, and Safety, according to the Laws.

‘ Secondly, That he have his Revenue as before, excepting the Dedications of such ‘ Forts and Garisons, as were of old Accustomed, to be Allowed Maintenance. B

‘ Thirdly, That he have Compensation for the Court of Wards.

‘ Fourthly, That an Act of Oblivion be past.

The Army Petition for Justice against the King.

Most men thought now, that the King and Parliament would have Cemented, and so in all likelyhood they had, nothing being in Difference but only the Business of Episcopacy. But all this is broken off by the Armies Interposall, who could not think themselves secure so long as the King lived; And therefore to find other Work for the Parliament, They first sent up for their Arrears, Amounting to a vast Summ of Money, which whilst the Houses were Debating, they prepare a Petition. C

For a Scrutiny to be taken for discovery of Contrivers and Actors in the late bloody Wars, and that speedy Justice be done upon them. That the same Fault may have the same Justice and Punishment in the Person of King, or Lord, as in the person of the poorest Commoner. That such as Speak or Act in the Kings behalf (till he be Acquitted of shedding Innocent Blood) be proceeded against as Traytors.

Their Remonstrance to the same effect.

When this would nor do, the Army draw neerer, and taking up their Head-quarters at Wind- sor, conclude a Remonstrance, which they send up to the Parliament. D

‘ Requiring, First, That the King be brought to Justice as the Capitall Cause of all ‘ the Evills of the Civill War.

‘ Secondly, That a peremptory Day be set for summoning the Prince of Wales, and ‘ Duke of York, and if they refuse, to Declare them Incapable of Government, ‘ or Succession, and stand Exiled as Traytors; and if they render themselves, yet they
‘ to be proceeded against for Satisfaction. That the Revenues of the Crown be se-‘ questred. E

‘ Thirdly, That Publick Justice be done against the Actors in the late Wars.

‘ And Lastly conclude, Desiring their Arrears, with the old Pretence of easing
‘ the Country of Free quarter, and desire, that a Period may be put to this Parliament, ‘ and a good care taken to Elect a new Representative.

Col. Ever put in the place of Hammond.

In the mean time, Generall Fairfax Commands Colonell Hammond to deliver up his Charge to Colonell Ever, by whom the King is Conveyed out of the Isle of Wights, to Hurst Castle, November 30. And all this contrary to the Intentions of the Parliament, who Voted, That the Seizure upon the Person of the King, and carrying him Prisoner unto Hurst Castle, was without F the Advice and Consent of the Houses.

The Parl. di-state the Armies Proceedings.
Divers Members excluded
by the Army.

And thus the Treaty was violently broken off; yet the Lords Vote the Kings Concessions a sufficient Ground for Peace, and forthwith Adjourn; and the Major part of the Commons Vote the same: But the Army being now come up to London, resolve to hinder these Proceedings, and therefore discharged the Trained Bands, from being a Guard to the Parliament, and Order Pride's and Riche's Regiments to supply their Places, by whom above Forty Members coming to the House, were Seized, and shortly after sent with a Guard, to an adjoining Inne called Hell, from thence to the Kings-head near Charingcross, and so to the Swan in the Strand. Not satisfied with this, the Army Accused Major Generall Brown, and Ninety odd Members, for Inviting in G the Scots the last Summer, and therefore desire they may be excluded the House. At which time the Commons being Angry, Adjourn, December 8. for Four, or Five Daies; in which space, the Army is busied, in devising a new Way of Government, and their Committee at Whitehall move, That this present Parliament be dissolved the last of April next: And that the Representatives of the whole Nation, shall consist of Three hundred Persons, half of which Number, shall suffice to make an Act of Law, and that in the Intervalls of Parliament, a Councell of State shall Govern; And this Declaration, together with half a Score of Modifications, they

A they stile The Agreement of the People, which was afterwards presented to the House of Commons, by Sir Hardress Waller, and Sixteen Officers. The House new Moulded met again, Annulled the Votes against Non-Addressees, and those Others, which approved of the Kings Concessions; and Vote, that no Message be received from him, upon pain of Treason. That the Generall take care of the King, And the Councell of War to draw up a Charge against him: So now they are resolved upon his Tryall, and accordingly Orders are Issued out for his Removall.

The Parl. new Model'd by the Army.

December the Tenth, the King was brought from Hurst Castle, with a strong Guard of Horse to Winchester, next day to Farnham, and the next to Windsor.

The K. removed from Hurst Castle.

In the mean time, the Two Houses differ among themselves; The Commons Assert, That it is Treason for the King to levy War against the Common-wealth; And the Lords deny, that the King cannot commit Treason against the Common-wealth, and therefore Reject the Ordinance of the Commons for his Tryall; and Declare, That no Act of the Commons is Binding without their Consent: Upon which the Commons Vote, That all Members, and others appointed to Act in any Ordinance, are Impowred and Injoynd to Sit, Act, and Execute, notwithstanding the House of Peers joynd not with them: And so Earnest were both the Commons, and the Army about it, That the Queen desiring to see her Husband before his Tryall, could not obtain a Pass for her secure Coming and Returning.

January the Sixth, The Ordinance for the Kings Tryall was Ingrossed, and Proclamation was made two Dayes after in Westminster-hall, Cheapside, and the Old Exchange, for Witnesses to come in against the King, and Commissioners were appointed about it: And now the City Petition the House of Commons for Justice against the King; And Hillary Term beginning January 23. was Adjourned for Fourteen Daies after.

January the Nineteenth, The King was brought from Windsor to St. James's, and from thence next Day through Whitehall, so by Water to Sir Robert Cotton's House: All things are now in readines for this Important Business; and notwithstanding the Dissenting of the House of Lords, and the Remonstrance of the Scottish Parliament against it, The Commons Erect a new Tribunal, which they call the High Court of Justice, who are Impowred to Convene, Hear, Judge, and Execute, CHARLES STEWART, King of England: His Title in Writs, Carolus Dei Gratia, the Commons had already Voted to be altered, and the Great Seal of England to be broken, and a new Seal Ordered, with the Armes of England, and the Harp for Ireland, with these Words, The Great Seal of England. And on the Reverse, the Picture of the House of Commons Sitting, with these Words, In the First Year of Freedom by Gods Blessing Restored, 1648.

He is brought to St. James's. A High-courte of Justice Erected for the Tryall of the King.

Thus this Great, though Unfortunate Prince, once Owner of Three Mighty Kingdoms, was now through the unsearchable Providence of the Omnipotent Disposer of all things, cast down into the miserable Condition of a Calamitous Prisoner, to his own Subjects, by whom he was Tried, Condemned, and lastly Executed.

Of his Taxations.

E King James Dying, left his Son a large Dominion, but a poor Exchequer, which was the Occasion that his Taxations were so many.

In his First Year, the Parliament at their first Session Granted him from the Layety Two Subsidies from Protestants, Four from Papists, and from the Clergie Three.

In his Second Year being Engaged in a War with France, for the Relief of Rochill, he borrowed 300000 l. by way of Loan.

In his Tenth Year, Attorney Generall Noy set the Design of Ship-money on Foot, Grounded upon an Ancient Precedent, for raising of a Tax upon the Nation, for setting forth a Navy, in case of Danger, by sole Authority of the King, whereby he procured to the King vast Summs, but with much Reluctance, and no less hatred. And in a Parliament holden in Ireland the Deputy Strafford obtained a Subsidy for the Payment of the Army, and his Majesties Revenue.

Ship-money set on foot by Attorney Gen. Noy.

G In his Thirteenth Year, Burton, Pryn, and Bastwick, were Fined in Star-chamber 3000 l. apiece: And Bishop Williams of Lincoln was Sentenced 10000 l. by the same Court.

And at the Queens Desire the Papists Contributed very Liberally.

In

The King borrows money & Plate of the Nobility. Parliament borrow upon Publick Faith. Weekly Assessment. Excise layd upon severall Commodities.

In his Sixteenth Year, the Earl of Strafford was led into the House of Lords, with much Honour A for his good Service in Ireland, where he obtained of the Irish Parliament the Grant of Four Subsidies: And the Convocation of Bishops gave him an ample Beneyolence of Four Shillings in the Pound for Six Years, to be Assessed on all the Clergy in England, towards the carrying on of the Scottish War: The City was also Summoned to lend, which they refused, yet were contented to part with a considerable Summ towards the Building of a Royall Palace for the King, in St. James's Park, which never yet took effect. And all Knights and Gentlemen who held Land in Capite of the King, were to send Horse and Men answerable to their Abilities, for the Compleating of the Royall Army. And the Scots being now gotten into England, Taxed the Bishoprick of Durham 350 l. per diem, and the County of Northumberland 300 l. per diem, upon penalty of Plundering. The long Parliament Commencing this Year, borrowed 100000 l. of B the City of London, upon Interest to be re-payd out of the Subsidies, and Voted as much to the Scots for the Expence of their Army. May the Fifth, the Parliament offered the King to procure him the Loan of 650000 l. till the Subsidies might be raised: Provided that the King would pass a Bill not to Adjourn, Prorogue, or dissolve this Parliament, without Consent of both Houses, to which he Assented. In February following, they Voted 300000 l. to be payd to the Scots for their Charges, for levying of which, the Bill for Poll Money was passed.

In his Seventeenth year, the Irish Rebellion brake out, for suppression of which, the Parliament Voted, that 500000 l. should be forthwith provided: And the King at Tork, puts forth Proclamations for Tunnage and Poundage, and infinite Collections were made for Relief of the Pro- C testants in Ireland.

In his Eighteenth Year, this Civill War began, and the King was fain to borrow much Money and Plate of the Cavalier Nobility; as likewise did the Parliament, of those who were Affected to them, Ingaging the Publick Faith for payment out of Delinquents Estates; by which means, an Incredible Mass of Money and Plate was brought into Guildhall: And after this came out a Weekly Assessment from the Parliament, upon England and Wales, which amounted unto Thirty three thousand nine hundred eighty one pounds, thirteen shillings.

In his Nineteenth Year, Mr. Waller, one of the Conspirators with Tomkings and Challoner, was Fined 10000 l. to the Parliament, who Voted, That the Kings and Queens Revenue should be detained and Employed in the Publick Service; And that a Tax should be layd upon Beer, Ale, Wine, Tobacco, and such other Commodities, which was called Excise: And also Order Thirty D thousand pounds to be instantly borrowed; for Advancing the Scottish Army to their Assistance.

In his Twentieth Year, the Scots were Impowred by Parliament to Asses for themselves, the Twentieth Part over all the North, and all Malignants Estates they could Seize within their Reach. The King likewise makes Proclamation, for Assistance of all the Neighbour Counties, to come in with Provision to Oxford: And the Parliament borrowed A hundred thousand pounds of the City, for Recruit of their Army under the Earl of Essex; and in the end of the Year the Army was new Modelled, not without great Charges, and Ten thousand pounds per annum was given to Generall Essex out of Delinquents Estates, to Discard him.

In his Three and twentieth Year, the Army was Modelled into less, and Sixty thousand pound a Month settled for their Pay. And after the Reducing of London, a Months Pay was given them for a Gratuity, and Thirty thousand pounds in part of Payment of their Arrears.

In his last Year, the Army doubting least the Treaty at Newport might take effect, made a great Bufile for the payment of their Arrears, whereupon Three and twenty thousand pounds was payd them in part, but their Necessities were more Urgent, and therefore they seize Twenty thousand G pounds in the Treasuries of Haberdasher, Goldsmiths, and Weavers Hall, and demand Forty thousand pounds of the City, which was accordingly Collect for them: And Colechester being taken by Sir Thomas Fairfax, was Ordered to raise Fourteen thousand pounds to prevent Plunder: Besides these Taxarions, much more was raised by Monopolies, Privy Seals, Court of Wards, Beneyolences, and otherwise more then can be parallel'd in any precedent Reign.

Festivals and Stage plays Abolishd.

E In his Three and twentieth Year, Festivalls and Stage-playes were Abolished by Ordinance of Parliament.

And in his last Year, An Ordinance passed for better payment of Tithes and Dues to Ministers and for punishing of Blasphemies and Heresies: And the Commons being Resolved upon the Tryal of the King, Voted the Title in Writs, Carolus Dei gratia &c. to be altered and referred to a Committee; That the Great Seal of England be broken, and Ordered a New Seal, with the Armes of England, and the Harp of Ireland, with this Motto, The great Seal of England, And on the Reverse, the Picture of the House of Commons Sitting, with these Words, In the First Year of Freedome, by Gods Blessing Restored, 1648.

Affairs of the Church in his Time.

THe King at his Coronation had Sworn to Maintain Episcopacy, in Observation of which Oath, he was so strictly Exact, that it Involved him in many Troubles, and was the main Cause of bringing him to his End, as will appear in the Sequell: In England the Estate of the Church had not the least Wrinkle of difference for divers Years, since the Conference at Hampton-Court, in King James's time; But in Ireland, in the Second Year of this Kings Reign, a Proposition was made, for a further Toleration for Popery, which the Papists were willing to buy at a good Price: But the Archbishop of Armagh, and the other Protestant Bishops, with Vehemency Protested against it; That that Design was presently quashed.

A Toleration for Popery propounded. Committee for Regulation of Religion.

In his Fourth Year, Sate the Committee for Regulation of Religion, then Endangered by the Two Rocks of Arminianisme, and Popery.

In his Sixth Year, hapned a notable Contest between the Jesuits, and Secular Priests in England, to Reconcile whom, Panzain, Con, Rozetti, and others came over, and spent much Labour in vain: for the Feude in stead of being Extinguished, did rather Dilate it self in France, Flann-ders, and other Countries.

The Contest between the Jesuits and Secular Priests: The Controverisie about the Sabbath.

In his Seaventh Year, the Sabbatarian Controversie waxed very hot, while some Maintained the the Fourth Commandment to be simply and intirely Morall, and Christians Obliged as well as the Jews, to observe everlastingly that Day. That the Lords-day is an ordinary Working Day, it being Will-worship to make it a Sabbath by Vertue of the Fourth Commandment: This begat many Disputations, between Sabbatarians, Moderate Men, and Antisabbatarians, some of whom Asserted, That the poor Labourers who had no other time for Diversion, or Recreation, were not so much Obliged to the strictness of the Day, as the Richer Sort. But in Somersetshire the Case is Disputed more ruffly, where at their Church-Ales and Wakes, on that Day they fell to Fightings, which was Suppressed by Order of Judge Richardson: This was Interpreted by the Archbishop as an Usurpation upon Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction; And the King himself was troubled to settle this Difference, between these Two Great Men, and so thought good to set forth his Declaration, For tolerating of Sports on the Lords-day in the Afternoons, which the Parliament afterwards charged home upon his Account. These were but petty Businessses, to that which followed.

A Declaration for Tolera ing of Sports on the Lords day.

Ceremonies of the Church violently urged by the Archbishop of Canterbury. And Imposed on the Scots.

Doctor Land was now Archbishop of Canterbury, a busie man, and over-violent in his Waies and Proceedings. He in the Tenth year of this Kings Reign, kept a great stie about the Orders and Ceremonies of the Church, which he would have to be renewed, and the Communion Tables to be removed to the upper end of the Chapcell, to be placed Alterwise, and Railed about, and Insisted violently upon such like Circumstantialls, to the great Offence and Disgust of others, then called Puritans, whom he never ceased to persecute; the Liturgy he mainly stood upfor, which he was not only to enforce upon England, but would also have the King to Im-pose upon Scotland. Hence all those Calamities which afterwards befell the King, had their C Originall.

In the first place therefore, to begin with that Kingdome, The Bishop of Dumblis, Dean of his Majesties private Chapell, received these Articles of Order:

That Prayers be performed twice a Day in the English Manner.

A Monthly Communion to be received on their Knees.

He that Officiates on Sundayes, or Holydayes to do his Duty in Sarplice.

Nor did it rest here, but in his Twenty third Year, he at the Archbishops Instance would have the English Service-book to be Read and Used in all the Churches of Scotland, which occasioned them first to set up their Councell-tables, and in conclusion bred so great Distempers, that first they put themselves into a Posture of Defence, and afterwards brake out into open War, D two Years after; for the Parliament at Edenburrrough, and the Assembly at Glasco, had so Animat-ed the People, that they were now ready to Treat with the King with their Swords in their Hands, and in Earnest it had come to Blows, if some more Moderate Spirits had not Interposed on both Sides, whereby the Service-book was discharged, and all was quiered for the present: But the Year following, the Rupture grew more wide then before, and so the King with his Councell resolved upon Reducing them by force; and to that end called a Parliament to sit at Westminster, which began April 13. 1640. and took end the Fifth of May following, without any thing effected. But the Convocation of Bishops perceiving Episcopall Hierarchy to be tottering in England, as well as in Scotland, thought good for their own Support to frame this Oath, equivalent to their purpose.

The Oath framed by the B-shops.

I A. B. do Swear, That I do approve the Doctrine and Discipline of Government Established in the Church of England, as containing all Things necessary to Salvation; And that I will not endeavour by my Self, or any other, Directly, or Indirectly, to bring in any Popish Doctrine, contrary to that so Established; Nor will I ever give my Consent, to alter the Government of this Church, by Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, and Archdeacons, &c. as it stands now Established, and as by Right it ought to stand: Nor yet ever to Subject it to the Usurpations, and Superstitions of the Sea of Rome; And all those things do I plainly and sincerely Acknowledge, and Swear, according to the plain and common Sence and Understanding of the same Words, without any Equivocation, or Mental Reservation, or secret Reservation whatsoever; And this I do Heartily, Willingly, and Truly, upon the Faith of a Christian; So help Me God in Jesus Christ.

Gives disast.

This Oath was excepted against for three Reasons;

First, Because the (&c.) did leave the Oath so loose, that neither the Makers, nor the Takers of the same, understood the same.

Secondly, For that exacting an Oath of Dissent from Civill Establishment, in things of Indifference, was an Affront to the very Fundamentals of Government,

And,

A And, lastly, That the Juror therein declares, he Swears willingly, to which he was constrained under the highest Penalties.

The King had by this time raised an Army against the Scots, a Party whereof being sent before into the North, was Defeated at Newbourn; The King and the Earl of Strafford come on in Person, but instead of Fighting, fall to Treating, and in Conclusion the Scots obtained all their Desires. At Home, Episcopall Government was become so grievous to the Generallity of the People, who liked better of the Scottish way, that now a Regulation would not serve their turn, mens Minds are bent upon an utter Extirpation of it, as too Oppressive and Imperious; The Nonconformists, whom others called Puritans, began now to lift up their Heads, and readily closed with the Peoples Desires, who being Countenanced by the famous long Parliament, then Sitting, and encouraged by the Success of the Scots, began more boldly to Declaim in their Pulpits against the Bishops.

The Difference continued, and Episcopacy was alive, though in Weak Estate, till the Year, 1646. at which time it was utterly Abolished by Ordinance of Parliament, October the Ninth: And the Church-Government was Constituted in the Hands of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, by whom Presbytery was Established for a time; But the Common Enemy being now taken away, the Nonconformists sadly Clash, and divide amongst themselves: the two younger Brothers, the Independent and the Anabaptist, thought their Case to be little bettered, seeing their Elder Brother the Presbyterian, to Ayme also at a Compulsory Uniformity, but being well Backed by the Army, at last through their means obtained a Toleration of tender Consciences.

Sights were seen in the Ayre, as Armies fighting one against the other, all looked upon as sad Prefages of the ensuing Broyls. Neither is that strange Thunder and Lightning unworthy of mention, which hapned at Witbecombe, in the County of Devon, in the Fourteenth year of this Kings Reign, where a Ball of Fire was seen to come into the Church, in the time of Divine Service, whereby Three persons were killed, and Threescore and two hurt, and divers of them having their Linings burnt, though their outward Garments were not so much as Singed, most of the Seats turned up side down, the Pillars, Steeple, and Church more endamaged then Three hundred pounds will suffice to repair.

In his last year, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle were shot to death, concerning whom, it is credibly reported by Eye-witnesses, that in the place where they fell, there grew no Grasse for sundry years, notwithstanding the Ground round about be very fertill.

His Third Son was Born, October the Thirteenth, 1633. was Baptized James, and Created Duke of Tork: His Fourth and last Son was Born the Twentieth of July, and Christned Henry. His Eldest Daughter Mary was Born, November the Fourth, 1631. and afterwards Married to William of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, by whom she had one Son Named William, Heir and Successor to his Father in his Dignities: His Second Daughter Elizabeth, the Twenty eighth of December, 1635. And his Third Daughter Anne, the Seventeenth of March, 1636. which both died young: His Fourth and last Daughter was Born, June the Sixteenth, 1644. at Exeter, from whence she was brought up to St. James's, but afterwards Conveyed into France, by her Governess, the Lady Dalkeith.

Of his Personage and Condition.

His unweariedness in active Exercises.
His Imperfection of speech

His failings in Policy.

His Chastity, Learning, and Civility.

His even and constant Temper.
The unhappy Choice of his Friends.

HE was of a comely Stature, and of an even well timbred Talness, which Assisted him to be Excellent in all Exercises, and therein to be Indefatigable both in Mind and Body; His Hair of a darkish Brown, and somewhat long; One Imperfection he had of Stuttering, which yet might be esteemed a Royall Infirmary, and a Kings Evil, it being much more abundant in the Kings of France, and Spain, then living; which yet he so ordered, that whereas it substracted from the Eloquence of others, yet it seemed to add some Grace and Ornament to his Speech. He had his failings of Policy: In the First year of his Reign, not so well Versed in the Affairs of State, but that he being put to it, trusted too much to others; And afterwards recovering that Inconvenience, he was so constant to himself, and over-weening, that his Opinions became Resolves: And this was the Reason, that he seldom Granted any thing of Consequence, till too late: And after he had shewed such Signs of Reluctancy, as kept his Parliament and People in continuall Suspition of the Sincerity and Singleness of his Intentions; yet was he ever Eminent for Chastity to his Marriage Bed, very Learned, Affable, and Courteous, and of a most unchanged Mind, in the greatest Changes of his Fortunes; Neither in Prosperity Elevated beyond his Ordinary Temper, nor in Adversity Dejected: But most unhappy in the Mischoice of fit and able Persons to be his best and chiefest Friends, which proved Fatall to him. And lastly, Brought him to that unhappy Catastrophe, which we must now Recite.

Of his Death and Buriall.

His Death was strange, and unparalleled; we may read of many Kings who came to violent Ends, but never any that was so Formally and Solemnly: First, Tryed for his Life, and then Judicially Executed in Publick by his own Subjects.

The House of Commons on the Fourth of January, being turned into a Grand Committee, passed these following Votes.

I. That the People under God, are the Originall of all just Power.

II. That the Commons of England Assembled in Parliament, being Chosen by, and representing the People, have the Supream Authority of this Nation.

III. That whatsoever is Enacted and Declared for Law by the Commons of England, Assembled in Parliament, hath the force of a Law.

IV. That

A IV. That all the people of this Nation are Included thereby, although the Consent and Concurrence of the King and House of Peers be not had thereunto.

V. That to raise Armes against the People Representative, or Parliament, and to make War upon them, is High-treason.

6. That the King himself took Armes against the Parliament, and upon that Account is Guilty of the Bloodshed throughout the Civill War; and that he ought to Expiate the Crime with his own Blood.

B

Next an Ordinance for the Kings Tryall was resolv'd on, which on Saturday the Sixth of January, was Ingrossed and Read, and Commissioners were appointed for his Tryall; and on the Munday following, Proclamation was made, That those who had any thing to say against the King, should have a Hearing given them: and this was Proclaim'd first in Westminster-hall, by one Denby, who was Serjeant at Armes to the Commissioners, who Rid into the Hall with his Mace, Attended with Six Trumpeters, and other Officers who also Rode bare into the Hall with him; the Drums of the Guard in the meantime Beating without in the Palace Yard: And the day after, Proclamation was made to the same Effect in Cheapside, and at the Old Exchange; And in order to this Grand Tryall, Hilary Term which usually begins on the Twenty third of January, was Adjourned for Fourteen dayes. The House of Lords refusing to Concur with the Commons in their Ordinance for the Kings Tryall, the Commons Resolve, and Vote;

That all Members and others appointed to Act in any Ordinance, are Impowred and Injoynd to Sit, Act, and Execute, notwithstanding the House of Peers joyn not with them.

The Ministers in generall, and now even the Presbyterians also (heretofore Furious Enemies to the Kings Cause) Declare themselves both in their Pulpits, and by earnest Petitions to the Parliament, Zealous Deprecators of the Kings Death, and every where publickly Protest against this Tryall. The Nobility offer themselves Pledges on the Kings behalf, and the People Universally seem greatly troubled and Astonisht: Notwithstanding all which, the House of Commons and the Army went Resolutely on, and according to Agreement, a High-court of Serjeant at Armes, Mr. Phelps, Mr. Broughton, Clerks to the Court. Messengers, Wolfred, Pains, Radley, Powell, Isaac King the Cryer. The Lords that did Sit, Thomas Lord Gray, of Groby, Phillip Lord Lysle. Many besides these were Nominated, as Generall Fairfax, and others, but they refused the Employment.

On Friday the Nineteenth of January, the King was brought with a strong Guard of Horse from Windsor to St. James's, and the next day he was led to his Tryall; In the Morning the Commissioners Met in the Painted Chamber, where they sate awhile in Consultation, from thence they went into Westminster-hall, at the upper end whereof the Fabrick was framed for this Tribunall; the President in his Skarlet Robe had the Sword carried before him by Colonell Humphrey, the Mace by Serjeant Denby the younger, and a Guard to Attend him, consisting of Twenty Men with Partisans: In the midst of the Court was placed for the President to sit on, a Chair of State of Crimson Velvet, with a Cushion thereon of Crimson Velvet, and a Desk before him, on each side were Benches for the rest to sit upon, covered with Skarlet Cloath; the Court being sate, and Silence Proclaim'd, the Hall-Gates were set open, and the Royall Prisoner having been brought from St. James's through the Park to Whitehall, and from thence by Water to Sir John Cotton's House, was thence Conducted into the Hall by Colonell Thomson, and a Guard of Twenty Partisans. At the Bar was plac'd for him a Chair of red Velvet, where after he had look sternly round about him, upon the Court, and up into the Galleries, he sate down without taking the least notice of his Judges, then presently he rose up again, and lookt downward on the Guards, and the Throng of Spectators: The Commission from the House of Commons, by which they Sate, was read by Phelps the Clerk, who sate at the Feet of the President, on the right side of the Table (covered with a Turkey Carpet) wherein lay the Sword and the Mace; and after that, was read the Charge against the King, which was to this Effect.

‘THat the said Charles Stuart being admitted King of England, and Intrusted with a Limited Power to Govern, according to the Laws, for the Good and Benefit of the People, and preserving their Rights and Liberties; Yet nevertheless out of a wicked Design, to uphold himself by a Tyrannicall Power, according to his Will, thereby to overthrow the Rights and Liberties of the People: yea, thereby to make void the Foundation thereof; He the said Charles Stuart, for Accomplishing such Wicked Designs, and for the promoting himself, and his Adherents in his and their wicked Practises; Hath Trayterously and Maliciously levied War against the present Parliament, and the People therein Represented, particularly, upon, or about the Thirteenth day of June, 1643. At Beverley, in the County of York; That at or upon the Thirteenth day of July, in the year aforesaid, in the County and City of York: And upon the Twenty fourth day of August, in the same year, at the County of the Town of Nottingham (when, and where he set up his Standard of War) And on, or about the Twenty third of October, in the same year, at Edgehill, Keinton Field: And upon, or about the Thirteenth day of November, in the same year, at Brandsford, in the County of Middlesex: And at, or upon the Thirteenth day of August, 1643. at Caversham Bridge, neer Reading, in the County of Berks; And at, or upon the Thirteenth day of October, in the same year, at, or neer the City of Gloucester: And at, or upon the Thirtieth day of November, in the year last mentioned, at Newbery, in the County of Berks; And at Copredibridge, the Thirteenth, 1644. And the third of September, in the same year, at Boadwin, and other places neer Adjacent in Cornwall: And on the Thirtieth day of November, in the year last mentioned, at Newbery aforesaid; And on the Eighth day of June, 1645. at the Town of Leicester: And also on the Fourteenth day of the same Month, in the same year, at Naseby Field. At which severall Times and Places, or most of them, and at many other places in the Land, at severall other times within the years aforementioned, as also in the year, 1646. He the said Charles Stuart, hath caused many Thousands of the People of this Nation to be slain; And by Divisions, Parties, and Insurrections in the Land; and by Invasions from Foreign Parts, endeavoured and procured by him, and by many other evill Waies and Means, He the said Charles Stuart, hath not only maintained and carried on the said War by Land and Sea, during the years aforementioned; But hath also Revived, or caused to be Revived the said War against the Parliament; and the good People of this Nation, this present year, 1648. In the Counties of Essex, Kent, Surrey, Suffex, and Middlesex, and in many other Counties in England and Wales; and also by Sea; And particularly, He the said Charles Stuart, hath given Commissions to his Son the Prince, for that Purpose. By the which Cruell and Unnaturall War, by him the said Charles Stuart Levied, Continued, and Revived as aforesaid, much Innocent Blood hath been spilt, many Families have been undone, the Publick Treasury Wasted; and Exhausted, Trade Obstructed and decayed, vast Expence and Damage to the Nation Incurred, and many parts of the Land spoyled, some even to Desolation. And for further prosecution of the said evill Designs, He the said Charles Stuart, doth still continue his Commissions to the said Prince, and other Rebels and Revolters. All which wicked Designs, Wars, and evill Practises, of him the said Charles Stuart, have been, and are carried on, for the Advancing and Upholding of Will, and Power, and pretended Prerogatives to himself, against the Publick Interest, Right, Justice, and Peace of this Nation, by, and for whom he was Intrusted as aforesaid. By all which it appeareth, That he the said Charles Stuart hath been, and is the Occasioner, Author, and Contriver of the said Unnaturall War, and thereby Guilty of all the Treasons, Murthers, Rapines, Burnings, Spoils, Desolations, Damages, and Mischiefs to this Nation, Acted and Committed in the said Wars, or occasioned thereby.

‘And the said John Coke, doth for the said Treasons and Crimes, on the behalf of the People of England, Impeach the said Charles Stuart as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murtheier,

A 'Murthurer, and a Publick and Implacable Enemy to the Common-wealth of England: And therefore prayeth, that the said Charles Stewart, King of England, may be put to Answer all and every of the said Premises; that such Proceedings, Examinations, Tryalls, Sentences, and Judgments may be hereupon had, as may be agreeable to Justice.

The Charge being Read, which the King heard with a Countenance for the most part unalter'd, only at some Passages disdainfully Smiling, the President standing up;

B. Sir, said he, You have heard your Charge, containing such Matters as appear in it, and in the Close it is pray'd, that you Answer to your Charge, which this Court Expects.

In Answer to which, the King Askt,

By what Authority they brought to Tryall a King, their most Rightfull Sovereign, against the Publick Faith so lately given him, at a Treaty between Him and his Two Houses? By what lawfull Authority, said he again, more Emphatically; for I am not Ignorant, continued He, that there are on Foot every where very many unlawfull Powers, as of Thieves and Robbers in the High-way? Moreover he told them, That whatsoever they did, he was resolv'd not to Betray the Charge Committed to him by God, and Confirmed to him by Ancient Descent.

Then the President told the King;

That he was called to Account by the Authority of the People of England, by whose Election he was admitted King.

D To which the King made Answer;

That the Kingdome descended not to him by Election, but by Hereditary Right derived from above a Thousand years, That by refusing an unlawfull Power, he stood more Apparently then they for the Liberties of the People of England, whose Authority was shewed in Parliamentary Assemblies, but that there appeared none of the Lords, whose presence (and not only theirs, but the Kings also) was required to the Constituting of a Parliament, but that neither One, nor both Houses, nor any Judicatory upon Earth, had Power to Call the King of England to Account, much less some certain Judges Chosen by his Accusers, and Masked with the Authority of the Lower House. That he could not make his Defence, unless they produc'd their Authority, since it would be the same Offence to acknowledge a Tyrannicall Power, as to resist a lawfull One.

The President often Interrupted the Kings Speech, saying;

That they were satisfied with their Authority, and that their present Work to do Justice was upon Gods Authority, and the Kingdomes.

F To which the King urged;

That it was not his own Apprehension, nor theirs neither, which ought to Decide the Matter.

Hereupon the President gave Command, that the Prisoner should be taken away, and remanded into Custody, so the Court Adjourned till the next day following, save one; and this was the Result of the first Daies Tryall.

Two daies after, being the Twenty second of January, the Court met again in the Painted Chamber, and considering the Kings Resolution, and to hinder him from Arguing again, against G the Courts Jurisdiction, they make their Pre-Order;

'That if the King offer to Dispute the same again, the President shall tell him,
'That the Commons of England Assembled in Parliament, have Constituted this Court, whose Power may not be permitted to be Disputed by him.

'That if he refuse to Answer, it shall be accounted a Contumacy to the Court.

'That if he Answer with a Salvo of his pretended Prerogative, above the Court, he shall shall be required to Answer positively Yea, or No.

That he shall not have a Copy of his Charge, till he own the Court, and declare his Intentions to Answer.

On the Two and twentieth of January, the Court met again, the King was brought to the Bar, and Solicitor Coke again Accuses him, and requires, That the King may be put to it, either to give in his Positive Answer, or else the Charge to be taken Pro confesso; accordingly the President having in brief repeated the Passages of the last Day, required his Answer: But he persisted firm in the Disowning their Authority, and offered to give in his Reasons for it, saying;

That he less regarded his Life, then his Conscience, his Honour, the Laws, and Liberties of the People; which that they might not all perish together, was a sufficient Reason why he could not make his Defence before the Judges, and acknowledge a new Form of Judicature: For what Power had ever any Judges to Erect a Judicature against their King? Or by what Power, said He, was it ever Granted? Not by Gods Laws, which on the contrary command Obedience to Princes; Nor by the Laws of the Land, which Injoyn all Accusations to be read in the Kings Name: Nor do the Laws give any Power to the Lower House, of judging even the meanest Subject. Nor lastly, Doth their Power flow from any Authority which might be pretended Extraordinary, delegated from People, since they had not asked the Consent so much as of every Tenth Man in this Matter.

The President still Ever and Anon Interrupting the Kings Speech, and telling him, That the Court, abundantly satisfied of their Authority, would not admit of any Reasons that should detract from their Power: At last prest upon him to be mindfull of his Doom; But where, said the King, in all the World is that Court, in which no place is left for Reason? You shall find, Sir, Answered the President, That this very Court is such a One. Then the King still urg'd, That they would at least permit him to Exhibit his Reasons in Writing, which if they could Satisfactorily Answer, he would yeild himself to their Jurisdiction. Hereupon the President growing into Choler, Commanded that the Prisoner should be taken away: Remember, said he then, as he was going away, That it is your King from whom you turn away your Ear; In vain certainly will my Subjects expect Justice from you, who stop your Ears to your King ready to plead his Cause.

The very next Day being the Twenty third of January, The King was the Third time brought to his Tryall, where when he came, the Attorney Generall stood up, and addressing his Speech to the President, with a large Preamble, moved for speedy Justice against the Prisoner, saying; That his standing in Contempt, and not Pleading, ought by an Implicite Confession to be taken Pro confesso. Hereupon the President stood up, and having put the King in mind of what Mr. Solicitor had moved against him in behalf of the Kingdome, urged him to give his Positive and Finall Answer to the Charge of Treason brought in against him; the King Answered, That having somewhat to say for the Liberties of the People, as he had formerly exprest, he desired to know whether he might freely speak without Interruption, or not: To which the President reply'd, That as soon as he had acknowledged the Jurisdiction of the Court, he should be heard at large, to make what Defence he could for himself, but till then, he was not to be permitted to run into any other Discourses. The King then again made Answer, That he valued not the Charge a Rush, it was the Liberty of the People he stood for; and that for him to acknowledge a new Court, that he never heard of before, was a thing he could not do: for which refusall he was ready to shew his Reasons; if he might but have time Granted him. The President having again told him, That the Court Commanded him to give in his Positive Answer. Brought on one of the Clerks read as followeth;

C H A R L E S S T E W A R T, King of England, You are Accused in the behalf of the Commons of England, of divers high Crimes and Treasons, which Charge hath been Read unto you; The Court now requires you to give your Positive and Finall Answer, either by way of Confession, or Deniall.

But the King still persisted in his first Resolution, alledging, That to acknowledge this new Court, was against the Priviledges of the People; and the Fundamentall of the Kingdome. Then the President commanded the Clerk to Record the Default, and the Guard to take back the Prisoner, which accordingly was done.

But his Fourth and last Tryall was on Saturday, January the Twenty seventh. When the Court being Sate, the King again brought to the Bar; yet still refused to plead his Cause before them, but said; He had some things conducing to the good of the People, which he desired

A desired liberty to deliver before the Members of both Houses: But the President replied, That it was but a further declining of the Courts Jurisdiction, and a Retardation of Justice. To which the King made Answer; That a short Delay was much more Safe, and Conduceable to the Good of the Kingdome, then to precipitate a dangerous Sentence; And therefore desired, that he might have leave to Withdraw for the present, and they have time to Consider. Accordingly they all Withdraw for half an Hour, and then returned: And the King being demanded what he had more to say? Only Insisted upon being heard before the Lords and Commons: Whereunto the Court would by no means Condescend; But forthwith proceeded to pass Sentence of Death upon him: Which Sentence was usher'd in by a large and Elaborate Speech of the Presidents; wherein he first maintained,

'That the King ought not to think himself Exempted from the Law, for that the Law was his Superiour; and that the only Estate Superiour to the Law, as being the Parent and Author of it, was the People of England: Whose Representative the Parliament being the Sovereign and Highest Court of Justice, were to be lookt upon as the Supream and most Authentick Expounders of the Law, since they are the sole Makers of it: He confest that the King hath not Parem in Regno, and that he is Major singulis, but that he is Minor universis, & in exhibitione juris quasi minimus. Next he called to mind, how the Barons in their Wars stood out for their Liberties against those Kings that did Invade them, and play the Tyrants, calling them to an Account for those things which they did amiss: And thus, said he, We see the Nobility then took upon them Frangere, to put a Curb to the Exorbitant Actions of their Kings, and if they are now unmindfull of their Honours and the Kingdomes Good, certainly the Commons of England will not. He said also, That the King is but an Officer in Trust, and takes his Oath at his Election to be true to the People, and that Parliaments were Instituted as Remedies, in case this Oath be not duly observ'd, to adjudge the Wrongs done by the King to the People. He shewed, That this last Parliament had been Call'd upon the same Occasion; Namely, To Redress the Grievances and Miscarriages of his Government, and that he had done all that in him lay to Subvert this Parliament, and take away their Priviledges. Next, he endeavoured to Evince that his Proceeding was not without President, as was alledged by the Kings Party, but that it had been the Custome of other Nations in former Ages; As France, Spain, Germany (from whence he yet brought no Examples for want, as he said, of time) to call their Kings to an Account in case of Misgovernment: More especially, he remembered that the Ancient Law of Arragon, whereby the Justice of Arragon hath power to Reform whatsoever Wrong is done by the King, and also to prosecute against him for his Miscarriages in Governing. Also that the Tribunes of Rome, the Ephori of Sparta, were of the same Nature. Next, he omitted not to mention the frequent Practice of the Kingdome of Scotland, in Ancient Times to Punish, Depose, and put to Death their Kings. And moreover he Instanc'd in our own Kingdome of England, the Case of Edward the Second, and Richard the Second; And whereas the King had stood upon his Descent, the President Asserted, That although many times it had Succeeded according to Descent, yet the Kings of England ever held the greatest Assurance of their Titles when it was Declar'd in Parliament; And however the next Person in Blood hath been still Design'd, the People may upon just Cause refuse him: He Affirmed the Liege, or Contract between King and People to be Reciprocall, a Bond of Perfection from the King of Subjection from the People; which first, said he, being broken Subjectio trahit. Lastly, He went about to prove wherein the King stood Guilty of those Crimes, for which in the Charge he was termed a Tyrant, Traytor, and a Murderer, wishing him seriously to consider of his own Estate, and of the Guilt of his Mis-doings; and telling him, That they ought not to decline the doing of their Duty, in the Administration of Justice even to Himself: And that whatsoever Revenge was Threatned by his Party, they were Resolv'd, by the Grace of God, to go on with it.

G

The King once more desired, That he might be heard for the clearing himself of those heavy Imputations which they had layd to his Charge; but the President told him, that since he had been pleas'd to Disavow them as a Court, it would be Improper for them to Hear him, nor could they admit of any further Delay: And thereupon he Commanded the Clerk to read the Sentence, which was done in manner following.

WHEREAS, The Commons of England in Parliament Assembled have appointed them a High Court of Justice; for the Trying of Charles Stewart, King of England; before whom he had been Three times Convented: And at the First time, A Charge of High Treason, and other Crimes and Misdemeanours was Read in behalf of the Kingdome of England, &c. (Reading the Charges) To which Charge, He the sayd Charles Stewart, refused severall times to Answer. For all which Treasons and Crimes, this Court doth Adjudge the sayd Charles Stewart, as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murtherer, and a Publick Enemy, to be put to Death, by Severing his Head from his Body. ^A

This Sentence being Read, was approved by the Members of the Court, by holding up their Hands; The King offered to Speak, but he was instantly Commanded to be taken away, and the Court broke up: And the King was Conveyed back to Sir Robert Cotton's House, Sir Hardress Waller, Commissary Generall Iretton, Harison, Dean, and Okey, Colonels, were appointed to consider of the Time, and Place, for the Kings Execution: By whom it was resolved, that he should be Executed on Tuesday, January the Thirtieth, between Ten, and Two of the Clock, upon a Scaffold covered with Black, in the open Street before Whitehall Banqueting-house. In the mean time, one of his Chaplains, Doctor Juxton, Bishop of London, was allowed him to Administer those Spirituall Helps, which should be futable to his present Condition: But he would by no means admit of Mr. Marshall, Mr. Nye, Mr. Carrell, Mr. Salway, and Mr. Dell, whom the Court had Ordered to Attend him for that Purpose. January the Twenty seventh, the King lay at Whitehall, and the next day being Sunday, the Bishop of London Preached before him in his Chamber, and the same day the Members of the Court, at the Chappell of Whitehall. Munday following, he was conveyed to St. James's, where his Children had leave to Visit him, but stayed not long: Being come, he gave them his Blessing, and told them, That it was the last time they should ever see him; And withall, he Commanded them to look upon Prince Charles, hereafter not only as their Brother, but their Sovereign: And told the Duke of D Glouster, that he heard the Army intended to make him King, a Thing not for him to take upon him, his two Brothers being before him, and therefore Commanded him upon his Blessing, never to Attempt it, unless it lawfully Redounded upon him; And so they parted from him, with his Command to send his Blessing to his other Children beyond the Seas, and Commendation to all his Friends. The Dutch Ambassadour, in behalf of his Majesty, made Intercession to the Parliament for the Kings Life, but prevailed nothing; For Tuesday the Thirtieth of January, having Prayed and received the Sacrament, he was Attended with a Regiment of Foot, and a Guard of Partisens through the Park, with the Bishop of London on the one Hand, and Colonell Tomlinson on the other: He bids them go faster, telling them, That he now went before them to strive for a Heavenly Crown, with less Sollicitude than he had often times bid his Soldiers to fight for an Earthly Diadem. Coming to Whitehall, he spent above two Hours in his Devotion, in his Cabiner-Chamber, eating only a bit of Bread, and drinking a Glass of Claret Wine; Neer One of the Clock, he was Conveyed through the Banqueting-house, and past through the great Window, unto the Scaffold; Where being nothing Daunted at the sight of the Block and Axe, nor to behold his Executioner (who was more possessed with Fear, then He, and therefore Disguized with a Vizard), He Addressed his Speech to Colonell Tomlinson, as followeth. ^C

I shall be very little heard of any Body else, I shall therefore speak a Word to You here: Indeed I could have held my peace very well, if I did not think, that holding my peace, would some Men think, That I did submit to the Guilt, as well as to the Punishment: But I think it is my Duty to God first, and then to my Country, to cleer my Self, both as an Honest Man, A good King, and A good Christian. ^E

I Shall begin First, With my Innocency; And, In Troath, I think it not very needfull for me to Insist long upon this: For all the World knows, That I did never begin a War with the Two Houses of Parliament; And I Call God to Witness, unto whom I must shortly make an Account, That I did never intend to Incroach upon their Priviledges: They began upon Me; It is the ^G

^A the Militia they began upon: They Confess the Militia was Mine, but they thought it fit to have it from Me. And to be short, If any body will look to the Dates of Commissions, of their Commissions and Mine, And likewise to the Declaration, he will see cleerly, that they began these Unhappy Troubles, not I. So as that for the Guilt of these Enormious Crimes that are layd against Me, I hope that God will cleer Me out. I will not (for I am in Charity) And God forbid that I should, lay it upon the Two Houses of Parliament,

^B there is no Necessity of Either, I hope they are free of this Guilt; But I believe, that ill Instruments between Them and Me, have been the chief Cause of all this Blood-shed: So that as I find my Self cleer of this, I hope (and pray God) that they may too; Yet for all this, God forbid, that I should be so ill a Christian, as not to say, that Gods Judgments are Just upon Me: Many times he doth pay Justice, by an Unjust Sentence, that is Ordinary: I will only say this, That unjust Sentence that I suffered to take Effect, is Punished

^C by an unjust Sentence upon Me. So far I have sayd, to shew you, That I am an Innocent Man: Now for to shew you, That I am a good Christian: I hope there is a good Man, that will bear Me Witness, That I have forgiven all the World; And even these in particular, that have been the chief Causers of my Death: Who they are, God knows, I do not desire to know, I pray God forgive them. But this is not all, my Charity must go further, I wish that they may Repent, for Indeed they have committed a great Sin in that

^D Particular; I pray God with St. Stephen, That this be not layd to their Charge: And withall, that they may take the Right Way to the Peace of the Kingdome; For my Charity Commands Me, not only to forgive particular Men, but to Endeavour to the last Gaspe, the Peace of the Kingdome. So (Sirs) I do wish with all my Soul: (I see there are some here, that will Carry it further:) that they endeavour the Peace of the Kingdome. (Sirs) I must

^E shew you, both how you are out of the Way, and put you in a Way. First, You are out of the Way, for certainly all the Wayes you ever had yet, as far as I could find by any thing, is in the Way of Conquest: Certainly this is an ill Way, for Conquest, in my Opinion, is never just, except there be a just and good Cause, either for matter of Wrong, or A just Title; And then if yee go beyond the first Quarrell that yee have, that makes it unjust at the End, that was just at First: for if there be only Matter of Conquest, then it is a great Robbery. As a Pirate said to Alexander, That He was the great Robber Himself, &

^F himself was but a petty Robber. And so, Sirs, I do think, for the Way that you are in, you are much out of the Way: Now, Sirs, to put you in the Way, believe it you will never go Right, nor God will never Prosper you, untill you give God his Due, the King his Due (that is, My Successor) And the People their Due; I am as much for them as any of you. You must give God his Due, by Regulating Rightly his Church, according to the Scripture, (which is now out of Order.) And to set you in a Way particularly, now I

^G cannot: But only this, A Nationall Synod freely Called, freely Debating among themselves, must Settle this: When every Opinion is freely and cleerly Heard. For the King, Indeed I will not, the Laws of the Land will cleerly Instruēt you for that; Therefore because it Concerns mine own Particular, I only give you a Touch of it. For the People; Truly I desire their Liberty.

and Freedome as much as any Body whomsoever: But I must tell you, that ^A their Liberty and their Freedome consist in having Government under those Laws, by which their Lives and theirs may be most their own; it is not in having a share in the Government, that is nothing pertaining to them: A Subject and a Sovereign are clean different things; And therefore untill you do that, I mean, that you put the People into that Liberty, as I say, Certainly they will never Enjoy themselves.

Sirs, It was for this that now I am hither Come, for if I would have given ^B Way to an Arbitrary Way, for to have all Laws Changed according to the Power of the Sword, I need not have come here; And therefore I tell you (and I pray God it be not layd to your Charge) That I am the Martyr of the People. Introath Sirs, I shall not hold you any longer, I will only say this to you, that I could have desired some little time longer, because I would have put this, what I have said, in a little better Order, and have had it a little better Digested then I have done, and therefore I hope you will Excuse Me; I have delivered my ^C Conscience, I pray God you take those Courses, that are best for the Good of the Kingdome, and your own Salvation.

This his Speech did deeply Affect the Stranders by, who yet for fear of the Soldiers, durst not make any great shew thereof: Then having put up some short Prayers, He openly Declared, He died a Christian, according to the Profession of the Church of England, as he found it left him by his Father. After which, he Discourted a little with the Bishop, to whom he gave his George for the Prince: And having his Hair put up under his Night-Cap, and being Uncloathed to his Sky-colour Wascot; I go, said he, from a Corruptible, to an Incorruptible Crown; where no ^D Disturbance can be: And so after some few Ejaculations, layd down his Head upon the Block, and stretched out his hands (The Sign) had it Severed from his Body at one Blow, by the Vizarded Executioner, who presently held it up, and shewed it to the People: His Head and Trunk were afterwards Coffined in Lead, and Exposed to Publick View at St. James's; till, lastly, The Duke of Lenox, the Marquis of Hartford, the Earl of Southampton, and the Bishop of London, begged the Body to Bury it, which they Conducted to Windsor Chappell-Royall, and there Interred it, with only this Inscription upon the Coffin; CHARLES, KING OF ENGLAND, MDC XLVIII. Princepsne prisco natus ab Inacho; Nil Interest, an pauper, & Infima de gente: Sub dio Jacebit, Victima nil miserantis Orci. ^E

Of Men of Note in his Time.

^F Men of Valour in his Time, were so frequent, That to Enumerate them all, were to fill a Volume; Yet we shall Particularize in some of the Chief, the rest may be seen in the History of this Kings Reign. We shall begin with Sir Charles Morgan, whose Fortitude is sufficiently Renowned in Germany, where, with Six thousand English Men, He more Troubled Count Tilly, the Imperiall Generall, then the King of Denmark could do, with all his Protestant Confederates. Then Sir John Burroughs gave Eminent proofs of Courage in the Expedition of Cales and Rhe: The Earl of Strafford was, Ex utroque, A Valiant Soldier, and of such State Abilities (sayes the King) as might make a Prince rather Afraid, then Ashamed, to Employ him in the greatest Affairs. But when the Civill Wars broke out, the English Nation was then divided into Royallists, and Parliamentarians: Of the Royallists, the most Famous were the Earl of Lindsey Cleaveland, Northampton, and Carnarvan; The wise and Learned, Lord Falkland, the Lords, Ashley, Goring, and Capell, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir Thomas Glenham, Sir Henry Gage, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir Bevil Grunvill, Sir Nicholas Slanning, Sir Richard Grenville, Sir John Winter, Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Lyffe, Colnell John Arundell, Colnell John Trevanion, and Sir William Vavasor.

Of the Parliament Side were the Earls of Essex, and Manchester, the Lord Fairfax, and his Son Sir Thomas, Lieutenant Generall Oliver Cromwell, Major Generall Phillip Skippon, Lieutenant Generall Thomas Hammond, Commissary Generall Henry Ireton, Major Generall Edward Massey, Governour of Gloucester, Colnell Robert Blake Governour of Taunton, and afterwards Admirall, Colnell John Lambert, Colnell Charles Fleetwood, Colnell Thomas Rainsborough, Colnell John Desborough, and Sir William Waller. Colnell Richard Ingoldsby, Colnell Thomas Morgan, and Colnell Poyne, Major Generall Brown.

In Ireland, The Earl of Ormond, the Lords Moor, and Inchiquin, Sir Henry Tichburn, Sir Charles Coote, Colnell Michael Jones, and Colnell George Monk, Eternized their own Memories by notable Performances against the Rebels. ^G Of

A Of the Scots, the most Famous for the King, were the Earls of Forth, and Montross, with the Lords Gurdon and Ogleby: for the Covenanters, were the Earl of Leven, and his Nephew David Lesley, with the Colonells, Meldrum, Strawburn, Ker Montgomey, Brown, Middleton, Bayley, and Hurrey, and the last, though not the least, was the Lord Douglas, in the King of Sweden's Service.

As there was this great Plenty of Martiall Men, so there was no less Plenty of Learned Men; William Laud Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop Prideaux of Worcester, and Bishop Hall of Exeter, whole Abilities and Learning are Conspicuous in their Treatises, Doctor Reynolds of Christ's-church in Oxford, Doctor Collins, Doctor Comber of Kings Colledge, and Trinity in Cambridge. But He whose Fame swallowed up all the rest, was James Usher, that Incomparable Archbishop of Armagh in Ireland, Famous and Renowned both at Home and Abroad, for his universall Learning, Piety, Prudence, and Moderation; Archbishop Spotswood of St. Andrews in Scotland, Sir Kenelm Digby, Mr. John Selden, Doctor Preston, and Profound Doctor Hammond. The Worth and Excellent Parts of which Men, are sufficiently Portraited by their Admired Works: But we shall be Injurious to Physitians, if we forget Doctor Harvey, the Ornament of our Age and Country, by whom that deep and abstruse Mytery of the Circulation of the Blood, was first Published to the World, since universally acknowledged and approved by the ablest Practitioners of that most necessary Science. Poetry was never more Replendent, nor never more Graced; wherein Johnson, Silvester, Shakspeare, Beaumont, Fletcher, Shirley, Broom, Maffinger, Cartwright, Randolph, Cleaveland, Quarles, Carew, Davenant, and Sucklin, not only far excelled their own Countrymen, but the whole World besides. And in a Word, we may truly say, That in this Kings Reign, Bellona and Minerva contended, who should have the most Adorers: And these Lands for their Happines might have proved the Envy of Christendome, if it had not been for: Discordia demens Vipereum vittis innexa cruentis.

Of the Solemn League and Covenant.

AFTER Men of Note, it will not be amiss to Insert a thing of Note. At what time the Scots, in Opposition to the English Liturgie, and Service-book, obtuded upon them by Archbishop Laud; And the English Prelacy had set up their Four Generall Council-Tables: They then framed their Solemn League and Covenant, to be taken throughout all the Nation: But when the Parliament of England desired the Assistance of that Kingdome, a Confederacy was then entred into, between both Nations, for Defence of their Liberties both Civill and Ecclesiasticall, against all men that should endeavour Oppression, whether it were the King himself, or any other. One of the Conditions of this Confederacy was, That the People as well of England and Ireland, as of Scotland, should take this Nationall Solemn League and Covenant, which followeth.

E WE Noble Men, Barons, Knights, Gentlemen, Citizens, Burgeses, Ministers of the Gospel, and Commons of all Sorts in the Kingdomes of England, Scotland, and Ireland; By the Providence of God Living under one King, and being of one Reformed Religion: Having before our Eyes the Glory of God, and the Advancement of the Kingdome of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the Honour and Happiness of the Kings Majesty, and his Posterity, and the true Publick Liberty, Safety, and Peace of the Kingdoms, wherein every ones private Condition is Included. And calling to Mind, the Treacherous and Bloody Plots, Conspiracies, Attempts, and Practises of the Enemies of God, against the true Religion and Professors thereof in all Places, especially in those Three Kingdoms, ever since the Reformation of Religion; And how much their Rage, Power, and Presumption are of late, and at this time Increased and Exercised: Whereof the Deplorable Estate of the Church and Kingdome of Ireland, the distressed Estate of the Church and Kingdome of England, and the dangerous Estate of the Church and Kingdome of Scotland, are present and publick Testimonies. We now at last (after other means of Supplication, Remonstrance, Protestations, and Sufferings) for the Preservation of our selves, and our Religion, from utter Ruine and Destruction, according to the Commendable Practise of the chief Kingdoms in former Times, and the Example of Gods People in other Nations, after mature Deliberation, Resolved and Determined to enter into a Mutuall and Solemn League and Covenant, wherein We all Subscribe, and each one of us for Himself, with our Hands lifted up to the most high God, do Swear,

‘First, That We shall Sincerely, Really, and Constantly, through the Grace of God, endeavour in our severall Places and Callings, the Preservation of the Reformed Religion in the Church of Scotland, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, against our common Enemies; The Retormation of Religion in the Kingdomes

'Kingdomes of England and Ireland, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, according to the Word of God, and the Example of the best Reformed Churches, and shall endeavour the Churches of God in the Three Kingdomes, to the nearest Conjunction and Uniformity in Religion, Confession of Faith, Form of Church-Government, Directory for Worship, and Catechising; That We and our Posterity after us, may as Brethren live in Faith and Love, and the Lord may Delight to Dwell in the midst of Us.

'Secondly, That We shall in like manner, without Respect of Persons, endeavour the Extirpation of Popery, Prelacy (That is) Church-Government by Archbishops, their Chancellors and Commissioners, Deans, and Chapters, Archdeacons, and all other Ecclesiasticall Officers depending on that Hierarchy, Superstition, Heresie, Schisme, Profaneness, and whatsoever shall be found to be contrary to sound Doctrine and the Power of Godliness, least We partake in other mens Sins, and thereby be in danger to receive of their Plagues: And that the Lord may be One, and his Name One in the Three Kingdomes.

'Thirdly, We shall with the same Sincerity, Reallity, and Constancy in our several Vocations, endeavour with our Estates and Lives, Mutually to preserve the Rights and Priviledges of the Parliament, and the Liberties of the Kingdomes; And to Preserve and Defend the Kings Majesties Person and Authority, in the preservation and defence of the true Religion and Liberties of the Kingdomes; That the World may beare Witness with our Consciences, of our Loyalty, and that we have no Thoughts or Intentions to diminish his Majesties just Power and Greatness.

'Fourthly, We shall also with all Faithfulness endeavour the Discovery of all such as have been, or shall be Incendiaries, Malignants, or evil Instruments, by hindring the Reformation of Religion, dividing the King from his People, or one of the Kingdomes from another, or making any Faction, or Parties among the people, contrary to this League and Covenant; That they may be brought to publick Tryall, and receive Condigne Punishment, as the Degree of their Offences shall require or deserve, or the Supream Judicatories of both Kingdomes respectively, or other having power from them for that Effect, shall judge Convenient.

'Fifthly, And whereas the Happines of a blessed Peace between these Kingdomes, denied in some times to our Progenitors, is by the good Providence of God granted unto Us, and hath been lately Concluded and Setled by both Parliaments, We shall each one of Us, according to our place and Interest, endeavour that they may remain conjoynd in a firm Peace and Union to all Posterity; And that Justice may be done upon the wilfull Opposers thereof, in manner expressed in the precedent Article.

'Sixthly, We shall also according to our places and Callings in this common Cause of Religion, Liberty, and peace of the Kingdomes, Assist and Defend all those that enter into this League and Covenant, in the maintaining and pursuing thereof; And shall not suffer our Selves Directly or Indirectly, by whatsoever Combination, Perswasion, or Ferrou, to be divided and withdrawn from this blessed Union and Conjunction, whether to make Defection to the contrary Part, or to give our Selves to a detestable Indifferency or Neutrality in this Cause, which so much concerneth the Glory of God, the good of the Kingdomes, and Honour of the King; But shall all the daies of our Lives, Zealously and Constantly continue therein, against all Opposition, and promote the same according to our Power, against all Lets and Impediments whatsoever: And that We are not able our Selves to Suppress or Overcome, We shall Reveal or make Known, that it may be timely prevented and removed. All which We shall do as in the sight of God.

'And because these Kingdomes are Guilty of many Sins, and Provocations against God, and his Son Jesus Christ, as it is too manifest by our present Distresses and Dangers, the Fruits thereof, We profess and decleare before God and the World, our

unfained

A^c unfained Desire, to be Humbled for our own Sins, and for the Sins of these King-domes, especially, that we have not as We ought, valued the Inestimable Benefit of the Gospel: That We have not laboured for the Purity and Power thereof; And We have not endeavoured to receive Christ in our Hearts, nor to walk worthy of him in our Lives, which are the Causes of our Sins and Transgressions so much abounding amongst Us; And our true and unfained Purpose, Desire, and Endeavour, for our Selves, and all others under our Power and Charge, both in publick and private, in all Duties we owe to God and Man, to amend our Lives, and each one to go before another in the Example of a reall Reformation, that the Lord may B^c turn away his Wrath and heavy Indignation, and Establish these Churches and King-domes in Truth and Peace: And this Covenant we make in the presence of Almighty God, the Searcher of all Hearts, with a true Intention to perform the same, as We shall Answer at that Great Day, when the Secrets of all Hearts shall be disclosed;
 Most humbly Beseeching the Lord to strengthen Us by his holy Spirit for this End, and to Bless our Desires and Proceedings, with such Success, as may be Deliverance and Safety to his People, and Encouragement to other Christian Churches, Groaning under, or in danger of the Yoke of Antichristian Tyranny, to joyn in the same or like Association and Covenant, to the Glory of God, the Enlargement of the C^c Kingdome of Jesus Christ, and the Peace and Tranquillity of Christian Kingdomes, and Common-wealths.

I thought it not Impertinent to bring in at large this Solemn League and Covenant, since it is known to have been a Matter of no less Remark and Consideration, then what ever this Age hath produced extraordinary, and however it hath been layd aside in this Nation for many years, as a thing out of Date; Yet for the time it was received by us, with high Veneration and esteem from our Brethren of Scotland, it wrought wonderfull Effects, and is to this Day the Great Diana of the Presbyterian Cause: Nor is it strange, considering the Mutability of Affairs be-D^c low, That those things which at one time have been held most Sacred and Inviolable, should afterward give place to higher Dispensations; however it be, it hath the Fortune to be the Epilogue to this present History, which seems to have been the Prologue to the late Wars.

And thus you have Exactly, though in Brief, described the Life, the (for the most part) troublesome Reign, and the Untimely and Deplorable Death, of this, once Great and pow-erfull MONARCH: a Prince he was, not ill beloved of his Subjects whilst alive; And although by some his Memory is Branded with the Name of Tyrant, yet by others it receives the Stile of Saint, and Martyr: Nor could I ever perceive by the generall Suffrage of people, E^c but that he is accounted to have been a Pious Man, and good KING, though some Miscarriages might happen in his Reign, through his overmuch Lenity, and trusting too much to some about him, who sought their own Interests, more then the Publick Good.

Among all the Elegies and Epitaphs that have been written of him, I judge this following (written by an unknown Author) Worthy (for it is, Much comprehended in a Little) to be hereunto Adjoynd.

Within this Sacred Vault doth ly,
 The Quintessence of Majesty,
 Which being set, more Glorious Shines;
 F^c The best of Kings, best of Divines, Britains Shame, and Britains Glory,
 Mirrour of Princes, Compleat Story
 Of Royalty; One so Exact,
 That Praise comes short, and doth detract.
 If you would see Him to Endure,
 Behold him in his Portraicture;
 G^c If such another you will find,
 It must by Angels be Design'd.

P R E F A C E.

 T happening to be my Province, To write of the Actions and Fortunes (or rather Misfortunes) of a Great and Illustrious Prince, born in an unhappy age, and under malevolent Stars ; I shall indevor to observe that Impartiality which best becomes every one that undertaketh ought of History, faithfully delivering matters of Fact, without any needless Comments, favouring either of Prejudice or Favour: and as I intend not to Vindicate any Action which hath been repugnant to the Publick Decrees and Edicts of the State; so neither can I in justice detract from the Natural Virtues and Laudable Qualities of any one though otherwise Declar'd an Enemy, in this present History. I am necessarily confined to a very scant and narrow compass of time, in regard it was the space but of a very few years, in which he had the occasion and opportunity to discover himself in Personal Action, the remainder (and that the far greater part) of His life having been Obscured, and the native generosity of His soul eclipsed by a tedious and miserable Exile, wherein, nevertheless (as he was not wanting formerly to give testimony of His Valour and Prudence when occasion serv'd) it must be confest that He hath manifested such a fortitude in suffering with constant Equanimity, as no lesse befits an Heroick Spirit then that of doing bravely; considering, no doubt, That there have been few ages since the beginning, wherein, in some parts of the World or other, the greatest Potentates of the Earth, have not, either by their own Voluntary Resignation, or by Inevitable Constraint, been brought to the like, or worse, Exigence of Fortune; whereof, to passe by the Examples of Darius Codoman K. of Persia, Dioclesian the Emperor, Perseus and Gentius Kings of Macedon and Illyrium, Zenobia Q. of Palmyrene, Conradin K. of Sicily, Ferdinand of Naples, Lodovick Sforza D. of Millain, Osman the Great, Ottoman Pr. with a multitude of others; I shall more particularly bring instances from this our own Nation, and principally in Edgar Atheling, who, being heir apparent to the Crown of England, as Grandchild of Edmund Ironside, and designed by Edward the Confessor, to succeed him, dying childless, was, nevertheless, excluded from his Right of Suecession, by the Usurpation of Harold Earl Goodwin's Son, and afterwards, by the Invasion of the Norman Conquerour, forced to retire into Scotland, having twice attempted, with the help of some of the chief English Nobility, to recover the Kingdom; yet at last he had a plentiful Allow assign'd him by King William, and from thenceforth led a private and quiet Life in the Country. Worse was the Fate of King Edward the Second, surnamed of Caernarvon, who, at the instigation of his Wife, was devested of the Royalty he had enjoy'd for 19 years, and lived for sometime a most miserable life in Prison, and in the end suffered death, after a most cruel and barbarous manner, by the hands of his Keepers. Neither is the strange Vicissitude of King Henry the Sixth's condition to be forgotten, who, overcome in Battel by Great Warwick, and Edward Earl of March (the latter of whom became thereby himself King of England, the Fourth of that Name) when he had been 38 years King, spent the remaining Twelve of his life a Prisoner (excepting one half year, in which he recovered his Kingdom, and again lost it) and at last was stab'd to death in the Tower by the bloody Duke of Glocester, who afterwards made himself King, by the Name of Richard the Third. Lastly, One next in Quality to a King, H. Holland, D. of Exeter, falling with K. Henry and the House of Lancaster, was brought to so low an Ebb, that, bare Legged and in Raggs, he begged in the Low-countries to sustain life. Thus we see the common Calamities of man-kinde are no less incident to the Mighty of the World; then to the meanest in Degree; But of the misfortunes that attend this Prince, of whom we now write, I am easily induc'd to think he undergoes not any greater then this, That he is chiefly accompanied, and for the most part abetted by a Generation of men; who suffer themselves to be carried upon every little gust of hope, unto such a height of empty confidence, as leads them inevitably to their own confusion: like the French of old at the Battel of Agin Court, who, while they thought of nothing more then of Spoyle and Prey, became themselves a Prey to K. Henry's Soldiers: and of late years the Scots at Dunbar, through whose secure relying upon an advantage gain'd, Cromwells Army was lifted from the depth of Despair, to a most signal Triumph. Since therefore it is not in the power of mortal Industry to avert an evil Fate impending, to conserve a fortunate Estate once had, or, being lost, to regain it, if the unalterable Decree of Heaven gain-say, he certainly then loseth least of his Happiness, who least gives way to Cares and Anxieties of minde for what he hath lost: and if of the Greatest that fall low, the greater be the misery, the greater also ought their hearts to be to bear it, especially fortifi'd with this Consideration, That it is not Crowns and Scepters, nor the external Pomp of a brave and glorious Court, but it is a Regal Heart that best shews a King.

The Preface.

F

AFTER the Decollation of Charles, the First of that Name, King of Great Britain, which was done on the Thirtieth of January, 1648. (a Thing which gave no small Amazement and Grief to a great part of the People throughout the Nation) And of the Three Lords who had taken up Armes for the late King, Hamilton, Capell, and Holland: The Supream Authority then immediatly Constituted out of a Select Number of the Commons in Parliament, joyn'd with the General and chief Officers of the Army, proceeded next to an Alteration of the Form of Government, from a Monarchy, to a Free State, resolving not only to exclude the Royall Line, but utterly to Abrogate Kingly Government, and together with that the, House of Peers. To this end it was Ordered, That all publick Writings should be Issued out under a new Test and Style, That a New Great Seal should be made, the Old one being broken, And that the Inscription and Stamp of the Coyn should be chang'd: Also it was Enacted and Proclaim'd, That none upon pain of High-treason, should presume to Declare, or publickly to promote CHARLES STEWART, Styled Prince of Wales, Eldest Son to the late King, or any of the rest of his Children, to be King of England. those those who shew'd themselves resolute in Asserting the Title of Prince Charles to the Crown of England, as appears by this following Proclamation framed by them, which was Printed and Dispersed in severall places of the City of London.

A Proclamation of certain Royallists proclaiming under hand Pr. Charles to be King of England.

WTE the Noblemen, Judges, Knights, Lawyers, Gentlemen, Freeholders, Merchants, Citizens, Yeomen, Seamen, and other Freemen of England; Do according to our Allegiance and Covenant by these Presents, Heartily, Joyfully, and Unanimously, Acknowledge and Proclaim the Illustrious CHARLES, Prince of Wales, next Heir to his Father King Charles (whose late wicked Mother, and all Consenters thereunto, We from our Souls Abominate) to be by Hereditary Birth-right, and lawfull Succession, rightfull and undoubted King of Great Britain, &c. And that We will Constantly B and Sincerely in our severall Places and Callings, Defend and Maintain his Royall Person, Crown, and Dignity, with our Estates and Lives, against all Opposers, whom hereby We Declare to be Enemies to his Majesty and Kingdomes: In Testimony whereof, we have caused these to be Publisht throughout all Counties and Corporations of this Realm; The First Day of February, in the First Year of his Majesties Reign.

The Marquis of Ormond's Army Defeated before Dublin.

The Siege of Londonderry rais'd by Sir Charles Coote. Cromwell lands with an Army in Ireland. Tredah taken by Storm.

Pr. Rupert's Fleet Blockt up in the Harbour of Kingsale. He is Enterprised by the King of Portugall, which breeds a Quarrell between that King and the English Commonwealth. The States of Scotland consult about a Treaty with Pr. Charles.

But so totally was the Kings Party suppressed, in all parts of the Nation, that this Proclamation was of no Effect, none daring in the least manner to appear in behalf of the Royall Interest. Nor had the Scots yet absolutely entertain'd Prince Charles for their King, only Ireland was yet in a manner wholly at his Devotion; in many places whereof he was Proclaimed King: The C Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Inchequin, and others, had at the first considerable Forces in the Field, and all the Garrisons in that Island held out for him, Dublin only and Londonderry (the Two most Important places excepted) besides the Islands of Jersey, Gernsey, Scilly, and Man, which places serv'd as a Retreat for that small Fleet that was left him, being the Remainder of those Ships which had formerly Revolted to him from the Parliaments Navy. Thus while his Affairs were in a posture not altogether desperate, the Marquis of Ormond with a Gallant and well-furnish'd Army (a Gallanter and Richer had scarce been seen in all the late Wars) layd Siege to Dublin, on the One and twentieth of June, 1649. but that City being re-inforc'd with a supply of 3000 Horse and Foot, sent them over from the Parliament, and a much greater Army suddenly expected; the Besieged took the Courage first in small parties, and afterwards D (having discovered the Security and careless posture of the Enemy, a thing most Destructive in Martiall Affairs) with their whole Strength Sallied out upon them, not fearing to venture even upon the main Army; and so far did Fortune favour this their bold Attempt, that in a short while they utterly Defeated them, with little Loss on their own Side, killing and taking Prisoners divers of the most eminent Commanders, the Marquis of Ormond not without much difficulty, saving himself by Flight: the Lord Inchequin had Advanc'd a little before with a party of Horse towards Munster, so that he was not present at this Engagement: The Siege of Londonderry was also rais'd by a resolute Sally of Sir Charles Coote, forcing Sir Robert Stuart, and Colonell Mervin to Retire. Immediately upon this Success, not to give the Royal Party time to recover Strength, all Disturbances being quieted in England, and the Discontented Faction E of the Army called Levellers, being suppressed at Buryford, by Generall Fairfax; Oliver Cromwell then Lieutenant Generall of the Parliaments Army, landed in Ireland with a considerable power of Men, and Invested with the Title and Authority of Lord Governour, or Lieutenant of Ireland; and presently after him followed his Son-in-law Major Generall Ireton with about Forty Sail of Ships. Soon after their Arrival, Droghedab was Attackt by the Lord Lieutenant, who within a short while took it by Storm, and put Sir Arthur Aston, and all that were within the Town to the Sword. Then follow'd from time to time the taking of a Number of considerable Towns and Castles, in all parts of Ireland, besides severall Field Battels gained over the Lord Inchequin, the Lords Ards and Clanduboy, with Lieutenant Generall Farrell, and others of the Kings party by the Lord Broughill, Sir Charles Coote, Colonell Venables, Zanchy, Reynolds, and Hewson: So that in all less then a years time, all Ireland was in a manner totally subdued to the power of the English Commonwealth; to which the English Plantations in Virginia and the Caribe Islands refusing all Obedience and Subjection, publickly own'd the Royall Interest, whereupon they were by the Parliament Interdicted all Traffick and Commerce, and thereby driven to great Straights; and soon after a Fleet of Ships from England was sent against them, under the Command of Sir George Ayscough, whereby in a short while, they were absolutely quell'd and brought to Conformity. Prince Rupert who had been Constituted Admirall of Prince Charles's Fleet, having for a while much infested the Coasts of England, and taken many rich Prizes, was at length blockt up in the Harbour of Kingsale, by some of the Parliaments Ships, and the Town being suddenly after taken by Cromwell, the Prince forc'd to G leave Three of his Ships behind him, had enough to do, making all the Sail he could, to get clear off with the rest: It was thought safest at that Exigence of his Affairs, to Steer his Course for Lisbone, where he met with an Entertainment according to his Expectation, and was receiv'd into the Protection of King John of Portugall, which was an Occasion of a great Contell between that King, and the State of England.

All this while the Parliament, Assembly, and Committee of Estates of Scotlands, were in Consultation about a Treaty with Prince Charles, whom (whether to Advance their own Interests thereby,

A thereby, or really intending his Good) they had resolved (though upon certain Conditions to Own and Declare for their King, presently after his Fathers Death; ever since which time, those Brethren (for so they were termed) who had been so firmly Confederated with the English Parliament, became thenceforth Disavowers of their Proceedings, and entertain'd, not obscurely, Thoughts of Hostility against them, as will hereafter more plainly appear: Only in this one particular, they Sided with the English Parliament, That they endeavoured as much as might be to Depress and Discourage the Malignant Party (so those were called, who taking part with the Royallists in England, and other places, were the most zealous and professed Voraries to the Princes Cause, and who indeed were most intimately Favoured by him) With these they refus'd to have Intercourse, nor would they in any of their Transactions with the Prince, admit them into their Councils: There were also of the Scots some so strictly Devoted to the Kirk and Covenant, that they only intended the Advancement of them, and minded not any other Interest either of King, or Free State, but strenuously oppos'd them both, of which Faction Colonell Straubern, and Colonell Kerr were Two principall Men: Nor were there wanting in that Nation such as held secret Correspondence with the Army, and power of England. Of such a Quadruple Division did Scotland at that time Consist; but they were most considerable both for Number and the Power they held in the Parliament and Committee of Estates, who persisting in their Intentions of Address to their King continued yet firm to their Kirk and Covenant, rather endeavouring to draw him over a Proselyte to them, then for his sake to Abandon them.

C As for the Royallists, they conceiving themselves the most constant and reall Assertors of the Kings Cause (whereas they of the Covenant, in seeking unto him, sought their own Advantages by him, not intending to admit him but upon their own Terms: As, That he should Sign their Covenant, Submit to the Kirk Censure, Renounce the Sins of his Fathers House, and the Advice of his Mother: With things of the like Nature) sought to raise a Considerable Party for him by their own Endeavours and Contrivances, and that chiefly under the Auspices of the Marquis of Montrose, who having been Commanded by the late King, at the Instigation of the Covenantors to quit Scotland, and to cease from Armes, began now to appear again, having receiv'd a Commission from Prince Charles, to raise Forces for him in Holland and other parts: This the Covenanters, however they could not choofe but know of, yet dissembling, it seems, their knowledge of it, they went on in their Overtures of Treaty with the Prince, who on the other side, finding those of the Covenant to be in a better posture and capacity to help him, then those of his own party, who were in all places at a low Ebb; and considering that his expected Levies would be but a weak Foundation to rely upon, did not think it safe to reject the Overtures that were made to him by the Scots, from whom, during his Abode at St. Germain in France, he expected Letters which were preparing to be sent him from the Parliament, the Copy of which Letters are said to have been, before-hand, conveyed to him by a private Agent residing at Edenburgh, and a Councell being held about them, it was thought fit that the Modell of an Answer should be fram'd to be in a readines against they came.

Montrose's commission from Pr. Charles to raise Forces for him.

D The Prince having long expected the Scots Message at St. Germain, resolved upon a removal from thence to the Isle of Jersey.

E A little before his Departure out of France, the Duke of York came to him, and was Visited by the French King, and Cardinall Mazarine, of whom he humbly Implored Ayde in behalf of his Brother: Whereunto the Cardinall made a very specious Answer, promising all the Favour and Assistance that could be, as soon as the King should have the power and opportunity to serve him: In the mean time, the Duke had a Present given him of 10000 Crowns.

The Duke of York implores Aid of the French King in behalf of the Pr. his Brother. He is presented with a rich Present by the Cardinall. Pr. Charles removes out of France into the Island of Jersey

About the beginning of September, Prince Charles accompanied with his Brother the Duke of York, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen, his whole Retinue amounting in all to about 300 persons, landed in the Island of Jersey, having a little before his departure from St. Germain, Confer'd the Order of the Garter upon Prince Maurice, Prince Edward, and the Duke of Buckingham; and the same Honour was designed for the Marquis of Ormond.

Upon his first Arrivall he was Proclaimed King, and the Lord Ferman formerly Created Earl of Yarmouth, made Governour of the Island, under whom Sir George Carteret was Constituted Deputy Governour: Guernsey being possess'd by the Parliaments Forces, all except Cornes Castle, A Declaration was thought fit to be sent thither, to Invite the Governour and People of that Island, to Submit to the Prince his Obedience: But neither did this Invitation any whit avail, nor those Opportunities that were lookt for, succeed, for the gaining of Dartmouth, and other places in the West by the help of the Levellers, who at that time had made a Defection from the Army, but were immediately Suppress'd and brought to nothing.

The Committee of Estates at St. John, having been a long time in Debate, about the Letter to be sent to Prince Charles their designed King, and about a fit person to be sent with it unto him; they at length made choice of Mr. George Windram Laird of Libberton, who all the while shew'd much unwillingness to take that Employment upon him; and desired to have been excus'd: so that much Importunity was us'd to bring him to accept of it; nor had he been prevailed with, but that they condescended to remit of the strictness of their Demands, and the matter of the Covenant.

Forces land in the Isle of Orkney, and in the North of Scotland.

About the same time there Landed some few Forces in the Isle of Orkney, sent from the Marquess of Montrose, besides some that came out of Ireland into the North of Scotland, with

Sir James Montgomery: for the opposition of these Forces; the Scots began to make preparations, notwithstanding that at the same time they were upon terms of Treaty with their King, for whose Service these Forces were Design'd, having long since Excommunicated Montros, they also gave strict Order for the suppressing of a certain Declaration which he had caused to be published in Scotland, for the justifying of his Proceedings

Mr. Windram
Lord of Liberton, sent Commissioner from the Estates of Scotland to Prince Charles the Scots King.
The Message sent by the Scots to their
King.

On the Five and twentieth of September, Windram was dispatcht away with his Message to the Scots King; he first put in at Zealand, where he lay for some time, expecting a convenient Passage over to Jersey: After his Arrivall, he waited for an Audience, till an Agent that had come from Ireland was dismiss'd, and then being admitted to the Princes Presence to deliver his Message, he presented him with the Desires and Offers of the States of Scotland, which were to this Effect.

'I. That his Majesty would Sign the Solemn League and Covenant of the Three Kingdomes, and pass an Act for all Persons to take it through the Kingdome of Scotland, and Ratifie all that had been done there concerning the same.

'II. That he would pass divers Acts of the Parliament of Scotland, which were Ratified by their two last Sessions: As for his Approbation of their Disclaiming Duke Hamiltons Design, For the receiving of the severall Acts made by the English for the Militia, For the Kings of Scotland to have no Negative Voice in that Parliament.

'III. That he would withdraw his Commissions to the Marquis of Montros, for raising of Forces to be sent over from any Parts beyond the Seas, into the Kingdome of Scotland, and that he would give present Order for the stopping thereof.

'IV. That he would put away all Papists from about him, and let none be of his Councell but known Protestants.

'V. That he would appoint some place about Holland to Treat with Commissioners from the Estates of Scotland, who would then send a Splendid Deputation of Eminent Lords of Scotland to him, to Treat and Conclude there upon all particulars, and that from that time that he should come into Holland, they would provide for him what should be necessary to make him and his Train to Reside there in a Regall Manner.

'VI. That he would give a speedy Answer to their Desires.

These Propositions from the Scots having been receiv'd and read, long it was ere a perfect Answer to them could be agreed on, both in respect of the different Sense, that those about the Prince had of them, and in respect of the Resolves that were to be expected out of France, and other Parts, concerning them, the Prince having it seems Oblieg'd himself not to make an absolute Conclusion in any Matters of Grand Importance, untill he had first acquainted the Queen his Mother with them and expected her Advice about them; Montros being also a Person so much concern'd, it was thought highly expedient to send with all speed that might be, to acquaint him with this Business.

In the mean time, serious and frequent Debates were held among the Lords of his Highness's Councell at Jersey, about the Scots Message; some there were (the most Cordiall Favourers, as it was thought, of Montros's Designs) who Counsell'd the utter rejection of these Propositions, as Dishonourable and Disadvantageous to his Majesties Affairs, but the greater part of those about him were of Opinion, That the safest way would be to accept of those Conditions that were offer'd, and to make a speedy Agreement with that Party of Scotland that was the most prevalent, and by whom he had far greater probability of obtaining the Crown than by Montros's Designs, which were full of Hazard and Uncertainty: to the same effect likewise came Letters from the Queen, urging, that if the Scots Propositions seem'd at present too severe and Insupportable, there might hereafter be offer'd Opportunity enough, as soon as he had obtained the Kingdome, to free himself, at least in some measure from the Inconvenience of them; so that whatever his own Repentments were (as haply those Conditions were not very agreeable to his Mind and Inclination) the main of his Counsells tended to this; That according to the Exigence of his present Affairs, it was absolutely necessary to Comply and Agree with the Kirk of Scotland, and how little shew there was of Contradiction in Montros himself, appears by his own Letter to the Scots King, the Substance whereof was;

I. That his Majesty would hearken to the Scots Commissioners, so far, as if possible, to make an Agreement with them, so that he might be honourably and with Safety admitted into Scotland.

II. That

- A II. That he would not break off with the Kingdom of Scotland, but (so that himself might be safely restored to his Rights and Dignities) that he might give Consent to have him Banish'd the Kingdom of Scotland, that so himself might receive no prejudice by him.

To which the King returned this Answer.

That he had found him so faithfull all along, and to have perform'd such Eminent Services, both to his Father, and to himself, that he could not in Justice, or in Honour leave him; and therefore desired him to urge him no further to it.

Much Debate there was in the Councell, about an Answer to be drawn up to the Scots Message, some Petitioning the King to Reject the Scots Demands; as the Lord Byron, the Lord Cleveland, the Lord Gerard, and others: alledging, That the Scots how fairly soever they promis'd, would in all likelyhood when they had him in their power, be induc'd either out of Fear, or for hopes of Gain to deliver him up to the English, as they had formerly done his Father. Others on the contrary (as the Lords, Piercy, Wentworth, and Wilmot, and the Governour Sir George Carteret) perswading him by all means not to break off with the Scots, but to make use of all Opportunities and Offers that presented themselves to him, to get Footing in Scotland. This late Advice being in all likelyhood the most safe, and most Consistent to Reason, and being backt by the great Sway and Power which the Queen had with her Son, was after long Consultation, and many Reasons urged on both sides, carried by the suffrage of the Major, and the most prevalent Party: yet it required some considerable time before the Answer could be compleated that was to be returned by the Lord of Liberton, who since he could not be dispatcht homeward, so soon as was expected, Sir William Flemming was sent as Agent before hand to Edensburgh, from whence he was to give Advice of the State of Affairs in Scotland, that thereby the Councell might the better know how to proceed in the framing of the Answer.

Besides these Transactions with the Scots, great hope there was still remaining, of raising a sufficient Force in England, among the Friends and Favourers of the Royall Interest there: Upon this Design severall were sent from Jersey into the West of England, among whom Two principal Men, Sir John Berkley, and Colonell Slingsby, who went up and down among their Correspondents, earnestly stirring them up to take Armes for their Prince, were accidentally discovered by a Country Fellow, and thereupon notice being given to the Committee of the County, were enquired after, and Apprehended at Sir Charles Trevannions House, by one Captain Keckwisch, and sent Prisoners to Truro in Cornwall.

Sir John Berkley, and Col. Slingsby apprehended in England.

The Scots King had at this time Ambassadors Residing in the Courts of severall great Princes and States, as the Emperour, the King of Spain, the Duke of Muscovy, the State of Venice, the great Prince of Turkey, and others, to Sollicite their Ayde and Contribution for the recovery of his Fathers Kingdom. Many Complements no doubt they received, and many fair Pretences of their good Will to help him; but for the most part little or nothing beside, so little regarded is the Petition of a Person Deprest in Fortune, though a Prince: The most considerable Embassie, and which was thought most probable to take Effect was that to the King of Spain, which how it Succeeded will appear by the Answer to the Address made by the Lord Cottington Ambassador to that King, when at length he was admitted to have Audience; The Substance of the Embassie was:

Ambassadors from the Sc.K. resident in the Courts of severall Princes.

I. That the Parliament of England having been in Armes against his Father, had prevailed against him, and caused him to be put to Death.

The Lord Cottington's Embassage to the K. of Spain.

II. That he being the Son and Heir of the sayd Charles late King of Great Britain, and Ireland, was yet kept out of his Kingdomes by the aforesaid Parliament.

III. That he desir'd his Neighbourly Assistance, and that he would afford him what Ayde he could, to Establish him into his Rights and Dignities in the Kingdomes.

To this the King of Spain made Answer;

I. That he was sorry for his Fathers ill Success, wishing that he had been more Prosperous.

The King of Spains Answer.

II. That he Condol'd with him for his Fathers Death, and was much Affected with Sorrow, at the manner of it.

III. That concerning the Difference between him and the Parliament, and the Rights A on the one or the other Side; they being Matters out of his Territories and Jurisdiction, he could not take Cognizance of them, nor should he meddle therein; But for any thing within his own Dominions, he should be ready to do him what lawfull Favour he could.

It is in vain to sue for help to those, against whose Interest it is to afford it. This King, notwithstanding the Sorrow he profest for King Charles his Misfortune and Death, thinking it to be most for his Profit to Comply with the prevailing Party, was the first that own'd the Power of the English Common-wealth, and shew'd himself desirous to enter into a League with them.

Guernsey Island attempted by the Scots K.
 Frigors.

Guernsey Island being a place of Importance, and which would have much Conduc'd to Prince Charles his Advantage, preparation was made for the Attacking of it with a Fleet of his Frigors, and his Friends within the Island, upon secret Intimation of the Design were ready to have Contributed their Assistance, but Colonell Russell who was Governour for the Parliament, having a fresh Supply sent him of about Five hundred Men, not only Secur'd the Island, from all danger of an Assault, but gave a strong Alarm to Cornet Castle, whereof Colonell Burges was appointed Governour in the Room of Sir Baldwin Wake, who was Drowned: Nor was it thought safe to continue much longer in the Isle of Jersey, in regard there was a great talk of a Fleet of Ships ordered by the Parliament to be suddainly set out for the Reducing of that Island: So that Care was taken for the speedy dispatch of the Answer to the Committee of Estates of Scotland; To which end, the King and his Lords sat every day close in Councell about it, and though an absolute Resolve could not then be concluded touching every particular of the Scots Message, yet great Diligence was used to deal so effectually with the Laird Liberton, that at his Return he should so represent all things, and with such Advantage, that they might tend to a perfect Agreement, which already was brought so far, that a Treaty was desired to be shortly held at Breda, for the more ample discussing of all matters yet in Controversie. The Answer being drawn up, together with a Letter directed to a Committee of the Kirk Assembly, the Laird Liberton took his leave, and departing from Jersey into France, took Shipping at Havre-de-grace, for Scotland: And now it was also judg'd high time for the King and his Attendants to leave Jersey, and betake themselves to some more secure Place of Abode; to that purpose severall Reasons were presented to him by the Lord Hopton, and others of his Counsell.

The L. Liberton
 departs from Jersey to return for Scotland.

I. That whereas there was a Considerable Fleet of the Parliament of England, come already to Portsmouth, with Store of Provisions; it was necessary to prevent the danger that might fall upon them, in case the sayd Ships should make an Attempt upon the Island, which was the more probable, because there were already Men Landed in Jersey.

II. That if they should lye under that Hazard, they knew not where to expect Relief, except all other Services should be neglected, and Prince Rupert and Montros called thither, which would be the Ruine of their Designs.

III. That their Removall would give great Satisfaction to the Kingdome of Scotland, and be an Encouragement to their Friends in England.

IV. That thereby they should be the more free from Hazards and Dangers, both as to themselves and others that should make Addresses to them.

The Sc. King leaves Jersey, and returns into France.

These things being Maturely Considered, a speedy removall out of the Isle of Jersey was resolved upon, and from thence the King went back again into France, where he Resided with his Mother, the late Queen of England, till the time appointed for the Treaty at Breda drew neer.

Immediately after the Departure of Windram, a Letter was sent away to Montros, to acquaint him with the Result of these Transactions at Jersey; which Letter was as followeth,

Most Dear and Well-beloved Cousin,

The Sc. K. Letter to Montros.

WE have received Letters from our Kingdome of Scotland, of which you receive herewith a Copy, by which Our Subjects Demand of Us, That We would please to acknowledge for lawfull, their Parliament, and particularly the two last Sessions of that Assembly, which being obtained of Our Grace, they offer to send Us their Deputies, with full Commission to Treat with Us, of the means to re-establish Peace and Obedience in that Kingdome. We have made them an Answer, That We have made known to their Envoy, the place where We desired their Deputies should come to Us with all diligence: And to the end you should not apprehend that

A^c that by Our Letters, or by the Treaty, We had any Design to hinder the Affairs We ' had Committed to you, We have thought fit to let you know, that as We judge the ' Levies you have made for Our Service, to have been a powerfull Motive to Oblige
 ' them to send their Deputies, and to enter into Treaty with us; So We also believe, that ' the progress you shall make in your generous Designs, will dispose them to Treat
 ' with the more Moderation, to the end the whole Realm may again happily return
 ' under our Obedience. We assure you we have not the least thought to derogate ' from that ample Commission which we have given you, nor do diminish that Au' thority in which We have Invested you by Our Letters Patents; And We do pro-
 B^m mise you also, if it shall come to pass, that We shall enter into any good Intelligence
 ' with our Subjects, We shall have so much Care of your proper Interest, that all ' the World shall see how much We esteem your Person, and what Confidence We ' have in your Conduct and your Courage, whereof not only the late King Our Fa' ther, but Our Self also have receiv'd proofs both by what you have done and suffered ' for Us; Meantime, you shall understand that We have qualified the Assembly of ' Our Subjects, with the Appellation of the Committee of Estates, which We have ' done only for this Treaty, which if it shall not succeed as We desire; as We know
 ' already this Qualification of the privy Signet does not at all Authorise them to be C^such: So We shall then forthwith Declare for what We hold them, notwithstanding ' this Title which We have given them, both for their own proper satisfaction, and
 ' as also to make known to all the World, that We desire to bring back our Subjects
 ' of the Kingdome of Scotland to their Duty, rather by wayes of sweetness and Amity,
 ' then by the Rigour of Our Armes, if their Obstinacy and the Injustice of their De' mands should constrain Us to recover it by force. We therefore do hereby give you
 ' full Power to proceed Vigorously in your Enterprises, not doubting, but all Our ' Loyall Subjects of Scotland will joyn themselves with you, and by that means, all D^those who are otherwise disposed, will submit themselves to reason in that Treaty ' which We now accept, or shall be forc'd thereto by Armes.
 ' To this We permit you to publish these Presents, and to Communicate them to
 ' such as you shall judge fit. So We pray God to preserve you most Dear Cousin.

The Laird Liberton being returned to Edenburrrough, great expectation there was of what E Answer he brought from the Scots King, to the Propositions that had been sent him, and what likelihood of his Compliance with them: To particular persons that enquired any thing of him, concerning the Result of his Negotiation, he answered with a politick Reservedness, as not intending to Impart the utmost that he knew, only in generall terms he spoke as handsomely as he could in Favour and Advantage of the Prince, and of his Inclination to Correspond with them in all things which he thought just and reasonable. Moreover affirming, that he had Declared this to be his Resolution, To do for, and stand by the Kingdome of Scotland in an especiall manner. This gave occasion to people to pass their Censures upon the Laird Liberton, according to their severall Fancies, some saying, that this Embassie of his had made him a Compleat Courtier; others, that by his long Converse with the Royall Party, and the private Instructions of some of the Councill at Jersey prevailing with him, he was himself become a F Royallist.

The L. Liberton
 Arrives at Edenburgh.

As soon as the Committee of Estates and Assembly of the Kirk were met, he delivered his Message and Letters to them from their Declared King, acquainting them also by Word of Mouth, how far he seem'd Inclined to Condescend to their Propositions, Namely,

He delivers his Message & Letters to the Committee of Estates and Assembly of the Kirk.

As to the Ratifying all that the Parliament of Scotland did in their Two last Sessions, so far as concerns the Kingdome of Scotland. That there be a generall Act of Oblivion: And that Montrois and those of Duke Hamilton's Engagement bear no publick Office without Consent of Parliament.
 And for the Concluding of a perfect Agreement, if it were possible, with his Subjects of Scotland, he had willed and appointed a Solemn Treaty to be held at Breda, upon the Fifteenth of March next ensuing.

© The Form of the Message to the Committee of Estates, was as followeth.

For the Committee of the Estates of Scotland,

CHARLES R.

WE have received your Letters lately presented unto us, by Mr. Windram of Liberton, and we accept Graciously all the Expressions of Affection and Fidelity therein

The Sr. R.
 Message to the Committee of Estates.

therein contained towards us, with your tender Resentment of our present Condition, and A the just Indignation which you profess to have against the Execrable Murder of your Father; And we believe that your Intentions are as full of Candor towards us, as we are and alwaies really have been desirous to settle a clear and right Intelligence between us and our Subjects of our Ancient Kingdome of Scotland, which may be an assured Foundation of their Happines and Peace for the time to come, and an Effectuall Means to root out all the Seeds of Animosity and Divisions caused by these late Troubles. And also to reunite the Hearts and Affections of our Subjects one to another, and of them all to us their King and lawfull Sovereign; to the end that by their Obedience to our Royall and just Authority, we may be put into a Condition to maintain them in Peace and Prosperity, and to B Protect them in their Religion and Liberty, as it appertains to us, according to our Charge and Office of a King. And as we have alwaies resolved to Contribute what ever is to be done by us to obtain these good Effects, and for the just satisfaction of all our Subjects in this Kingdome.

We have now thought fit upon the return of Mr. Windram, to Command and desire you to send unto us Commissioners sufficiently Authorized, to Treat and Agree with us, both in Relation to the Interest and just Satisfaction of our Subjects there; as also concerning the Ayde and Assistance which in all Reason we may expect from them, to bring and reduce the Murderers of our late most dear Father of happy Memory, to Condign Punishment, and to recover our just Rights in all our Kingdomes. And we will that they attend us on the Fifteenth Day of the Month of March, at the Town of Breda, where we intend to be in Order thereunto: And in Confidence of a Treaty, as also to make known to you, and to all the World, that we sincerely desire to be agreed; We have resolved to Address these unto you, under the Name and Title of a Committee of Estates of our Kingdome of Scotland; And will, and expect that you use this Grace no otherwise for any Advantage, to the prejudice of us, or our Affairs, beyond what we have given this Qualification and Title for, Namely, only, For the Treaty, and in Order to it; Althoug we have D Considerations sufficient, and very Important to Dissuade and Oblige us, to do nothing in this kind Antecedently at this time. Also we hope the Confidence which we Declare to have in your clear and Candid Intentions towards us, will furnish you with strong Arguments, to form in your selves a Mutuall Confidence in us, which by the blessing of God Almighty, by your just and prudent Moderation, and by that greatest desire that we have to Oblige all our Subjects of that Kingdom, and by the Means of the Treaty which we attend and hope for, maybe a good Foundation of a full and happy Peace, and an assured Security to this Nation for the time to come, which we assure you is wished of us with Passion, and which we shall endeavour by all means in our Power to Effect. E

Their Consultations about it.

To the same Effect also was the Letter to the Committee of the Kirk, which as soon as they met was delivered to them; the Message having been received and perused by the Committee of Estates, they choose out of themselves a Sub-committee, consisting of Nine Lords and Burgeses, to consider what was most expedient to be done therein, and to present their Opinions to the whole Committee of Estates, which not long after Conven'd again for the receiving of the Reports from the Sub-committee, and so to prepare and state the Matter, that it might be presented to the Parliament of Scotland, which was shortly to Assemble: And moreover for the more speedy and effectuall carrying on of the Business, there was afterwards F Chosen a Joynt Committee, out of the Committee of Estates, and that of the Kirk by common Consent, to consider what was to be done, about sending of Commissioners to their King, and so to make Report, the One to the Committee of Estates, the Other to the Committee of the Kirk. Much Debate there was, and it is said, much Clashing between those of the Committee of Estates, and those of the Kirk, in regard the last Sort being more Rigid and Jealous of their Kings Designs, would have had new Propositions drawn up, much higher by far then any thing that had been formerly presented; As that if he came into Scotland, he should be altogether guided by them, and he should cast off Montros, and all others of their Enemies: With other things of the like Nature; but those of the Committee of Estate were the more prevalent, and at length, the Matter was accorded between them, and Commissioners were joyntly Chosen by them to G be sent to their King: Those sent from the Committee of Estates, were the Earl of Castles, the Lord Loshian, the Laird Bursley, and the Laird Liberton, Sir John Smith, and Mr. Jeoffres, those from the Committee of the Kirk, were Mr. Broady, Mr. John Lawson, and Mr. James Wood.

Commissioners sent to Treat with the Sc. K. at Breda.

The Commissioners Arriving at Breda, before their King was come thither, went the next day to meet him on the Way, and at Berghen-ap-Zoom, they met and came together to Breda, on the Sixteenth of March; on the Eighteenth they were Visited by the Earls of Landerdales, Callender, and Dumferling, and the next day they were Conducted by the Lord Wentworth Master of the

the

A the Ceremonies, in the Kings Coach, which was sent to receive them unto a Chamber, where the King sat ready to give them Audience, while the Lords of his Councell, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen were present; The Earl of Castles made his Address in the name of the rest of the Commissioners, and presenting the Message from the Committee of Estates, spake to this Effect.

The Earl of Castles his Speech to the Se. K.

‘That the Kingdome of Scotland upon his late Message, together with the Confid‘eration of all former Overtures with him, have now again sent to him these Propo‘sitions, which they humbly tender to his Majesty; Not that they have thoughts to ‘force him to a Compliance, through his Necessity, to his prejudice, or weary him
B ‘by Importunities; but by making their Loyall Addressees to him, by this their hum‘ble Submission, in which, their Desires, they hope, will appear so reasonable and ‘just, that he will soon condescend unto them: which they humbly beg at his hands.
‘Assuring him that by that means he will be most powerfull in the Advancing and E‘stablishing his Throne, it being the Nature of his Loyall Subjects, and all truly No‘ble Minds, to be soonest overcome with such Allurements.

‘That in these their humble Addresses, they did manifest to the World their Loy‘alty and Constancy to him, neither was it their purpose to Flatter, but to be Faithfull ‘and Free. That if he would please to Condescend to what was propounded by the C ‘Kingdome of Scotland, it would make him happy, and give them some hopes to live ‘at Peace, under the shadow of the Wings of his Government.

Then the Commissioners from the Kirk presenting themselves, one Mr. Levinston made a short Speech, in which, He prest his Majesty to hearken to the joynt Desires of the Estates and Kirk of Scotland, that so he might enjoy the Blessing of God, and be received by his People in Comfort and Peace, to promote the Work of the Lord, and make them happy.

Mr. Levinston's Address to him.

Afterwards their Commissions being Demanded, they produced them, and at the same time delivered him the Propositions and Letters from the Estates and Kirk of Scotland, the Propo-D sitions were as followeth;

‘I. That all those who have been, and continue Excommunicate by the Kirk of Scotland, may be removed from having Access to the Court.

The Propositions of the Estates and Kirk of Scotland.

‘II. That he would be pleased to Declare, that he would by Solemn Oath, under his ‘Hand and Seal, allow the Nationall Covenant of Scotland, and the Solemn League ‘and Covenant of Scotland, England, and Ireland, and that he would prosecute the E ‘Ends thereof in his Royall Station.

‘III. That he would Ratifie and Approve all Acts of Parliaments, enjoying the ‘Solemn League and Covenant, and Establishing Presbyterian Government, the Di‘rectory of Worship, the Confession of Faith, and Catechisme in the Kingdome of ‘Scotland, as they are already approved by the Generall Assembly of the Kirk, and by ‘the Parliament of that Kingdome. And that he would give his Royall Assent to the ‘Acts of Parliament, enioyning the same in the rest of his Dominions; and that he ‘would observe the same in his own Practice and Family, and never make Opposition ‘therein, or endeavour any Change thereof.

F ‘IV. That he would Consent and Agree, that all Matters Civill might be Determi‘ned by the present and subsequent Parliaments of the Kingdome of Scotland, and all ‘Matters Ecclesiasticall by the ensuing Generall Assembly of the Kirk, as was former‘ly Condescended and Agreed to by his late Father.

After the reading of these Propositions, and the Letters, the King returned Answer:

That he would take these things into Consideration, and doubted not to give them such a full Answer, as should give them and his Kingdome of Scotland ample Satisfaction.

The Se. K. Answer.

G And so they were for that time dismiss.

In this Treaty at Breda as formerly in those Overtures at Jersey, were many Demurs in regard of Montross his Interest, and the Power that his chief Friends and Sticklers had at Court, and haply it was by their Intigation, that it was further demanded of the Scotch Commissioners by their King;

Whether

Whether these Papers they had delivered to him, contained all Particulars which they had to Propound A or Desire? Whether they had Power to Recede from any Particular proposed, or to be proposed? Also what they had further to propound, for the carrying on of his Service against England.

To which they Answered; That they had acquainted him with the utmost of their Power and Instructions.

Then followed great Debates on both Sides, concerning the severall Heads of the Treaty; The main thing stuck at by the Scots King, was, the Business of the Covenant, which was as mainly pressed upon him by the Commissioners, who also gave a solemn Visit to the Prince of Orange, desiring him to be a Mediatour betwixt them and their King, and it is said, that they endeavoured to have transfer'd the Treaty to the Hague, as hoping to find there more effectually wayes for a Mediation, which Intention of theirs notwithstanding was soon altered. About the same time, the Scots King withdrawing himself for awhile from Breda (perhaps to Consult with the Prince of Orange, off the Queen of Bohemia, or some other of his Friends, what were best for him to Resolve on) gave occasion to the generality of people to suspect that he had a Resolution to break off the Treaty; but by his quick Return thither again, it appear'd only to have been Intermitted, and not quite broken off; for then they renew'd their Consultations, and the rest of the Propositions were taken into Debate; as, That for the Confirming of all that had been done by the Parliaments of Scotland in some late Sessions: And For the not admitting Montros, or any of his Adherents into that Kingdome.

The Earl of Carnwarth and Mr. Murry arrive at Breda, with further Instructions to the Scots Commissioners.

There likewise came the Earl of Carnwarth, and Mr. Murry of the late Kings Bed-chamber, from Scotland, with Letters containing further Instructions from the Committee of Estates, to the Commissioners at Breda.

In the mean time, the Earl of Landerdale, and other Scotch Lords that were of the Court were still earnestly labouring with their King, to bring him to an absolute Condescension to the Scots Desires; the like also did the Lords, Piercy, Wilmot, and others of his Councell: so that what with the assiduous Sollicitations of these Lords, and the Consideration of the tottering posture of his Affairs abroad, both in Ireland, Montros's Army, and the Navy Commanded by Prince Rupert, he was so far wrought upon, as that he judg'd it his most convenient Course to come to a speedy Agreement with the Scots Commissioners, notwithstanding that the contrary Faction about him perswaded him (as formerly, during the Laird Libbertons Negotiation at Jersey) not to trust himself into the hands of the Scots.

While now the Treaty at Breda was almost brought to a conclusion, Montros, being, as it is probable, not altogether ignorant of Proceedings there, and fearing lest, if the Agreement between the Scots, and their King, should be absolutely made up, and that Article among the rest which concern'd him in particular, should be Sign'd before his Arrivall in Scotland, his Hopes and Endeavours for his Princes Service would thereby be utterly overthrown, and he himself, as he had formerly been forc'd to leave Scotland at the Command of the late King, and through the Instigation of the Scots, should now at the Command of the Son, the same Parties Instigating, be forc'd to keep away from thence, made therefore all possible speed into Scotland, having sent the greatest part of his Forces before him, under the Command of Sir John Urry, and others, about the Tenth of April, 1650. he Arriv'd himself at the Isle of Orkney, ha sting to joyn with the Lords Napier, Frendraught and Pittfoder, and expected the coming up of Pluscardy to his Ayde, with Two thousand Men, rais'd out of the Earl of Seaforth's Territories, while Lieutenant Generall David Lesly was Marching against them with Seven thousand Foot, and Thirty Troops of Horse, they took Dunbeth House by Surrender, from the Earl of Sutherland: But long before the coming up of Generall Lesly with his Army, a considerable Party of Montros's his Forces, Commanded by Montros and Urry in person, were set upon at Corbisdell, by Lieutenant Colonell Straughan (who had been sent before from the Main Army, to Command those Troops that lay about Ross and Innerness) and it seems utterly beaten and dispers'd, and that so strangely and Fatally, that a man would wonder, if, as the Scots report, Straughan's Men consisting of his own, Collonell Kerr's, Kolonell Montgomery's, Lieutenant Colonell Hacket's Troops, and another, amounted in all but to Two hundred and thirty; whereas Montros's his Party were at least Twelve hundred, and their chief Leaders such Resolute and Expert Soldiers, unless struck with a Pannick Fear, upon an Apprehension that Lesly's great Army had been come up against them: However it were, so great was the Defeat, that of the whole Body of the Montrossians who Engaged in this Battell, there Escaped not above an Hundred, from being either taken, or slain; Among the Prisoners were, Sir John Urry, Major Generall of Montros's his Army, the Lord Frendraught, Collonell Gray, Lieutenant Colonell Stuart, with a great number more of other considerable Officers: Montros himself made a shift to escape for the present, but his Horse, together with his Belt and his Coat, with the Star, being found, made it Conjectured that he had been slain in the Field. In this Fight the Royall Standard was taken, upon which was Protraited the Head of the late King lying a bleeding, and severed from the Body; and the Lord Pittfoder's Son who was Standard-bearer was slain, Lieutenant Colonell Straughan received a Shot upon his Belly, but in regard it lighted upon the double of his Belt and Buff Coar, he had no harm thereby.

Montros's lands with Forces in Scotland.

He is defeated by Straughan.

So Welcome was the News of this Victory to the State and Kirk of Scotland, that they bestowed as a Reward upon Straughan a Thousand pounds Sterling, and a Chain of Gold: Upon Lieutenant Colonell Hacket a Thousand Mark Sterling; But that which Crown'd this Victory to them

A them with the highest Joy and Satisfaction, was the getting of Montrose his person into their Power; for he having wandred so long in the Woods, to avoid being detected, till he was driven to that Necessity, as to eat his Gloves, and gnaw a piece of his flesh for very extremity of hunger, was at length discovered by a Country Fellow, and by a Party sent to apprehend him, dragg'd out of some kind of Cave, or hollow Tree; he was no sooner taken, but immediately sent up to Edenborough, whose Streets were filled with infinite Crouds of people thronging to see him, while he was brought into the City in a Cart, in which was placed a Chaire for him to sit in, whereunto he was bound with a Rope, and bare-headed; his Hat having been taken off by the Executioner who Rode before him with his Bonnet on: Wounds he had many upon his Body, but such, as it is thought, might have been easily Cured, had he not been so suddenly taken off by a violent Death; Some there were that pitied him, but the greatest party, as it is usuall when men are in Adversity, insulted and triumpht over him: Being Summoned to appear before the Lords, Barons, and Burgessees, Assembled in Parliament, he came into the House Apparell'd in a very rich Suit, thick over-layd with costly Lace, and over it a Scarlet Rocket, a Beaver Hat with a very rich Hatband upon it, Carnation Silk Stockings, Carters, and Roses, with other Habiliments suitable, all which he had caused to be made for him, immediately upon his coming to Edenborough, as if he had been going rather about some Festivall then Tragical Affair; As soon as he was brought to the Bar of the House, the Lord Chancellour (who according to the Custome of that Kingdome is alwaies Speaker) told him first, That he must kneel at the Bar; Whereunto he Answered, My Lord, I shall with all my heart observe any Posture you shall appoint me, to appear before you in, whereby I may manifest to you, that I freely submit to the Authority of Parliament, and to this present Parliament in a more especiall manner, because you have concluded so neer a Conjunction with his Majesty my Master in the late Treaty. Then the Chancellour made a Speech to him, the Substance whereof was this.

He is taken Prisoner.

Brought to Edenborough.

He is brought to his Tryall in Parliament.

Sir,

'I am Commanded to mind you of the last Judgment of God befallen you, for your perfidious breaking of the Covenant, which might justly provoke God thus to divert your Counsells and Affairs, for having been so eminent an Author and Actor of Mischief against this Nation, You Abandoned the Covenant, and despised the Oath of God, and did Invade your Native Country, and with most Inhumane and Barbarous Cruelty did burn and waste divers parts thereof, and have spilt much blood of his Majesties good Subjects, taking Advantage of that time, when the prime Commanders and Forces thereof were Employ'd elsewhere. For these Crimes you were Excommunicated by the Church, and sore Faulted by the Parliament of this Kingdome, and yet still continued in the highest Contempt against God, under that fearfull Sentence of Excommunication; And to this day have you remained without the smallest shew of Repentance. And God by his Providence hath now E justly brought you hither to receive the Sentence of your Condemnation.

The Lord Chancellors Speech to him.

Hereupon Montrose humbly desiring to know of his Lordship, whether it were the *Parliament*s pleasure that he might be permitted to speak what he had to say for himself, and humbly craving that Liberty from them, he was told by the Chancellour, That the Estates in Parliament did give him free liberty to speak what he could say for himself. Then Montrose;

My Lord, said he,

'I am glad that I may have Liberty to Answer for my self, though I am here your F Prisoner, yet my Cause is good; Nor is there any Breach of the Covenant on my part, in which I Swore to be true to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors. Concerning what I have done in relation to the Wars and Affairs of this Kingdome, I had not only a Generall Commission, but particular Orders for what I have done from his Majesty, which I was Engag'd to Obey by the said Covenant. And concerning my coming over now, I was Ascertain'd that you had profest to Comply with his Majesty in the present Affairs in which he hath Employed me; and upon that Account it was that I have Acted. I desire to refer my self, and do submit unto this present Parliament, and the Authority thereof to be my Judges in this Case, whom G I own as a true Parliament, by Authority from his Majesty, and I shall be content, however it shall please God to deal with me. As for my Life, if you take it away by this Authority, it is well known unto the World that I regard it not; Death is a Debt which all owe, and must once be paid by every One: And I shall be willing and much rejoyce to go the same way which my Master passed before me; and it is the Joy of my heart, not only to do, but also to suffer for Him.

His Answer.

After

After he had been thus Examined and Tryed, and Commanded to withdraw, the Parliament A were not very long Debating the Matter, ere they unanimously resolved to proceed to Sentence of Condemnation, which, he being called in again, was Denounced against him in this Form.

The Sentence pronounced against him in Parliament.

'You are to be carried back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you are to Morrow, being the One and twentieth of May, 1650. to be carried to Edenburgh Cross, and there to be Hanged upon a Gallows Thirty Foot high, for the space of Three Hours, and then to be taken down, and your Head to be cut off upon a Scaffold, and hanged on Edenborough Talbooth, and your Legs and Armes to be hanged up in other publick Towns in this Kingdome, and your Body to be Buried at B the place where you shall be Executed, except the Kirk shall take off your Excommunication, then your Body shall be Buried at the Common Place of Buriall.

He is brought to Execution and hang'd upon a Gallows 30 Foot high.

After the Denouncing of the Sentence, at which he altered not his Countenance, or seemed in the least manner to be moved, he was again Guarded back, and Workmen forthwith set a-work for the Erecting of a Scaffold, and Gallows, and the One and twentieth of May, the day appointed for this Tragedy being come, he was led forth to his Execution, at which time, so winning was his Deportment, and his Speeches so powerfull, that they made a very great Impression upon the Spirits of the People, inasmuch, as some who observ'd the Passages of his Death, were of Opinion that he had drawn away more from the Kirk-Party by his manner of dying, then he could have Vanquish'd in the Field by the force of Armes.

Thus was this Famous, but unfortunate man, Sacrificed to the Revenge of the Scotch Covenanters, after a most shamefull and despitefull manner, even at that very time when they were Treating with their King, whom they knew full well to have a very great regard and Affection for him. Together with Montrose, though not in so disgracefull a way, were Executed, Two other chief Men of his Party, as Sir John Urry Major Generall to Montrose, and Colonell Sporfwood Laird of Darcy (who by his own Confession was one of those who a Twelve month before at the Hague, Assassinated Doctor Dorilaus, Agent in Holland for the English Commonwealth) who had both the Favour to be Beheaded.

While these Transactions were in Scotland, the Treaty still went on at Breda, yet not without D some Controversie and Demur, especially about the Business still of the Covenant: The Scots King Arguing, That the Covenant by them tendered, is the Subjects Covenant to bind them to him, and not for him to take, to Swear to himself, so that he thought it sufficient to pass an Act for his People to take it. As for the Militia, he offered to Confirm it in the hands of the Estates for five years; Provided, that afterwards it might return to himself. He likewise offered to Confirm the Presbyterian Government in Scotland: Provided, that he himself might have alwaies Three Chaplains with him of his own Election.

The Treaty at Breda concluded.

And some particulars there were, as the passing of the late Acts of the Parliament of Scotland, and the Prohibition of Montrose's his Command, which were brought to a full Agreement, but upon the news of the Scots extream Rigour and Cruelty towards Montrose, it was believ'd by E many, that their King would have been so far Incens'd, as utterly to have broke off the Treaty; but it seems he judg'd it not Conduceable to his present Affairs, to take so much notice of it, as thereby to break off with his Subjects of Scotland, but rather to make the utmost Tryall of the Reality of their Intentions toward him; So that notwithstanding Montrose's his Death, a sudden Conclusion, such as it was, was put unto this Treaty: however the Scots King did not omit to express his ill Repentment of their Proceedings, by this ensuing Message sent them by Mr. Murry.

The Sc. King Letter to the Scots about their severe proceedings against Montrose and others.

'That he was very sorrowfull and grieved, to hear a Report which came to him by F Credible Persons, that notwithstanding those hopefull Overtures lately made between him and them, tending to their Peace: Yet that there hath been some Blood shed of late of his good Subjects of the Kingdome of Scotland, and that the manner and result thereof according to the Reports he had heard of it, did very much trouble him, but that he might know the Particulars more certainly, he desired to understand the Business fully from themselves, of whom he requir'd an Account.

To which they return'd for Answer this lame Excuse.

Their Answer.

'Having profess'd their Affections to him, and how much they Rejoyc'd at his Engagements, to Concur with them in a happy Agreement; They desire him not to G stumble at some seeming Obstacles, as the Death of Montrose, or their Reducing of his Forces; Assuring him that there was nothing in what they did, but to Accomplish his Ends, and to serve his Interests to his best Advantage.

The Treaty of Breda being Concluded, it was notwithstanding Debated in the Parliament of Scotland,

A Scotland, whether any more Addressee should be made to their King; there were Thirty who gave their Negative Voyces, but by the Major Part it was carried in the Affirmative: And thereupon another Message was resolv'd upon to be sent unto him; wherein they Invited him, To make all possible speed in coming to them, and Protested that they would Assist him with their Lives and Fortunes, to Establish him in his Throne. Yet withall they forbore not to signifie unto him their having some Testimonies to produce of his Ailings, by Letters to Montros (for belike they had Intercepted Three or Four of the Kings Letters to him) contrary to his Promise to them at the Treaty at Breda, however that they were willing to pass over what was past (Wonderfull Clemency) so that he would without delay, according to the Articles of Agreement, come over into Scotland, and Comply with his Parliament, and the Kirk.

Another Message of the Scots to their King.

B And thenceforth there being a generall Expectation of his Coming, great Preparations were made for his Reception, Two of the chief Houses in Edenborough were Richly Furnisht, and the Parliament took into Consideration the Nominating of Officers for his House, who were such only as they thought fit to place about him, for he was not only not permitted to have those to Wait upon him, whom he chiefly Favoured, and whom he thought were best Affected toward him; but besides, that severall great Scotch Lords, as Duke Hamilton, the Earls of Lauderdale, and Seaforth, with many other Persons of Qualiry, who were with him all along in Jersey, and Holland, were Prohibited by Proclamation from returning into Scotland; many more also who had been Officers in Montros's Army were put to Death.

Preparations for his reception.

C About the beginning of June, the Scots King took Shipping for Scotland, at Scheveling in Hollana: He was in some danger of certain English Vessells that Waited about that Coast to Way-lay him, but with much ado he made a shift to escape them, and Landed safe at a Place called the Spy, in the North of Scotland. The Estates in the mean time, and Parliament of Scotland, Employed their Consultations about the forming of an Army for the Service of their King, as they pretended, and an Act was publisht for the Training of every Fourth Man through the Kingdom, who was capable to bear Armes, the Earl of Leven was made Generall of the Foot, and Holborn Major Generall, David Lesley Lieutenant Generall of the Horse, and Montgomery Major Generall, the Supream Command of the whole Army being reserved for their King himself, whom at his first Arrivall they Entertained with high Complements, and much Acclamation, and seem'd to Congratulate his coming with great Demonstrations of Joy and Affection; And on the Fifteenth of July solemnly Proclaimed him King at Edenburgh Cross, and had Design'd (had not certain Obstacles come in the way) to have Crown'd him the following Month: But he had not been long among them, ere they began according to their usuall manner, to Curb him, and to hold him to hard Conditions.

He lands at the Spy in the North of Scotland.

D At Dundee new Propositions were by Commissioners from the Parliament and Kirk sent unto him to Sign; And not long after when the Town of Aberdeen presented him with 1500 pounds, the Committee of Estates sent to divers Places, enjoying them what ever Money or Plate they had to bestow; to bring it into the Publick Treasury appointed by that Committee; so that it seems their King must not be Master of any Money more then what they were pleased to Allow him: Then they began afresh to busie themselves about reforming his Retinue, and purging his House of those Malignants, as they call'd them, whom he had gotten into his Service, Interdicting them also all Employment both about his Person, and in the Army: As for himself, he had a strong Guard continually about him, to Attend him, and watch his Motions.

Is proclaimed King at Edenburgh Cross.

E The Republick of England, having sufficient Intelligence of the Scots Proceedings in their Treaty with their King, and of their Engagement therein to Establish him in the Throne of England, thought it best by a seasonable prevention to Invaide them first, and thereupon resolv'd upon open War with Scotland, and the preparing of an Army to send against that Kingdom. They had at this time sufficient Forces to spare, and no great Matter to Divert them; Ireland was in a fair way to be wholly Subdued, and Cromwell leaving his Son-in-law Irton, Deputy in his stead, and other notable Commanders to finish the Conquest there he had so successfully begun, return'd into England, and was made chief General of all the Parliaments Forces in the Room of the Lord Fairfax, who (I know not by what Reasons Induc'd) layd down his Commission.

New propositions sent to him to sign.

F About this time, the Parliament sent a Complaint to the King of Spain, about the death of one Ascham, who having been sent Agent from them to that Kingdom, was slain, together with his Interpreter Signour Riba, by a Combination of Six or Seven Men at Madrid; As Doctor Dorislaus had been about a Twelve Month before in Holland: The Conspirators though they fled to some Religious House, the common Sanctuary in those Countries for all kind of Malefactors, were yet pursued by Justice, and all except one Apprehended and Imprison'd, which bred a great Contest between the King and the Church, who stood high upon the Vindication of their Priviledges, which by this Act, they sayd, were Violated.

The Republick of England prepare to send an Army against Scotland.

Cromwell returns out of Ireland. Is made General of the Parli. Forces in the room of Fairfax. Ascham the English Agent slain at Madrid.

G From Holland came the Lord Gerard Scarph, with Commission to Treat about a fair Correspondence and Commerce with England; and not many Months after, Oliver St. John, and Walter Strickland were sent into Holland, but being Affronted and ill used by the common people, they returned home in Discontent.

Overtures of Treaty between Holland and England.

The Differences between the King of Portugal, and the English State, about the Harboursing of Prince Rupert and his Ships, continued yet very hot, but the Portugal suffered great Prejudice by it, many rich Prizes being taken upon his own Coast by Generall Blake, who also not long after pursued Prince Rupert's Fleet toward the Coast of Spain, and utterly destroyed it.

The English Army under the Conduct of Cromwell, now Lord Generall, Advanced toward Scotland, on the Twenty eighth of June, and when they came upon the Borders, they sent the Scots a Declaration from the Parliament, and another of their own, to justify their Proceedings, and to shew the Grounds and Reasons of this their Advancing against them. As for the Scots, they seem'd to be much startled at this sudden Invasion, without any Warning given, and directed severall Papers to Sir Arthur Haslerigge, in which they Expostulated the Matter, and urg'd the Solemn Covenant, and the former Union between the Two Nations: but neither what the one side declar'd, or what the other urg'd, could ought avail to allay the Hostility that was begun between them.

At Muscleborough the English were set upon by Major Generall Montgomery, and Colonell Stranghan, yet they not only defended themselves, but also Charged the Scots, Routed them, and did great Execution upon them. The next piece of Action was the taking of Collington House, and Readhall, and then the English moved forward, and Encamped within a litle of the Scotch Army.

The Parliament in England at the same time, were no less Active in carrying on the Designs and Interests of their Common-wealth; in Order to which, they caused the Statues of the late King, the one over the North entrance of the Royal Exchange, the other at the West end of Pauls, to be thrown down and Demolish'd, and ordered his Armes to be Erased out of all Churches and publick Places, in the Room of which the States Armes were set up.

Who ever were taken either Actually, or in Design, raising Armes, or acting Violence against the present Establish'd Government, or had receiv'd Commissions to that intent and purpose, from Charles Stuart the Declared King of the Scots, were to be proceeded against as Capitall Offenders, and punish't with Death; among the Number of which, was one Colonell Eusebius Andrews, who having been found with a Commission from the said Scots King, was Condemned of Treason, and beheaded at Tower-hill.

The Scotch and English Armies having for some space moved at a small distance one from the other without Engaging, came at length to Dunbar, where the Scots had the English Army at a great Advantage by reason of a Pass at Copperspath whereof they had possess't themselves, but by the Care and Industry of the English Generall, whose Vigilancy, to say the truth, made him never to be overcome, his Men not only wound themselves out of those Straights to which they were reduc'd, but also clearly made that Victory their own which the Scots had so surely promised to themselves: In this Battell there were slain of the Scots Three thousand, and the Lord Libberton, and Colonell Lumsden mortally Wounded, Ten thousand taken, together with Sir James Lumsden Lieutenant General of the Foot, and about Two hundred and sixty other Officers, Two hundred Colours, Fifteen thousand Armes, and Thirty Pieces of Ordnance.

Immediately after this famous Victory, Cromwell made himself Master of the City of Edenborough, and of Leith: and the next considerable Enterprize he went upon, was the Reducing of the strong Castle of Edenborough, to which end all kind of Preparations necessary for a hard Siege were made.

On the Eighth of September, the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter to the late King, died at Canisbrook Castle in the Isle of Wight; her Death much grieved her Brother the Scots King, more, some think, then the Defeat at Dunbar, since he could not but Imagin, that the Covenanters by how much the more Successfull, so much the more Imperious would they have been toward him, and so ill did he already brook their hard Impositions, their earnestness to purge his House, and their Extorting a Declaration from him against his own Proceedings and best affected Party, that great Differences and Animosities dally encreased between him and them, insomuch that at length, he evaded his Guards, and went secretly away in much Discontent, accompanied only with Four Horsemen toward the North of Scotland, where the Marquis of Huntley, the Earls of Arboly and Seaforth, the Lords Ogleby and Newburgh with the Guardians, and the men of Arboly were ready to appear for him, and were able to make up in all a considerable Force, Major Generall Middleton was thought also to be among them.

This sudden and secret Departure of the King did very much trouble the Committee of Estates at St. Johnstons, especially for that they fear'd he was going to Middleton, and the Arboly Men, to quiet whom they first offered an Act of Indemnity; when that avail'd nor, but that they fell upon Sir John Brown's Regiment, slaying and taking Prisoners, many of his Men Lieutenant Gen. David Lesly was sent against them. Likewise what Course to take about their King, there were Grand Consultations, and much Controversie and Dissention among them; Some were of the mind, that since he had thus deserted them, they ought not to trouble themselves any more about him, but to leave him to himself and his own waies: Others judg'd it more convenient to send to him, to let him understand their Resentment of his going from them, and adhering to Malignants. Nor were there wanting of the great Lords of Scotland, such as were Active Sticklers for the King; for besides those purely of his Interest, who were crept into Play by degrees, there were other Lords of the Kirk Party, who were at last become very inclinable toward him, but there was also a different Faction of the Covenanters that Associated chiefly in the West, and some parts of the South of Scotland, more rigid and cross then any of the rest, who set forth a large Remonstrance to the Committee of Estates, wherein,

They

A They Taxt them of too much Hast and Precipitation in their Treaty with their King, of their Entertaining and Receiving him among them, before he had given any convincing Evidence of a real Change; nay, when he was known to have given Encouragement and Commission to Montros to Invade Scotland: Moreover they manifested an utter dislike and disowning of theirs, and their Kings Proceedings, as fully perswading themselves, that his Profession of the Cause and Covenant was merely Counterfeit, as appeared by his favouring and frequenting the wicked Company of Scotch and English Malignants, therefore that they absolutely refus'd to submit to his Power and Authority: they also Declar'd against their Intentions of Invading England for his sake, being a Nation not Subordinate to them, without consideration of the lawfulness, or necessity thereof.

The Remonstrance of the Western Covenanters in Scotland.

The most Eminent Men of this Faction, were Colonell Kerr, Colonell Straughan, the Lord Warreston, and Sir John Chieflly: Nor were they without a Committee, or Synod of their own, called, The Synod of Glasgow, from whom there was also issued out a Declaration (to the same Effect, as the forementioned Remonstrance) which they sent by Four of their Com-
C millioners to those of the Kirk at St. Johnstons; But this Declaration of the Synod of Glasgow, as also the Remonstrance of the Western Association, were very much disgusted by the chief Ruling Men, even of the Kirk Party themselves, who mainly endeavoured to bring off Kerr and Straughan to a Conjunction with them; and to that end, they sent the Earl of Cassiles, the Lord Brady, Mr. Robert Douglass, and others, to Treat with them; but they still stood high upon their Terms, and peremptorily Declar'd as well against King and Lords on the one Side, as against Sectaries (for so they called the English Army) on the other, and resolved equally to op-
C pose both.

A Declaration

Synod of Glasgow to the Estates and Kirk
at St. Johnstons.

However the Committee of Estates, and Kirk at St. Johnstons, were minded not to omit any possible Expedient for the bringing back of their King unto them, and therefore sent Major Ge-D neral Montgomery with a Party of Horse to March speedily and make diligent Inquiry after him, and to endeavour by earnest Supplications to bring him back to St. Johnstons along with him. Montgomery being Advertiz'd that he was at the Lord Dedups House in the North Counties of Fife, went directly thither, and having found for certain that he was there, he first Surrounded the House, and then sent in to the King to acquaint him, that he came thither Employ'd by the D Committee of Estates, to entreat his Majestie to return back: At first he absolutely refused, as not enduring the Subjection that he had liv'd in with them, the News hereof being brought to the E Estates, bred much Disturbance among them, and some there were of them who Counsell'd that there should no more Addresses be made to him, whose perswasions began also to have some In-
F fluence upon the rest: and at the same time the King was earnestly Solicited by the Gordonists, and the Athol Men that rose for him in the North, to adhere totally to them, undertaking to secure him against the Kirk and all others that should oppose him, to which Invitation, he was Inclenable enough of himself, so that there had like to have been an utter Breach between him and the Covenanted Party that brought him in, had it not been for the Active and unwearied
E pains of a certain Scotch Gentleman, one of the Bed-chamber named Scots-Gray, who rid day and Night to and fro, between the severall Parties, to Mediate a Reconciliation: Nor did his In-F dustry lose its wisht Effect, since he so far prevail'd, that at length an Agreement was made, and the King condescended to return with Montgomery to St. Johnstons; The next Care was to bring in Huntly and Middleton, and the rest in the North, but they refused to submit (though their Kings Authority was made use of to Command their Coming in within Fifteen or Twenty daies)

And having taking Aberdeen, Marched directly up towards St. Johnstons; by the Way they were
F Accosted with an Act of Indemnity, which they sleighted and would not thereby be drawn to a Submission, unless according to their further Demands, they might be received into places of Trust, which with some other of their Propositions not being yeilded to, they came with Two thousand Foot, and Nine hundred Horse, within a Mile of the Town; and David Lest being at hand with a Thousand Five hundred Horse, it was thought the Business would have come to an F Engagement, but it hapned to end in a Treaty. Lauderdale and Arguile's Sons were Hostages for the Kirk, Tullibardin and Ogleby for the Kings Party: The Ministers at Sterlin were so far from Consenting to this Treaty, that they past the Sentence of Excommunication upon Middleton, which Act very much displeas'd those at St. Johnstons, who now began to see a Necessity of taking in all Parties and uniting against the common Enemy: Arguile and Douglass were earnest for it, and Cassile's by degrees was brought to Comply; So that the Earl of Lithgow, and others that were grand Actors in the year 1648, were declar'd capable of Trust by the Kirk, and the Estates having resolv'd upon a general Meeting to be held at St. Johnstons, consisting of their King, Lords, Barons, Burgesses, and Assembly of Ministers, to Consult for the good and safety of the Kirk, King, and Kingdome; Summon'd the Commissioners of the Kirk at Sterling, G to Adjourn their Sitting thither, and to appear among the rest at this Grand Convention: To this they of Sterling sent back an Excuse by their Messengers, alledging severall things against this C Convention, and advising them to be at a greater distance from the King and his Conncell, and to think upon Sterling as a more Convenient place for their Meeting; To which the Estates re-turn'd Answer: They held St. Johnstons the fitter Place, and that if they would not joyne with their Meeting, they should look upon them accordingly, and Consult for their own Securities vention held at St. Johnstons.

Whereupon after much Debate, and many of them expressing their Dissent, it was at last carried A in the Affirmative by the Major part of Voyces, for their going to the Grand Convention at St. Johnstons: but the Committee of War remained at Stirling, and now there seem'd to be an unanimous Agreement amongst the severall Factions against this Common Enemy, namely, The English Army; only in the Highlands some Forces yet stood out and refus'd to submit, whereupon Middleton was Employed with a new Commission and Instructions from the Scots King, Estates, and Kirk, to go and Treat with them; divers of the Scotch Lords that had been formerly in Disfavour with the Kirk, were now received in, as Duke Hamilton, the Lords Lauderdale, Leith, Buchheim, Dedop, Craford, and others who were designed to have Commands in the Army, and some of them were admitted to Sit in Parliament: Of the English Commanders about the Scots King, Major Generall Massey was one of the Chief, who though formerly of the Opposite Side, had yet constantly appeared for him ever since his Fathers Death. B

Col. Kerr defeated and taken Prisoner by M. Gen. Lambert, A Rising in Norfolk soon suppressed.

Colonell Kerr in the West of Scotland was at length so far Induc'd to Comply with the Grantees of the Kirk, that he took Prisoner Colonell Straughan, who still stood out and Inclined to Side with the English: But not long after Kerr himself giving an On-set to the English Forces under Major Generall Lambert, was Routed, his Men put to Flight, and he himself with others of his chief Commanders taken Prisoners. These Scotch Forces some say, were appointed to have joyn'd with a Party of English in Norfolk, who about the beginning of October gathered together in Armes against the Common-wealth, declaring the intention of their Rising to be for Charles the Second, and to restore the Ancient Government of the Land; but upon the approach of some of the County Militia, and Two Troops from Lin, they presently disperst themselves and fled, being pursued, severall of them were taken and Imprison'd, and the chief Ringleaders Executed: A little before this Insurrection, there was also Executed at Tyburn one Mr. Benson, for having been of the same Conspiracy with Colonell Ensebimus Andrews formerly Beheaded.

The death of the Prince of Orange.

His Attempt against Amsterdam.

About the latter end of October died the Prince of Orange, Brother-in-law to the Scots King, who much bewailed his Loss, having received from him very high Testimonies of Friendship and Good-will: Not many Months before his Death, he sent a Body of Horse under Count William, of Nassau, toward the City of Amsterdam, with pretense of apprehending and removing from the Government, certain ill-affected Lords, especially Cornelius and Andrew Bicher, though it is thought, the reallity of his Intention was to seize upon the Treasury and Bank of Amsterdam, and to have Employed it, as some Conjecture, for the Service of his Brother-in-law, and the Vindication of his Title; but the Magistrates of the City having timely Intelligence of the Armies Approach, made hast to shut the Gates, and stand upon their own Defence, so that the Design was prevented: yet this Advantage the Prince had by it, that he brought the Citizens to somewhat better Terms with him then they were at before; His Death was by his Widow the Princess Mary above all others very sorrowfully Resented, who being left by him great with Child, was within a little while after brought to Bed of a Son. D

The Princess Mary brought to Bed of a son.

Edenborough Castle taken by the English.

The Siege of Edenborough Castle had been closely carried on for the space of Three Months, or thereabouts, many strong Batteries had been made, and Mines wrought against it, insomuch that on the Twenty fourth of December it was Surrendered, with all the Armes and Magazine that belonged to it, into the power of Generall Cromwell, by the Governour Colonell William Dundas, Son to the Laird of Dundas, besides other Castles and strong Houses that were taken by Surrender, as Nesbit, Berthwick, and Roswell, so great indeed was their Success, that what ever they Attempted, first or last they Effectuated their Design. E

The Scots K. solemnly Crowned.

The Grand Business in Agitation at this time at St. Johnstons was the Coronation of the Scots King, by the name of Charles the Second; for the Celebrating whereof, the First of January had been long since design'd by the Estates of Scotland, and the wonted place for the Coronation of the Kings of Scotland in former Ages, was at this time also appointed for this Solemnity, namely, Scoon, where as soon as the prefixed Day was come, it was performed with loud Acclamations, Bonfires, shooting off of Guns, and with as much Pomp and Ceremony as the present State of Things would permit; The Nobility, Barons, and Burgeses went from St. Johns to Scoon in their Robes, bringing thither with them the Crown, Sword, and Scepter; the whole Scotch Army which stood all the Way, as a Guard between those Two Places, making a Lane for them as they went along. In the Presence Chamber was Plac'd a Chair of State, where the King sat with all his Lords and Attendants about him: After a low Obeysance made to him by all the Company, the Marquis of Argyle made a Speech; F

'Wherein he declared the Affections of the Parliament, Assembly and People to him, 'and of their hopes of good from him, to make them happy, in bringing England and 'all their Enemies in Subjection to Him and Them. Moreover he added, that the 'Parliament of Scotland were come to present his Majesty with the Crown, Sword, 'and Scepter, but that before he received it, he was to take an Oath and Swear as his 'former Predecessors had done before him. G

Then the Oath being tender'd to him, he Swore to it in these Words;

A I Do Promise and Vow in the Presence of the Eternal God, That I will Maintain the true Kirk of God, Religion, Right Preaching, and Administration of the Sacraments now Received and Preached within this Realm in Purity, and shall Abolish and Gainstand all false Religions and Sects contrary to the same; And shall Rule the People Committed to my Charge according to the Will of God, and laudable Laws and Constitutions of the Realm; causing Justice and Equity to be Ministred without Partiality.

B Then one of each of the Three Estates of Scotland, namely, the Marquis of Argyll (as being of the Nobles), one Baron, and one Burges, holding the Crown among them, offered it to the King; then they delivered it to Three Ministers of the Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, who were appointed by the Estates in Parliament, to present it unto him: At the presentation of the Crown to the King by the Three Ministers, one of them made his Address in this Form;

SIR,

I do present unto you, King Charles, the Crown and Dignity of this Realm.

C Then turning his Face towards the People, he said:

Are ye not willing to have him for your King, and to become Subject to him?

Whereupon the King turning himself to them, the People Cryed out with a loud Voyce, GOD SAVE KING CHARLES THE SECOND. Then after he had been Appoynted by the Three Ministers, with the Regall Uction, the Crown was set upon his Head by the Marquis of Argyll, the Scepter was also given into his Hand, and the Sword carried before him by a Scotch Lord; as soon as the Crown was put upon his Head, he made this short Speech to the People,

D I will, by Gods Assistance, bestow my Life for your Defence, wishing to live no longer, then that I may see this Kingdome flourish in Happyness.

Adding many other Expressions of his Love and Affection to the People, and afterwards Mr. Roberts, Dowglas made an hortatory Oration, or Sermon to his Majesty.

The Ceremonies of the Coronation ended, and a plentiful Entertainment prepared, the King sat at one Table, and the Lords at another, there passing many Caresses and Testimonies of Joy all Dinner time between them; After which they all went back to St. Johnston, in the same Order and Pomp, they came from thence to Stone: the Scots Kings Guard consisted of the Sons of divers great Scotch Lords, and other Members of Parliament, such chiefly as had been Servants to his Father, and the Captain thereof was the Lord of Lorn, Son to the Marquis of Argyll.

The next thing in preparation was the raising of a Numerous Army, for which end, the King himself Designed to go Northward, and to set up his Standard at Aberdeen, intending to appear in the Head of the Army as Generalissimo, and under him Duke Hamilton was appointed Lieutenant Generall of the Army, and David Leslie Major Generall, Middleton was to be Lieutenant Generall of the Horse, and Massie to Command in Chief all the English Forces, Halburn was sent for away from his Government at Sterling, and Sir John Brown appointed Governour in his room: as for Straughan he was proceeded against by Sentence of Excommunication, for Complying with the English Army, and declaring against the Proceedings of the Estates of Scotland, and their King.

F The Parliament of Scotland having been Adjourn'd, sat again, about the beginning of March, and hard stickling there was for severall Lords of the Royall Party to be admitted to their Seats in the House, as Duke Hamilton, the Marquis of Huntly, the Earl of Callender, the Earl of Craisford, and others, who had come in and submitted to the Kirk; and as they were Persons of Eminent Quality, they had much Favour and Indulgence shewn them at that form of Submission, called, The School of Repentance; for it was observed that Hamilton did his Penance after a very stately and pompous manner, there being plac'd a Table for him covered with black Velvet, and a Cushion of the same; upon that Day he also kept a great Feast, to which were Invited divers Lords and other Eminent Persons, as well of the Presbytery as the Royalty.

G At the beginning of this Session, there was appointed a Committee of Parliament, consisting of Duke Hamilton, the Marquis of Argyll, the Earls of Eglington, Glencairn, Dumferling, Weams, Callender, Chancellour Londen, and the Lord Kirkcubright, to consider of the Affairs of State; and to examine and proceed against all men that obstructed or oppos'd the present Designs, inasmuch as divers had their Estates Sequestred, and some were tryed for their Lives, for holding Correspondence with the English Army, who on their parts also were not idle, but after the taking of the Cattle of Edenborough, set upon Hume and Timptallon. Two very strong Castles, A which had somewhat hindred the Passage between Edenborough and Berwick; they were not long Besieged before they were yeilded up, the first to Colonell Fennick, the other to Colonell Monk.

The Assemblies of the Presbyters at Sterling and Aberdeen, shew'd themselves Discontented at the New Levies, in regard that so many whom they counted Malignants, were to be admitted to Commands in the Army, as well as to have their Seats in Parliament; whereupon the Commissioners of the Kirk at St. Johnstons, endeavoured to remove their Scruples by a Declaration, and likewise put them in mind of certain Acts, which commanded Silence in matters of this Nature, and forbid any one to speak against the publick Transactions of the State. And so it was resolved by the leading Power, that the Levies went on with all possible speed: the Scots King himself was very Active in giving out Orders, and providing all things Expedient for the raising of a great Army, and at a Generall Rendezvous, which was held at the East of Fife, he came into the Field, to encourage the Soldiers with his Personall presence, and made a Speech to them, wherein he Exhorted them to be Valiant and Faithfull in his Cause, telling them moreover,
That he would rather choose to die in the Field, then to be driven up into the Mountains: Afterwards he went to the Assembly at Aberdeen, to endeavour by his Presence and Authority to Compose the Differences among the Minifters there; and the better to improve his Interest, and maintain Correspondence abroad, he sent over the Earl of Dumferling Ambassadour to the States of Holland (having had long before for his Resident at the Hague, one Mac-donell, formerly Governour of Overyssel.) At the same time Croft Negotiated for him as Ambassadour, C at the Court of the great Duke of Muscovy, besides those in Spain, and other Parts above mentioned; By all which Embassages he gained many Complements and fair Promises, though little or no Advantage besides: but none of them all met with such hard Entertainment as Sir Henry Hide, Lierge at Constantinople, who contending with Sir Thomas Bendish that lay there Ambassadour at the same time, from the Republick of England, was by the Visier Bassa (one that like a right Politician, as he was favour'd the strongest Party) delivered up to the Disposall of Bendish, and by him sent over into England, where being tryed for his Life, and Condemned by a High-court of Justice, he was Beheaded over against the Royall Exchange at London, the same Fare soon after (on the Twenty fifth of April, 1651.) besell Captain Brown Busbell, an expert Seaman, and one who heretofore had been for the Parliament, but had of late done D Notable Service for the King of Scots by Sea.

In the Parliament of Scotland, sitting at St. Johnstons, Duke Hamilton and the Royall Influence seemd at present to bear the greatest Sway; whereupon the Marquis of Argyle and other Lords of the more Covenanted Strain, began to be much discontented, as thinking themselves under a Cloud and layd aside: the Earl of London who had been ever of Custome Lord Chancel-lour, was removed from his Presidentship, and in his Room, the Lord Burlleigh Substituted; as for the Earl of Sutherland, he absolutely refus'd to Concur with the present Transactions, and having gotten together of his Tenants, and those within his Jurisdiction, a Body of about Five hundred, he steered his Course another way, and seemd to intend them upon another Account.
Among the discontented Minifters, the chief were Mr. James Guthrie, who having been long since Confin'd for his Clamouring against the Proceedings of the State, continued still under Restraint; E
Mr. Andrew Cant, who had long been Courted to a Neutrality at least, if not to an absolute Compliance, nevertheless he remained so far Refractory, that he joyned with the Synod at Glasgow, in declaring against what was done at St. Johnstons, and Mr. Durams who having been appointed by the Kirk to attend the King as his Chaplain, left the Court at length, and betook himself to Retirement: Mr. Patrick Galaspy was also of the same Stamp (yet he and some others at a Conference, with Generall Cromwell, and Major Generall Lambert, at Glasco, maintained a Notable Dispute with them, against the Invasion of their Country (as they term'd it) by the English Army.) On the other side, Mr. Robert Dowglafs and Mr. David Dick were so far Favourers of the Royall Affairs, that they inveigh'd vehemently against all such as went about to F keep up the Name of Malignants, or to make Divisions among the Leiges. Adding, That now they must all become ean man's Bears.

The Parliament at St. Johnstons not having as yet done any considerable Matter, only expected the compleating of the Levies, Adjourned till the Seventeenth of April, and Devolved in the meantime the Civill Power into the hands of a Select Councell, the Military Power into the hands of a Committee of War, consisting of Twenty Persons, out of each of the Three Estates.

Speciall Care was taken about Fortifying the Town of Sterling, the King himself going often thither to view the Works, and hasten the Compleating of them, intending that Place very suddenly for his chief Residence: he had obtained from the Parliament a little before their Adjournment, an Additional Act for Compleating the Levies up to Fifteen thousand Foot; besides the Horse which were to be not much short of that Number, so that all things were busi- G ly preparing for sudden Action.

Nor were the English less diligent in pursuing Advantages, then the Scots in strengthening and re-inforcing themselves. Blackness a strong Hold between Edenborough and Sterling being Attackt by Colonell Monk, was within a short while delivered up upon Articles of Agreement very Advantageous to the Besiegers, but a matter of much more trouble to the Kings Party was the taking of the Earl of Eglington, and one of his Sons not long after by Captain Crook, at Dunbarton

A Dumbarton, that Lord being a person of much Power and Consideration among them.

The Republick of England having made so large a progress in the Conquest of Ireland and Scotland, thought it a Business no less conducing to their Interest, to bring into their power those lesser Islands that as yet held out for the Adverse Party: Guernsey they had already in their possession, all but Cornet Castle; the next they set upon was the Isle of Scilly, in which there were only Three Places of any great Importance, the Isles of Tresco, Briers, and S. Maries: The Two first were quickly taken by the means of Three hundred Seamen that were Landed there by Generall Blake, joyning with certain Land-forces that were also sent into the Island; but the last being a Place of a very strong and almost Impregnable Situation, could not be won in a short while, yet in the end that also was gained.

Certain places in the Isle of Scilly reduc'd to the power of the Commonwealth.

B At the next meeting of the Parliament of Scotland, they sat very close in Consultation, about their Militia, and other weighty and pressing Matters of State: The Court at present was kept at Sterling, which was also the Head-quarters, the whole Scotch Army being Quartered there abouts. Middleton's Northern Levies amounted to near upon Eight thousand, and it was much Controverted, whether those Forces should make up a distinct Army by it self (as Middleton himself stood upon) or joyn with the Southern Army; however to prevent Emulation and Discontent between Lesly and him, about the Supreme Command of the Army, the King resolved to take it upon himself; The Grand Business under Debate in this present sitting of the Parliament, was about a Message from their King, in which he desir'd,

C 'I. That the Act about the Classes of Malignants might be Annull'd, and another Act pass for the Repealing thereof.

The Sc. K. message to the Parl. of Scotland.

'II. That there might be no mention of the Name of Malignants any more amongst them.

'III. That Duke Hamilton, the Earls of Seaforth, Callender, and others might have full Command.

D To the granting of these things, the Marquis of Argyle was a main Opposer, so that not without much difficulty and hard tugging it was, that after a long time the Business was effected.

The Twenty ninth of May was Celebrated by the Scots with much Rejoycing and Festivity, as being their Kings Birth-day, in order to the Observation whereof the Parliament Adjourn'd that day, and his Majesty and most of the Nobility Dined together at a great Feast. There was also a Solemn Appearance and Training of the Soldiery, and at Night all the Streets Blaz'd with Bonfires, and the Canons playd from Sterling, Brunst Island, and the rest of the Scots Garrisons, but not any one Town shewd their Affection in so particular a manner to their King, as the Town of Dundee, from which a very large Contribution was gathered toward his Assistance,

The Sc. K. Birth-day celebrated by the Scots.

E the Citizens also presented him with a rich and stately Tent, together with Six Pieces of Ordnance, and set out a Regiment of Horse at thier own Charges.

About the beginning of June, the Parliament of Scotland ended, having before their Dissolution, given large Commissions and Instructions for the Pressing of Men in all the parts of Scotland, beyond Fife and in the Western Parts, to hasten their new Levy, which was to consist of Fifteen thousand Horse and Foot; It concluded in a very calm and peaceful manner, which tended to an uniting of all Interests, and the Composing of all Controversies and Differences among them, and an unanimous Consent against their Enemy Cromwell, and his English Myrmidons: For the Ratifying of this Union, they had pass'd the Two Grand Acts so long contended for; the Act of Indemnity, and that for Repealing the Classes of Malignants.

The Parl. of Scotland ends.

F The English Army waiting greedily for an Opportunity to bring the Scots to a Field Engagement, made their Approaches as near to them as they could, and while the Scotch Forces lay Encamped in Sterling Park, and toward Torwood, they Quarter'd about Lithgow, and still watch for Advantages to set upon them; the Scots on the other side kept themselves close in their Trenches, and declin'd coming to a Battell, thinking it better to stay till the full Number of their Army were made up by those Levies, which were still expected to come out of the West and some other Parts, for the Expediting of which, Argyle, Huntly, and Seaforth were dispatcht away to their severall Territories, besides the additionall Forces which Middleton expected out of the North, to make up his Levies compleat. Massey's Instruction was to have sailn into England with a Body of English Horse and Foot, and together with the Duke of Buckingham, and

The English eager to give Battell to the Scots.

G the Lord Wilmot, to have joyn'd with a Party in Lancashire, that had design'd to rise for the Scots King, and to that end had a correspondency not only in Scotland, but also at London, where the Plot was chiefly contriv'd and promoted; but upon the taking of a Ship at Ayre in Scotland, which had been bound for the Isle of Man, and the seizing of Mr. Brickenhead an Agent in the Business, the whole Confederacy was discovered, and thereupon were apprehended about it, Mr. Thomas Cook of Grays Inn, and Mr. Gibbons, together with Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, Doctor Drake, and severall other Presbyterian Ministers (once inveterate Enemies to that Cause for which they now Conspire) who were brought before a High-court of Justice, and tryed for their Lives,

An intended Rising in Lancashire. The Plot discovered.

and a little before the Scotch Army entred England, two of them, namely, Mr. Love and Mr. Gibbons were beheaded at Tower-hill; so that by reason of this discovery Massey was for the time frustrated of his intended Expedition. However suddain Action was resolv'd on; in regard the English prest so close upon the Scotch Army, that they were in election either to be speedily forc'd to a Battel, or else to be streightned in their Quarters, and reduc'd to a scarcity of Provisions: now the Consultation was, Whether it would be more convenient to stay and fight the English Army in Scotland, or to give them the Go-by and slip into England: Many there were that gave their opinions Pro & Con, but the Scots King absolutely declar'd his Sentiment to be for an Incursion into England, as hoping still, notwithstanding the late discovery, that he had a sufficient power of friends left, that would readily joyn with him upon his coming in: nor was it long ere this Design was put in execution.

The English land Forces, on Fife side.

In the mean time, the English Army having offered Battel to the Scots at Torwood, and not being received by them, made it their next work to land some of their Forces on Fife side, and to that end, Colonel Overton was sent with Sixteen hundred Foot and four Troops of Horse, who at a place call'd Queens Ferry, forc'd his landing with small ado, and very little loss. Cromwell at the same time marching with his whole Army close up to the Scots, with an intent to have fallen upon their Rear, in case they should have mov'd that way, and have attempted to disturb the Enterprize: But to drive the English out of Fife, Four thousand Horse and Foot were appointed to march against them under the command of Sir John Brown; to oppose whom and assist and re-inforce that Party of the English already landed in Fife, Major General Lambert and Colonel Okey, with two Regiments of Horse, and two of Foot, were transported over the water, and joining Battel with Sir John Brown, gave him a most sad overthrow, took himself, Colonel Buchanan, and Fourteen hundred more, and slew about Two thousand, by which Victory the English gain'd so firm a footing in Fife, that they were not easily to be repell'd; and soon after Brunt Island & Inb garry Castle taken by the English.

Brunt Island, and a strong Castle upon the River Fife, call'd Inchegarvy, were taken by surrendier; and now the King of Scots and his Army were driven out of pure necessity to take that course which long since had been designed for their greater advantage and convenience, which was to march away directly for England: for General Cromwell that he might make himself Master of the Pass at Sterling, saw it necessary first to set upon St. Johnston, which after one daies Siege was gained. Next Sterling was posses'd by Lord General Monk advancing thither with Six thousand men, upon intelligence that that place was quit by the Scots and Royal Forces, who as soon as they heard, St. Johnston was deliver'd: Immediately began their March Southward. The main of Cromwell's Army came back again over the Firth, making what expedition they could to overtake them, but the Scots were some daies march before them in their way to England: Major General Harrison with about Three thousand Horse and Dragoons being advanced the neereft of any part of the English Army, was ready to attend this Motion; also Major General Lambert with about as many more, was ordered by a Council of War to speed after them, and endeavour to fall upon their Rear: General Cromwell began his March from Leith towards England with a Thousand Horse and Foot; the same day the Royal Army entred upon English ground by the way of Carlisle, which was on the sixth of August. Upon the expectation of their coming into England, a Party in Wales began to rise, intending to have joyn'd with the Earl of Derby from the life of Monk; but this Design undertaken, as it was, precipitately, and managed without order, soon ran into a Dream: by that time the King of the Scots was come with his Army as far as Lancashire; he was somewhat hard beset by the Forces that follow'd him out of Scotland; besides those that in a short time were rais'd in England: he had in his Rear General Cromwell, who had left Monk with a sufficient power to carry on the Work in Scotland; on his Van were the two Major Generals, Lambert and Harrison, unto whom there came up Two thousand of the Country in the County of Staffordshire, and Four thousand under the Command of Colonel Birch out of Lincolnshire, Cheshire, and other parts; and to flank him, the Lord Fairfax in Yorkshire appear'd in the Field with a formidable Body: Moreover, the City of London pow'd out her numerous Armies upon him, and the adjacent Counties were by strict Order of Parliament enjoy'd to set out Men and Horse at their own charges; nor (which was of all the worst

St. Johnston & Sterling taken by Cromwell's Forces.

The powerfull opposition that came against him.

Prejudice) did the Scotch Army it self keep intire together, being curtal'd of about 5000 Men, which were dropt away by degrees, there remaining not compleat, as was generally suppos'd, by that time they came into England, above Eleven or twelve thousand men. That which was the King of Scots grand Expectation also fail'd him; namely, the general coming in of the Country, for the most considerable Supply that came in to him, was only one Troop of Horse Commanded by the Lord Howard of Effrich his Son, nor is it much to be wondred at, since the Commonwealths Forces, had so powerfully over-spread the Country, that none could well have opportunity to stir in behalf of the Royal Affairs; so that before the deciding Blow was given, they might well have been judg'd to be in a very lost and hopeless posture: yet, that there was not wanting a great portion of Courage and Confidence among the jovial Cavaliers even to the very last, may appear by certain passages of the Earl of Lauderdale's intercepted Letters, the one to his Lady, the other to the Lord Belcarri.

The Earl of Lauderdale's intercepted Letters.

"Never Men, sayth he in one of them, were more hearty, for all their Toil, and seriously you would not know this Army, a natural Purge is wholesome, speaking of those that with drew themselves, and I hope ours is so, since the ill Humours are gone:

A "gone: the Country is kind, and we might have Men enough, his Majesty received
"the Lord Howards Son graciously, and Knighted him; he is the first, but I have no "reason to believe he will be the last that will return to his duty.

And in the other he hath to this effect;

"His Majesty is advanced into England as far as Perith, with a very good Army,
"able by the blessing of God to do his Business: they are, I dare say, neer double the "number of those with which the King of Sweden enter'd Germany: Never was any B "Army so regular as we have been, since we came into England; I dare say we have "not taken the worth of six pence, and what you hear of our Misfortune in Fife, or "what ever our Enemies Print or Write, trust me, this is the best Scots Army that "ever I saw, and I hope shall prove best. All those that were unwilling to hazard all "in this Cause with their King, have upon a specious pretense most of them left us.
"This is a natural Purge, and will do us much good.

And the Lord Wentworth in his Letter to Mr. William Crofts, thus:

C "By Gods grace we are come as far as Perith in Cumberland, with a good Army of "Fourteen or fifteen thousand Foot, and Six thousand Horse, all absolutely at the "Kings Command, as much as any Army that ever I saw under the Command of "his Father.

But others there were of them that seem'd more sensible of the badness of their Condition, inasmuch as Duke Hamilton to Mr. Crofts writ thus:

"We are now laughing all at the ridiculousness of our present state, we have quit
"Scotland, being scarce able to maintain it: and yet we Grasp at all, and nothing but all D "will satisfie us, or to lose all. I confess I cannot tell you whether our Hopes or Fears "are greatest, but we have one stout Argument, Despair; for we must now either
"stoutly fight, or die: all the Rogues have left us, I shall not say, whether for fear of "disloyalty; but all now with his Majesty are such as will not dispute his Commands.

Duke Hamilton's to Mr. Crofts.

The Scots King at his first entrance upon English ground, was by an English man (whom he made King at Armes) proclaimed King of England at the head of the Army, with great Acclamations and shooting of the Cannon then at Perith in Cumberland, and so afterwards at every Market Town through which he marcht. Having made his way over Warrington Bridge, E notwithstanding Lamberts endeavour to stop that passage, and both Parties engaging near Knotsford Heath, though with some little loss on the Kings side: He came on the Twenty second of August to Worcester, where after one or two Repulses by the Forces that kept that City, he quickly entered, through the ready assistance of the Inhabitants, who not only not oppos'd his entrance, but also help to beat the Parliaments Soldiers out. It was for some while much in dispute among the chief Officers of his Army, whether it were most convenient to take up their Quarters at Worcester, and there to fortifie themselves, or to make a resolute venture and to march with all speed up to the City of London; but in consideration of the long and tedious marches they had lately had, and of the sick and weary estate of the Army, it was at length resolv'd on as a thing most agreeable to their present condition, to stay where they were, and to F make good some Passes that were thereabouts. On the Twenty seventh day they kept a solemn Fast, and the next day had a general Rendezvous, at which the Country came in far more considerably then at any time before, since their arrival in England. The Scots King as he was in his march to Worcester, dispatcht away Messages and Invitations unto several Governours of Towns and Castles to deliver up unto his use those places which they had in their possession, and principally to Sir Thomas Middleton Governour of Chirk Castle in Shropshire, and to Colonel Mackworth Governour of Shrewsbury: To the first, the Earl of Derby also writ, and the Letters were sent by one Simkins, whom Sir Thomas caus'd to be seiz'd and sent to Wrexham: To the Governour of Shrewsbury were formally sent and delivered by a Trumpeter both a Letter and a Summons, which I thought remarkable enough to be here inserted, together with Mackworth's Answer; the Letter ran thus.

The Sc. K. proclaimed K. of England at the head of the Army. The fight at Warrington Bridge. The Sc. King comes to Wor. after.

His Letter and Summons to Col. Mackworth Governour of Shrewsbury.

"Colonel Mackworth, Having sent you herewith a Summons, to render into my "hands my Town, with the Castle of Shrewsbury, I cannot but perswade my self
"you will do it, when I consider you a Gentleman of an ancient House, and of very different Principles (as I am informed) from those with whom your Employment ranks
"you at present: if you shall peaceably deliver them unto me, I will not only pardon
"you

'you what is best, and protect you and yours in your persons, and all that belongs to A
'you, but reward so eminent and seasonable a Testimony of your Loyalty with future
'Trust and Favour, and do leave it to your self to propose the particular, being upon 'that condition ready to grant you presently any thing you shall reasonably desire, and
'to approve my self your Friend,

C. R.

Together with this Letter was sent this following Summons.

Colonel Mackworth,

'B Eeing desirous to attempt all fair waies for recovering our own, before we proceed B
'to force and extremity, and (where the Controversie is with Subjects) account'ing that a double Victory which is obtained without effusion of blood, and where 'the hearts that of right belong to us, are gained as well as their strengths. We do 'hereby summon you to surrender unto us our Town, with the Castle of Shrewsbury,
'as in duty and allegiance by the Laws of God and the Land you are bound to do,
'thereby not only preventing the mischief which you may otherwise draw upon your 'self and that place, but also opening the first Door to Peace and Quietness, and the 'enjoyment of every one both King and People, that which pertains to them under C 'certain and known Laws, the end for which we are come. Given at our Camp at 'Tong Norton, this 20 of August.

Unto this Letter and Summons the Governour of Shrewsbury returned this Answer.

For the Commander in Chief of the Scottish Army.

SIR,

Colonel Mackworth's Answer

'B Y your Trumpet I received two Papers, the one containing a Proposition, the D
'Both a direct Summons for the rendition of the Town and Castle of Shrewsbury,
'the Custody whereof I have received by Authority of Parliament, and if you believe 'me a Gentleman (as you say you do) you may believe I will be faithful to my 'Trust, to the violation whereof, neither Allurements can perswade me, nor Threat-
'nings of force, especially when but Paper ones, compel me: what Principles I am
'judg'd to be of, I know not, but I hope they are such as shall ever declare me honest,
'and no way differing herein (as I know) from those engaged in the same Employ'ment with me, who should they desert that Cause they are Imbarqued in, I resolve E
'to be found as I am unremovable, the faithful Servant of the Common-wealth of 'England.

H. Mackworth.

The Earl of Derby raiseth Forces for the Scotts King.

About two or three daies before the Scotts Kings Arrival at Worcester, the Earl of Derby having landed at Weywater in Lancashire, came to him with Two hundred and fifty Foot, and sixty Horse, which he brought with him out of the Isle of Man, and immediatly returning back into Lancashire to raise a more considerable Force, he soon got together by the influence he had in those parts a Body of Fifteen hundred, with which he was hatting toward Manchester, where he F was assured of Five hundred more that intended to have joynd with him, and was likely in a short while to have encreast to a very great number; whereupon Colonel Robert Lilburn with his own Regiment, and three Companies, and a few Horse out of Cheshire, endeavourd with all speed to joyn with Cromwells Regiment of Foot which lay about Preston, and so to set upon the Enemy: to prevent which conjunction, the Earl of Derby prest upon Lilburns men, and fore'd them to an Engagement, just as they were about to have drawn off and marcht in the flank of him to meet the Regiment at Preston; the Dispute was very sharp and doubtful for the space of an hour, but in conclusion the Earl of Derby's men were put to a general confusion and flight, the Earl himself was wounded, and was very neer being taken Prisoner, which yet he escap'd and fled to Worcester: there were taken Prisoners of Quality of his Party, the Lord G Withrington, Sir Thomas Tilsely, Major General, Sir William Throgmorton, Colonel Matthew Bointon, Major Chester, Major Trollop (and others, who soon after died of their Wounds), also Colonel Richard Legg, Colonel John Robinson, Colonel Ratcliff Gerret, Four Lieutenant Colo-nells, one Major, four Captains, two Lieutenants, twenty Gentlemen, and Reforma does; of private Soldiers there were slain about sixty, taken about Four hundred, together with all the Arms and Ammunition; the Earls George Garter, and three Cloaks with Stars.

Cromwell comes before Worce- ster with his Army.

It was not above a day or two after this Victory, ere General Cromwell came before Worcester, with

A with an Army of Seventeen thousand Horse and Foot, besides those that were commanded apart by Lambert and Harrison, and other Supplies that came from other parts. On the West-side of the City over Severn lay the main of the Scottish Army in the compass of two mile, they within the City made several resolute Sallies, but the Beleaguers being so numerous and potent, they were beaten in with some loss: The second day of Cromwells approach Fifteen hundred Horse and Foot sallied out at Sidbury Gate, with intent to have set upon a House about two mile from the City, Man'd by Two hundred Musketeers, whereat the Parliaments Army taking Alarum, the Salliants were forc'd to retreat with the loss of Fifteen of their men slain, however all possible diligence was us'd for the well Fortifying themselves within the City, and making good the Mount at the South-east end.

The Scots sal-lying out of Worcester are repuls'd with loss.

B The next Re-encounter was at the pass at Upton, which Major General Massey kept for the Scots King; hither Major General Lambert came from Evesham, with a party of Horse and Dragoons, who though a great part of the Bridge had been broken down upon news of their coming, made a shift to get over, fir'd into the Town upon the Scots, and got possession of the Church, which Masseys men in vain sought to recover, and at the appearance of the Horse they fled, and were for a little way pursued; Massey himself was wounded, and had much ado to escape with his freedom, having his horse killed under him: presently after this Dispute came up General Fleetwood with his whole Brigade to help to maintain this Pass.

Upton taken by Lambert.

C The Third of September (the same day in which a Twelve month past, was fought that famous Field at Dunbar, so unfortunate to the Scots) was that fatal Day which gave the deciding blow to that Controversie which had so long been disputed by Arms between the Royall and the Parliaments party, to which last the fortune of this day also (like as continually before in a long series of Successes) fell, and being the last Battell of any Note that was disputed between these two Interests, gave the full possession of Three Nations to those that fought for Liberty and a Common-wealth, against Regal Government.

The Fight at Worcester.

Lieutenant Gen. Fleetwood having left a force sufficient to keep the Pass at Upton, made it his next care to come to a Conjunction with the rest of the Army, and to that end he took order for the making of two Bridges, the one over Severn, and the other over Tame, at a point where those two Rivers meet, to the Assistance of Fleetwood, and to oppose those Horse and Foot which were drawn out to hinder his passage, General Cromwell himself led on Colonel Hacker's Regiment of Horse, and the two Foot Regiments of Colonel Fairfax and Inglesby, and together with Major General Denn's and Colonel Goff's Regiments which scourd the Hedges, forc'd the Scots to retreat to Pennick Bridge where they re-enforc'd themselves, and for a while sustain'd a very sharp Encounter, but in the end gave ground and fled back to the City.

At the same time that this Conflict was maintain'd, they sallied out on the other side of the City, and gave a notable desperate Charge to that part of the Common-wealths Army that lay that way, the Fight continued for the space of three or four hours eager and fierce, and was prosecuted with much Gallantry and resolution shown on both sides, till at length the Besiegers over-powring the others in number, bore them down before them with such unresistable force, that they put them to utter disorder and flight, and pursuing them to the very Gates, rush in pell mell among them, and in a short while possess themselves of the Royal Fort and the City, and thus the Victory was gain'd before one half of Cromwell's Forces (so numerous they were with the Auxiliaries) came up to engage their Enemy, who seeing all lost on their part, and that Victory had absolutely abandon'd them, began then to think of nothing but how to shift every one for themselves; as they flee confusedly through the City, the general Cry among them was, Save the King, save the King: Nor was he himself unmindful as soon as he perceiv'd which way the Victory inclin'd, to provide in time for his escape, to which end he speedily withdrew himself to the house where he quarter'd, and took of his Treasure what he could conveniently carry with him, and just as Colonel Cobbet was entering on the fore-part of the house, was slip't out by a back-way together with the Lord Wilms, striking unto the most escape.

F private and unfrequented way, to avoid the hot pursuit and inquiry that was made; for many parties of Horse, were sent out through all Coasts after the flying Troops, few of the Infantry escaping the Field alive, but about Three thousand Horse, whereof a thousand were taken about Bendley by Colonel Barton, more by others in other places: many by rising parties of the Country people were taken or knock'd on the head: so incident it is to men in extream adversity, to have all the world their Enemies. The Earl of Derby was taken in the pursuit by Colonel Lilburn (whose hands he so narrowly escap'd at the late fight neer Manchester) together with the Earl of Derby, were taken the Earl of Lauderdale, and about the same time also the Earls of Cleveland, Shrewsbury, and the Lord Wentworth, and very many others of quality. In the main fight the number of the slain were judg'd to be Three thousand, and of the taken Ten thousand, whereof

G the chief persons of note were Duke Hamilton, Robert Earl of Carnewarth, Alexander Earl of Kelly, John Lord Synclaire, Sir John Packington, Major General Munsgomery, Major General Piscotty, Mr. Richard Fanshawe the Kings Secretary: the General of the Ordnance, the adjutant General of the Foot, the Marshal General; six Colonels of Horse (one whereof was Colonel Graves) thirteen of Foot, nine Lieutenant Colonels of Horse, eight of Foot, six Majors of Horse, thirteen of Foot, thirty seven Captains of Horse, seventy two of Foot, with a number of other inferiour Officers, a hundred and fifty eight Colours, the Kings Standard, his Collar of S.S. Coach and Horses, and other things of great value: Major General Massey, though he had made his his escape out of the field, yet by reason of his wounds he was disabled from getting clear away, and brought to so weak a condition, that he surrendered himself to the mercy and civility of the Countess of Stamford, whose Son, nevertheless, the Lord Gray of Graby secur'd him as a Prisoner, to be sent up to the Parliament, as soon as he should be recovered of his wounds: Lieutenant General David Lesley, and Lieutenant General Middleton were taken on Blackston Edge, between Halifax and Rascals, and carried Prisoners to Liverpoole, with Sir William Fleming, and divers Officers of less note; many scattered parties besides were taken here and there in several places, in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, Shropshire, and Warwickshire.

And as if Success had been now entail'd upon the English Common-wealth, this grand Victory was attended on by divers others of a less magnitude, though considerable enough, which were gain'd in Scotland by Monk and the Forces left there, and as it were trod upon the heels B of one another.

Sterling Castle delivered up to Monk.

At the same time that Cromwell with his Army marcht for England, Sterling Castle was besieged, which after a short siege, was delivered upon Articles, with all the Warlike Ammunition which was in it, being a very large quantity, Five thousand Armes, and forty pieces of Ordnance, all the Records of Scotland, the Chair and Cloth of State, the Sword and other rich Furniture of the Kings, the Earl of Marr's Parliament Robes, Coronet, and Stirrups of Gold: over the door of the Chappel that belongs to the Castle, this Motto was observed; I. C. R. Nobis hac invicta miserum Centum sex proavis, 16 17. which shews that this place when King James came to the Crown had remaind unconquer'd for the space of One hundred and six Kings Reigns; and so it also remaind all his time, and his Sons, but not his Grandchildes.

Old General
Lesley and divers others taken at Ellis in Perth.

As soon as Sterling Castle was taken, the next place that Monk set upon was Dundee, during the siege of which, there met together at Ellis in the County of Perth, divers Scotch Lords, Gentlemen, Ministers, and others, to the number of about Three hundred: the principal of whom were old General Lesley Earl of Leven, the Lords Ogleby, Craford, and Lindsey, upon a design to have levied a great power of men for their King, with intention in the first place to have rais'd the siege of Dundee: how secretly soever this was thought to be carried, notice was quickly brought to the Lieutenant General, from whom Colonel Alured being dispatcht away with Six hundred horse, and four Troops of Dragoons, surpriz'd them on a sudden, overthrew them with ease, slew many, and took General Lesley Earl Marshal, Craford, the Lord Leith, and all the chief of them Prisoners: About the same time, certain Horse and Dragoons fell upon Five hundred Scots at Dumfrize in Galloway, and either killed or took all of them: among the taken were Sir Philip Musgrave Mayor of St. Johnstons, who had a Commission to be Major General of all the Forces to be rais'd for the King in the four Northern Counties, and with him divers Lords and Gentlemen of quality; Upon Summons sent to Major General Lumfden Governour of that Town, he sent this Answer.

Sir Philip Musgrave taken at Dumfrize.

"We received yours, for answer whereunto, we do by these acquaint you, That "we are commanded by the Kings Majesty, to desire you and all Officers and Soldiers
"and Ships that are at present in Arms against the Kings Authority, to lay down "your Arms, and to come in and joyn with his Majesties Forces in this Kingdom, and "to conform and give Obedience to the Kings Majesties Declaration sent you here"with, which if you will obey, we shall continue,

Sir,

Your faithful Friend and Servant

In the old manner

Dundee taken by Storm.

The Sr. K.
strictly pursued

Notwithstanding this resolute Answer, it was but a very little while ere the Town was taken by Storm, and in it the Governour himself and some more slain; soon after follow'd the Rendition of St. Andrews and Aberdeen, with other Towns, Castles, and strong places, which either voluntarily came in, or rendred upon Summons.

The Scots King after the Fight at Worcester was he of all the rest most narrowly searcht for, and strictly pursued, and for whose sake the greater diligence was used to follow, way lay, and intercept all the several parties of the routed Scots that fled, in regard he was the principal cause of whatever had given check to the Common-wealths proceedings, he was the prime Wheel upon which all the lesser Motions depended; but notwithstanding all the search and inquiry that was made for him, no news could be heard, or any one certainly tell what was become of him, which gave occasion to many to conjecture some one thing, some another, according to what their Fancies diversly suggested to them; some thought that he lay somewhere or other conceald with Hind the famous High-way man of that time; some, that he was gone Northward, others Westward rather; others were of opinion (and that with most probability, for thither he was known to have come) that he made choice of London for his safest place of Retreat; the truth is,

The manner of the K. of Scots escape from Worcester.

- A is, as hath been before intimated, that having as soon as he perceiv'd the fortune of the Day at Worcester, turn'd from him to the adverse party, made an escape from his Quarters by a back-way, he accompanied only with the Lord Wilmot, took a different Rode from all the rest of the pursued, and for their better security to avoid being taken, he and Wilmot quirt their Horses and betook themselves to by-paths and unknown wayes, which yet were not so safe, but that the second day they were driven to hide themselves in a hollow Tree till night; the next day they wandered along time in a Wood, till at length coming to a Country Cottage, they sorely prest with hunger, were constrained to desire Relief from the good man of the house, and telling him that they were two poor distressed Cavaliers, yet concealing their Qualities, they requested him to inform them where they might most probably meet with a safe Harbour and Retrear at that time of their being so closely and eagerly pursued; for they doubted not but there were
- B some persons of note in those parts that were favourably affected to the King and his Party, the honest Countryman in commiseration of their Condition, both willingly brought them out such Mean viands as his house afforded, and directed them to a certain Gentlewoman, who, he gave them good assurance, would shew them all the Civility that lay in her power, and who indeed approv'd her self the same she was reported to be, employing all the cunning of a woman, and the secrecy of a friend for their concealment and escape: for as soon as this royal Wanderer with his Attendant, had made means to come to the speech of the Gentlewoman, and had after some circumstances for the tryal of her Fidelity, discovered himself to be the King, she immediately set all the Engines of her Wit on work, what course they were best to take in this Extremity: and first she provided for them the best accommodation she could for their Refreshment,
- C after their tedious Travels; next she took care how to dispose of them to the best advantage, and with the greatest security: Nor was it a matter of slight Importance, since it hath been a thing related, that the King was in this Ladies Chamber, when not only search was made for him in the house, but some Soldiers were at the Chamber-door, ready to have entred, had they not been diverted by some cleanly excuse of hers, and their little mistrust of his being there; however this was not a place for them to take up their Station in, so that after a counsel held among them, it was agreed on, that a Journey should be forthwith pretended to London, or some remote place, and that the King should ride before the Lady as one of her Servants, and the Lord Wilmot upon another horse, as another of her Servants, and the better to disguise them, their
- D Hair was cut short, and a plain country Habit was made for each of them; in this Equipage, they take their Journey first to Bristol, to try if they could meet with any convenience there to take Shipping with security, which when they found they could not, they diverted their course to London; the Gentleman at whose house they lodg'd within a mile of Bristol, who was Kinsman to this King-delivering Lady, is sayd to have been summoned before a Committee at Bristol, at the very time of their being there to take his Oath (to which Oath also most of the Gentry thereabout were put) that he neither harboured nor knew any thing of where the King of Scott was conceal'd, and this in all likelihood he did very innocently, as not imagining that those persons that came along with his Kinswoman, were any other then her real Serving-men: London then was the place to which they next intended, as likeliest to afford them shelter while they
- E tarried, and means of escaping undiscovered. Thus was this Illustrious Unfortunate constrained to run into the very mouths of those whom he design'd to fly, and venturing disguis'd as he was into Westminster-hall, he beheld the Trophies rear'd up of that Victory which his Enemies had gain'd against him: as soon as they arriv'd at London, the Lord Wilmot was presently imploy'd to find out a secure way for their transportation, and repairing to a Merchant of his Acquaintance, in whose fidelity he doubted not to confide, he dealt with him about this grand Affair, and by his means and assistance hir'd a Ship of forty Tyn, in which without delay they Imbarqu'd for France, yet not without great danger of being stop't, for the Master of the Ship coming to the Lord Wilmot, whose man the King of Scotts then personated, told him that he knew the King, notwithstanding his disguise, and that by being so highly Instrumental in his escape, he apparently ran the hazard of his life; but what with present Gifts, and promises of further Rewards, they at length wrought so far with him, that he landed them safe at Havre de Grace in France,
- F from thence they went directly to Rouen, where they stayd awhile to alter their disguised Habits, and furnish themselves with all things necessary: In the mean time the King dispatcht Letters to Paris, to give notice to his friends of his being at Rouen, whereupon the Duke of Orleanse sent his own Coach for him, which met him on the way as far as Magny, and Entertainment was made for him and his Attendants at the Louvre, where the same night he came he was visited by his Mother the English Queen, and by the Duke of Orleanse, who made great professions to him of his zeal and readiness to serve him: the next day the Duke of Orleanse came again to visit him with Madamofelle his daughter; also the Dukes of Beauford, Guise, Longeville, Marshal Thurvenne, with others of the great Peers and Nobles of France, to whom he related the whole adventure of his miraculous escape, according as hath been here describ'd, adding moreover, that
- G when he was in London, he was seen of divers that knew him, and yet wish't him so well, as not to betray him for a Thousand pounds; nor was it long ere the King of France and the Queen Mother came to Congratulate his safe deliverance, giving him many Complements and expressions of Civility. Before the certainty of the King of Scotts Arrivall in France was confirmed, it went for current, and news came by Letters to that effect, that he was landed at Scheveling in Holland, and that he lay for awhile incognito at Leiden, some say at the Hague, and that afterwards ward he went to his sister the Princess Royal, who was then at an house belonging to the Lady A Stanhope, called Teyling-house, together with the Duke of Buckingham, who since he certainly arrived in those parts with one Boswell, therefore it was the more credibly given out that the King was there also, and that the sayd Duke had been his Companion all along in the flight from Worcester, but it appeared otherwise by the Kings relation to the French Lords.

By a long series of Successes the English Common-wealth was now mainly confirmed and advanced: Cromwell their General after his triumphal entrance into London from the Battel at Worcester, was never after call'd forth upon any Expedition, there never hapning any occasion so important as to require his person; what remained uncompleted of the Conquest of Scotland and Ireland, he left to be performed by his Lieutenants there, and daily there came news of some Party defeated, some Fortress or other won in these Two Nations, besides the compleat B gaining of the lesser Islands. The Isle of Scilly being lately reduc'd, the next Attempt was made upon the Isle of Jersey, by Colonel Hain (whose Men were shipt at Weimouth the Fourteenth of October) and General Blake from Sea, after the taking of Mount Orgueil and other Forts, Elizabeth Castle was surrendered by Sir George Carteret Governour there for the King, and so by consequence the whole Island came into the power of the Common-wealth, also Castle Peel, and Castle Rushen in the Isle of Man (the only places that were kept for the King in that Island,) attackt by Colonel Duckensfield, and Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell, were delivered to them upon Articles by the Countess of Derby on the twenty sixth of October: and lastly, Cornet Castle the only place that held out in the Isle of Guernsey, was not long after taken by the Common-wealths Forces, having stood out a long time as being a place of great and almost impregnable Strength C by nature.

It was about this time, that Two eminent Commanders of the Parliaments side were taken away by death, viz. General Popham one of the Admirals at Sea, and Ireton Son-in-law to General Cromwell, and in his room made Deputy of Ireland.

The English Common-wealth had in some measure quieted things at home, and were in a faire way to a calm of Peace and Tranquillity, when new stirs began to appear from abroad, and that chiefly by reason of an Act made by the present English Parliament, For the encrease of Shipping, and the encouragement of Navigation; which the Hollanders apprehending highly prejudicial to their Trade, they labour'd with all their might what by fair Messages, and what with Threats to get repeal'd, but when they saw all their Endeavours were in vain, they were discoverd not obscurely to meditate Hostility. D

The latter end of this year was chiefly considerable, by the delivery of the Barbadoes to Sir George Ayscough; the Sentence of Banishment pronounc'd against John Lilburn, after a long and tedious Tryal at the Suit of Sir Arthur Haslerigg; and lastly, by the Act of Oblivion set forth by the Parliament, for the pardoning of all Offences, some few only excepted, which had been committed before the Third of September, and this was chiefly intended in respect of those things which had been done in the War, and to bury all Animosities between the State and the Kings Party.

The first Act of Hostility was on the Nineteenth of May, in the year 1652, when Van Trump the Admiral of the Dutch Fleet coming with Two and forty Sail toward Dover Road, refus'd to stoop Sail, hung out his red Flag, the usuall signal of Defiance, and gave a Broad-side to Blake the English Admiral, which occasioned some hours sharp dispute between them, wherein the Dutch had the worst, losing in this Fight two Ships and an hundred and fifty Men; but of this Action, the States of Holland would not in any wise own themselves Countenancers and Approvers, and to excuse the matter, as done without their Consent, they dispatcht their Ambassadors into England, to renew the Treaty with the Parliament of this Common-wealth; however this Treaty ended in an absolute breach between the Two Common-wealths, and now open War was denounc'd and publickly proclaim'd on both sides E

In July Sir George Ayscough being returned from the Barbadoes, and set to Guard the narrow Seas with a Squadron of Ships, met with Thirty Sail of Hollanders between Dover and Calice, and took, or burnt to the number of Ten, the rest ran ashore upon the Coast of France, and the next Month there happed another Encounter off Plymouth, between Sir George and the Dutch Fleet, consisting of sixty Men of War, and thirty Merchant, part of the English Fleet, coming up to Sir George Ayscough's assistance: This Engagement continued fierce till night parted them, and not without some loss to the English, but more to the Dutch; and about the latter end of September, they were lamentably defeated by General Blake, on the back-side of Goodwin Sands, which Bight was called, the Kentish Knock, but in the Levant Seas a small Fleet of the English conveying certain Merchant-men from Scanderoon, were set upon by eleven Sail of Dutch, who over-powering them in number, took and blew up five English Ships, and about the beginning of December, General Blake himself engaging with the whole Fleet of the Dutch, came off with the worst, losing the Garland and Bonaventure, with some other Ships: and again in the Levant, Captain Badiley coming from Portolongone to the Relief of C. Appleton, Blockt up in the Mole of Ligorn, was set upon by the Dutch, in which Encounter he lost three or four stout Ships: The same year the Two Fleets again joyning Battel between Portland and the Isle of Wight, about the Twentieth of February the Dutch were overthrown, with a sore and terrible loss both of their Ships and Men, but all these Fights put not yet a Period to the War, which was not ended till the year following, and that chiefly by the Counsels and Power of the now chief Ruler

By General Blake near Goodwin Sands. The English come off with loss in the Levant.

Another great over-throw given to the Dutch Fleet near Portland.

- A Ruler Cromwell, who having by the long continued success of his Forces obtained a long respite and vacation from Military Action, had leisure enough to forecast with himself, how he might not only confirm his present Greatness, but also advance himself to a higher pitch, and to this end he set himself by all manner of fair pretences to engage unto a Compliance with his Actions and Interests, the chief Officers of the Army; nor did he neglect to pry narrowly into the Actions and Councils of the Parliament, having of his own Creatures among them to give him continuall Intelligence from time to time of what was done in the Parliament House: Thus emboldened with his former Successes, and his present high Authority in the Common-wealth, fortified with Friends and Correspondents, and backt with a powerful Army; He on the Twentieth of April, in the year 1653. entred the House attended with some of the principal Commanders of his Army, and delivering his Reasons to them in a Speech, why he came to put a period to their present Sitting; as judging it a thing conducing to the publick good and welfare of the Nation, he accordingly Dissolved them, the Members some quietly, some with murmuring (resist none durst) yeilding Obedience to Necessity and the Generals pleasure: to justify this great Act, and satisfy the World, in form at least and pretense, a Declaration came forth from the General and his Council of Officers, shewing the reasons of this proceeding, and alledging the Corruptions and dilatory proceedings of this Parliament, and their endeavours to perpetuate themselves; and that the course of Law and Judicature might not be disturbed by the dissolution of this Government, a certain select number of persons were summoned by the Generals Writs to appear at Westminster on the Fourth of July, and to take the Government upon them. In the meanwhile, the General and his Council of Officers took upon them the administration of Affairs: the time being come, the persons designed for this Convention met in the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, where having received Orders and Commission from General Cromwell, they took their Seats in the Parliament House.

Cromwell dissolves the long Parliament.

Chooseth another.

- Four Months had this Convention or Parliamentary Assembly sate, and had made some laudable Edicts; when at length, certain Divisions and Controversies arising among them (and that chiefly about the taking away of Tithes, which came under Consultation) it was mov'd by some among them, that their longer sitting would not be for the peace of the Nation; thereupon they attended the General, and whether voluntarily or by appointment, resigned their Power into his hands, who thenceforth, though seeming unwilling, and excusing his Inability for so great a weight and burthen, yet importun'd by those about him, and by the City suborned, as some think, thereunto, assumed unto himself the supreme Rule and sovereign Authority of the Three Nations, with the Title of Lord Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland; and had a Council assigned him, consisting of One and twenty persons, most of them Officers of the Army, with whose assistance he carried all things in the Intervals of Parliament. And now he was arriv'd to that height of Power and Dignity, that there wanted only the Name and Title to make him absolute King.

Takes upon himself the Government, with the Title of Lord Protector.

- These things thus transacted in England, the King of Scots not having any further means left him for the attempting his claimed Dominions, was constrained to take up his peaceful Residence in the Court of France, where notwithstanding the low Condition to which he was by Fate reduc'd, yet in regard of his high Quality and Extraction, and his near relation to the French King, he lived in great Honour and Respect with the King, Queen, and Nobles of France: much talk also and expectation there was for a long time after his Arrival, of a Marriage between him and Mademoiselle d'Orleans, as likewise between his Brother the Duke of York, and the Duke of Longueville's Daughter, and the Queen of England was sayd to be an earnest Solicitor in the Business, but it is likely that the troublesome Estate at that time of the Kingdom of France, besides the ill posture of the Scots Kings Affairs put a period to this Transaction: for by reason of the Discontents of some of the chief Princes of the blood against Cardinal Mazarin's inordinate power and other grand Miscarriages of the State, there was sprung up a kind of civil War in that Kingdom; the people generally murmuring against the Cardinal, and inclining to take part with the Princes and the Parliaments also of Paris and Bordeaux adhering to them, and the Duke of Lorraine then in the Service of the Spaniards, being call'd in to the assistance of the Princes, having an Army to that purpose in a readines; and these things hapned when young Lewis the Fourteenth, was newly declared Major (i.e.) arriv'd to the Age that render'd him capable of Governing, and exempted him from the Tuition of the Queen Regent.

The Sr. K. entertain'd in the Court of France. A Match propos'd between him and the Duke of Orleans his daughter.

- To compose and end these Differences, the King of Scots offer'd himself as an earnest Mediator between both Parties, and so far he prevail'd in the business, that Deputies from the Princes were admitted to a Conference with the French King to declare their Grievances, and debate of those things that were in difference: the first Conference taking no effect, others were also procur'd at the Suit of the Scots King, who also himself went in person to and fro between both Sides, to mediate a Reconciliation, using his own Condition as an Argument to move the French King, advising him rather to compose things on any terms, then to drive on to extremity, as his Friends did in England, whereby he sayd he lost his good Father and Three Kingdoms; the King of France and his Council return'd him many thanks for his friendly Advice, and it was chiefly at his request that the Deputies had been admitted to Treat, yet all endeavours at present prov'd ineffectual, the French King persisting in his resolution not to give way to the banishment of the Cardinal, who he sayd, had approv'd himself a most faithful Servant and able Minister of State; hereupon the Warlike Preparations proceeded vigorously on both sides, and had the Duke of Lorrain as was expected come on with his Army, and joyned with the Princes; the business had speedily come to a grand Engagement; but the Duke being tamper'd with by the Court party, and having as it seems very advantageous Terms, offer'd him to desist, was so effectually prevail'd with, that he drew off his Forces and would not engage: this so incensed the Princes and the generality of the people, that they not only bitterly inveigh'd against Lorrain for his perfidiousness, but also against the King of Scots, and the Queen his Mother; as supposing that they and their Agents, Montague and Jermyn had under pretence of negotiating a Reconciliation, carried all things in favour of the Cardinal and the Court Faction; and there hapned an occasion which increas'd this their suspicion, for the Duke of Beaufort coming into the Field to the Duke of Lorrain found the King of Scots and his Brother the Duke of York in his Company, who upon Beaufort's coming in avoided the place, and then the Duke of Lorrain being perswaded by many Arguments to come on and fight, discover'd so much backwardness and coolness in the Business, as made it easily perceiv'd he had no such intention, so that now more then ever the common people were envenom'd with rage, and flung their reproaches against the English Princes, not forbearing even to threaten violence to their Persons, insomuch that the Scots King was forc'd to withdraw from the Louvre to S. Germain's; and the Queen his Mother received many Affronts as she was passing in her Coach from the Louvre to the Nunnery at Châlons where she kept her Residence; but this kind of violent proceedings, sprung rather from the heat of popular Fury, then were ground'd upon any sure Foundation of Reason, for it was not unknown that the King of France was advis'd by his Cousin to consent to the departure of Mazarin out of his Dominions; rather then to imbroyl his Kingdom in War; nor was it probable that his Conference with the Duke of Lorrain was about any other then his own Affairs; since he had been trafficking for a long time with that Duke, to send his Army over into Ireland, for the recovering of that Kingdom out of the hands of the English Commonwealth, and so far had this business proceeded, that Articles of Agreement were drawn up between the Duke and the Lord Trafalgar Agent for the King in this business; wherein among other things it was agreed that the Duke should be vested with the Power and Title of Protector Royall of Ireland; but the Duke not having Power sufficient of himself without the assistance of some other Prince to undertake so great an Enterprize; and moreover his Forces being diverted upon other designs, this business took no effect, and it was thought by some that Cardinal Mazarin, of whom the Scots King had been reported so much a Favourite, was no small Impediment to this Affair.

After that Cromwell had invested himself with the Supreme Authority, the War yet lasted for a while with the Dutch, and Two terrible Naval Battels more were fought between the Fleets this year, the first about the beginning of June, in which, though the English had otherwise a most notable Victory, yet they lost General Dron one of their Admirals, who was slain by a great shot: the other was upon the Twenty ninth of July, in which the Dutch lost not only the Day (this being the greatest Victory that had been gain'd over them in all this War) but also their General Vontramp a very shrewd and expert Seaman, and one that would have been a Terror to any but the English Nation.

During this War with the Hollander, there hapned a notable Contest between the Commonwealth of England, and the King of Denmark, about certain Merchant-men which coming from the East, and not daring to venture through the Sound by reason of the Dutch-men of War that lay there, but tarrying for a Convoiy out of England, were in the mean time shut up in the Booms at Copenhagen, and not only the Convoiy was forc'd to return without them, but also when one Braslow was sent over as an Agent from this State to demand the restitution of those Ships, they were notwithstanding both detain'd by the Kings Order, and the Goods sold: This for the time bred a great Controversie between this State and the Danish King, however it was at last taken up and ended at least in a seeming Correspondence.

Also a French Fleet of seven Sail going to the Relief of Dunkirk then besieg'd by the Spaniards, was set upon by General Blake, and most of the Ships taken, by which means the French Relief was hindered and the Town won by the Spaniards; this moved the French King to hasten over his Ambassador to sollicite for a Peace with England, which afterward was effected, and about the same time came over an Ambassador from Portugal for the same end.

The Scots King after he had for a season retir'd himself to S. Germain's to avoid the violence threaten'd against him by the Parisians, for having, as they surmisd, been a partial Mediator in the business of the Princes, returned as soon as the heat of popular Rage was over, to the Palace of the Louvre. During his Absence at Paris, his Brother the Duke of Gloucester, who for a long time had been under the Custody of the Parliament in England, and at length dismiss'd and sent to his Sister into Holland, was from thence attended into France by Sir Marmaduke Langdale and Sir Richard Grenville, and honourably receiv'd at Paris by the French King, Queen-mother, and the rest of the Grantees.

John Lilburn who had been banish'd by the Commonwealth, hearing of the change of Government, and presuming upon the Protection of Clemency, thought he might now venture without danger to return into England, and about the Tenth of June he came over without permission granted, whereupon he was try'd for his life at the City Sessions, and after a long time of hearing given by the Jury, yet was he by Order committed back to Newgate, and afterwards removed from thence to the Tower, so great a stir there was with this petty incendiary, this Enemy to whatsoever Power was appointed.

And

A And now it was order'd by Cromwells Council at Whitehall, that all publick Writings should issue out under the Name and Authority of the Lord Protector, no longer under the Title of the Keepers of Englands Liberties; and an Instrument of the Government was drawn up and publish'd, containing Two and forty Heads.

Publick Writings run in a new Style.

Toward the latter end of February, eleven persons of Quality were committed Prisoners to the Tower, upon the discovery of some secret Design against the Protector, and as it was reported in behalf of Charles Stuart King of the Scots, but either out of the Protector's Clemency, or rather because they could not be found guilty, they were soon after set at liberty.

Eleven persons of quality committed to the Tower.
Addresses made to the Protector from several parts of the Nation.

About this time, there came Addreses from all parts of the Nation (as usually there doth upon all changes of Government, be they never so contrary to one another) to Congratulate his Highness's Advancement.

B By Cromwells Authority chiefly it was, as hath been already intimated, that a Peace began now to be in agitation with the Dutch, for he having now obtained the supreme Power, and having as appears afterwards, some other Design in hand, took the first Advantage of their Application for Peace, as doubtless they were brought to such Terms by this War as made them forward enough to sue for it, and to that end, there came over Two Ambassadors, the Lords Newport and Youngfall, who after a while going over for fresh Instructions to the States, returned about the beginning of March, fully Impowred from them for the concluding of a firm League and good Correspondence between the Two States: So that on the Fifth of April, 1654. the Articles of Peace were signed, and on the Twenty sixth Proclaimed in London, and a day or two after were proclaimed the Articles of Alliance between England and Sweden, the Lord

In the following Month of May, several persons charged with an intention to have taken away the Protector's life by Ambush, to have seized the City and Tower, and so to have proclaimed Charles Stuart King, were apprehended and sent to Prison, and at a High court of Justice, erected on the First of July for their Tryal, Three were condemned of High-treason, namely, Colonel John Gerard, Peter Vowell a Schoolmaster, and one Somerst. Fox, this last was reprieved for his ample Confession; of the other Two, Gerard was beheaded on Tower-hill, Vowell hanged at Charing Cross, on the same day with Colonel Gerard, Viz. The Tenth of July, though upon a different account, was likewise beheaded Don Pantaleon son Brother to the Portugal Ambassador,

Col Gerard and others tryed before a high Court of Justice.

D who having not many Months before been engag'd in a Quarrel upon the New Exchange, with this Gerard, wherein he came off with the worst, was so far stirr'd up to Revenge, that coming the next Night into the Exchange with an armed Train of his Followers, he was the occasion of the Murder of one Mr. Greenwood a Gentleman no way concern'd in the Quarrel: for this Riot being tryed for his life and condemned at the Upper-bench, he was brought to end at once both his Life and Controversie upon the same Scaffold with his Adversary.

The Portugal Ambassadors brother beheaded.

E The Scots King had remain'd in the Court of France between two and three years, with an Expectation sometimes flowing and sometimes ebbing, of gaining at length some opportunity to recover his claimed Kingdoms; one while by reason of the War between the Common-wealth of England and the united States, he hop'd to have won the States to an owning and embracing of his Interests, and to that purpose sent over Ambassador to them the Lord Gerard, desiring them, by a Letter written to them with his own hand, that he might have a Squadron of lusty Ships to bear his Flag, which he offered to command himself in person as Admirall.

Transactions between the Sc. K. and the Dutch.

In the mean time, his Sister the Princess Royal of Orange, and the rest of his friends in the *Lowcountrie*s, were not slack to employ all their Power and Influence with the States to incline them unto a ready Concession in this Affair, and to engage them the more to him, the Scots King upon the Arrival of Mr. Borcel to negotiate a League with the Crown of France, shew'd himself very active and industrious to promote that Work, and haply he might be instrumental in a great measure for the bringing it the sooner to a period, yet what with the averiness of the Province of Holland (for the other Provinces seem'd more inclinable to his desire) and what with the Peace that ensued between the Common-wealth of England and the confederate States,

F all he could gain of them in the end, notwithstanding his own and his friends so earnest Addreses, was only an Answer full of complemental Civility to his Letter and Embasie: another while he encouraged himself with the probable Success of those earnest Endeavours that were made by the Pope and other Catholick Princes for a Reconciliation between the Two Crowns of France and Spain, in which Affair he also interpos'd himself a most zealous Sollicitor, as not doubting but that from the united Forces of Two such powerful Monarchs, he should receive considerable Assistance, and Matters were once in a fair way to a peaceful Conclusion, had not the politick Reasons of State, as it is thought, of Cardinal Mazarini put a stop to this grand Work; so that in this Business also as in many others besides, he was strangely frustrated of his expectation; but that Transaction which of all others went nearest to him, was the great preparation

G in the French Court, for the sending over an Ambassador into England, to treat about a Peace with this Common-wealth: to divert this Embassage, both he and the Queen his Mother us'd all the Power and Interest they had in that Court, though all in vain, for it was not long ere Mr. Bourdeaux Nenfuille was dispatch'd upon the foresaid Embasie; hereupon the Scotch King foreseeing by a necessary consequence what would become of his Party and Affairs in France, if this Address, as it was likely should terminate in a League, thought it better to leave that Kingdom voluntarily before hand, then to stay till he were ceremoniously forced out; so that having A taken his leave of the King of France (and the other great Ones) from whom he received many Complements and Apologies, no doubt pretending the necessity of his Affairs: He went accompanied with his Brother the Duke of York, his Cousins Prince Rupert and Prince Edward Palatine to Chatillon, a house belonging to the Prince of Conde, where they stayd awhile to determine how most commodiously each of them to dispose of themselves; the Scots King with Prince Rupert resolv'd for Germany, having long before sent the Lord Wilmos his Ambassadour to the Emperour to Negotiate in his behalf, and the rather because about that time a general Dyer of the Estates of the Empire was to be held at Regensburgh: Prince Edward took his Journey to Bombon, and the Duke of York remain'd in France till a good while after the conclusion of the Peace with England, being Lieutenant General of the French Kings Army, commanded B in chief by Marshal Thuren. Prince Rupert having parted from the King of Scots to go to Heidelberg, the chief Seat of his brother Frederick Prince Palatine, and thence to the Imperial Court at Vienna, the King took his Journey by the way of Cambray and Leige to the Spain, which he made his first place of Residence in Germany: here his Sister the Princess Royal met him, and after a few Months stay in this place, accompanied him to Colen, where they were receiv'd with great Honour and Magnificence; as they made their entrance into the Town, the great and small Guns were discharged, and the Deputies of the City came in a solemn manner to Complement them: not many dayes after they entertain'd these Princes at a sumptuous Collation, the like did the Duke of Newburgh at his house at Dunssel-Dorff, from whence the Princess of Orange returning into Holland, the King her brother brought her onward of her way as far as C Bedinguen.

The young Duke Henry of Gloucester after his brothers departure into Germany, was by the means of the Queen his Mother, and others of the Catholick Faction, placed in a Colledge of the Jesuites, to have been Principled in the Romish Religion, whereof Intelligence being soon brought to the Scots King, he took great distast thereat, and sent speedy order to have him remov'd and brought to him, which Order was so exactly observ'd, that when he was upon his departure out of Paris with the Marquis of Ormond, the Queen sending to him the Marshal of Praslin, and Mountague Abbot of Nantuel, to desire him only to go and take a Dinner at the Colledge before he went; the Duke return'd Answer, That though she were his Mother, yet he ought rather (especially in this matter) to yeild Obedience to his brother as being also his D King: this refusal so incens'd the Queen, that she would not admit him into her presence so much as to take his leave of her; moreover when the King of Scots sent a Letter to excuse the hasty taking of him out of the Colledge, she is sayd to have thrown the Letter into the fire:
This seems to me sufficiently to evince that the King of the Scots is not altogether so great a Favourer of Popery as some have delivered him to the World to be.

Scotland was not yet so totally subdued, but that there yet appeared in Arms for the King a Force not altogether contemptible of the Highlanders, whose chief Captains were the Earls of Atbol, Seafort, Kenmore, Glencarn, Glengary, and others: these having each of them got together several small Parties, were endeavouring to unite their Forces into one Body, and so to have been able to have taken the Field against the whole English Army; and they had soon ef- E fected their purpose, had not Glencarn who was the strongest Party of them been Encomptred by Colonel Morgan, and all his Army disperfed, himself very narrowly escaping from being taken:
yet were they not for all this so out of heart, but that they again endeavour'd to Rally, and their Confidence was the more encreased by their expectation of Middleton's coming over with Supplies out of Holland; nor did their expectation fail them of Middleton's coming, but it was not long after his Arrival, ere engaging in Battel at Loughgery with Lieutenant General Monk, he was utterly overthrown and forced to fly again out of Scotland. This Fight was on the One and twentieth of July: And the Kirk of Scotland also her self at this time had the Wings of her Authority very much clip'd, if not quite taken away by the dissolution of her general Assembly, which was done by Colonel Morgan the foregoing year at Aberdeen where they were Assembled, F
Mr. Andrew Cant and the rest of them in vain Protesting against the Action.

As for Ireland it was now brought to that pass, that there was little or nothing of Opposition remaining in that Nation, to trouble the Common-wealth, only the Incursions now and then of a few Tories, a great part of the Natives (among whom all the ancient Irish Nobility) being either executed, those that were found guilty of the bloody Masacre committed upon the Protestants, or transported into Spain and other foreign Parts, those that came in upon Proclamation, the rest were all driven into the Province of Conaught, and there circumscribed to Inhabit; the other Three Provinces were allotted to the English, and all the forfeited Lands divided among the Adventurers and Soldiers; those for the Moneys advanced towards the carrying on of the Irish Affairs, these for their Arrears. In the room of Ireson deceas'd had been appointed G for Lord Deputy of Ireland; Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Son-in-law to Cromwell, by the Marriage of his eldest Daughter Bridges, Ireson's Relict.

According to the late Instrument of Government, wherein in the first place it was Articled, That a Parliament should be called every Three years, and that the first should begin on the Third of September, 1654. A Parliament was summoned by the Protestors Writs, chosen by a free Election of the People, and Assembled at the prefixed time above mentioned, making choice for their Speaker of William Lenthall, Speaker in the long Parliament; their beginning seems

A seems to have been somewhat bold, considering the totteringness of their Estate; for at their very hatching they began to question the lawfulness of the Power by which they were call'd, whereupon they were enjoyned to sign a Recognition of the Government as it was settled in a single Person, and a Parliament, before they could be readmitted to their Seats in Parliament: this all of them that signed (for some refus'd) had liberty again to take their Places; but so little did their Proceedings please the Protector, that they had scarcely sate full five Months, (and so long they were to sit by one of the Articles of the Instrument) when he came and dissolved them. A day or two after the dissolution of this Parliament, were apprehended about a new Conspiracy hatched, as they say, or at least countenanced by the Parliament it self; Sir Henry Littleton, Sir John Packington of the Royal Interest; and of the Levelling or Lilburnian Faction, Major Wildman. There was it seems intended a general Rising throughout the whole Nation, for the vindication of the supposed Right of Charles Stuart King of the Scots, unto the Crown of England: and though the Combination was in a great part discovered before the apprehending of the above named Persons, who thereupon with several others were committed to Prison; yet to far the Design being generally layd had taken effect, that in several Counties some small Armed Parties began to gather into a Body; in Shropshire and Wales, some endeavour'd to have taken Shrewsbury, and Chirk Castle by Surprize, but were both prevented, and of those that attempted Shrewsbury, Sir Thomas Harris who was the chief, was taken Prisoner and sent up to London.

Upon Sunday the Eleventh of March, a Party of about Two hundred entered Salisbury about Midnight, and having seiz'd upon Horses, and taken away the Commissions of the Judges that were upon their Circuit, bended their course towards Cornwall, of which Captain Unton Crook, having timely Intelligence pursued them with his own Troop, and at a place called Southmolton, in Devonshire, overtook them, and after four hours sharp Conflict, put them to a totall Rout, besides Fifty common Prisoners: there were taken of the chief Leaders Three Captains, Penraddock, Jones, and Grove, only Sir Joseph Waggestaff made a shift to escape away. Other Risings there were in Northumberland, and at the Forest of Sherwood in Yorkshire, where five hundred Horse being met, dispers'd themselves on a sudden, through a sudden pannick fear which posselt them, also at Hexom Moor in Yorkshire, there was a great Rendezvous of the Gentry of the Country, of whom Sir Henry Slingsby was taken, and Sir Richard Malleverer with much ado escaped.

D At Salisbury and Exeter many of the West Risers were tryed by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, and executed, and particularly at Exeter, Penraddock and Grove were beheaded, Captain Jones was reprieved; besides those who were put to death of the chief Leaders, many Prisoners in the West were filled with a number of the common sort of Prisoners, till within a little while after that they emptied themselves into foreign Plantations.

E And there hapned about this time an Adventure which serv'd very opportunely for the ridding of Prisons of their surcharging numbers, and the imploying of a multitude of loose and vagrant people, there having been ever since the Peace with the Dutch, great Preparations made for the Equipping forth of a great and powerful Fleet, upon an Expedition which was kept very secret and not made known even to those that went upon it, unless to the supreme Commanders, till the very last, only it was given out that the Voyage would be very profitable, and to a place where there was much Gold and store of Riches; In this Service we may well think there would not be wanting enow that would greedily engage themselves: hither all sorts of people flock'd, especially those of low and bankrupt Fortunes, and upon hopes of enriching themselves, run headlong most of them to their ruine; a Fate that commonly attends precipitate Ambition and Covetousness. This Navy setting Sail from Portsmouth on the Twenty seventh of December, put in at the Barbadoes on the Twenty eighth of January; Venable commanding the Land-forces, and Pen being General at Sea.

F This year hath been sufficiently memorable, if for nothing else, yet for the death of that famous and Learned Antiquary Mr. John Selden, whose Works are a Monument far more worthy his Memory, then that in the Inner-Temple Church.

Philip the Fourth King of Spain, whether to Collogue with the Protector, whom he saw to be a man of a growing Fortune, or to divert some secret Design which he foresaw was brewing against him (nor did he fail much of his Conjecture) sent over into England as extraordinary Ambassadour the Marquis of Leda, who arriv'd the Twenty second of May, 1655. and was received with the usual Complements and Ceremonies, but had not that cordial Entertainment which he expected; for at the same time that he was here endeavouring to confirm the League, there was a Design in agitation which tended to the dissolution of it, To that the Ambassadour quickly finding which way things went, took his leave after a short stay and returned homeward.

G In the mean time, the Fleet setting Sail from the Barbadoes on the Thirtieth of March, steered its course towards Hispaniola, one of the fairest and richest Islands belonging to the American Dominions of the King of Spain, so that it was by this time apparent enough which way this Expedition tended; and whereas it was admir'd by many that at that time when no Hostility was declared between this Nation and the Kingdom of Spain, or any defiance bid on either side, we should with so high a hand carry War into his Territories, without any provocation by him first offered: Hereto it was alledg'd, That the Conditions of Peace extended not beyond the Southern Tropick; This Apology though it serv'd to stop the mouths of some, yet it could not self Universal Monarch, and to bring Freedom and purity of Religion to those Indians under his Yoke, or, as many are apt to believe, to partake with the Spaniard of some of his Indian Gold, thinking it too much for one Potentate to ingross so much Treasure to himself: I shall not take upon me to determine this as most certain, That at the beginning of this Enterprize, it met with a very remarkable Check (however the War with the Spaniard proved afterwards successful enough) for General Venables, when as he might have landed his Men within a very little of Santo Domingo, the principal Town and Fortrefs of the Island, and which was in a manner deserted by the Garrison Soldiers upon sight of the English Fleet; nevertheless led by B know not what Policy and Interest of his own and (it is more then suspected) over-ru'd by the Counsels of his Wife, set them a shore Ten Leagues Westward of Domingo; whereupon the Spaniards foreseeing well enough what would be the issue of this business according as it was ordered, immediatly gathered fresh Courage, and betook themselves presently again to the defence of San Domingo which they had abandon'd: The English landing without opposition, and seeing no Enemy neer them, thought themselves safe enough, and were in their minds absolute Lords of the Indies, sharing the golden Mines among them, when contrary to their expectation, the General causing it to be Proclaim'd in the head of the Army, That none upon pain of death should plunder any Gold, Plate, or Jewels, or kill any Cattel. This suddain frustration of their Hopes, and the Climates excessive heat, proved the one such a damping to C their Spirits, the other such a weakning to their Bodies, that by that time they had marched a most tedious and disconsolate March through thick Woods in deep scalding Sands, ready to perish with miserable Drought and Thirst for want of Water, of which they met not with a drop in many Miles, they were brought to such a condition, that they needed not an Enemy to kill them, being already almost dead with faintness and weakness; so that the Spaniards, Negro's, and Molatto's, falling upon them, kill'd with little or no resistance, till they were weary of killing, and those that could make a shift to fly away, found it a sufficient Archievement, for that time, to bring themselves back again safe unto their Ships.

In this Conflict Major General Haines acted the part of a very valiant Soldier, who being shamefully deserted by his own men, and over-powered by his Enemies, was slain stoutly D fighting: there fell above Six hundred in the Fight, or rather Massacre, besides what were cut off in stragling Parties neer as many more, and all this Execution was done by not above Sixty of the Enemy. The remnant of this Naval Army, that they might not be thought to have undertaken so long a Voyage, and of such expectation altogether in vain, they posselt themselves with little or no opposition of another Island called Jamaica, which however not so plentiful and rich a place as that which they at first aimed at, yet with much Industry, and the supplies that were sent them out of England, they made a shift to make a Habitation of it tolerable enough to abide in, and have kept it ever since.

The first Adviser to this undertaking, was one Gage a Minister (formerly a Romish Priest) E who also undertook to be the chief Guide in this Expedition, as one who by his long time of Travel in those Parts, was well acquainted with them, and there he ended his dayes not long after his re-arrival, reaping little fruit of this his famous Project.

While these things were thus transacted not so happily in these Western Islands, with better success General Blake before Tunis, demanding reparation for the Losses sustaint from Turkish Pirates, and being answered with scorn by the Dye of Tunis, ventur'd upon a gallant resolute Attempt, and (notwithstanding the Bravado of the Dye, in bidding him behold his Castles of Galleta and Ferino.) came boldly to Anchor with the Admiral, Vice-admiral, and Rear-admiral, within Musket shot of the Castle (the shore also being planted with great Guns) and never left till he had fir'd Nine fair Ships in Porto Ferino, all that were in the Port, and at length came off with much Glory and Renown, and little loss of his own side.

Notwithstanding the ill success of the late severall Combinations, which so many suffer'd for, F it was not much above a Month ere the Lord Willoughby of Parham; and the Lord Newport, with divers others, were committed to the Tower, upon suspicion of Treason, which yet, it seems, went no further then suspicion, for they were never brought to a publick Tryal.

About the beginning of July, Major Sedgewick went with a Squadron of Twelve Ships, among which was Colonel Humphryes with his Regiment to the supply of those in Jamaica, from whence in the following Month of August General Pen return'd for England with a part of the Fleet, the greatest part yet staying behind: and not long after him came over General Ve- nables, leaving in their steads Colonel Fortescue to Command the Land Forces, Vice-admiral Goadson the Navy. Venables not long after his Arrival, was for his ill management of Affairs in G Hispaniola, sent to the Tower, from whence, haply being judg'd to have fail'd rather through rash Impudence, then any sinister intention, he was at length releas'd.

The Duke of Gloucester having stayd for some time with his Sister the Princess Royal, at the Hague, was at last accompanied by her to their Brother the King of Scots at Colem, where she her self also stayd with them till after the Fair at Frankford, to which place they all of them together made a Progress of Stare and Pleasure, attended by the Marquis of Ormond, the old Lord Goring, the Lord Newburgh, the Lady Stamp, and Monsieur Hemslæt her Husband; they went

A went by Coach a little beyond Bonne the Archbishops Electoral Seat, the rest of the Journey they went by water in a Gondelay, or Pleasure-boat, through every Princes Country which they pass'd, they had the chief Officers of State sent to Complement them, and were saluted by the great Guns from all their Towns and Castles, more especially the Printe Elector of Mentz sent his grand Marshal to invite them to his Court; whereupon the Lord Newburgh was sent back with the grand Marshal to desire the Elector to excuse them at present, promising to wait upon him at their return: being arrived at Frankford, and hearing that Queen Christina of Sweden was coming that way in her Journey into Italy, the Scotts King sent one of his Lords to her, expressing his desire to wait upon her at what ever place her Majesty should be pleased to nominate; the place then appointed for this Interview was Coningstein, a Village neer Frankford, in the Electorate of Mentz, where he was received by her with much respect, and with expressions highly obliging; he had first private Conference with her himself for half an hour, next the Duke of Gloucester was admitted, and then the Lords that attended the King: As these Princes came back from Frankford: the Elector of Mentz renewing his Civilities, provided all manner of Accommodation for them as they pass'd through his Territories, and meeting them himself a great part of the way, he brought them to one of his Palaces where he entertain'd them in a very sumptuous and splendid manner, for the space of two or three dayes, after which they returned to Colen: Four Burgomasters being appointed by the Magistrate of the City to wait upon them and welcome them home.

The Interview between the K. of Scotts and Christina Queen of Sweden.

The Sc. K. and his Company entertain'd by the Elector of Mentz.

C There having been committed a most horrid and barbarous Massacre upon the Protestants in the Vallies of Piedmont, by the Soldiers of Charles Emmanuel Duke of Savoy: The Protector appointed a solemn day of Humiliation to be kept, and a large Contribution to be gathered throughout the Nation for their Relief.

A Contribution gathered throughout England, for the distressed Protestants in Piedmont.

Toward the latter end of October, Orders were set forth by the Protector and his Council, for the securing of the Peace of the Common-wealth; to execute which, there were appointed certain Protectors or Governours of Provinces, Eleven in number, namely, Kelsey, Goff, Defborow, Fleetwood, Skippon, Whaley, Butler, Berry, Worsley, Lambert, and Baxter, who was also Lieutenant of the Tower; each of them having his severall Counties allotted to his Government, in the nature of a Province, wherein their Authority for the time they govern'd, which was not long, was very absolute and uncontrollable in all civil and judicial Affairs.

Major Generals constituted over severall Provinces.

D Upon the tendering of certain Proposals to the Protector, by Manasseh ben Israel, a Jewish Merchant, in the behalf of his Hebrew Nation, for their free admission to Trade and exercise their Religion in England; a Conference was held about it severall dayes at Whitehall, by the Members of the Council, and certain eminent Divines; and many Arguments being urg'd, some for, others against their Admission, those against it at length so far prevail'd, that the Proposals took no effect.

A debate held at Whitehall about the admission of the Jews.

E The Spanish King thinking it in vain to hope for a conservation of the League on this side the Tropick, from those whom he judg'd to have so apparently broke it on the other side, by invading his Island of Hispaniola, began not obscurely to make preparations for War, and to shew that he had entertain'd Thoughts of Hostility; a general Imbargo was made in Spain, of all English Merchants Goods, and many of their persons secured; hereupon the like was done in England, and there suddenly follow'd on both sides a denunciation of open War, which by the Spaniard was not long after solemnly proclaim'd at Dunkirk.

An Imbargo upon the Goods of English Merchants in Spain.

Open War with England proclaim'd by the Spaniard at Dunkirk.

Articles of Peace between England and France ratified and proclaim'd.

The dissolution of the Peace with Spain, was the production of a Peace with France, for there having been long since an Address made to that end from France, to the State of England; no sooner did the breach begin between England and Spain: but the French King sends to Monsieur Bourdeaux his Ambassadour here, to preis home the business of his Embassie, which he did with so good success, that in a short while after the Articles of Peace between us and France were concluded, ratifi'd by both Parties, and on the Twenty eighth of November the Peace was proclaim'd at London, and at Paris much about the same time.

F One principal Condition of this Treaty was the exclusion of Charles Stuart King of the Scotts, and all his Relations and Adherents out of the King of France his Dominions, he himself upon foresight of what this Treaty would come to, had long since betaken himself to Germany, and there remained (for the most part at Colen, as hath been already mentioned) untill such time as the Spaniard invird him into Flanders: his brother the Duke of York, notwithstanding the great Command he had in the King of France his Army (the nearest Ties and Relations little avail, when self-interest comes in a place) was, by the same reason of State, advertis'd to depart that Kingdom with all his Retinue, by a prefixed time, not without some Complements and Apologies for the necessity of this dismissal; also his departure was respird for some considerable space, in which he was visited, and honourably treated by the Marshal Turenne, and others of the French Grandees; as likewise by the Duke of Modena (who at that time was come into France about some important Affair) at length he took his leave of the King and Court of France, and attended by the Lord Jermyn and other English Lords, took his Journey toward Flanders, where at that time his brother the Scotts King resided at the Invitation of Don John of Austria, then Governour of the Lowcountries for the King of Spain, who whether out of Commiseration of this Prince's unfortunate Condition, or out of policy to make use of his interest, sent the Count of Fuenalduque to offer him in the name of the Spanish King all possible Service and Assistance.

The Duke of York warn'd out of France.

He takes himself to Flanders to his brother.

The

1656.
The death and burial of the Bishop of Ar-magh.

The first thing remarkable this next year, 1656, is the death of that pious and most learned A Prelate, James Usher Arch-bishop of Armagh, and once Primate of Ireland, whose judicious Writings are sufficiently famous in the Common-wealth of Learning throughout Christendome; he had an honourable Burial bestow'd upon him by his Highness (so the Lord Protector was commonly stiled) and most of the Nobility in London attended him to his Enterrment In Westminster Abbey, where his Funeral Oration was deliver'd by Dr. Bernard late Lord Almoner to his Highness.

A Parliament summoned again.

The Protector notwithstanding his no success in his last Parliament; yet finding a necessity of calling one again, he sent forth Writs in July for the summoning of a Parliament, to meet on the Seventeenth of September.

Gen. Mountague's Victory over the Spanish Fleet near Cadix.

In the mean while the English Navy commanded by Mountague, lying to intercept the Spa- B nish Plate coming from the West Indies, set upon a Fleet of Eight Ships, within four Leagues of the Bay of Cadix; the Admiral Ship in which was General Don Marco del Porto, with Six hundred thousand pieces of Eight run a shore in the Bay, the Vice-admiral a Gallion commanded by Don Francisco de Esquevel, and having in her 1200000 pieces of Eight, and another Ship commanded by John Rodriguez Calderon were taken, and afterwards fir'd (one wilfully by the Spaniards in it, the other by accident) Two others were taken and kept in possession, the Rear-admiral a Gallion Commanded by Don Francisco del Haya, and having in her Two Millions of Plate, and another Ship Commanded by John de la Torre, very richly laden, another man of War of some value, with a Portugall Prize, and a small Vessel of Advice from the Viceroy of Mexico escaped to Gibraltar. In the Viceadmiral which was set on fire by the Spaniards them- selves, to prevent being taken Prisoners, was the Marquis of Baydex with his whole Family; there perished in this Combustion besides a number of less Note, the Marquis himself, with his Wife and his eldest Daughter, who was going into Spain to be married to the Duke of Medina Celi; there were saved from this fire, the Marquis his eldest Son Don Francisco de Lopez, a younger Son Don Joseph de Sunega, and two Daughters Donna Josepha and Catalina, with about Ninety others. In the Rear-admiral was also taken Prisoner Don Diego de Villa Alva, Governour of the Havana. It was related by the young Marquis Francisco de Lopez, who with his Brother and Sisters was brought up to London, and there for a while detained Prisoners, That the Cities of Lima and Calao in Peru were about 5 Months before destroyed by an Earthquake and fire raining from Heaven, in which Ruine there perished above 12000 Spaniards, but of Indians not above 100; Also that the Mountains of Potosi being layd level, the Gold and Silver Mines were thereby ut- D terly destroyed. This Enterprize at Cadix purchas'd no less Profit then Honour to the Performers thereof, and to the chief in Power: As for the Spanish young Nobles that were taken, the Protector, to give him his due, dealt very nobly by them, and after no very long time of detention, dismiss'd them home without any Ransom.

wonderful accident at Peru.

On the Seventeenth of September (the time appointed) the Parliament Assemble at West- minster and choose for their Speaker Sir Thomas Widdrington; several Members returned to sit in this Parliament, being excepted against by the Protector, were denied admittance into the House, who nevertheless at the next Session of the same Parliament were permitted to sit; the principal things transacted in this Session were,

The Parliament assemble.

The Parliament Petition and Advise the Protector to take upon him the Title of King.

"I. An Act for renouncing and disannulling the Title of Charles Stuart unto the E Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

"II. An Act for the securing of his Highness the Lord Protector's Person, and C continuance of the Nation in security and Peace.

"III. The humble Petition and Advice,

With which they several times waited upon the Protector at Whitehall, desiring him to take the F chief Government of the Nations upon him, with the Title of KING, of which the Power he already had, the Name only he wanted; A Transaction, methinks, somewhat strange, considering how lately, and with how much resolution the same kind of Judicature, a Parliament had abrogated both the Name and being of a King, if there were not something of mystery in it, more then a meer Parliamentary Proceeding. As oft as the Members made their Addresses to him, with this humble Petition and Advice, he still desir'd further time of Deliberation before he could positively determine in a matter of so great Weight and Concernment; till at length being request'd to give his final Answer, he returned, That he could not take upon him the Government with that Title: thus openly refusing (in regard matters were not brought to sufficient maturity) what it was generally believ'd, he secretly pursu'd: several other Acts G passed this Parliament, as For the exportation of several Commodities of the breed, growth, or manufacture of this Common-wealth. For taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries. For an Assessment upon England, Scotland, and Ireland. For the preventing of the multiplicity of Buildings within ten miles of London, &c.

The most desperate Attempt against the life of the Protector, and the nearest to have taken effect, was agitated by Miles Sindercome, alias Fish, hir'd (as they say) thereunto by Don Alonso tector's life.

A Alonso de Cardenas, once Leiger Ambassadour here from Spain) who had drawn into Conspiracys with him one Cecil, and another that was of the Proteectors Lifeguard, called Toup, Ambushe had been layd in severall places, as at Hammer-smith, where a House was hir'd on purpose for the placing of an Engine call'd a Blunderbus, to shoot him as he went to Hampton-court; at Hide-park-corner also he was waited for, as he went to take the Ayre, as likewise at another house at Westminster, by which he was to go to the Parliament-house. Lastly, When these took no effect, the next Design was to have set Whitehall on fire, by placing a Basket of combustible matter in the Chappel, with a Train layd to have taken fire at a prefxed time, which nevertheless was also prevented by a timely discovery: He of the Lifeguard was the man that first reveal'd this Conspiracy, for which he was pardoned, and so also was Cecil for his free confession, and the sorrow he exprest for his fault: as for Sindercombe who boldly and sturdily stood it out, he was tryed at the Court commonly called the Upper-bench, by the Attorney General, and being cast by Two Witnesses, he was sentenc'd to be hang'd, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; in the mean time being kept close Prisoner in the Tower, that very morning he was to have been executed, he was found dead in his Chamber, having snuff up into his head a certain poysonous Powder to avert it seems the shame and misery of the Execution that was preparing for him; where as a Felo de se he was dragg'd at an horses Tail with his Heels forward to Tower-hill, and turned naked into an hole under the Scaffold, with a Stake spiked with Iron, driven through his body into the earth.

Sindercome tryed and condemned.

He procures his own death by a poysonous Powder.

Memorable also was the Tryal (happning a little before this discovery) of one James Naylour, the great Champion and Ring-leader of a Sect of People generally called Quakers, who having spread his doctrine and gained many Profelytes to it in divers parts of the Nation, was more especially taken notice of at Bristol, and from thence was brought up to London, attended by several men and women of his opinion, who all the way they came (the women especially) are sayd to have sung Hosanna's, and to have us'd the same kind of expressions toward him, as anciently the people of the Jews did to our Saviour, when he rode triumphant into Jerusalem: being Convented before the Parliament, he was charged of Blasphemy not only in his opinions, but also chiefly in his practise, by assuming to himself Divine Honours and such Attributes as were due unto Christ only; After he had used many cunning Sophisms and Evasions to clear himself, such as argued him not altogether ignorant of humane Letters, he was nevertheless sentenc'd by the Parliament to be (first at London) publicly whipt, pilloried, and stigmatiz'd as a Blasphemer, then to be convey'd to Bristol, there to be also whipt; lastly, to be brought back to London, to remain in Bridewell during the *Parliament*s pleasure: which Sentence sufficiently severe (considering to what extravagancies mens disturb'd Reason or Fancies have often led them) was punctually inflicted upon him.

The tryal of James Naylour before the Parliament.

His Sentence

In Flanders the Scots King remaining for the most part at Bruges, was for one while not without good hopes of gaining some suddain opportunity to make an attempt upon his claim'd Dominions, since he could not be ignorant of the Councils and Agitations of his Friends here in his behalf, upon which confidence he had gotten such a force of English, Scottish, and Irish, as made up a competent Army, what with those that he recalled out of the Service of the French King, and those that came in to him from other parts, which for a time he kept in Pay under him quartering them upon the Sea-coast; and it was reported that Monsieur Marfin a great Officer belonging to the Prince of Conde, was to have been constituted the Kings Lieutenant General over them, but his hopes and expectations blowing over, and he not being in a Capacity to keep them in continual Pay, thought it his best courie since he could not make use of them himself, to gratifie a Power that had obliged him, and which stood in need of resolute Men, and thereupon consign'd them to the Service of the King of Spain.

The Sc. K. keeps an Army in Flanders.

The Royallists were not the only men that conspir'd against the Peace and Tranquillity of his Highness's Government; for on the Nineteenth of April 1657. at a certain House in Shoreditch, were apprehended a discontented Party formerly of the Army, that go under the name of Fift Monarchy men, they had appointed to Rendezvous that Night at Mile-end Green, and thence to have March'd into some other Counties to joyn with others of their Party, that were ready to shew themselves upon the first opportunity; there was taken with them besides a great quantity of Arms, and certain Printed Papers that were to be dispers'd, a Standard, with a Lion couchant, gules, in a field argent, and having this Motto, Who shall rouse him: The taken in this Combination being many, were distributed some to the Tower, some to the Gasehouse in Westminster, some to Lambeth-house at the same time: and (it was suspected, though not clearly made manifest) upon the same account, were apprehended M. G. Harrison, Captain Lawson late Vice-admiral, Colonel Rich, and Major Danvers; whereof the first was committed to the Serjeant at Arms, the rest were also taken into Custody.

1657. Fift Monarchy men apprehended upon a design against the Government.

M. G. Harrison and others secur'd.

On the Twentieth of April, General Blake performed another notable Exploit, equal, if not superiour to that at Tunis, and much of the like nature; for at Santa Cruz a Haven of Teneriff, one of the Canary Islands belonging to the Spaniards, he fir'd and sunk 16 great Ships, among which were the Admiral, Vice-admiral, and Rear-admiral, and Two or three Galleons: the English Ships came up so neer the Castle Forts and shore, that divers Spaniards were from the shore killed with their own Muskets, and out of several of their Forts they were utterly beaten. After all which desperate Service, Blake with his Ships came clear off with little loss, and very much Renown, the Wind only to long a time veering to the South-west, untill they had recovered their former Stations.

Ge Blake's successful Emer-prize against the Spaniard at Santa Cruz.

An Army of English sent to aid the French in Flanders. Montmedi, St. Venant, & other Fort taken by the French and English.

The Spaniards setting upon Mardike to regain it, are repuls'd.

The Protector's stately and magnificent Installation.

The Protector's eldest Son installed Chancellor of Oxford. His second Son created Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. His third daughter married to Mr. Robert Rich. His youngest to the Lord Falconbridge.

Sir John Reynolds and his company cast away upon Goodwin Sands.

The death of Gen. Blake Vice-admiral Badly and Lieutenant Gen. Brain. Col. Stuby dies in the Tower.

According to the Conditions of Agreement between England and France, the French King A demanded Auxiliary Forces from England to help him in his Wars against the Spaniard in Flanders, which was readily granted by the Protector, and Six thousand Foot forthwith order'd to be sent over, Commanded in chief by Sir John Reynolds, a man of good Courage and Resolution, once Commissary General in Ireland: no sooner were these Forces arriv'd in France, but the French by their help took Two very advantageous Places, Montmedi and S. Venant; nor was it long after ere they took the strong Fort of Mardike, being of notable consequence toward the speedy gaining of Dunkirk: this Fort was immediately after it was taken consigned by the French into the sole possession of Major General Morgan, and the English who presently fell to Fortifying of it, and in a short while made it so Impregnable, that when the Spaniard sensible how much it import'd to the keeping of Dunkirk, to regain this Fort, sent a strong Power of men, B (among whom were Two thousand Scotch and Irish Reformadoes, Commanded by the Scots King, and his brother the Duke of York) to set upon its recovery by a desperate storm, they were after a very gallant and resolute effort upon the Place, which continued for the space of six hours, repelled in the end with the loss of many men.

After Cromwell had given his final Answer to the Parliament, that he could not take upon him the Government, with the Title of King, it was resolv'd on by the Parliament, that the Title of Lord Protector should be continued and inserted in the humble Petition and Advice, by which Title he was solemnly Invetted on the Twenty sixth of June, before a very great assembly of People in Westminster-hall, where a Fabrick was erected for that purpose, and a Chair of State placed for the Lord Protector, whose Instalment wanted but little of a Regal manner, and though he attain'd not the Crown, yet he had the Scepter, for there were Four Emblems of Government C presented unto him by Sir Thomas Widdrington the Speaker (who at the delivery of them made an Oration to the Protector, in which he amply decanted upon each of them) A Purple Velvet Robe lined with Ermines, wherewith he was Vested by the Earl of Warwick, the Lord Whitlock, and the Speaker, a large Bible with Bosses and Clasps richly Gilt, a Scepter of Gold, and a Sword which the Speaker girt about him; thus Attired while he sat in his Chair under a Canopy of State, holding the Scepter in his hand, the Herald standing aloft, made a signal to the Trumpet to sound thrice, after which he was proclaim'd Lord Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and then returned to Whitehall in State, having the Sword born before him by the Earl of Warwick. He was likewise proclaim'd not only in London, and other parts of England, but also in the chief Cities of Scotland and Ireland. D

Cromwell being confirm'd Protector by Authority of Parliament, and having fortified himself by Alliances abroad (for besides the Leagues with France, Sweden, the united States, and a pretty fair Correspondence with Denmark, he had also upon the coming of Don Francisco de Mello Ambassadour, concluded a firm Peace with Portugal) he began to make it his next care, for the better establishing of himself, and strengthening of his Interest at home, to advance his nearest Friends and Relations, and to match his Children into the Noblest Families; his eldest Son Richard he call'd out of the Country, to inure him to a Court life, and an insight into publick Affairs, designing him for Succession in the Protectorate, which the University of Oxford prudently foreseeing (and the Learned were never found backward in complying with the Times, and courting the rising Sun) sent their Agents and their Professors to him to elect him their E Chancellor, in which Honour he was solemnly Installed at Whitehall: his second, Henry, he created Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the room of his Son-in-law Fleetwood, whom he recalled from thence, wanting, as he sayd, his Presence and Counsel: his Two youngest Daughters he match'd, Frances the eldest to Mr. Robert Rich, Grandchilde to the then Earl of Warwick (though he is sayd to have aim'd the marrying of her to the Duke of Buckingham, whose coming into England, was rather by toleration then free permission, but to Cromwell's no little displeasure, the Lord Fairfax his Daughter and Heiress had pre-occupation of him) Mary the younger to the Lord Falconbridge, the Nuptials for them both being kept with much Festivity and Splendor, both at Whitehall and Hamptoncourt.

Scarce was the Mirth of these Solemnities over, when, to allay the Triumphs for the several F Successes of the English in Flanders, there arriv'd the unwelcome News of the loss of Sir John Reynolds, General of the Forces in those parts, who with Colonel White and some others imbarquing for England, by the way of Goodwin Sands in a small Vessel, at a tempestuous season, contrary to the persuasions of many (it is unsafe to venture against ill Presages) was cast away with his whole Company. Nor was he the only Eminent person that the Protector lost this year, for not many Months before, there died at Sea as he was entering into the Sound of Plymouth, that valiant and expert Sea-man General Robert Blake, not long surviving his notable Exploit at Santa Cruz; also Vice-admiral Badly ended his life on Land, whither he was come for the recovering of his Health; and at Jamaica there died Lieutenant General Brain, Commander in chief of the Forces there: as these that were Friends, so Colonel Sexby an Enemy to the Protector, and one of those that had been meditating against his Government, going about to make his escape, and taken in a Disguise, died not long after a Prisoner in the Tower, preventing thereby happily by a natural death, a violent Execution.

The Parliament having Adjourn'd on the Twenty sixth of June, met again the Twentieth of January following, and those Members were this Session admitted in, who had been in the last C concluded; and besides the Members of the House of Commons (chosen by the People) who

A now made up a full House, there was another Order chosen by the Protector, consisting for the most part of Officers of the Army, with some of the old Nobility among them; these latter being as it were a House of Peers reviv'd, though for the present it was only called the Other House: and much expectation now there was from a Parliament so near reduc'd to its primitive Institution, and consisting again of Two Houses, and a Supreme, though not a King: but the short continuation of this last Sitting, soon put a period to mens Expectations; for the formerly excluded Members that were now admitted being great Sticklers for a Common-wealth, and no Friends to the Protectors Interest, so turn'd the Scales of Affairs, that this Parliament who in their former sitting, had appear'd so zealous for him, were now altogether divided in a long and earnest Debate about the Right and Authority of the Other House, which so incens'd the Protector, seeing thereby his Acts and Power infring'd, that in a great heat and passion he went hastily from his Council: and, notwithstanding the earnest dissuasion of some of his chief Counsellours, dissolv'd the Parliament.

Another House of Peers constituted by the Protector.

Thus was he driven from one inconvenience to another; from the inconvenience of a Parliament that cross'd him, to the inconvenience of no Parliament at all, whereby he was necessitated for want of those supplies of Monies which he expected.

The Parliament dissolv'd by the Protector.

Towards the latter end of this year dyed the Protectors Son-in-law, Mr. Robert Rich, and was but little above two Months survived by his Grand-father the Earl of Warwick himself.

The death of Mr. Rob. Rich.

On the Twelfth of March, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, were sent for to Whitchall by the Protector, who, when they came, made a Speech to them; wherein he desir'd them to consider, Of the imminent danger of the Common-wealth, by reason of the secret Machinations of Ill-willers to the Government, both at home and abroad: The Duke of Ormond, he told them, had been lately in London for three weeks together, promoting the Affairs of his Master the Scotch King, who lay ready with Eight thousand Men Quartered on the Sea-coasts of Flanders, and two and twenty hired Ships to transport them; and thereupon he recommended unto them the setting of the Militia in the hands of sober and well-affected persons. By this it appears that the Protector was not without Intelligence of that Grand and general Plot, which was carrying on about this time by the Kings Party, for the seizing of the City and Tower of London, and the Magazine of Hull; which being to have been put in execution on the First of May, 1658. was, being foreknown, prevented by doubling the Guards and setting strict Watch in all parts of the City; and upon diligent search, many of the Engaged were found out and Imprisoned: some of Quality had been clapt up in the Tower before, among whom, Dr. Huet Minister of S. Gregories by Pauls. The same Month a High-court of Justice was Erected, before whom were brought to their Tryal Sir Henry Slingsby (who pleading Not guilty, was cast by Witnesses) Dr. Huet who refusing to plead, or own the Courts Jurisdiction, was also condemn'd, and Mr. John Mordant the Earl of Peterboroughs Brother, who at first disavowed the Courts Authority, but was at length prevailed with to plead, and in the end acquitted; the other two having their Sentence mitigated, were beheaded on Tower-hill.

The Protectors Speech to the L. Mayor and Com. Council of London.

Another grand conspiracy discovered.

A High-court of Justice erected for the tryal of the conspirators, Sir H. Slingsby and Dr. Huet beheaded. Col. Ashton and others executed in several places.

Next these were tryed Mr. Woodcock, and Captain Henry Mallory, the first acquitted, the other sentenc'd, and reprieved; Colonel Ashton and John Betley (who were both hang'd and quarter'd, the first in Tower-streets, the other in Cheapside) Edmund Stacy (who was hang'd in Cornhill) Henry Fryer (who brought to the place of Execution, receiv'd a Reprieve) John Sumner and Oliver Allen, who were both Reprieved.

A Whale of a monstrous bigness seen at Greenwich.

Among the many Prodigies that were observ'd this year, the ebbing and flowing of the Thames twice in three hours was not the least: but that which was most remarkable of all, was the coming up of a Whale of a monstrous bigness, as far as Greenwich: many were the Conjectures among the multitude of People that went to see it, what this Monster should portend: some sayd, a sudden change in the State and alteration of Government; some one thing, some another, certainly their Conjectures were truest made good by the Sequel that hapned, who sayd, it presaged the death of some extraordinary Person in the Common-wealth; For it was not long after ere the Mighty Man of the Three Kingdoms finish'd the Race of his life, leaving behind him all the Grandeurs of Honour and Royal State, which his Sword and his Policy had so lately purchased him.

In Flanders Successes came on with a swift Carrier, presently after the taking of Mardike Fort, Dunkirk was straightly begirt by the joynt Forces of the French and English; the French Commanded by the Marshal of Turenne, Prince of Quefnoy, the English by the Lord Lockhart, Ambassadour from the Protector to the French King, who was constituted General in the room of Sir John Reynolds deceas'd. The relief of this so important a place (it being the chief Seaport, and as it were, the Key of all Flanders) the Spaniards resolv'd to Assay, though with the hazard of a Pitch-field; and to that purpose they assembled together all the Force they could make, amounting to about Seven thousand Foot, and Nine thousand Horse, Commanded by Don John himself in person, together with the Duke of York, the Prince of Conde, and the Marquis of Caracene; and drawing down from Fuernes Fort, were engaged by the Marshall of Turenne, and the Count of Schomberg, joyning with Lockhart and his English Forces, who making their way (a good part of them) up a Sand-hill, against the whole power of the Spaniards, were the main Instruments in gaining a clear and eminent Victory over the Spanish Army: most of their Infantry being either slain or taken; and among the taken were all the Officers of the King of Scots Regiment, divers Officers of the Spanish Nobility, and Persons of high Quality, Seventeen Colours, six great Guns, with the whole Baggage of the Field, and the King of Scots his A Coach, the Prince of Conde was unhorsed in the Fight, and Mounted again, by his Cousin Bourenvilles, who thereby was taken Prisoner in the Princes Stead: there were slain of the English, C. Sherwin, and another Captain, five Lieutenants, and two Ensigns, with eighty common Soldiers, besides three hundred wounded, and some mortally, among whom, Lieutenant Colonel Roger Fenwick, he was reported a stout man, and his loss much bewailed: A day or two before this Battle, the Marshal of Hocquincourt (who had caused the important Town of Hesdin, to revolt from the French to the Spaniards) was slain as he went out Picqueering upon a Parry. No sooner was this Battle ended, but the French and English returned again afresh to the Siege of Dunkirk, which the Marquis of Leda Governour thereof (who had been formerly sent Ambassadour to the Protector) seeing now more straightly then ever Invirion'd both by Land and Sea, whereby it was reduced to great Extremities; he resolute to defend the Town made a bold Sally forth, in which he received his mortal Wound: the Governours death, and the terror of the Granadoes shot into the Town, wrought so upon the Besieged, that they were speedily brought to Articles of Surrender, and on the Twenty fifth of June, marcht out with Colours flying, so that the King of France in person, accompanied with the Cardinal Mazarin, took possession of the Place, and immediately resigned it up into the hands of General Lockhart, in behalf of the Lord Protector, and the English.

The death of Mrs Elizabeth Glypole. Of the Earl of Mulgrave.

And of the Lord Protector

On the Sixth of August dyed Elizabeth the Protectors second Daughter, commonly called the Lady Glypole, according to her Husbands Name, who was Master of the Horse to his Father-in-law: her body was brought from Hampton-court (where she dyed) and privately buried in Westminster-Abbey, in Henry the Sevenths Chappel; not long after her dyed the Earl of Mulgrave, one of the Privy Counsellours to his Highness so called; but these were only slight Preludes to the grand party, that death play'd next, which was upon the person of the Protector himself, who having for some time laboured of a dangerous Sicknes at Hampton-court, was removed from thence back to White-hall, where on the third of September (the same memorable day, of the year, that he won the famous Field at Dunbar, and the year following at Worcester) This Great CONQUEROUR of Three Nations, bow'd down his head to Fate, that vanquisheth the greatest Victors; and makes no distinction between the common Heard, and the tallest of the Flock. The Night that ushered in the day of his departure, there arose a Tempest, like to which, there had scarce been seen in this Age, wherein besides the strage of lesser Trees, D some of a large size were torn up out of the earth by the very roots; it seem'd as if the Elements had been in combustion at the sight of a Soul, that had acted such notable Revolutions in the World. At the Article of his death, being desired to name his Successour, as the late Parliament had agreed, in the Instrument of Government, he at first wad the matter, and seem'd to refer it wholly to his Council: but being further pressed thereunto, by those that knew well enough his mind, he nominated his eldest Son Richard, who the next day after his Fathers death, was in the presence of most of the Privy Counsellours, and the chief Officers of the Army, proclaimed LORD PROTECTOR of England, Scotland, and Ireland; and had, as his Father before him, Addresses made to him from several parts of his Dominions, professing wonders of Zeal and Affection to him and his Government, which how little they avail'd him, hath since sufficiently appear'd.

Richard Cromwell proclaimed Lord Protector.

In the first place after the advancement of the young Protector to the Supreme Dignity, principal care was taken by him and his Council, for the Interment of his Father, with all the State and Solemnity accustomed at Kings and Princes Funerals; and therefore search is sayd to have been made into the Records, to see what had been expended upon the Burial of King James, and the same Cost, if not greater, was to be bestowed on this: The Corps of his late Highness being Embalm'd and inwrapt in Lead, was removed from Whitehall to Somerset-house, there to lye in Regal Pomp and State, a Spectacle to all Commers; the order and manner whereof was briefly thus:

The manner of the deceased Protectors lying in State at Somerset-house.

Four Rooms, one within another, were compleatly hung with black; the three first with Cloth, the fourth with Velvet, each Room was adorned with Scutcheons of his Arms, Crowned with the Imperial Crown, and at the upper end of each Room was placed a Chair of State, and over that a Cloth of State, and over the Cloth, a large Majesty Escutcheon, painted and gilt upon Tassels: In the fourth Room where the Corps were, there lay, upon a Bed of State raised by two gradual Ascents, and covered with a large Pall of black Velvet, his Effigies vested with a rich Suit, Kirtle and large Robe of Purple Velvet, Laced with Gold, and Furr'd with Ermine; to the Kirtle was girt an embroyder'd Belt, by which hung a Sword richly hatcht with Gold, in the right hand was a golden Scepter, in the left a Globe, on the Head a Purple Velvet Cap, furr'd with Ermine; behind was plac'd a Crown Imperial, set with precious Stones, upon a Chair and Cushion of richshued Gold, on each side a rich Suite of compleat Armour, and at the Feet his Crest: the Bed of State was inclosed with Rails and Ballasters covered with Velvet, at each corner whereof were Pillars adorned with Trophies of Military Honour, Carved and Gilt, on the tops of the Pillars were the Supporters of the Imperial Arms, bearing Streamers Crown'd, at the Pedestals were Shields and Crowns gilt: within the Rayls stood Eight silver Candlesticks, or Standards five Foot high, with long Tapers of Virgin Wax burning in them, and next them four great Standards of his Arms set upright in Sockets, with the Guidons, great Banners, and Banrols of Tassels richly painted and gilt. The Effigies having for some time been seen in this posture

A posture, was afterwards shew'd in another Room, vested after the same manner, and attended with the same Ornaments as is already described, and this continued untill the day of conducting the Funeral Pomp to the Church, which was on the Twenty third of November; for till then all things could not be prepared and made ready: and then the Effigies placed in a stately Funeral Chariot, covered with black Velvet, and drawn with six Horses in like manner Mantled and Adorn'd with black Plumes of Feathers; was attended from Somerset-house to Westminster, by all the Officers of his Household, the chief Officers of the Army and Navy, the Magistracy of the City, the Judges at Law, the Ambassadors and publick Ministers of forein States and Princes, the Members of the late Upper-house, and of the Privy Council, all in Mourning, each Company being distinguished by Drums, Trumpets, a Banner born by one of the chief Ones, and a B Horse of State Mantled with black Velvet, led also by some one of Eminency. Lastly, the Horse of Honour Trapped with embroidery upon Crimson Velvet, and adorned with white, red, and yellow Plumes, was led by the Master of the Horse; with such other like Formalities used at the Obsequies of great Persons. At the West-end of the Abby-Church, the Effigies being taken out of the Chariot, was carried through the Church under a Canopy of State, born by six of his Gentlemen, up to the East-end where it was plac'd in a sumptuous Catapalco, or Monument of Wood fram'd for the purpose, with Pilasters and other Adornments of Architecture Carved, Painted, and Gilt, to remain for a certain time, exhibited to publick View; a sort of temporary Monument much used in Foreign Parts, at the death of great Princes: The Corps had been privately Inhum'd many dayes before the Solemnity, in Henry the Seventh's C Chappel.

The Solemnity
of his Funerals

Thus have you seen, after all his Trophies and Honours archieved with no ordinary pains and hazard; this great man brought to his Grave in Peace, contrary to the expectations of many, and also with high, though envied Pomp. His Character hath been at large delivered by others, and truly by some not altogether without flattery, though much might be sayd in his Praise: but to comprehend him in short, it is sufficiently known to the World, that he was a man of singular Courage and undaunted Resolution, and that attended with a most prosperous stream of Fortune, which is not ever the Concomitant of Valour, notwithstanding what the Incomparable Ben. Johnson sings, that

His Character

A Valiant Man is his own Fate and Fortune.

D Nor can it be denyed but that he had much of Generosity, and many noble things in his Nature, as may be exemplified in the particular care and regard he had for the Relations of one Duret a French-man, who had serv'd him faithfully, and dyed in his Service; which one that writes his Life, parallels with the Gratitude of the Lord Thomas Cromwell, in Henry the Eighth's time, toward Signor Friscobald an Italian Merchant, from whom he had receiv'd Civilities. As for his Policy and Sagacity of Parts, what better instance then his Life so recent in Memory, how did he raise himself by a gradual Progress to the highest pitch of Honour, and had doubtless attain'd the supreme Title, had he remaind among the Living never so little longer: how did he fit himself with the choicest Instruments, and the ablest Ministers of State, and often times mould and form men to his own purpose? how did he make use of all Parties and Interests carrying on his own Affairs by them? what powerful Influence had he upon the forein States and Kingdoms? so interweaving his own Interests among them, that he was ever on the most successful Side, or at least made that Side the most prosperous which he adhered unto? He was born in the Priory of Huntington, his Father the second Brother of Sir Oliver Cromwell, a Person of great Note and consideration in the late Kings time; his Mother the Daughter of Sir Richard Stuart, of the Isle of Ely, he married Elizabeth the Daughter of Sir James Bourchier, by whom he had (besides one Son that dyed) two Sons and four Daughters, of each of whom mention hath been made in the preceding part of the History: his Family have derived their Name Originally from that Great Cromwell who was Henry the Eighth's Vicar General over the Spiritualities; their Lineal Descent from one Williams of Glamorganshire, who living Contemporary with this Lord Cromwell, was not only tyed to him by a strict League of Friendship, but also both by Marriage of his Daughter, and by Posthume Adoption became his Son; and as some write, had, together with his Name, his Honours, Offices, and Demesns, confer'd upon him by the King: however this is most certain, that never was there any yet so great, either of the Name, or Family, as this Oliver Cromwell, of whom at present so much mention hath been made. It is reported of him, that in his Childhood, he met several times with a certain Apparition, which told him, That he should one day come to be the Greatest man in England: This he imparted to a Learned man, who was his Schoolmaster, who though for the time, he had no belief for such a meer Chimera, as he esteem'd it of a Childish Fancy; yet upon his Death-bed, he by a kinde of Prophetick Spirit, told those about him, That young Cromwell was destin'd to great Actions, and to a very extraordinary Fortune: Not to speak of his Acting the part of Taliss at Cambridge, in a Play called the Five Sences, wherein he is sayd to have taken up the Crown, and layd it down again.

His Descent
and Issue.

As soon as the Ceremonious Rites of this great Burial were past, the Preparations for which, had for a time very much put a stop to Proceedings both Domestick and Foreign; immediately other matters of publick Concernment, began seriously to be taken into Consideration by the new Protector and his Council. The first thing was, the sending of a Naval Supply to the King of Sweden, between whom and the old Protector, there had been contracted a very firm and inviolable Amiry, and Forces had been sent to this Kings Ayde out of this Nation, both for Land and Sea-service, for the later whereof, he now more then ever had occasion to make up a good stout Fleet; for after that by his Success against the King of Denmark, he had won him to a Concession of a great part of his Territories, and of half the Dominion of the Sound, and had at length withdrawn his Army, the King of Denmark judging the Conditions too hard on his side, and alledging them not to have been punctually observ'd by the Swedes, began presently after the departure of the Swedish Army to flye to Arms, for the recovery of what was lost, being especially encouraged thereunto by a certain assurance of Ayde from the Hollander, besides his entering into Confederacy with the Emperour, the King of Poland, and the Marquis of Brandenburg, against the Swedish King, who having quick Intelligence of the King of Denmark's Design speeded back with his Forces, and was set down before Copenhagen, ere the Danes were well aware of his coming, but the Danish King had before hand (providing against the worst that might happen) so well Fortifi'd and stor'd the City, that it was able to endure a long Siege, and now the Sovereignty of this famous Bay of the Baltick Sea called the Sound, being thus disputed between these two Kings, the Dutch thought it a matter of no small Advantage to them, that the Sound should continue in the power of the Dane their constant Ally, least the Swedes gaining too much sway therein, they might be depriv'd of the benefit thereof, which was of high Concernment to them, and therefore made all possible hast to set forth a Fleet, for the Relief and Supply of Copenhagen: the English on the other side thought it no less Imported them to help the Swede, though it were against the Dane and the Dutch, both of them our Friends in outward appearance, least their joyn't interest and prevalence against the Swede, who of all other Potentates was the most firmly united in League to this State, might have prov'd prejudicial to us likewise in relation to the Sound, which also concern'd us no less weightily then the Dutch, therefore a Squadron of lusty Frigots was sent forth by this State under the Command of Sir George Ayscough toward the Sound, which having for sometime been detain'd upon the Coast by contrary Winds, and afterwards steering their course towards those Northern Seas, which the extremity of the Winter had made Innavigable, they were forced for that time to return not without some damage to the Ships by reason of the Ice, and the loss of some men, through the bitterness of the Weather in those parts, so that this Enterprize was suspended till the coming on of the Spring, and then a more powerful Fleet was set out under the Command of General Mountague, Sir George Ayscough being invited by the King of Sweden, to take upon him a chief Command in his Navy.

In the meantime, the Hollander Fleet led by General Opdam, and Witte Witteson, arriving at the Sound, with Relief for Copenhagen, were Assail'd by the Swedish Rix-admiral, Charles Gustave Wrangle, in which Battle the Dutch are said to have received a notable Overthrow, seven of their Ships being lost, and Witte Witteson one of their Admirals, with many other persons of Quality slain; nevertheless during the Fight, several Dutch Fluyts and Merchant-men pass'd by, with Provision to Copenhagen, which so strengthened the Besieged, that they thereby became enabled for the sustaining of a long Siege, as hath since appear'd: and not long after the Swedes, in a resolute effort against the City, were repel'd with the loss of a great many men, and some of Eminency.

And now in England want of Moneys, and other pressing occasions of the State require the sudden calling of a Parliament: the young Protector issues out his Writs, Elections are made by the Countiees, nor without some Canvassing of Parties. The Parliament meets on the Twenty seventh of January, consisting, as the last Parliament had done, in his Fathers time, of Two Houses, the Commons, and the other (which now began to be called the Upper-house,) for the first was chosen Speaker, Mr. Chaloner Chute a Lawyer, who within a short while fell sick unto death, as also Sir Lislebone Long Recorder of London, who was chosen pro tempore in his stead; for the latter was chosen, Nathaniel Fiennes Lord Keeper of the Seal: The first Grand business that came under Debate, was the recognition of the Government, and it was intended that all other things should be defer'd till that were ended; but of those that were zealous for a Commonwealth, there was also in this Parliament such a considerable number, and who had such a powerful Influence on publick Transactions, that to procrastinate the time, they cast in several previous Debates, in which, nevertheless, the Assertors of the Protectors Interest, being more in number, carried things to their own Advantage by the Major Vote, as particularly in the business of the Scotch and Irish Members to be continued in among them, and the owning of the Upper-house, and holding an Entercourse with them, after a long Consultation in question of their Authority.

Things thus bending on toward a Settlement and Confirmation of the Government then in being, behold a sudden and unexpected change, a more remarkable then which hath not happen'd since the late Kings death: for on the sudden, a general discontent against the present Government, discovering it self throughout the Army, especially among the inferior Officers: some of the chief Commanders, as Fleetwood, Desborough, and those that favour'd the Armys Design (others of them in vain opposing) went to the Protector, and urging to him the resolvedness of the Army, so far prevail'd with him, that (notwithstanding Goph, Whaley, Inglesby, and other chief Officers had promis'd to stick to him to the last) he was at length perswaded to send his Warrant for the dissolving of the Parliament then sitting, and so consequently to suffer himself to be divested of the Power and Authority of a supreme Magistrate, returning again to the condition

A condition of a private person. Now all men were at a gaze, wondering thro what hands the chief Power would next be devolved, when after several Consultations of the Council of Officers, it was at last agreed among them, that the Members of the old Parliament, who ever since the year, 1653. had been interrupted from sitting, by means of their General Oliver Cromwell, the late deceased Protector, should be invited to their freedom and right of sitting, and the exercise of their Trust, by a Declaration presented from the Army to the old Speaker, W. Lenthall, and several of the Members at the Rolls in Chancery-Lane, which after certain Conditions drawn up between them, they accepted; and on the seventh of May they began to sit again: in the first place having appointed a Committee to Attend Richard Cromwell Son of their late General, and his Successor, in the Power and Title called Protector, to know his Minde as touching his acquiescence in the present Government. They receiv'd from him an Answer in Writing, wherein among other expressions, there was in the Close, to this effect: That through the goodness of God, he could freely acquiesce in the present Government, and that he held himself obliged, as he expected protection from it, so to demean himself peaceably under it, and to procure to the uttermost of his power, that all in whom he had any Interest should do the same.

Sir George Booth's Army vanquish'd, and himself taken.

The Ser. K. and his brother depart secretly from Brussels.

Not long after his Brother Henry who had ruled in Ireland, under the Title of Lieutenant came over, being sent for, and submitted to their good pleasure: Monk also the General in Scotland, own'd and congratulated them in a Letter; nor did the Commanders of the Navy stand out, some likewise there were in some Counties, who by Address express'd their zeal to the good Old Cause; and that the Parliament might the better provide for the future against all such abolliteness in Command, as might seem to make way for the encroachment of a single Person; they took the supreme Command of the Army into their own hands, constituting the Speaker to be General, in the name of the whole Parliament, and appointing the several Officers to come and receive their Commissions anew from them.

This was the state of things about the beginning of this year, 1659, until which time our Intention hath been to deduce this History, I shall only name what hath hapned since of greatest remark, which was the grand Combination throughout the Nation against the present Government, headed principally by Sir George Booth, of the Presbyterian persuasion, whose Army in Cheshire (for there they only gathered to a head) was totally dispersed by M. Gen. Lambert, and Sir George himself was taken disguis'd; as also of the Royal Party who joyn'd with him, was taken, the Earl of Derby, with divers other Noble-men and Gentlemen.

During these buile Actings and Endeavours of the Scottish Kings Friends and Adversers of his Cause in England, he is sayd to have privately withdrawn himself from Brussels, together with his Brother the Duke of Tork; it was not known whither, only it was imagin'd by many, that they lay concealed somewhere in England: expecting the issue of things, and intending accordingly either to discover themselves, or provide for their security: In the mean time, that there lay a Fleet of Vessels on the Coast of Flanders, ready to have transported men, in case matters had succeeded to their expectation, is a thing more certain: wheresoever it were that these Princes had been Incogniti, it was not long after the suppression of those who had now appear'd in Arms for them, ere they were seen returned to Brussels, and now there being a serious promotion of Peace and Alliance in hand, between the Kings of France and Spain, the King of Spain frames certain Proposals, which were to be presented to the consideration of the two Kings, after the concluding of the Peace, and dispatcheth away an Ambassadour to attend at the Interview of the Two great Favourites and Ministers of State, Cardinal Mazarini, and Don Lewis de Haro, by both whom he was entertained with very high Testimonies of Honour and Respect, though the business of his Message could not in a short time be taken into Consideration, in respect of other Councils of highest Concernment, touching the Marriage between King Lewis of France; and the Daughter of Phillip the Fourth of Spain.

And now for the present, we shall here conclude, having compleated thus far of the Life of this Illustrissim Unfortunate, as much as could well be known of the Actions of a Person, living altogether exil'd from his Native Country, and of whom all things are represented to the greatest disadvantage, by those who think themselves obliged through Interest of State, to speak no good of him; yet that he may have so much right done him, that the moderate and indifferent Arbitr may have as well what to judge favourably from the Testimony of his Friends, as what to think amiss of him from the Pens of his Detractors: it will be most materiall and pertinent in this place to mention what was once delivered in Character of him (a more proper then which, there could not have been given any, as proceeding from him who profess'd to have known him from his tender years) by an Honourable Person at his death: Certainly, sayd this Lord, I that have been a Counsellour to him and have lived long with him, and in a time when discovery is easily enough made for he was young (he was about fifteen or sixteen years of age) those years I was with him, and truly I never saw greater hopes of Virtue in any young person then in him; great Judgement; great Understanding; strong Apprehensions; much Honour in his Manners, and truly a very perfect English-man in his Inclinations.

Nor have there been wanting several others, who upon their own knowledge, have been high in the Commendation both of him and his Brother the Duke of Tork.

And now whereas it may seem improper to have written the Life of him, who is yet among the Living: I conceive it not absolutely material, that every year of a mans Age should be precisely comprehended, but those more especially which have afforded things worthiest of remark and Memory, and what ever may happen for the future observable, may also nevertheless be in due season imparted to the Publick. Moreover, since this Volume is that which contains the Lives of the Kings of England, I knew not better how with Decorum to continue it, then by couching the Transactions of the latest fore-going years, under the name of a Person, if not a King, yet, at least lineally descended of the Race of English Kings, as being eldest Son of the last King of Great Britain: himself also having been Crowned by the Estates of Scotland.
